16. Item, he compelled certain Prieſts to ſhew unto him the confeſſions of men, and he publiſhed them openly afterward contrary to the will of them that were confeſſed, to their ſhame and confuſion, and compelled them to redeem their ſins. Inſomuch that once he depoſed a certain Biſhop of Spain, for the faults that he confeſſed to a certain Cardinal, confeſſing unto him a certain privy horrible fault under Benedicite, and compelled the Cardinal againſt his will to declare his confeſſion: and yet afterward he reſtored the ſame Biſhop again to his place for a little money. Wherefore he is thought to play the Heretick in the Sacrament of Penance.

17. Item, he faſteth not on the faſting-days, nor Lent, but eateth fleſh indifferently, and without cauſe ſuffereth his Houſhold and friends to eat, ſaying, It is no ſin: Doing in this thing againſt the general ſtate of the holy Church.

18. Item, he oppreſſed the Order of the Cardinals, and hath oppreſſed the Order of black and white Monks, of gray Fryers and Preachers: and ſaid of them, That the world was deſtroyed by them, and that they were falſe Hypocrites, and that never good could chance unto any that would be confeſſed to them, or would be familiar with them, or would keep them in their houſe. And he never ſaid good word of any Prelate, religious man, or Clerk; but ever rebuketh and ſlandereth them, taking away their good name; and, to compel them to redeem their faults, he is glad of their Accuſations: and this is the common voice and report of him.

19. Item, of old time, he going about to deſtroy the Faith, conceived a hate againſt the French King, even to the abhorring of the Faith: becauſe of the light of Faith which is there, and becauſe of the great witneſs and example of Chriſtianity, which is and hath been there. And before he had this Seat, he is proved to have ſaid, that if he were Pope, he would rather overthrow all Chriſtendom, but he would overthrow and deſtroy the Nation, which he calleth the pride of the French.

20. Alſo, it is reported, that when the Embaſſadors of the King of England, in the name of the ſaid King did require and intreat for the tenth of the Realm of England to be given him; he anſwered, That he would not give them the tenth, but on this condition, that he would make War with them againſt the French King. And beſides this, he is reported to have given great ſums of money to certain perſons, to hinder that peace ſhould not be betwixt the ſaid Kings. He himſelf alſo with all his might hath letted it, by Meſſengers, Letters, and other ways that he could, yea by giving Bribes.

21. Item, he is reported alſo to have commanded Frederick which keepeth the Iſle of Sicil, that if he would betray Charles the King, and break the peace which he made, and ſware that he would keep with him, and would ſtir againſt the King, and kill the French-men, that then he would give him aid, help, and counſel; and for ſo doing he would give and grant him the ſaid Kingdoms.

Pope Boniface enemy to the Frenchmen.

22. He confirmed alſo the King of Almain to be Emperor, and ſaid openly, That he did it to deſtroy the Nation, which he calleth the pride of the French-men; which ſay, That they are ſubject to none in Temporal things. Wherein ſaith he, they lied on their heads, declaring moreover, that whoſoever (yea if it were an Angel from Heaven) would ſay, that all Kings of the world were not ſubject to the ſame King of Almain, he were accurſed.

Pope Boniface an enemy to peace

23. Further, he brake the Agreements of peace betwixt the King of Almain and the French King: in which, either of them ſhould have their own ſaved. And what encroachings ſoever had been on either ſide ſhould be brought to a due ſtate, and under an Oath orderly given and taken: he is reported to have commanded the ſame King of Almain, that he ſhould not keep theſe conditions of peace, but be an enemy, and go about to ſow debate among Chriſtian men.

24. Item, it is openly reported, that the holy Land was betrayed through his fault, and came to the enemies of God and of Faith; and that he ſuffered this for the nonſt, and denied to give Aid to the Chriſtians which defended it; ſpending the treaſures and money of the Church (which ſhould have been beſtowed on that uſe as the Patrimony of Chriſt) in perſecuting of faithful Chriſtians and Friends of the Church, and therewith would enrich his Friends.

25. Item, he is openly reported to uſe Simony, not only in beſtowing of Benefices, but in giving of Orders, and making Diſpenſations. He hath ſet to ſale all Benefices of the Church, and would beſtow the Church commonly on him that would offer moſt: and he made his Servants Prelates of the Church, not for wealth of the Faith, nor to thruſt down Infidels, but to oppreſs the Faithful, and to enrich his Kindred by the Church-goods, and of the Patrimony of him that was crucified; and preſumed to make them Marqueſſes, Earls, and Barons, and was not afraid to build them ſtrong Holds, rooting out and oppreſſing many Noblemen and others.

26. Item, it is commonly reported, that he hath divorced many Marriages lawfully made, to the contempt, hurt, and ſlander of many; and he did promote his Nephew to a Cardinalſhip, being married, unlearned, and altogether unworthy to live; and openly married one that was divorced, and compelled him to make a vow of chaſtity, and after that he is reported to have had two Baſtards by her, and ſo goeth the common bruit of him.

Pope Boniface a Murderer of his Predeceſſor.

27. Item, it is commonly reported, that he handled ungently his Predeceſſor Celeſtinus of holy memory, leading an holy life (peradventure knowing in conſcience that he could not forſake his Popedom, and therefore Boniface himſelf had no lawful entrance to the See) and priſoned him, and there quickly and privily cauſed him to die. And of this the common brute and report is through all the world, that he cauſed many and great men living a regular life (which diſputed of this, whether he might renounce the Popedom or not) to be ſet in priſon, and there to die.

28. Item, he is reported to have railed at religious perſons leading a regular life, without a reaſonable cauſe to the world, to the ſlander of many.

29. Item, he is reported to have ſaid, that he would within ſhort time make all the French-men either Martyrs, or forſakers of their Faith.

30. Item, it is commonly reported, that he ſeeketh not the health of the Souls, but the deſtruction of them.

Theſe things being propounded and read, the ſame William proteſted, ſaid, declared, appealed, and added theſe words, reading them in writing.

The proteſtation of William Pleſiano.

I William of Pleſiano, Knight, proteſt that I do not propound nor ſpeak the foreſaid things for any ſpecial hate of Boniface himſelf (for I hate not him, but his foreſaid evil deeds) nor do I ſeek his injury or ſlander, or any mans elſe: but I ſpeak it for the weal of the Faith, and for the devotion that I have to the holy Church of God, and the holy Romiſh See; as well for thoſe things that I have ſeen and heard of credible men of his doings, and by likely preſumptions gathered of the foreſaid things, and many and divers other things to be declared in his due place and time. And I ſware by the holy Goſpel of God (which I touch with my hand) That I believe him to be a rank Heretick; and that I alſo believe that the forſaid things, and ſuch other, may prove againſt him ſuch things as ſhall be ſufficient to prove him an Heretick, according to the ſtate of the holy Fathers. I ſware alſo that I will purſue againſt him by the Laws, the foreſaid things in the General Council that ſhall be aſſembled, in a place that ſhall be ſafe and ſure for me, to the honour of God, and increaſe of the Chriſtian Faith, ſaving the right, honour, and ſtate of the holy Apoſtolical See in all things. Wherefore, earneſtly and with reverence I require you, my Lord the King (to whom belongeth the defence of the holy Mother the Church, and the Catholick Faith, for of that ye ſhall make account in the laſt Judgment) and you my Lords the Prelates which be the pillars of the Faith, and which ought to be Judges of the foreſaid things, together with other reverend Fathers, the Catholick Prelates of the holy Church, in the General Council to be aſſembled; that ye would procure and take diligent pain that a General Council may be gathered in a fit and ſafe place, and convenient time, before which the foreſaid things may be propounded, brought forth and proved againſt the ſaid Boniface, as is premiſed. And I earneſtly alſo require you, my Lord King, that ye would require the ſame Prelates preſent and abſent, in what Country ſoever they be, or to whom it belongeth, Pope Boniface proved an Heretick.

and that ye would effectually induce them manfully to labour, and to require others faithfully, that the foreſaid Council for the aforeſaid matters might be gathered in ſuch ſort as is foreſaid. And becauſe ſo long as this is deferred to be proved, I ſuſpect Boniface himſelf, leſt he being angry and moved for the foreſaid things againſt me and my Partakers, Procurers and Helpers, my Friends and Familiars, ſhould go about by ſome means to ſtay and ſtop my good purpoſe and theirs for going forward: therefore, by theſe writings before you my Lord the King and divers Prelates, and before your common Notaries here preſent, I provoke and appeal to the ſaid holy General-Council Apoſtolical and Catholick that ſhall be, and to the holy Apoſtolical See, and to him and them to whom of right I may or ought: and I earneſtly require, once, twice, and thrice, that teſtimonial letters may be given me from you; ſuppoſing my ſelf, my Followers, Favourers, Familiars, Friends, my Procurators, and all them that will hereafter follow me, my goods and theirs to be under the protection and keeping of Saint Peter and Paul, and the ſaid holy Council to be aſſembled by the holy Romiſh See, and the Catholick Apoſtolical Pope that ſhall be: ſticking nevertheleſs and willing to ſtick to the Appellation and Appellations, Proceſs and Proceſſes made hereupon by the Nobleman Maſter William of Nagareta Knight, in as much as they ſhall be found and made lawful, and yet not forſaking this preſent Appellation.

When theſe things were thus read and done, the foreſaid King anſwered and required the foreſaid Prelates, provoking and appealing and making requeſt, Provocation and Appellation, as is contained in the Paper under written, both there and then with other Prelates: which things all are more fully contained in theſe writings following, and were read to them that heard it, whoſe tenour is ſuch:

The K'ngs anſwer. The Appeal of Philip the French King from the Pope.

"We Philip by the Grace of God, hearing and underſtanding the Objections propounded by our beloved faithful Knight, W. of Nagareta, againſt Boniface, now having the Regiment of the Romiſh-Church: although we would gladly cover with our own Cloke, the filthy parts of ſuch a Father; yet for the love of the Catholick Faith and great devotion that we bear to the holy Romiſh and univerſal Church our Mother, and all faithful men, and Spouſe of Chriſt, following the ſteps of our Anceſtors, which doubted not to ſhed their own blood for the increaſe and defence of the Churches Liberty and the Faith; and coveting to provide for the purity of the Faith and State of the Church; as alſo to avoid the hurt of the general ſlander, being not able to paſs over any longer the premiſſes with winking and diſſembling, and my conſcience driving to the ſame; ſeeing this eſtimate and opinion of him in theſe matters is not raſhly of us conceived, but vehemently and plainly increaſed by many and continual cryings of credible men, and great authority oft and oftentimes beaten into us, fearing moreover the deſtruction of the Faith, both of us and of all other Subjects, and ſpecially of Kings and Princes of the world, which ought to reprove negligence, which acknowledge that we have received power given us from the Lord, to the promoting and increaſment of it; we agree to your Requeſts in his behalf, and to the calling and aſſembling a Council for the Glory of God (ſaving the honour and reverence that is due to the holy Romiſh-Church in all things) whereby the truth may appear in the premiſſes, and all error avoided: that the ſtate of the univerſal Church, and all Chriſtianity, and the matters of Faith, and the holy Land may be provided for, and the ſlanders and jeopardies hanging over us may be withſtanded; we be ready and offer our ſelves gladly, as much as in us is, to beſtow our labour and diligent pain thereabout: Earneſtly requiring and beſeeching in the merciful bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, you Archbiſhops and other Prelates here preſent, as Children of the Church and Pillars of Faith, called of the Lord to the promoting, increaſe and preſerving thereof, to care for the ſame, that with all diligence ye would give heed, as becometh you, and effectually you would labour by all ways and fit means, to the calling and aſſembling of this Council, in which we intend to be perſonally preſent. And leſt the ſaid Boniface, which hath boldly and wrongfully many times threatned to proceed againſt us, ſtopping and hindring our purpoſes and intent, leſt any of his works of darkneſs (if there be any) ſhould come to light, directly or indirectly hindring the calling and gathering of this Council; or leſt any ſtate being in the ſame Realm that will indeed proceed againſt us, or our ſtate, Churches, Prelates, Barons, and other faithful Vaſſals, our Subjects, our Lands, or our Realm, and the ſtate of the Realm, by abuſing any ſpiritual Sword, in Excommunicating, Suſpending, or other ways by any means: for us and our well-willers, and them that will follow us, we provoke and appeal in writing to the foreſaid General-Council (which we inſtantly deſire to be called) and to one lawful chief Biſhop that ſhall be, or to any other to whom we ſhould appeal; and yet not going from the Appellation made by M. William of Negareta, to whom we ſticked then, and alſo yet ſtick: requiring earneſtly a witneſs of our Appellation of you Prelates and Notaries, expreſſly to renew ſuch Provocation and Appellation when and before whom it ſhall be thought meet to you. KING Edw. 1.

Then the Archbiſhops within written, Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors, anſwered the premiſſes (as it is found in the acts) provoked and appealed, agreed to and proteſted, and made Provocation and Appellation, Agreement and Proteſtation, as is contained more fully in a certain Paper there openly and plainly read, whoſe tenour followeth with theſe words:

The Proteſtation of Prelates.

W. Archbiſhop of Nicoſen, Remen, Senorem, Narbonem, Turonem, and Biſhops of Landviren, Belnacen, Catolacen, Antiſiodorem, Meldimen, Nurmen, Carnotem, Aurelianen, Ambiaven, Morinen, Silanen, Andeganen, Abricen, Conſtant, Ebroicen, Lexonicen, Sagien, Caloromont, Lemonicen, Avicen, Maſticoren; And we Abbots of Cluniack, Premonſtraten of the greater Monaſtery of the Court of S. Dioneſe in France, camped S. Victors, S. Genoveue, S. Marten, Landmoen, Figiacem, and Bellicem in Lemocinio, and Fryer Hugh, Viſitor of the Houſes of the Order of Knights of S. John in Jeruſalem in France, and the Father Prior of S. Martin in the field, hearing theſe things which were ſaid, propounded, and objected yeſterday, and to day by you the Lords, Earls, and Wil. aforeſaid, againſt the Lord Boniface the Eighth and Pope, being moved with ſuch ſayings, purpoſes, aſſertions, and your Oaths, your requeſt and other lawful cauſes, and compelled by need, conſidering that the matter of our Faith, which is Chriſts, is handled in the premiſſes: we that be called to part of this care, to the defence and maintenance of the faith of Souls of the Realm, although unworthy, yet coveting to withſtand the jeopardies that hang over us by reaſon of the premiſſes and other cauſes, thinking the calling and gathering of the ſaid Council profitable and neceſſary, that the innocency of the Lord Boniface himſelf may clearly be diſcuſſed, as we deſire (our conſciences bearing witneſs) that it may be determined on him by the Council, touching ſuch things, as are laid againſt him, and that that which they decree may be done according to the Canons; We anſwer you our Lord King, and you our Lords, Earls, and William, that (the honour and reverence of the holy Romiſh-Church ſalved in all points) we agree to your due requeſt in this behalf for the calling of the Council, and are ready to give help and diligent labour to the calling and gathering of the ſaid Council, according to the Decrees of the holy Fathers, and to the lawful Orders of the Canons: not intending by any means, to make Parties of this matter, nor to ſtick to any that maketh Parties. Yet leſt the ſaid Boniface being moved by theſe things, as we fear, by likely conjectures and threatnings made againſt us for the foreſaid things, that he will proceed againſt our Pariſh-Churches and our Subjects by ſome means or cauſe to proceed againſt us by ſome Authority of his own or others, by Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Interdicting, Depoſing, Depriving, or by ſome other means and colour ſought to ſome impeachment or trouble of the ſaid Council; and that we may ſit in the ſame Council to judge and do all other things, that belong to the Office of Prelates; that our friends that ſtick to us, and would ſtick to us in all things, may remain ſafe for our ſelves, our Pariſh Churches, our Subjects, and them that ſtick to us, or would ſtick to us in this behalf, we provoke and appeal in writing to the foreſaid Council, that is to be gathered, and to him that ſhall be the true and lawful higheſt

Biſhop,

{KING Edw. I} Biſhop, and to him or them to whom of right we ſhould appeal, and earneſtly require our Appellations; committing us, our Pariſh-Churches, our Subjects, Friends, and them that ſtick to us, our State and theirs, our right, goods, to the godly defence of the foreſaid Counſel, and of him that ſhall be true and lawful higheſt Biſhop: and we proteſt to renew his Appellation, where, when, and before whom it ſhall be thought meet.

This was done at Paris at Lupara in the Chamber of the ſaid Lord our King, Indictione prima, the ninth year of his Popedom, the days of Thurſday and Friday aforeſaid, theſe Noblemen being preſent; The Lords of Avia and Bolone, the Lords Martins and other Earls named before, Matthew Dotera, Peter the Lord Chamberlain, Philip the Lord of Wirtmos, and Henry of Bologne Knight, and alſo M. Philip Archdeacon of Bengem, Nicholas Archdeacon of Remein, William Treaſurer of Anjou, Philip Beaſpeare, Rainold of Bourbon and John Montagre, and many more both Clerks and other ſpecially required and called to be Witneſſes to this.

After theſe things thus in the Parliament decreed and agreed, the Prelates of the Clergy conſulting with themſelves what was to be done in ſo doubtful a matter, and dreading the Popes diſpleaſure for this which was done already; to clear themſelves in the matter, contrived among themſelves a Letter to the Pope, partly to certifie him what there was done, and partly alſo to admoniſh him what he ſhould do: the tenor of which their Letter contained theſe words following.

The form of a Letter which the Prelates of France as well ſecular as religious, ſent to Boniface, that he ſhould ceaſe his Enterpriſe, wherein he procceded againſt the King.

To the moſt holy Father and their deareſt beloved Lord, the Lord Boniface, the chief Biſhop of the holy Romiſh Church and the univerſal Church, his humble and devout Archbiſhops, Abbots, Priors, Conventuals, Deans, Provoſts, Chapters, Covents and Colledges of the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, regular and ſecular, of all the Realm of France, being gathered together, do offer moſt devout kiſſings of your bleſſed feet.

The Letter of the French Prelates to Pope Boniface.

WE are compelled, not without ſorrow of heart and bitter tears, to ſignifie unto your Holineſs that the moſt famous Prince our moſt dear Lord Philip, by the Grace of God, the noble King of France, when he heard and ſaw the Apoſtolical Letters ſealed, which were ſent to him of late, on your behalf by the worſhipful man the Cardinal of Narbo your Notary and Meſſenger, and were preſented by the ſame Cardinal to him, and certain other of his Barons: Upon the ſight and peruſing of thoſe ſo bloody Letters, being read and declared to them ſitting by him; both our Lord the King, and the Barons themſelves were highly moved with great marveling and great trouble. Inſomuch that the ſaid our Lord the King, by the advice of his Barons, commanded to be called before him the other Barons then abſent, and us alſo; that is to ſay, All Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Conventuals, Deans, Provoſts, Chapters, Covents and Colledges, as well of Cathedral or Collegiate Churches, regular and ſecular and alſo all the Univerſities and Communalties of the Towns of his Realm; that we Prelates, Barons, Deans, Provoſts, and two of the learneſt of every Collegiate and Cathedral Church, ſhould appear perſonally, and ſhould procure the reſt likewiſe to appear, by their Stewards, Officers, and ſufficient Proctors, with full and ſufficient Commiſſion at the appointed place and time. Further, when we and the other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons aforeſaid, and alſo the Barons, Stewards, Officers, and Proctors, and other of the Communalty of the Towns were thus called, and when, according to the form of the foreſaid calling by the Kings Commandment, we ſtood before the King this Wedneſday, the tenth of this preſent April, in Saint Maries Church in Paris: Our Lord the King caused to be propounded openly and plainly to all men, that it was ſignified to him, from you among other things by the foreſaid Cardinal and Letters, that for his Kingdom (which he and his Anceſtors hitherto do acknowledge they hold of God only) now ought in Temporalties to be ſubject to you, and hold of you, and that ye were not content with theſe, ſo marvelous and ſtrange words, and not heard of from the beginning of the world of any Dwellers within the ſame Realm, but that ye went about to put them in practice; and that ye called to appear before you the Prelates of the ſaid Realm, and Doctors of Divinity, and ſuch Profeſſors of both Laws, as were born within the ſaid Realm, for the correcting and amending of ſuch Exceſſes, Faults, Arrogancies, Wrongs, and Harms, as ye pretend to be done to the Eccleſiaſtical Prelates and Perſons Eccleſiaſtical both regular and ſecular, abiding within the Realm and elſewhere, by our Lord the King himſelf and his Officers or Bayliffs, by his Peers, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles, with the communalty and people of the ſaid Realm: To the intent, by this means the foreſaid Realm might be made ſtrong, with precious Jewels and durable Treaſures, which are to be preferred before the Bucklers or any armor of ſtrong men, that is to ſay, by the wiſdom of Prelates, and wiſe men, and others; through whoſe ripe faithful counſel, and circumſpect foreſight, the Realm might be ruled and governed, the Faith might be ſtabliſhed, the Eccleſiaſtical Sacraments might be miniſtred, Juſtice might be executed; which by them being robbed of their goods and riches, and utterly ſpoiled, is in a doubtful caſe and in jeopardy of miſerable decay, and for ever to be deſtroyed.

Among theſe and divers other griefs, which were done by you and the Romiſh Church, to him, to his Realm, and the French Church, both in reſerving and wilful ordering of Archbiſhopricks, Biſhopricks, and beſtowing of great Benefices of the Realm upon ſtrange and unknown perſons, yea, and oft upon ſuſpected perſons, never being at the Churches or Benefices aforeſaid: by reaſon whereof the decay of Gods Worſhip enſued; the godly wills of the Founders and Givers are defrauded of their godly purpoſe; the accuſtomed Alms-giving is withdrawn from the poor of the ſaid Realm, the impoveriſhing of the Realm followeth, and Churches run in danger to be defaced, while they remain deſtitute of Service: the Prophets being taken away, and the fruits of them that ſerve them, being appointed to the commodity of ſtrangers. And while Prelates have not to give, yea to reward men for their deſerts; Noblemen (whoſe Anceſtors founded the Churches) and other learned men, cannot have Servants; and that, for theſe cauſes, devotion began to be cold, and there was none at theſe days that would ſtretch out a liberal hand towards the Churches; and furthermore by the premiſes an evil example was given. Alſo he complained of new Taxes, of Penſions, newly laid on the Churches, of immeaſurable Bondages, Exactions, and divers Extortions, with other prejudicial and hurtful Novelties, by which the general ſtate of the Church is changed, in giving Suffragans, as helpers to the higher Prelates, whereby neither the Biſhops themſelves nor the Suffragans can do their duties, but for them they muſt run with Gifts to the Apoſtolical See. He complaineth alſo of divers Cauſes and ſome Articles long ſince, but true in the time that they preſented, that were done, and be done continually: and alſo not purpoſing to ſuffer ſo great a diſheriting of him and his Succeſſors from the Realm, and ſo manifeſt a grief, they could not ſuffer any longer the evident loſs of the Honour of him and the Realm, and ſaid, That he was certain that it was known to the whole world, that he did maintain in this matter a juſt cauſe, as he had learned by the agreable Sentence of Doctors in Divinity, and Maſters of both Laws, that were born within his Realm, and others, which among the Doctors and cunning men of the world were counted of the learned ſort and more famous. Therefore he required us, all and every one; both Prelates and Barons, and other, earneſtly as our Lord; he prayed and gently begged as a friend, to conſult and take diligent pains, that he might Ordain wholſome things, both for the keeping of their old liberty, the Honour and State of the Realm, and of the Inhabitants thereof, for the eaſing of the Griefs aforeſaid, for redreſſing of the Realm and the French Church, by our counſel and his Barons, to the praiſe of Gods name, the encreaſe of the Catholick Faith, the honour of the univerſal Church, and promoting of Gods Religion: ſpecially ſeeing ſuch griefs were done by his Officers and others of the Realm, to the Churches and Church-men, for the which he purpoſed a remedy of wholſome Correction, before the coming of the foreſaid

Cardinal

Cardinal, and would now have put it in execution effectually, but that he might be thought to have done that for fear, or at your commandment, which thing ye cannot aſcribe to your ſelf. Furthermore, he would ſpend not only his goods, but alſo his Realm, yea his Children if the caſe required: and therefore we ſhould regard to be ready with counſel and help in ſeaſon as we are bound by the duty of fidelity in theſe things: wherein it is manifeſt, that as all and every mans caſe is handled, generally and particularly their caſe is promoted, and every mans own intereſt is touched. And then he demanded by and by to be anſwered plainly and finally in theſe things, of all and every one.

Then the Barons ſitting aſide with the Officers and Proctors aforeſaid, at the length after they had taken counſel, coming to our foreſaid Lord the King, and praiſing greatly and heartily thanking him for his laudable purpoſe and good will, anſwered with one voice: that for thoſe things they were ready not only to ſpend their goods, but offered the ſame goods, riches, and alſo their perſons to death, and not to flee any kind of torment. And ſaid further with one voice, That if our foreſaid Lord the King would (as God fordbid) ſuffer, or elſe willingly paſs over thoſe, they themſelves would in no caſe ſuffer it.

Then when anſwer was asked of us afterward, although we deſired longer reſpite of deliberation of the King himſelf our Lord, and of the greateſt of the aforeſaid Barons; and that for this intent, that in the mean while the Popes Letters might have come to our Lord the King; we anſwered, That we would not offend againſt the Liberty of the Realm, nor by any means innovate things contrary to the Kings Honour in this behalf.

We went about alſo to inform him with many godly words, and earneſt perſwaſions, and with many kinds of help, and by ſundry ways to bring him to keep the ſpecial bond of Unity, which is known to have continued to theſe preſent days, betwixt the holy Romiſh-Church, and his Predeceſſors. But when we were denied any longer delay, and it was plainly and openly told to all men, that if any man were of a contrary mind, from thence-forth he ſhould be manifeſtly counted for an Enemy of the King and the Realm: We conſidering warily, and ſeeing plainly, that except our Lord the King, and the Barons aforeſaid were content with our Anſwer, beſides other dangers and great offences (whereof there could neither be number nor end) and then the devotion both of the Romiſh and French Church, and alſo the whole Obedience of the Laity, and all the people from thenceforth ſhould be taken away without recovery, nor without great fear and doubt; we therefore thought good to anſwer thus:

That we would help our Lord the King with due counſel and convenient help for the preſerving of his Perſon, and of his earthly Honour, and the Liberty and Laws of the ſaid Realm, like as we were (certain of us) by the duty of Allegiance bound to him, which hold of him Dukedoms, Earldoms, Baronies, Fees, and other noble parts of the ſaid Realm, by the form of the Oath, as all other do: yet we made humble ſuit to the ſame our Lord the King, that ſeeing we were bound to obey the Popes Holineſs and your holy feet, he would ſuffer us to go according to the tenour of your foreſaid Calling.

Then on the Kings and Barons behalf followeth Anſwer, That in no caſe they would ſuffer us to go out of the Realm, and that by no means they would bear to be handled ſo dangerouſly, yea rather to be altogether waſted.

Then we conſidering ſo great an anger, and trouble ſo jeopardous, and ſo great that none could be greater, both of the King, the Barons, and other Lay-people of the Realm; and now knowing plainly, that the old Enemy of Peace, which goeth about from the beginning of his Fall, with ſowing of Darnel, to break the Unity of the Church; by troubling of peace, would break Charity, and infect the ſweetneſs of good works with the poiſon of bitter envy, and would overthrow Mankind utterly, and would trouble with wickedneſs the band of lovely Unity, and ſingular Friendſhip, which hitherto have had a happy increaſe betwixt the Romiſh-Church and our Lord the King, and his Predeceſſors, and the Realm, to the praiſe of the higheſt God, the increaſe of Chriſtian-Faith, and the ſetting forth of the Honour of the Church, of the King and the Realm; and that now (alas) a door was open, to the lamentable breaking and pitiful ſeparating, of great offences to riſe on every ſide, dangers are attempted againſt Churches and Church-men, to ſpoil their goods and riches, with jeopardy of life, ſeeing that the Laity now do abhor and utterly flee the Obedience of Clerks, utterly baniſhing them from their counſels and doings, and have taken courage to condemn the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure and Proceſs: all which jeopardies, with other ſundry and divers dangers (which neither Tongue is able to tell, nor Writing can declare) we ſeeing at hand, thought good in this point of greateſt neceſſity, to run with weeping voice, and lamentable ſighs to the circumſpect wiſdom of your Holineſs: beſeeching your fatherly mildneſs, and humbly praying you, that ſome wholſome remedy may be provided in the premiſſes; by which, the ſound profitable agreement and mutual love, which hath continued ſo long time betwixt the Church, the King, and the Realm, might be maintained in that old ſweet Concord; the ſtate of the French-Church might continue in godly and quiet peace; and that he would vouchſafe to foreſee how to withſtand the dangers and offences aforeſaid, that we and our States may be provided for, by the foreſaid Commandment of your Calling, by the ſtudy of your Apoſtolical Wiſdom, and fatherly love. The Almighty preſerve your Holineſs to his holy Church a long time.

{KING Edw. 3}

Theſe things thus diſcourſed and done, then followed the year of our Lord, 1304. In the which year, about the Nativity of our Lady, came a Garriſon of harneſſed Souldiers well appointed, ſent partly by the French King, partly by the Cardinals of Columpna, whom the Pope before had depoſed, unto the Gates of Arvagium, where the Pope did hide himſelf, becauſe he was born in the Town. The Captains of which Army was one Schaira, Brother to the foreſaid Cardinals; and another, William de Longareto, High Steward to the French King. Who invading the Popes Town, and finding the Gates open, gave aſſault to the Popes Frontire, where the Pope with his Nephew, a Marqueſs, and three other Cardinals were immured. The Townſmen, ſeeing all their intent and ſtrength to be bent againſt the Pope, cauſed the common Bell to be rung, and ſo, aſſembling themſelves in a Common-Council, Ordained Adulphus, one of the chiefeſt Rulers of the Town, for their Captain; who (unknowing unto them) was a great Adverſary to the Pope. This Adulphus bringing with him Reginaldus de Supine, a great Lord in Campania, and the two Sons of John Chitan, a Nobleman, whoſe Father the Pope had then in priſon; at length joyned with the French Company againſt the Pope, and ſo beſet his Palace on every ſide. And firſt, ſetting upon the Palaces of the three Cardinals, which were then chief about the Pope, they rifled and ſpoiled all their goods. The Cardinals by a back-door hardly avoided their hands: but the Popes Palace, through munition and ſtrength of the Marqueſs, was ſomething better defended. At length the Pope, perceiving himſelf not able to make his party good, deſired truce with Schaira and his Company, which was to him granted from One till Nine. During which time of truce, the Pope privily ſendeth to the Townſmen of Arvagium, deſiring them to ſave his life: which if they would do, he promiſed ſo to inrich them, that they ſhould all have cauſe never to forget or repent their benefit beſtowed. To this they made anſwer again, excuſing themſelves, that it lay not in their ability to do him any good; for that the whole power of the Town was with the Captain. Then the Pope, all deſtitute and deſolate, ſendeth unto Schaira, beſeeching him to draw out in Articles, wherein he had wronged him, and he would make him amends to the uttermoſt. Schaira to this maketh a plain anſwer, ſignifying to him again, That he ſhould in no wiſe eſcape with his life, except upon theſe three Conditions. Firſt, To reſtore again the two Cardinals of Columpna his Brethren, whom he had before deprived, with all other of their Stock and Kindred. Secondly, That after their Reſtitution, he ſhould renounce his Papacy. Thirdly, That his body ſhould remain in his Power and Cuſtody. Theſe Articles ſeemed to the Pope ſo hard, that in no caſe he would agree unto them: wherefore the time of truce expired, the Captains and Souldiers, in all forcible means bending themſelves againſt the Biſhop, firſt fired the Gates of the Palace, whereby the Army, having a full entrance, fell to rifle and ſpoil the houſe. upon hope to have his life, and the life of his Children, yieldeth him to the hands of Schaira and the other Captain: which when the Pope heard, he wept and made great lamentation. After this, thorow windows and doors, at length with much ado they braſt in to the Pope, whom they intreated with words and threats accordingly. Upon this he was put to his choice, whether he would preſently leave his life, or give over his Papacy. But that he denied ſtiffly to do, to die for it, ſaying to them in his vulgar tongue, Eccle col, eccle cape; That is, loe here my neck, loe here my head: proteſting, That he would never while he lived renounce his Popedom. Then Schaira went about, and was ready to ſlay him, but, by certain that were about him, he was ſtaied; whereby it happned that the Pope received no harm, although divers of his Miniſters and Servants were ſlain. The Souldiers, which ranged in the mean time through all the corners of the Popes Houſe, did lade themſelves with ſuch treaſure of gold, ſilver, plate and ornaments, that the words of my Author (whom I follow) do thus expreſs it; Quod omnes reges mundi non poſſent tantum de theſauro reddere infra unum annum, quantum fuit de Papali Palatio aſportatum, & de palatiis trium Cardinalium, & Marchionis: That is, That all the Kings of the earth together were not able to diſburſe ſo much out of their treaſure in a whole year, as then was taken and carried out of the Popes Palace, and of the Palace of the three Cardinals, and the Marqueſs. Thus Boniface, bereaved of all his goods remained in their cuſtody three days. During which ſpace, they had ſet him on a wild unbroken Colt, his face turned to the Horſe tail, cauſing the Horſe to run courſe, while the Pope was almoſt breathleſs. Moreover, they kept him ſo without meat, that he was thereby near famiſhed to death. After the third day, the Arvagians and people of the Town muſtering themſelves together (to the number of ten thouſand) ſecretly braſt into the Houſe where the Pope was kept, and ſo ſlaying the Keepers, delivered the Pope by ſtrong hand. Who then being brought into the middle of the Town, gave thanks with weeping tears to the people for his life ſaved; promiſing moreover, That forſomuch as he was out of all his goods, having neither bread nor drink to put in his mouth, Gods bleſſing and his, to all them that now would relieve him with any thing, either to eat or drink. And here now ſee what poverty and affliction can work in a Man: the Pope before in all his pomp and moſt ruffling wealth was never ſo proud, but now he was as humble and lowly, that every poor ſimple Man (as mine Author teſtifieth) might have a bold and free acceſs to his perſon. To make the ſtory ſhort, the Pope, in that great diſtreſs of famine, was not ſo greedy of their victuals, as they were greedy of his bleſſing. Whereupon, the Women and people of the Town came ſo thick, ſome with bread, ſome with wine, ſome with water, ſome with meat, ſome with one thing, ſome with another, that the Popes Chamber was too little to receive the offering; inſomuch, that when there lacked cups to receive the wine, they poured it down on the Chamber floor, not regarding the loſs of wine to win the Popes Holy Bleſſing. Thus Pope Boniface, being refreſhed by the Town of Arvagium, took his journey from thence, accompanied with a great multitude of harneſſed Souldiers to Rome, where he ſhortly upon the ſame, partly for fear which he was in, partly for Famine, partly for ſorrow of ſo ineſtimable a treaſure loſt, died. After whom ſucceeded Benedictus the 11*th*. of whom theſe Verſes are written: * A re nomen habe, benedic, benefac, benedicte. Aut rem perverte, maledic, malefac, maledicte, &c. And thus have ye the whole ſtory of Pope Boniface the 8*th*. Author of the Decretals. Which ſtory I thought the more diligently to ſet forth, that all the Latine Church might ſee what an Author he was, whoſe Laws and Decretals ſo devoutly they follow.

Pope Benedictus 11.

Now, after the long debating of this matter between the French King and Pope Boniface, let us proceed in our Engliſh ſtory. About this time, in the days of King Edward, the Church of Rome began daily more and more to riſe up, and ſwell ſo high in pride and worldly dominion, that no King almoſt in his own Country could do any thing, but as pleaſed the Pope, who both had, and ruled all in all Countries, but chiefly here in England, as partly by his intolerable tallage and pillage before ſignified may appear, partly by his injunctions and commandments ſent down, alſo by his Donations and reſervations of Benefices and Church Livings; alſo in depoſing and diſpoſing ſuch as him liſted, in place and Office to bear rule: inſomuch, that when the King and the Church of Canterbury in their Election, had choſen one Robert Burnhil Biſhop of Bath, to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Pope Boniface of his own ſingular preſumptuous authority, ruling the matter after his pleaſure, fruſtrated their Election, and truſt in another, named John Pecham: for among all other, this had always been one practice of the Court of Rome, ever to have the Archbiſhop of their own ſetting, or ſuch one as they might be ſure of on their ſide, to weigh againſt the King and other, whatſoever need ſhould happen. To this John Pecham Pope Boniface directed down a ſolemn Bull from Rome, as alſo unto all other quarters of the univerſal Church. In the which Bull was contained and decreed, directly againſt the rule of Scripture and Chriſtian Obedience; That no Church nor Eccleſiaſtical perſon, ſhould henceforth yield to his King or Temporal Magiſtrate, either any giving or lending, or promiſing of Tribute or Subſidy, or portion whatſoever, of the goods and poſſeſſions to him belonging; but ſhould be clearly exempted and diſcharged from all ſuch ſubjection of Tallage or ſubvention to be exacted of them in the behoof of the Prince and his affairs. Which decree manifeſtly rebelled againſt the commanded Ordinance of God, and the Apoſtolical Canon of S. Peter, and all other examples of Holy Scripture. For as there is no word in the Scripture that excludeth Spiritual Men more than Temporal from obedience and ſubjection of Princes: ſo if it chance the Prince in his exacting to be too rigorous or cruel in oppreſſion, that is no cauſe for the Clergy to be exempted, but to bear the common burthen of obedience, and to pray to God to turn and move the Princes mind, and ſo (with prayer and patience, not with pride and diſobedience) to help and amend that which is amiſs. Concerning the Bull of Boniface, if any there be that either do not credit the ſame, ſo to contain, or would for his mind ſee and read the ſame, the words hereof follow.

The Clergy denied to give tribute to the King.

This Bull being derected (as is ſaid) from Rome to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and likewiſe thorow the whole Univerſal Church, under the Popes authority; it chanced not long after, the King held his Parliament at S. Edmundsbury; where was granted to him of all Cities and Boroughs an eighth, and of the Commons a twelfth of their goods. Only the Clergy, by vertue of his Bull, ſtood ſtout, denying to pay any thing to the King. This anſwer not well pleaſing the King, he willeth them to deliberate better with themſelves upon the matter; and after long adviſement, ſo to give him anſwer againſt the next Parliament, which ſhould be holden the next Hillary Term at London.

The Clergy ſecluded from the Kings protection.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury for his ſtubbornneſs, had his goods confiſcate to the King.

In concluſion, the Parliament came, the Clergy perſiſteth ſtill in the denial of their Subſidy, alledging the Popes Bull for their warrant and diſcharge. Whereupon the King likewiſe ſecludeth them from under his protection and ſafeguard of his Laws. And as concerning the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, above mentioned, becauſe he was found more ſtubborn than the reſt, and was the inciter to the other; he ſeized upon all his goods, and cauſed an Inventory of the ſame to be inrolled in the Exchequer. Notwithſtanding, diveis of the other Biſhops relented ſoon after to the King, and contributed the fifth of their goods unto him, and were received again to favour.

In the life of this Kings Father, it was declared before how the ſaid King Henry the Third, Father to this King, after divers Wars and commotions had with his Barons, had granted certain liberties and freedoms written and contained in Magna Charta, and in Charta de Foreſta. Concerning which matter, much buſineſs happned in this Kings days alſo in the Realm, between the King and his Barons and Commons. The occaſion was this: A pack of Wool which before payed but a Mark to the King, was now by this King raiſed up to forty ſhillings. After this the King having a journey to make into Flanders, ſent to his Barons and divers others to give their attendance, and ſervice in the ſame, which they refuſed and denied to do. Notwithſtanding, the King perſiſting in his purpoſe, with ſuch a power as he had, prepareth toward his journey. To whom being in his way at Winchelſey, the foreſaid Earls and Barons, and Commons, ſent certain petitions contained in writing under the name of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots and Priors, Earls and Barons, with the Commanalty of the Realm. In which writing, firſt lamenting and complaining of their afflicted ſtate and miſery, after humble manner they delired their Lord the King to redreſs and amend certain grievances among them. And firſt they declared in the name of the whole Commons, that the promotion or Writs directed to them for their attendance upon his Grace into Flanders, was not ſufficient: for that there was no certain place in the ſaid Writs ſpecified unto them, whether to come for making their proviſion, and preparing money and other things according to the ſame. And if the place had been to them ſignified, yet, becauſe none of their Anceſtors ever ſerved the King over into Flanders before, the Commons therefore thought themſelves not bound to any ſervice in that Country. And albeit they had been ſo bound thereunto, yet they were not able to do it, being ſo heavily oppreſſed with ſo many Tallages, Taxes, Tolls, Cuſtoms, and prices of Corn, Oates, Tinn, Wool, Leather, Oxen, Kine, Fleſh, Fiſh, &c. And beſides all this, having no penny of wages given them to relieve their charges: Over and beſides, the lack of the Kings wages not paid them, their own poverty like an heavy burthen did ſo miſerably lie upon them, that ſome of them had no ſuſtentation, ſome of them were not able to till their own ground. They alledged moreover, that they were not now handled after the old Laws and cuſtoms of the Land, as their anceſtors were wont. Many alſo found themſelves grieved in that they were not uſed according to the Articles contained in Magna Charta; and again that the Charta de Foreſta was not obſerved nor kept, as it was wont to be. Wherefore moſt humbly they beſeeched the King, both for his own honour and for the wealth of his people, that of theſe things they might find redreſs. For the Cuſtom moreover of Wool, the whole Commons bewailed to the King their grief, in that for every Pack of Wool was fined to the King, forty ſhillings, and for every ſack of toſed Wool, ſeven marks. The which Wool of England, as it doth riſe up to the value of half the Realm; ſo the Tollage of the ſame ſurmounteth to the fifth part of the valuation of the whole Land. And becauſe therefore the Commons wiſhed the honor and preſervation of their King (as they were bound to do) they thought it not good for his Grace to ſail over to Flanders, unleſs he had better aſſurance of their fidelity, eſpecially at this time the Scots being ſo buſie: who if they began to rebel, he being at home in his Land, much more were they like to ſtir, he being abroad out of the Land. And that not only for the Scots, but alſo for that the like peril was to be doubted of other Foreign Nations and Kingdoms, which as yet were in no firm peace with England, &c.

Magna Charta. Charta de Foreſta.

The King anſwer to the petiti ons of the Barons an Commons

To theſe petitions, the King ſaid that he could as yet make no reſolute anſwer, for that ſome of his Council was gone over already to Flanders, ſome were at London. Notwithſtanding, at his return again from Flanders (which he truſted ſhould be ſpeedily) they ſhould then hear further, and know more of his mind concerning the ſame. In the mean time this he required of them, to keep good rule at home while he was forth. What anſwer the King had minded to make them at his return, it is uncertain, which peradventure had turned to a bloody anſwer: but occaſion ſerved otherwiſe, and turned all to agreement. For the Scots with their Captain William Waleis above ſpecified, in the mean time, the King being abſent, invaded the Realm with ſuch violence, that Prince Edward the Kings Son, who was left to rule in his Fathers ſtead, was forced to Aſſemble a Parliament, and to call for the Earl of Hereford, the Earl of Northfolk, High Marſhal of England, Earl of Eſſex, High Conſtable, with other Earls, Barons, Knights, and Eſquires, to intreat peace and concord between his Father and them. Who coming up to London with 1500 well armed Souldiers, and obtaining the Gates of the City with their own Men, fell at length to agreement with the Prince, upon compoſition to have the Articles of Magna Charta, and of Charta de Foreſta confirmed; and that by his means and mediation they might be aſſured of the Kings diſpleaſure to be removed from them. The which foreſaid Articles of Magna Charta, with the other Articles adjoyned withal, here follow under written.

Petitions of the Barons and Commons to the King.

The Articles contained in Magna Charta.

Firſt, No Tallage or Subſidy by the King or his heirs to be impoſed or levied hereafter within the Realm of England, without the common aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots and other Prelates, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgeſſes, and Commons of the Realm.

Item, No Taker or Servitor of the King, or of his heirs, henceforth within this Realm, to take Grain, Wool, Leather, or any goods of any Man, without the will and conſent of him which is the owner.

No taking to be hereafter, in name of tribute, for any Pack of Wool.

Item, To be granted by the King and his Heirs after him, both to the Clergy and Laity of this foreſaid Realm, to have to and enjoy their Laws, Liberties and Cuſtoms, in as ample manner as they were wont at any time heretofore.

Item, If any Decrees or Statutes ſhall hereafter be made and ſet forth contrary to theſe foreſaid Articles, the ſame to ſtand void and of no effect for ever.

Agreemen concluded and ſealed between t King and his Barons

Beſides theſe Articles alſo, in the ſame compoſition was contained, that all grudge and diſpleaſure between the King and Barons for not going to Flanders ceaſing; the Earls and Barons might be aſſured to be received again into the Kings favor.

The mode rate and good natu of King Edward noted.

Theſe things thus agreed upon, and by mediation of the Prince alſo confirmed and ſealed with the Kings Fathers Seal: ſo was all the variance pacified, to the great comfort of the people, and no leſs ſtrength of the Realm againſt their enemies: and moſt chiefly to the commendation of the gentile, and wiſe nature of the King, who as he was gentle in promiſing his reconcilement with his ſubjects, ſo no leſs conſtant was he in keeping that which he had promiſed.

Robert Winchelſey, Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

After the death of John Pecham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, above mentioned, who in the Parliament had reſiſted the King in the right of certain liberties pertaining to the Crown, touching Patronages and ſuch Church matters, ſucceeded Robert Winchelſey; with whom alſo the King had like variance, who accuſed him to the Pope for breaking the peace, and took part with them that rebelled againſt the King about uſages and liberties of the Realm. Wherefore, the King being cited up to the Court of Rome, and there ſuſpended by the means of the ſaid Archbiſhop, directed his Letters again to the Pope, taken out of the Parliament Rolls, where I find divers Letters of the King to Pope Clement, againſt the ſaid Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the contents whereof here follow, Videlicet, Qualiter idem. And as this King was troubled in his time with both the Archbiſhops, John Pecham, and alſo Robert Winchelſey; ſo it happned to all other Kings for the moſt part, from the time of Lancfrancus (that is, from Pope Hildebrand) that every King in his time had ſome buſineſs or other with that See. As William Rufus, and Henry the Firſt were troubled with Anſelmus; Henry the Second with Thomas Becket; King Richard and all England with William Biſhop of Ely, the Popes Legate; King John with Stephen Langton; King Henry the Third with Edmund Archbiſhop, called Saint Edmund, Polyc. lib. 7. likewiſe this King Edward the Firſt, with John Pecham and Robert Winchelſey aforeſaid. And ſo other Kings after him, with ſome Prelate or other: whereby ye have to underſtand, how and about what time the Church of Rome, which before time was ſubject to Kings and Princes, began firſt to take head above, and againſt Kings and Rulers, and ſo hath kept it ever ſince.

Variance between the Archbiſhop of York and the Clergy of Dureſme.

About the beginning of this Kings Reign, after the deceaſe of Walter Archbiſhop of York, William Wickewanger ſucceeding in that See, minding to go on Viſitation, came to Dureſme to viſit the Church and Chapter there. But the Clergy and the people of the City ſhut the Gates againſt him, and kept him out, whereupon roſe no ſmall diſturbance. The Archbiſhop let fly his Curſe of Excommunication and Interdiction againſt them. The Biſhop of Dureſme again with his Clergy, deſpiſed all his Curſings, grounding themſelves upon the conſtitution of Innocentius the Fourth, De cenſibus & exactionibus. And ſo they appealed to Rome, ſaying, That he ought not to be received there, before he had firſt begun to viſit his own Chapter and Dioceſs, which he had not done. For to ſay the words of the Conſtitution; We Ordain and decree, That every Archbiſhop, that will viſit his Province, firſt muſt procure to viſit his own Church, City, and Dioceſs, &c.

Inquiſition made againſt ill rulers and falſe Officers.

Among other things in this King to be noted, that is not to be paſſed over; That where complaint was made to him of his Officers, as Juſtices, Majors, Sheriffs, Baliffs, Eſchetors, and ſuch other, who, in their Offices abuſing themſelves, extortioned and oppreſſed the Kings Liege people, otherwiſe than was according to right and Conſcience: the ſaid King, not ſuffering ſuch miſorder to be unpuniſhed, did appoint certain Officers or Inquiſitors, to the number of twelve, which Inquiſition was called Traibaſton, or Trailbaſtoun; by means of which Inquiſition, divers falſe Officers, were accuſed, and ſuch as were offenders were either removed from their place, or forced to buy again their Office at the Kings hand; to their no ſmall loſs, and great gain to the King, and much profit to the Common-wealth.

Trailbaſtoun.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſinghami.

In the Chronicle of Robert Amesbury, it is Recorded of the ſaid King. That he being at Amesbury to ſee his Mother (who was then in that Monaſtery profeſſed) there was a certain Man, that fained himſelf blind a long time, brought to the preſence of the ſaid Elinor the Kings Mother, ſaying, how that he had his ſight again reſtored at the Tomb of King Henry her late Husband, inſomuch that ſhe was eaſily perſwaded the Miracle to be very true. But King Edward her Son, knowing the Man a long time to be a vile diſſembler, and a wicked perſon, uſed to lying and crafty deceiving, perſwading his Mother not to give credit to the vile vagabond, declaring that he knew ſo well of the juſtice of his Father, that, if he were alive, he would twice rather pluck out both his eyes, than once reſtore him one. Notwithſtanding, the Queen his Mother, remaining ſtill in the former fond perſwaſion, would hear or believe nothing to the contrary, but was ſo in anger with her Son, that ſhe bid him depart her Chamber; and ſo he did. By the example whereof may eaſily be conceived, how and after what ſort theſe blind Miracles in thoſe days, and ſince, have come up among the blind and ſuperſtitious people. For had not the King here been wiſer than the Mother, no doubt but this would have been rung a Miracle, and percaſe King Henry been made a Saint.

But as this was a fained Miracle, and falſe no doubt, ſo in the ſame author we read of another manner of Miracle, ſounding more near the truth, and ſo much the more likely, for that it ſerved to the Converſion unto Chriſtian Faith: to which uſe properly all true miracles do appertain. The Miracle was this: In the Reign of this King, and the later year of his Reign, Caſſanus King of the Tartarians (of whom come theſe whom now we call Turks) fighting againſt the Soldan King of the Saracens, in the plain of Damaſcus, ſlew of them a hundred thouſand of Saracens: and again at Babylon, fighting with the ſaid Soldan, ſlew him in the field, and 200000 of the Saracens, calling upon the help of Chriſt, and thereupon became Chriſtian. This Caſſanus, I ſay, had a Brother a Pagan, who being in love with the Daughter of the King of Armenia, a Chriſtian Woman, deſired of her Father that he might marry with her. Whereunto the King her Father would not agree, unleſs he promiſed to be a Chriſtian. Notwithſtanding, the other being ſtronger in power, and threatning to get her by War; the King at length was forced to agree. In concluſion, it happned that the Child being born betwixt them was overgrown, and all rough with hair like the skin of a Bear: which Child being brought to the Father he commanded it to be thrown into the fire and burned. But the Mother, deſiring firſt to have the Child baptiſed, cauſed all things thereunto to be prepared. The infant being three times in water plunged, after the Sacrament of Holy Baptiſm received, incontinently was altered and turned from all his hairy roughneſs, and ſeen as fair and ſmooth-skinned as any other. The which thing after the Father ſaw and beheld, he was chriſtned himſelf and all his Houſe, &c.

In the Raign of this King, Walter Merton Biſhop of Rocheſter builded Merton Colledge in Oxford. In whoſe Raign alſo lived Henricus de Gaudano, Arnoldus de Villa Nova, Dantes, and other more, and Scotus called Duns. Who in his fourth Book of Sent. Diſt. 18. complaineth of the abuſe of Excommunication and of the Popes Keys. Whereas before, Excommunication was not uſed, but upon great and juſt cauſes, and therefore was feared: now, ſaith he it is brought forth for every trifling matter, as for not paying the Prieſts wages, &c. and therefore, ſaith he, it groweth in contempt. Under the ſame King, about the beginning of his Reign, was the year ſo hot and ſo dry, that from the month of May, until the month near of September, fell no raign: inſomuch that many died for heat, and the vulgar people, in their reckoning of years, did count the time from the ſaid dry year long after.

After Pope Benedictus above mentioned, ſucceeded Pope Clement the Fifth, who tranſlated the Popes Court to Avinion in France, where it remained the term of 74. years after. At the Coronation of this Clement was preſent Philip King of France, Charles his Son, and Duke John Duke of Brittany, with a great number of other Men of State and Nobility. At which Coronation, they being in the middle of the pomp, or proceſſion, a great Wall brake down and fell upon them: by the fall whereof Duke John with twelve other were ſlain, King Philip hurt and wounded, the Pope ſtrucken from his Horſe, and loſt out from his Mitre upon his head, a Carbuncle, eſteemed to the value of 6000 florence, Plat. de vit. Pont. By this Clement was ordained, that the Emperor, though he might be called King of the Romans before, yet he might not enjoy the title and right of the Emperor, before he was by him confirmed. And that the Emperors ſeat being vacant, the Pope ſhould Reign as Emperor, till a new Emperor was choſen. By him the Order of the Templars (who at that time were too abominable) was put down at the Council of Vienne, as hereafter hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared. He alſo ordained and confirmed the Feaſt of Corpus Chriſti, aſſigning Indulgences to ſuch as heard the Service thereof. And as Pope Bonifacius before heaped up the Book of Decretals, called Sextus Decretalium, ſo this Clement compiled the Seventh Book of the Decretals, called of the ſame Clement, The Clementines. In the time of this Pope, Henricus the ſixth of that name, Emperor, was poiſoned in receiving the Sacrament, by a falſe diſſembling Monk called Bernard, that fained himſelf to be his familiar friend; which was thought to be done not without the conſent of the Popes Legate. The Emperor, perceiving himſelf poiſoned, warned him to flee and eſcape away; for elſe the Germans would ſure have ſlain him; who although he eſcaped himſelf, yet divers of his order after that with fire and ſword were ſlain.

Paleologus Emperor of Conſtantinople Excommunicated with all his adherents by Pope Clement, for not ſuffering the Grecians to appeal to Rome.

{ Anno } 1306

As this Pope Clement the 5. had well provided now (as ye have heard) againſt the Empire of Rome to bring it under his girdle, inſomuch that, without the Popes benediction, no Emperor might take the ſtate upon him, &c. now he proceedeth further to intermeddle with the Empire of Conſtantinople. Where he firſt exerciſeth his tyranny and power of Excommunication againſt Andronicus Paleologus, Emperor of Conſtantinople, An. 1306, declaring him to be a Schiſmatick and Heretick, becauſe he neither would nor durſt ſuffer the Grecians to make their appeal from the Greek Church to the Pope, neither would acknowledge him for his Superior, &c. Whereby it may appear, that the Greek Church did not admit the Popes ſuperiority as yet, nor at any time before: Save only about the time of Pope Innocent the third, An. 1202. at what time the French-men with their Captain Baldwinus, Earl of Flanders, joyned together with the Venetians, were ſet againſt the Grecians, to place Alexius in the right of the Empire of Conſtantinople, upon condition (as writeth Platina) to ſubdue the Greek Church under the Church of Rome. Which Alexius being reſtored, and ſhortly after ſlain, the Empire came to the French-men, with whom it remained the ſpace of 58. years, till the coming of Michael Paleologus in the days of Pope Gregory the ninth, who reſtored the Empire from the French-men unto his priſtine ſtate again. During all which time of the French Emperors, the Greek Church was ſubject to Rome, as by the Decretals of Pope Gregory the ninth may appear. Then followed after this, that the foreſaid Michael Emperor of Conſtantinople, being called up to a Council at Lions by Pope Gregory the tenth, about the controverſie of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt (as is above ſpecified) and obedience to the Church of Rome: there becauſe the ſaid Michael the Emperor did ſubmit himſelf and the Grecians to the ſubjection of Rome (as teſtifieth Baptiſt Egnat.) he thereby procured to himſelf ſuch grudge and hatred among the Greek Monks and Prieſts, that after his death they denied him the due honour and place of burial. The Son of this Andronicus was Michael Paleologus above mentioned: who, as ye have heard before, becauſe he was conſtrained by the Grecians, not to admit any appellation to the Biſhop of Rome, was accurſed by the Popes cenſures for an Heretick. Whereby appeareth, that the Grecians, recovering their ſtate again, refuſed all ſubjection at this time unto the Church of Rome, which was the year of our Lord 1327, &c. After this Clement the fifth followed Pope John the 22. with whom Ludovick the Emperor had much trouble. After whom next in courſe ſucceeded Pope Benedict the 12. Which Benedict upon a time, being deſired to make certain new Cardinals, to this anſwered again; that he would gladly ſo do, if he alſo could make a new world. For this world (ſaid he) is for theſe Cardinals that be made already. Ex ſcripo Engethuſenſis. And thus much of the Popes; now to return a little back to the Kings ſtory again.

Ex Chron. Nic. Trivet. The Popes exactions complained of in the Parliament.

In the year of our Lord 1337. which was 34*th.* of the Reign of this King, in the beginning of Hillary Term, the King kept a Parliament at Carliel, where great complaints were brought in by the Nobles and antients of the Realm, concerning the manifold and intolerable oppreſſions of Churches and Monaſteries, and exactions of money by the Popes Legate William Teſta (otherwiſe termed Mala Teſta) lately brought into the Realm of England. The coming of which William Teſta was upon this occaſion, as followeth: Pope Clement, who, as ye heard before, had tranſlated his Court from Rome into France, where he had been Archbiſhop before, becauſe he contemned to come and remain at his own See; the Princes of Rome thought him therefore unworthy to enjoy Peters Patrimony. And ſo by that means, falling into bareneſs and poverty, he lived only of ſuch money of Biſhops as came to him to be confirmed, and with ſuch other ſhifts and gifts. So that by this means, partly of Biſhops and other Religious Men and perſons, partly under the name of courteſie and benevolence, partly under the pretence of borrowing; he had within the firſt year 9500. Marks of ſilver, all his other charges and expences, which he largely that year beſtowed, clearly born. Beſides this, he ſent moreover the foreſaid Legate William Teſta into England with his Bulls: in the which he reſerved the firſt fruits of the firſt year of all Churches being vacant at any time, or by any Man within the Realm of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, and alſo the fruits of Abbies and Priories within the ſaid Realms, &c. Whereupon the King with his Nobles, ſeeing the inconvenience and harm thereof enſuing to the whole Realm: in the foreſaid Parliament, holden at Carliel, withſtood the ſaid Legate, charging and commanding him by the aſſent of the Earls and Barons, that heneceforth he ſhould abſtain from all ſuch exactions. And as concerning his Lord the Pope, he would direct certain his Meſſengers unto him purpoſely for the ſame matter appointed: by the which Ambaſſadors, the King wrote unto the foreſaid Pope, declaring and moniſhing the Pope, as right and reaſon was, That he ſhould not exact the firſt fruits of the Churches and Abbies, by his predeceſſors and Noble men of the Land, founded for the honour and maintenance of Gods Service, for Alms and Hoſpitality: which otherwiſe, in ſo doing, ſhould all be overthrown. And ſo by this means, the Pope at that time changed his purpoſe as concerning Abbyes. But after that the fruit of Engliſh Churches was granted to the King for two years, in which ſpace he obtained the fruits of the foreſaid Churches, &c.

An Epiſtle of Caſſiodorus to the Church of England, concerning the abuſes of the Romiſh Church.

Ex vetuſta Chronico Albat.

TO the noble Church of England, ſerving in Clay and Brick, as the Jews did in time paſt under the tyranny of the Egyptians; Peter the Son of Caſſiodorus a Catholick Souldier, and devout Champion of Chriſt, ſendeth Greeting, and wiſhing it to caſt off the yoke of bondage, and to receive the reward of liberty.

To whom ſhall I compare thee, or to whom ſhall I liken thee, O Daughter of Jeruſalem? To whom ſhall I match thee, O Daughter of Sion? Great is thy perturbation, like unto the Sea. Thou ſitteſt alone without comfort all the day long, thou art confounded and conſumed with heavineſs. Thou art given up into the hands of him from whence thou canſt not riſe without help of one to lift thee up: for the Scribes and Phariſees ſitting upon the Chair of Moſes, the enemies of the Romans are as thy heads and Rulers: inlarging their guarded Phylacteries, and ſeeking to be inriched with the marrow of thy bones, laying heavy burthens, and not able to be born upon thy ſhoulders, and of thy Miniſters, and they ſet thee under tribute, (which of old time haſt been free) beyond all honeſty or meaſure. But marvel not thereat, for thy Mother, which is the Lady of people, like a Widow having married and coupled her ſelf to her ſubject, hath appointed him to be thy Father: that is to ſay, the Biſhop of Rome, who ſheweth no point of any Fatherly love towards thee. He magnifieth and extendeth to the uttermoſt his authority over thee, and by experience he declareth himſelf to be the Husband of thy Mother. He remembreth oft with himſelf the Prophetical ſaying of the Prophet, and well digeſted the ſame in the inward part of his breaſt: Take to thee a great Book, and write therein quickly with the pen of a Man; Take the ſpoil, rob quickly. But is this it which the Apoſtle ſaith, that he was appointed for, where he writeth thus? Every Biſhop, taken from among Men, is appointed for Men in thoſe things that belong to the Lord: not to ſpoil, nor nor to lay on them yearly Taxes, nor to kill Men, but to offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſins, and to ſorrow with them that be ignorant and do err. And ſo we read of Peter the Fiſher (whoſe ſucceſſor he boaſteth himſelf to be) that after the Reſurrection of Chriſt, he returned with other Apoſtles, to the office of Fiſhing: who when he could take nothing on the left ſide of the Ship, at the bidding of Chriſt, turned to the right ſide, and drew to land a net full of Fiſhes. Wherefore the profitable miniſtry of the Church is to be exerciſed on the right ſide, by the which the Devil is overcome, and plenty of ſouls be lucrified and won to Chriſt. But certainly the labor on the left ſide of the Ship is far otherwiſe: for in it the faith ſtumbleth, heavineſs beareth rule, when that thing that is deſired by ſeeking, is not found. For who is ſo fooliſh to think, that he can both at one time ſerve God and Man, and to ſatisfie his own will, or to ſtick to the revelations of fleſh and blood, and to offer worthy gifts to Chriſt? And doubtleſs that ſheepherd that watcheth not for the edifying of the flock, prepareth another way to the roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devour. And now behold, I ſay, O Daughter, the deeds of him that is called thy Father, ſuch as have not been heard of before: he driveth away the good ſheepherd from the ſheepfold, and placeth in their ſtead Biſhops, to rule, but not to profit (his Nephews, Couſins, and Parents) ſome that know no Letters, and otherſome dumb and deaf, which underſtand not the plain voyce of the [illegible] their wounds, that be hurt of the Wolves: but like hirelings, plucking off the fleeces apace, and reaping that which other Men have ſown, whoſe hands moreover be always ready in their Baskets and Pouches, but their backs are turned from their burthens. By which thing it is manifeſt, that the Prieſthood is clean changed as theſe days, the ſervice of God decayed, Alms diminiſhed and brought to naught, the whole devotion of Kings, Princes, and Chriſtians, is baniſhed. May not this be thought wonderful in the eyes of all Men; that whereas Chriſt commandeth tribute to be paid to Kings for him and for Peter, he now goeth about by dominion of his ſtile, to ſubdue to him both Realms, and Princes of Realms (againſt his will, whoſe Vicar he ſaith he is, and who refuſed the Realms and judgments of the world) which this Biſhop contrariwiſe challengeth, claiming all that which he in his ſtile writeth to be his? Alack, O Daughter, what doth he yet more againſt thee? mark, he draweth from thee whatſoever pleaſeth him, and yet he thinketh not himſelf content, to have the tenth part only of thy goods from thee; except he have alſo the firſt fruits of the Benefices of the Miniſters, whereby he may get a new patrimony, as well for himſelf as for his kindred, contrary to the godly wills of the firſt founders. Over and beſides all this, he inferreth other execrable taxes and ſtipends for his Legates and Meſſengers, whom he ſendeth into England; which not only take away the feeding and clothing of thee and thine, but alſo tear in pieces like Dogs your fleſh and skins. May not this Prince be compared to King Nebuchadoneſer, which deſtroyed the Temple of the Lord, and robbed away the ſilver and golden Veſſels thereof? The very ſame doth this Man alſo; he robbed the Miniſters of God his Houſe, and left them deſtitute of due help. In like manner doth he. Truly they be better that are killed with the ſword, than they which be pined with hunger; for they are dead ſtraight, but theſe are waſted with the barrenneſs of the Earth. O Daughter, all they that paſs by, let them have pity and compaſſion on thee, for there is no ſorrow like thy ſorrow. For now thy face is blacker than coals, through much ſorrow and weeping, and thou art no more known in the ſtreets: thy foreſaid ruler hath placed thee in darkneſs, and hath given thee wormwood and gall to drink. O Lord, hear the ſorrow and ſighings of thy people, behold Lord, and deſcend, for the heart of this foreſaid Man is more indurate than the heart of Pharaoh. For he will not ſuffer the people to depart, except in the fortitude only of thy hand. For he ſcourgeth them not only miſerably upon the Earth, but alſo after their death, he intendeth to incroach the goods of all Chriſtians under the name and title of dying inteſtate, or making no Will. Therefore, let the Chivalry of England well remember, how the French-men in times paſt, directing their greedy eyes on the Realm of England, laboured with all their power how to bring the ſame under their ſubjection. But it is to be feared, leſt the new devices and practice of this new enemy ſupply that which hitherto hath been lacking in them. For in diminiſhing of the treaſure of the Realm, and ſpoiling of the Church goods, the Realm ſhall be brought into ſuch inability, that it ſhall not be able to help it ſelf againſt the enemy. Therefore, O Daughter, and you the Miniſters thereof ſuffer not your ſelves to be led any more into ſuch miſerable bondage. Better it is for the wealth of thee and thine, that the Chriſtian King and the powers of the Realm, which have indued thee with great benefits, and you alſo which are indued with their benefits, do labour with all your power how to reſiſt the devices, conſpiracies, arrogancy, preſumption, and pride of the foreſaid perſon: who not for any zeal of God, but for the inriching of his Parents, and for his own Kindred (exalting himſelf like an Eagle) by theſe and ſuch other exactions goeth about, after another kind of extortion, to ſcrape up and devour all the money and treaſure of England. Now, leſt the diſſembled ſimplicity of the Realm in this behalf do bring utter ſubverſion, and afterward be compelled to ſeek remedy when it is too late: I beſeech the Lord God of Hoſts to turn away the veil from the heart of that Man, and to give him a contrite and an humble mind, in ſuch ſort as he may acknowledge the ways of the true God, whereby he may be brought out of darkneſs, and be inforced to relinquiſh his old ſiniſter attempts; and that the Vineyard, which the Lords hand hath plaſted, may be repleniſhed continually with the Preachers of the Word. Let the words of the Lord, propheſied by the mouth of Jeremy, ſtir up your minds to withſtand and reſiſt the ſubtil practices of this Man, by the which words the Lord ſpeaketh: O thou Paſtor which haſt ſcattered my people, and haſt caſt them out of their habitations, behold I will come and viſit upon thee, and upon the malice of thy ſtudies: neither ſhall there be any of thy ſeed which ſhall ſit upon the ſeat of David, neither which ſhall have power any more in Judah. So that thy neſt ſhall become barren, and utterly ſubverted, like Sodom and Gomorah.

And if he being terrified by theſe words, do not leave off from this which he beginneth, and doth not make reſtitution of thoſe which he hath received, then let all and ſingular perſons ſing for him being indurate, to him that ſeeth all things, the Pſal. 108. Deus laudem, &c. For truly as favor, grace, benevolence, remitteth and neglecteth many things; ſo again the gentle benignity of Man, being too much oppreſſed and grieved, ſeeking to be delivered and freed from the ſame, ſtriveth and ſearcheth to have the truth known, and caſteth off that yoke by all means poſſible that grieveth him, &c. Hæc Caſſiodorus.

What effect this Letter wrought in them to whom it was directed, is not in ſtory expreſſed. This by the ſequel may be conjectured; That no reaſon or perſwaſion could prevail, but that the Pope retained here ſtill his exactions, whatſoever was ſaid or written to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And thus much being written hitherto of theſe acts and doings here in England; now to ſlip a little into the matters happning the ſame time in France, under the Reign of the foreſaid King Philip above mentioned: forſomuch as about this time, An. 1307. was commenced a Parliament by the ſaid King of France againſt the Pope, touching the juriſdiction both Temporal pertaining to Princes, and Eccleſiaſtical belonging to the Church; I thought it not improfitable for the Reader to hear and learn the full diſcourſe and tradition hereof, according as we have cauſed it to be excerpt faithfully out of the true Copy and Records of Peter Bertrand Biſhop of Edvenen, and chief doer and Prolocutor in the ſaid Parliament upon the Popes ſide, againſt the King and State Temporal.

A Parliament in France aſſembled, wherein is diſcuſſed the juriſdiction Eccleſiaſtical, how far it extendeth. {Anno 1307}

Foraſmuch as the High Prelate of Rome, otherwiſe called Antichriſt, being then in his chief ruff, extolling himſelf above all Princes and Potentates of the world, as in other Countries, ſo alſo in France extended his uſurped juriſdiction, above the Princely authority of the King, claiming to himſelf full government of both the States, as well Secular as alſo Eccleſiaſtical: the King therefore, not ſuffering the exceſſive proceedings of Pope Clement the 5. above ſpecified, directeth his Letters Mandatory to the Prelates and Barons of the Realm of France, to Convent and Aſſemble themſelves together at Paris, about the beginning of

December, the year above prefixed: The tenor of which Letters of the King directed to the Prelates, followeth in this form and manner.

The ſummons of a Parliament by Philip the French King.

The Letter of Philip King of France, to the Biſhops and Prelates

PHilip by the Grace of God King of France, to our well-beloved Biſhop of Edvens, Greeting and Salutation. Reverend Father in God, right truſty and welbeloved, we greet you well. The more ſight and knowledge you have in Divinity and the Holy Scriptures of God, with the practice and experience of other good qualities and vertues; you know the better a great deal, how that the Clergy and Laity of this our Realm (as members of one body) ought to cleave and ſtick together; and how by their helping hand, unity and peace ſhould be maintained of all, and the contrary eſchewed and avoided, every ſtate contenting it ſelf, and not incroaching one upon another. And becauſe we are advertiſed, how that our Barons and Officers (as well in time paſt as of late) have diverſly in divers points injured you, as ſemblably you and yours in many cauſes have wrongfully damaged them; by occaſion whereof, the knot of unity and concord, which ought to have flouriſhed among you, is quite looſed and undone: To the end therefore by Gods Grace ſome good reformation and redreſs may be had herein; We moſt ſtudious of unity and concord, require you, and by theſe our Letters command you, to appear perſonally before us at Paris the 15th. day of December next enſuing the date hereof, and there before us to make relation of ſuch wrong as ye have received at the Laities hands. And we likewiſe ſtraitly charge and command you, our Barons, Bailiffs, and Officers, not to fail, but to make your perſonal appearances, before us, the day and place above witten, and there to exhibit before us a Bill of ſuch complaints, wherewith you burden our Prelates and Clergy, with their Officials: that we with our Council, conſulting thereupon, with due regard may ſee redreſs therein; whereby perpetual love and charity may ever hereafter reign and remain among them for ever. Given at Paris the firſt day of September, An. 1309.

The Parliament convented.

At the day in the Letters above ſpecified, the Prelates and Clergy Aſſembled themſelves before the King at his Palace in Paris, that is to ſay, the Lord Bituricen, the Lord Auxitan, the Lord Turonen, the Lord Rothom, and the Lord Senon, all Archbiſhops: the Lord Belvacen, the Lord Caihalen, the Lord Laudun, the Lord of Paris, the Lord Novionon, the Lord Carnoten, the Lord Conſtan, the Lord Andegaven, the Lord Pictaven, the Lord Melden, the Lord of Cameracen, the Lord of S. Feri, the Lord Brioce, the Lord of Cabulion, and the Lord of Edven, all Biſhops. Where after due reverence done unto the Kings Grace there ſitting in his own perſon, with his Barons and Council about him; a certain Noble and wiſe perſon, Lord Peter de Cugneriis, (being one of the Kings Council) roſe up, and openly in the Parliament Houſe ſpake in the Kings behalf on this wiſe, taking for his Theam, Reddite quæ ſunt Cæſaris, Cæſari & quæ ſunt Dei, Deo: which is to ſay, Give and render unto Cæſar, that which is his; and unto God, that which is Gods: which he very artificially proſecuted and applied, dividing it into two parts. Firſt, That obedience and reverence is due unto the King. Secondly, That there ought to be a difference between the juriſdiction of the Clergy and Laity, ſo that ſpiritual matters ſhould be defined and ordered by the Prelates and Spiritual Men, and Temporal Cauſes ruled and determined by the King, his Barons and Temporal Men. Which all he proved by many reaſons both of Fact and Law, as more fully appeareth beneath in the anſwer of the Biſhop of Edven: Finally, he concluded, That the Clergy ought only to deal and have to do with Spiritual matters; in defence whereof, the Kings Highneſs would ſtand their good Lord and maintainer. His Oration being ended, he repeated certain words in the French Tongue, which imported, That the Kings will and pleaſure was in ſome points to renew the temporal ſtate and juriſdiction; and therewith he exhibited a certain Bill in French, whereof alſo he gave a Copy to the Prelates, containing certain points and Articles under written, the contents whereof he affirmed not to appertain to the order and juriſdiction of the ſpiritualty, but only to the temporalty, complaining that the Clergy had wrongfully proceeded in the ſame. But notwithſtanding the premiſes, and for all this his complaint, he ſaid that the Prelates ſhould have time to conſult and deliberate thereupon with the King. The Copy of which Articles, with anſwer enſuing upon ſame, and the grievances of the Kingdom of France, wrought by the Clergy, and exhibited to the King, hereafter followeth.

Lord Peter ſpeaks in the Parliament.

The Theam of his Oration

The Oration divided into two parts.

Obedience to the King.

Difference between the juriſdiction of the State Temporal and Eccleſiaſtical.

{KING Edw. 1}

Articles in the Parliament propounded, concerning the juſt complaints of the Laity againſt the Clergy.

Cauſes real.

1. Firſt, The cognition of cauſes real, whether they touch poſſeſſion, or their propriety, or not, by Common-Law appertaineth to the juriſdiction temporal. But the Prelates with their Officials, to the end to infringe the temporal juriſdiction, take upon them the determination of ſuch cauſes real, eſpecially concerning poſſeſſion and all other interdicts.

2. Item, When a temporal man is ſued by any Clerk or ſpiritual Man for the poſſeſſion of his Land, obtaining an adjornament of the ſecular power, in the cauſe of Movity or otherwiſe: the Prelates Officials, ſtopping hereby the temporal juriſdiction, at the inſtance of the Clerk, calleth by Proceſs before them both the ſecular Judge and the party, inhibiting them to proceed any further in the cauſe, under pain of Excommunication and forfeiture of a certain ſumm.

Prelates intermeddle in temporal rerum matters.

3. Item, Although the ſecular Judge have the cognition of all Lay-mens matters (except in ſpiritual cauſes) yet will the Biſhops Officials, at the inſtance of any party, call them before them. And if the temporal men do except againſt their juriſdiction, alledging the incompetency of the judge; or elſe if they require the cauſe to be remitted to them (under whom they are) as the right Judges, yet do the Officials refuſe this to do, yea and by Excommunication compel the parties to proceed before them.

4. Item, The Biſhops Officials at the inſtance of the Clerks, alledging that they are injured in matters of inheritance by a Lay-man, call by Proceſs the Laity. And if it be alledged that thoſe cauſes ſtand upon reality, being ſo indeed, and that for that conſideration the cauſe ought to be remitted to the Temporal Law; this notwithſtanding, the Officials prohibite them under pain of Excommunication, or ſome great forfeit, not to proceed but before them.

5. Item, The Biſhops Officials take upon them to hear the plea of ſuch contracts, as either be conceived in writings, or made by word of mouth in the Temporal Law; ſending out their monition of Excommunication againſt them that ſtand bound concerning the ſame contracts.

6. Item, The Biſhops and Prelates decree Provincial Councils and Synodal Statutes, enacting and ordering therein many things to the high and great prejudice of the temporal juriſdiction, wherein they ought to have no cognition at all, neither to intermeddle themſelves therewith.

7. Item, The foreſaid Officials take upon them, before Notaries to ſwear perſons for performance of contracts and bargains (made by them in places under the juriſdiction temporal) concerning the ſale of inheritance or otherwiſe; incroaching thereby upon their juriſdiction, when verily they have nothing to do with any contracts and obligations, but with ſuch as are made and agreed upon within the compaſs of their own ſeat and juriſdiction.

Ex Officio.

8. Item, The ſaid Officials, of their meer Office, call before them the Laity, to anſwer to ſuch matters of correction as ſhall be laid to their charge, the cognition whereof, as they ſay, doth appertain unto them. And when the ſaid perſons do appear before them, and deny the crime objected againſt them, the Officials detain them and put them in priſon, although in ſuch caſes they are to be releaſed; and although impriſonment appertaineth only to the temporal power, and not to them.

Impriſonment pertaineth not to the Clergy.

9. Item, In the caſes aforeſaid, although by making of their purgations and other the proceſs therein, they be found clear of that which is laid to their charge, and are acquited; theſe yet the ſaid Officials will in no wiſe diſcharge and diſmiſs, before they have to the uttermoſt paid for the writings and proceſs in that behalf, a good piece of mony, when by Law it ought to be done gratis, and for nothing.

10. Item, It muſt not be forgotten to talk of the ſentence of Excommunication, which is decreed by vertue of one only citation, ſo often as a Man faileth in his appearance.

11. Item,

{KING Edm. 1}

11 Item, Mention is to be made of thoſe kind of Obligations De niſi. Whereby a man is Excommunicated by and by, if he make not payment at the day prefixed, although he be not able ſo to do.

12 Item, Whoſoever by Virtue of Excommunication in the Biſhops Court is Excommunicate, and he ſo Excommunicated do not ſatisfy the ſum due about the Excommunication, by and by the ſum is doubled. And the Secular power is charged by the Biſhops or their Officials, that they under pain of Excommunication compel the Excommunicate, by Attaching their Goods, to pay the ſaid ſum, and not to miſs a jot: which Monition if the Laity refuſe to put in execution, they themſelves are then Excommunicate, and in no wiſe to be Abſolved, before they diſburſe that mony, the which the principal Excommunicate perſon ſhould have paid.

13 Item, If the Bailiffs, Headborows, or other the Kings Officers and Judges of the Temporalty, receiving the foreſaid monitions, do put the ſame in execution, and find thoſe that be Excommunicate, to be beggerly and nothing worth; the ſaid Officers are bound at their own proper coſts and charges, to reſort to the Biſhops See or Conſiſtory, whereſoever it is, and there to take a Corporal Oath, That the Parties Excommunicate are nothing worth. This if they fail, thoſe Officers are ſure to be Excommunicate, and thereby inforced to diſburſe the due of the firſt Excommunicate perſons.

14 Item, If two Lay-men be in Sute together before a Temporal Judge, about an Action either real or perſonal, and one of them after conteſtation of Law, and great proceſs therein, do Appeal unto an Eccleſiaſtical Judge, he will preſume then to detain before him the Plea of ſuch Caſes and Actions, both real and perſonal, cauſing, by virtue of his Monitions and Authority, the Temporal Judge to ceaſe and leave off from medling therein: which if the Secular Judge obeyeth not, he is pronounced Excommunicate and compelled to make ſatisfaction; by occaſion whereof, the Temporal Juriſdiction is much annoied and clean loſeth the Prerogative thereof; becauſe by Law no man may Appeal from a Spiritual Judge to the Temporal Law.

No man may Appeal from a Spiritual Judg to the Temporal Law by the Popes Divinity.

15 Item, If a Lay-man, inhabiter of any of the Kings Towns, procureth his Debter, being alſo a Lay-man, to be Arreſted by virtue of Secular Juſtice in that place; and he which is ſo Arreſted appealeth, and cauſeth alſo his Creditor to be Arreſted, the Officials will take upon them to hear this matter; and if any thing be attempted concerning the Appeal, they miſs not to demand coſt and ſatisfaction both of the Juſtice, and alſo of him to whom the Arreſt was made. And if any of the Princes Retinue compelleth them to reſiſt this injury, they are ſtraightways pronounced Excommunicate.

16 Item, If the ſaid Biſhops have a number of Officials under them, whom they term Deans of the Clergy, which uſually cauſeth all ſorts of people through the Kings Dominions, only by word of mouth, to come afore them, and that ſometime without Commiſſion: when that in every Dioceſs there ought only to be but one Seat or Conſiſtory, wherein matters ſhould be heard and decided. And hereby it happeneth divers times, that many are wrongfully and without cauſe cited; to the end that they may pay mony enough, to rid themſelves thereof: which is to the no ſmall prejudice of the Kings Majeſties Subjects, and the Temporal Juriſdiction.

Deans of the Clergy.

17 Item, The ſaid Rulers of the Clerks, Seal up the Houſes of their Clergy, which are ſituate in the Kings Towns, and other of his Noble Mens Villages, to the prejudice of the Kings Majeſties Juriſdiction, and other of his Nobility: for that in ſuch kind of places the Biſhops have no ſuch kind of Juriſdiction.

Married Clerks.

18 Item, The ſaid Prelates or their Officials, do preſume to Seal up the moveable Goods of married Clerks, and of Merchants; whereas in ſuch Caſes the order thereof appertaineth to the Temporal Law.

19 Item, They compel the Laity to put in ſurety to anſwer Clerks before them in the Spiritual Court, yea, and chiefly the Kings own Servitors.

20 Item, They preſume to hear and have the cognition of Actions, which are real, or at leaſt-wiſe mixt, that is, both real and perſonal.

21 Item, The ſaid Prelates go about to have cognition of ſuch Temporal mens matters as dwell in Hoſpitals, Almshouſes, and the Kings peculiars, and in Villages of his Subjects, although the Plea thereof appertaineth to the King himſelf, and his ſubjects: forbidding under pain of Excommunication, and great forfeits, any man to be ſo hardy as to commence any Sute againſt any of them, but before themſelves, in pain of a great ſum of mony.

22 Item, To the end the Clergy and Eccleſiaſtical Rule ſhould be multiplied, they confer a number of Tonſures to Children under age, ſome of them being Sons of bondmen, other ſome Baſtards born; yea and to many more married folks inſufficient, unable, and unlearned.

23 Item, They do cauſe by the Governors of their Clerks, Widow-women to be inforced and defiled, and will have the diſcuſſing thereof: as in like manner, they will determine the matters of Pupils, applying their Goods when they died, as they do the Goods of them which die inteſtate, to their own uſe; the cognition whereof belongeth to the King himſelf, becauſe thoſe kind of perſons with their Goods are in ward to the King and under his tuition.

Gins to get mony.

24 Item, They procure through the ſaid Deans of the Clergy, of malice, Temporal men of the Kings Dominions or other where (without all order of Law) to be apprehended; objecting againſt them that they have ſtraied from ſome Article of Chriſtian Faith; and therewith ſhut them up; when as their Impriſonment appertaineth to the King till they be convicted thereof.

25 Item, They exerciſe their Juriſdiction in all places, having no regard, neither to the Kings peculiar Towns, nor yet to his Subjects; but run in every hole, when by Law they ought to have no Juriſdiction, without their own limits and precinct.

26 Item, When theſe Prelates or their Officials by virtue of their Monitions do charge the Kings Officers and his Juſtices to execute any thing; if they do not perform that, which is preſcribed unto them, the forfeit (which the Monition containeth) is taken: yea and Excommunication denounced. And this is a new invention ſprung up of late amongſt them, much to the prejudice of the King and his Subjects.

27 Item, When the Biſhops or their Officials do proſecute a matter of Office before themſelves againſt any Temporal man, and have no proof thereof; they compel many of the Laity to be depoſed therein what they know, having no reſpect whether they be the Kings Burgeſſes, or no, or what they be, and yet will they not allow any charges and expences for their pains taken in that behalf. But if they appear not at their day, they are ſure to be Excommunicate.

28 Item, If malefactors be apprehended by any of the Kings Juſtices, and Indicted of Theft, and he (whoſe Goods they were which were ſtollen) cometh before the Kings Sheriffs, and proveth them to be his, and that therefore the matter ought to be ordered by them: if afterwards the Biſhops or their Officials affirm the ſaid Felon or Malefactor to be a Clerk, they will by virtue of their Decrees or Monitions compel the Kings Sheriffs to reſtore and bring in the ſtollen Goods: and if they do it not, they are pronounced Excommunicate.

29 Item, If it happen the Kings Sheriff or Bailiff to take an offender for his offence, and he affirmeth himſelf to be a Clerk: although he never took any kind of Tonſures, or Orders, wearing no Habit appertaining thereunto; yet the Biſhops or their Officials will cauſe the detainers of them by their cenſures to deliver unto them the ſaid malefactor as their Clerk.

30 Item, If it happen the Kings Sheriff or other his Juſtices to take a Thief or Murderer, which beareth a Clerks Mark and Tonſure, and therefore delivereth him to the Clergy to be ordered; it ſhall not be long before he be acquainted by them, although he afterward Recognize his Fact; yea, and notwithſtanding that his fellows and partners of that Office, being meer Temporal, received Juſtice for the ſame, and appeached him thereof; and ſo the like Malefactors are encouraged thereby to commit after the like.

31 Item, If any complaineth and ſaith that he is ſpoiled, by and by the Officials will Decree a Monition againſt the ſpoiler: by virtue whereof, ſome one of the Deans of the Clergy ſhall moniſh him to reſtore the things comprized in the Monition, and alſo miniſter to him an Oath whether he hath not ſpoiled the Plaintiff of ſuch things, as he ſaith he was ſpoiled of. But if he refuſe to take an Oath before him, then the Dean will ſtraightways Seal up the Monition and Excommunicate him, and by no means ſhall he be Abſolved before he reſtore and ſatisfy the Contents in the Monition, whereof the Plaintiff ſaid firſt he was ſpoiled.

32 Item, If any for his offence be caſt into Priſon by the Secular power, although at the time of his taking he wear Temporal Habit, and was in no Orders, but all the days of his life lived like a Temporal man: yet if he ſhall Avouch and Vow himſelf to be a Clerk, to the intent to have more expedition at the Clergies hands, and to eſcape unpuniſhed; the Clergy will incontinently give to the Laity in commandment to reſtore unto them the malefactor, or elſe ſuſpenſion ſhall be denounced throughout the whole Townſhip, where the ſaid malefactor ſhall be ſo Impriſoned. And for avoiding the jeopardy which might ariſe of the ſaid ſeiſement; the Secular Judge of neceſſity is compelled to deliver them the offender, to the great prejudice of the Kings Temporal Juriſdiction, to whom the cognition thereof might appertain, in caſe of reſort and prerogative. Reſortum.

33 Item, When any offender is delivered by the Temporal Magiſtrates to the Clergy, as their Clerks; his friends will make ſute to the Biſhops Officials for him, and compound with them, by reaſon whereof they diſmiſs them unpuniſhed, and ſo do worſe and worſe, although their Fact was never ſo notorious 34 Item, So ſoon as any married Clerk, being a Merchant or of whatſoever other Science he be of, for any his offence by him committed, is called before the Secular Judge: the ſaid Clerk obtaineth of the Officials a Monition, bringing with them ſome Prieſt, who doth inhibit the Secular Judge under pain of 100 or 200 Marks, yea and of Excommunication too, not to proceed further, nor to meddle in ſuch Cauſes, and not to moleſt ſuch Parties, neither in Body nor Goods: But if the Judges obey not, they ſhall be ſuſpended from hearing of Maſs in that place, although the matter concerneth the Fact of Merchandiſe.

35 Item, The ſaid Officials grant Citations without number againſt the Laity in Caſes of Warranties perſonally to aſcite before them perſons unknown. But if they be known, it is contained in the Citation, that in no wiſe, and that under a great pain, he cauſe his adverſary to be called before a Secular Judge, during the return of the Citation.

36 Item, When one is Excommunicated in any place, the Officials grant out perſonal Citations againſt them, which do participate, and are converſant with the excommunicate: cauſing a whole Country by the ſpace of eight miles about to be cited together. And further, the friends and acquaintance of the Party ſo excommunicate (ſometimes by 40, ſometimes 60, yea and ſometimes by a 100 at once) are compelled to make their purgation before them, that they do not participate nor keep company with their friends the excommunicates. Whereby enſueth that many honeſt, old and ancient men, for avoiding of troubles and expences, do pay ſome twelve pence, ſome two ſhillings. By occaſion whereof many Vines are unlooked to, much Ground untilled, yea, and many good men conſtrained to lay the Key under the door, and run away.

37 Item, The ſaid Officials do burden many perſons of good name and fame, to be Uſurers: whereby they are conſtrained to agree with them, for avoiding the infamy that thereby might inſue.

38 Item, The foreſaid Officials call by Citation afore them, the honeſt wedded (as well Man as Woman) charing them, that they have committed Adultry to the perpetual infamy of their Huſbands and Wives. And for nothing elſe but by extortion to wring mony from them.

39 Item, Mention muſt be made of the multitude and number of Proctors, which eat and devour up all the world with their Citations, catching up Clients, and keeping abroad in the Country Courts and Aſſizes; who for mony return not the Citations, which by extortion they receive of them which are cited.

40 Item, There be many other griefs and enormities, which the Chapters, Abbots, Priors, Provoſts, and other Eccleſiaſtical perſons in the Realm of France, practice againſt the people. As when they cauſe to be cited before them, many of the Kings Burgeſſes, and others in divers places being priviledged: that is to ſay, Baiocenſes, Manmectans in Britain, Lugdons, Maſticons, with other more. But ſpecially the Provoſts of Hoſpitals uſe more commonly this trick, than any other do, whereby the people is much indamaged, and will be every day more and more, if remedy be not had therein. {KING Edw. 1}

41 Item, Eccleſiaſtical Magiſtrates labour to have cognition of Cauſes of injury, in whatſoever Cauſe it be: whether the injury be committed by word or fact. Likewiſe they take upon them to hear the Cauſes of married Clerks, and of their Wives, although they both uſe Merchandize. And if at any time ſuch couples be taken by the Secular Magiſtrates, the Official cauſeth a ſuſpenſion to be denounced in that Pariſh, by force of the Council Silvanectен.

42 Item, They challenge to have cognition concerning Widows Goods, both moveable and unmovable. And if it happeneth at any time that a Merchant Widow, in any of the Kings peculiars by way of Arreſt procureth any Temporal man to be convented before the Secular Judge; and the matter be ſo far traverſed, that he ſhould have been condemned by the Sentence of the Secular Judge, and then it come to the ear of the Eccleſiaſtical Magiſtrates, how and before whom the Widow did convent him: the ſaid Temporal Judge ſhall be conſtrained to withdraw the ſame. And by their monitions and cenſures they will correct the ſame; and this oftentimes happeneth.

43 Item, Many of the Tenants and Inhabiters of the Biſhops Lands call one another to the Court of the Officials, by a kind of appellation: by virtue whereof the Officials take upon them to proceed in the ſame, and to have cognition thereof, to the prejudice of the Temporal Juriſdiction of our Sovereign Lord the King. The Clergy prejudicial to common juſtice.

44 Item, if any man be apprehended by Secular Juſtice in ſhedding of blood; he is to be ordered by them, if he be Lay: if he be a Clerk he is to be reſtored to the Eccleſiaſtical Judge. But whether he be a Temporal man or Clerk that is ſo taken, and appealeth to the Officials Court; they will be ſo bold to have cognition thereof, requiring herewith amends of the Secular Court, which enterprized the foreſaid apprehenſion. If this be ſuffered, the malefactor ſhall never be puniſhed. For by and by they will Appeal, and immediately after the appellation fly and avoid away.

45 Item, When they cauſe many of office to be cited before them, they will admit them to have no Proctors: to whom when they come at the day of appearance, they object the crime of Uſury. And except they anſwer as the promoters will themſelves, they are trodden under feet (although they be meer Lay) and ſhall not be diſmiſſed before they Fine even as the Officials liſt themſelves, although they be no Uſurers. But if any be Uſurers, they take of them ſatisfaction and bribes: and ſo they be permitted to uſe their Uſury, no leſs than before; So that they may have their old fees and bribes. Ex

46 Item, They procure their Officers to apprehend Clerks in whatſoever ſoil they be found; albeit by Juſtice they may appeal therefrom. But if by any they be let of their will herein, they do forthwith, by ſentence of Excommunication, cauſe them to deliſt therefore. Uſury craftily objected by the Clergy againſt Lay-men.

47. Item, As oftentimes as any Temporal Magiſtrate doth apprehend any perſon, which afterward, being required of the Clergy, is quietly delivered unto them: yet for all that, the Officials cauſe thoſe Magiſtrates to be denounced Excommunicate by Law. The Prelates make the Church a den of Thieves.

48 Item, The Prelates give order of Tonſures as well to men of thirty years as upward, as alſo to married men, when they come unto them, for fear of Impriſonment and puniſhment due unto them for their criminal offences, before committed; and this is oftentimes put in practice.

49 Item, If it happen any of the Kings ſervants or any other to be Excommunicate, who would fain be Abſolved, being glad to pay reaſonably for the ſame: the Clergy will not receive ſatisfaction but ſuch as ſhall pleaſe them, whereby many of them remain ſtill Excommunicate.

50 Item, When two perſons have been at Strife and Law together for the Poſſeſſion of Land, and the matter contentious be put into the hands of the King by ſome ſervant or officer of the King, for the taking up of the matter: then do the Prelates admoniſh the one part not to trouble the other which is in poſſeſſion. Otherwiſe if he do, they do Excommunicate him.

51 Item

KING Edw. I

51 Item, The foreſaid Prelates, Deans, Chaplains, and other the rout of the Clergy, put the Kings Officers to ſo much travel and expences in trying out the Kings uſurped Juriſdiction, as they term it; that oftentimes many of them ſpend and conſume, in the travel of the Right and Title thereof, all that they have and more too.

52 Item, If any Secular Juſtice in a true and juſt Cauſe, at the requeſt of the party, putteth in his helping hand concerning the Inheritance of Clerks: the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and their Miniſters, ſend out Monitions in writing againſt the ſaid Juſticer; yea, under pain of Excommunication and forfeiture, to take away his hand and leave off: enjoyning him further to ſuffer the other party quietly to enjoy the ſaid things. Otherwiſe they denounce him Excommunicate, and he ſhall not be Abſolved before he have well paid for it, even as pleaſeth Maſter Official, to the high prejudice of the Authority of our Sovereign Lord the King.

Note the practice of Officials, to get money.

53 Item, The Eccleſiaſtical Magiſtrates, ſo ſoon as they hear any rich or fat cob to die, or think that he will not live long, ſend out forthwith Letters under Seal to their Chaplain, commanding him in any wiſe not to preſume to bury him, although he made his Teſtament, and received the Rites of the Church. And when afterward the Friends and Kinſfolks of the dead reſort unto them to know the cauſe of their inhibition, they declare unto them that he was an Uſurer, and that he kept not the commandments of holy Church: and ſo long keep they the Corps of the dead unburied, till the Friends of him buy it out with good ſtore of mony, heaping and hording by theſe means abundance of riches.

54 Item, If there be any violent ſhedding of blood in any Church-yard, whereby the interdict taketh place, the Clergy cauſeth a certain impoſition to be Levied of the Pariſhioners there, for the Salary towards the reſtoring thereof: Although ſome of the Pariſhiones be of an exempt Juriſdiction; yea, and although he which ſhed blood be able to pay the whole Tax which they Levied, and more too.

55 Item, Certain Chaplains affirm themſelves to have certain Apoſtolical priviledges, by virtue whereof they may appoint what Judges they will (yea and oftentimes of their own Houſe) and ſo they be Judges in their own Cauſe; which is plain againſt the Law. Whereby oftentimes it happeth, that after great proceſs and expences had and made in any great Cauſe of Inqueſt (more often about realty than otherwiſe) when they have notice by the Proctors and Advocates that they ſhall have the foil therein; they revoke forthwith thoſe named Judges, and ſo the Kings ſubjects are damaged, and can have no juſtice nor redreſs at their hands.

56 Item, If any Temporal man call a Clerk before a Secular Judge in caſe of Inheritance; the Eccleſiaſtical Judge procureth a ſtop to be made therein, attributing to themſelves the cognition thereof: and ſo by adjourning and removing, the Lay-man is conſtrained to make ſatisfaction.

57 Item, The Clergy challengeth the cognition of ſuch Cauſes as married Clerks being Merchants and Artificers do commence: which by Law it doth appertain to the Temporalty, eſpecially about the Trade of Merchandize.

58 Item, They oftentimes make Interdictions in many of the Kings Towns and Holds, and cauſe the Divine Service to ceaſe; againſt the Priviledges granted by many of the high Biſhops of Rome to our Sovereign Lord and Maſter the King.

59 Item, To and for the maintainance and keeping of their Temporalties, they appoint Bailiffs and other Officers: who, if they do offend, may not condignly be puniſhed according to Law and Juſtice.

60 Item, The Eccleſiaſtical Judges have promoters belonging to them: whom, when any man is Excommunicated (be it right, or be it wrong) they cauſe to be made, that no man ſhall work or do any thing for him that is Excommunicate: whereby the Lands and Vines are oftentimes unlooked to and untilled, to the no ſmall prejudice of the King and his common people.

61 Item, The foreſaid promoters cauſe Citations to be made out, by virtue whereof they call in one Citation twenty, thirty, forty perſons to appear, for participating with ſuch Interdicted perſons; taking of ſome ten, of other-ſome twenty ſhillings, as much as they be able to make: whereby the common people are much oppreſſed.

62 Item, The Eccleſiaſtical Judges cauſe all the Advocates of their Courts to be Sworn, That none ſhall retain them of their Counſel againſt any of them, without their Licenſe: whereby oftentimes the poor man quite loſeth his right, and the Kings Cauſe is delaied; becauſe his Solicitors cannot freely retain Counſel, without ſpecial Licenſe.

63 Item, They will make Inventories of their Goods which die Inteſtate, or without making of Will; and will have the poſſeſſion of their Goods, as well movable as unmovable, in their own hands to diſtribute to the Heirs, or to whom they liſt.

64 Item, The execution alſo of Teſtaments they take into their own hands, taking Inventories of dead mens Goods, and keeping and diſpoſing them to the Heirs after their pleaſure. And they have Officials properly deputed for the execution thereof.

65 Item, They will not give credit (ſometimes) to Teſtaments made before witneſs, unleſs they be firſt by their own Officials approved.

After he had thus ſpoken, the Prelates required to have time to anſwer thereunto. Whereupon the Friday next inſuing, was appointed for the ſame: On the which day the Biſhop Edven, and Archbiſhop of Senon Elect, in the name of the whole Clergy anſwered for them all before the King, holding his Parliament as that day at Vicenas, and thus he there propounded: Foraſmuch as the Lord Peter Cugner of late propounding againſt the Church of France took to his Theme that which is written in the 22 of Matthew; Render unto Ceſar that which is Ceſars, and unto God that which is Gods; by which words, he ſaid, two points were to be noted: Firſt, The reverence and ſubjection of the Prelates, that they ought to have to the King their Sovereign: Secondly, The diviſion of the Temporal Juriſdiction from the Spiritual. The which firſt part he proved out of the firſt Epiſtle of Peter in the ſecond Chap. where it is written: Submit your ſelves unto every creature, for the Lords ſake, whether it be unto the king, as unto the ſuperior, or unto governors, as unto them that are ſent of him, for the puniſhment of evil doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well. The ſecond point he proved by the words of our Saviour Chriſt in the 22 of Luke, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Lord, behold, here are two ſwords. And he ſaid unto them, It is enough; ſignifying by the two ſwords the two Juriſdictions. And likewiſe out of the 17 of Matth. where Chriſt would pay Tribute for him and Peter; Giving hereby an example, how that Eccleſiaſtical perſons were bound to pay and yield to the Temporal power the Temporalties; which alſo is proved in the 11. quæſt. prim. cap. Si tributum & cap. magnum.

Luk. 22.

Mat. 17.

And further, becauſe this is proved by mans-law, where it is ſaid, two great gifts are beſtowed, Prieſthood and Empire; the Prieſthood to rule over matters Divine; the Empire to bear domination over human matters. Whereby he concluded, that ſeeing theſe Juriſdictions are diſtinguiſhed of God; the one being given and limited to the Church, and the other to the Temporalty: the Church in no wiſe ought to intermeddle, or to have any thing to do with the Temporal Juriſdiction. For it is written in the 22 of the Prov. You ought not to paſs the old limits and bounds, which the fore-fathers have ſet. And well by the way he bringeth in this word, old and ancient: becauſe cuſtoms brought in to the contrary, be of no force, but rather are counted abuſes and corruptions. Neither can preſcription take place, for that Jus fiſci is inpreſcriptible, neither can the King abrogate from himſelf ſuch Law, nor renounce his right, proving the ſame by many Chapters contained in the 10. Diſt. Wherefore ſeeing the King, at what time he was Crowned, ſwear not only not to alienate or infringe the Laws of his Realm, but alſo to call in ſuch Laws as were alienated and uſurped either by the Church, or by any other; the King was bound by his Oath to revoke the ſame abuſes.

Two gifts given, Prieſthood, Empire.

Diſt. 10.

In eſpecial he did exhibit many Articles in writing, wherein (as he ſaid) the Church did uſurp upon the Juriſdiction Temporal. To anſwer theſe Premiſes with reconciling of the places, under proteſtation that whatſoever I ſay or ſhall ſay, it is not to ground or make any final judgment or determination herein; but only to inform the Conſcience of our Sovereign Lord the King and his aſſiſtants here aſſembled, alledging the firſt Epiſtle of Peter, the ſecond Chapter, where he ſaith, Fear God and honour the King. By which words, the holy Apoſtle St. Peter teacheth us two things: Firſt, that love, fear, and obedience, is due unto God for the mightineſs and puiſſance of his Majeſty, ſaying,

ſaying, Fear God. Secondly, That ſpecial honour and reverence is due to the King, for the excellency of his dignity; ſaying, Honour the King. But note you by the way, how the Apoſtle placeth his words: Firſt he ſaith, That fear is due unto God, becauſe principally and in chief we ought to fear God. For if the King or any other ſhould command things contrary to God, we ought to have no regard thereof, but to contemn the King and fear God. For Acts 5. it is written in the fifth of the Acts of the Apoſtles; We ought rather to obey God than man: and alſo in the 7th
2 Mac. 7. Chapter of Machabees the ſecond Book, where it is ſaid, I will not obey the commandments of the king, but the law.

The reaſon whereof St. Auguſtine giveth both in the 11. Quæſt. 1. Gloſs upon the Romans, and alſo in the 11. Quæſt. 1. He that reſiſteth the Superior power, reſiſteth the will and ordinance of God. But put caſe thou art commanded to do that which thou maiſt not do, or not to do that which thou oughteſt to do. Doubtleſs, thou muſt neglect the leſſer power, and fear the higher, learning the degrees of worldly things.

As for example, be it ſo that a Proctor commandeth thee any thing, and the ſame be againſt the Proconſul, thou oughteſt not to follow it. Yea, and further, put caſe the Proconſul commandeth one thing, the Emperor another, and God willeth the third: Thou muſt not care for them, but obey God, for God is the greater power. For they may threaten thee with Priſon, but God threatneth thee with Hell fire: they may ſlay and kill thy Body, but God may ſend thee Body and Soul to perpetual Hell fire. And therefore worthily it is put firſt, Fear God. And here the place in the laſt of Eccleſiaſtes is to be adjoyned, where it is written, Fear God and keep his commandments.

Fear of God ſtandeth in three points. And me thinketh that man is bound to fear God chiefly in three ſorts. That is to ſay: Firſt, in the bountiful beſtowing of his Gifts and Benefits. Secondly, In the evident promoting of his Servants. And laſtly, In the full rendring and reſtoring unto man that is his.

Firſt, I ſay, in the bountiful, &c. and for this cauſe the Emperor Juſtinian writeth: Although there is nothing to be accounted good, which doth exceed and is too great, yet for a Prince to beſtow accordingly upon the Church, it is very good. For why, the King and Emperor is bound to beſtow ſo much the more ſubſtance, how much the more God hath given to him, and to beſtow the ſame both frankly, and eſpecially to famous Churches, wherein the beſt and greateſt meaſure is of the Lords gifts; that is, a great gift. And to this end Gregory enacteth a Law, cap. 1. de extra. de donationibus, that Nobility ought in manner to preſcribe this Law to himſelf, to think himſelf bound to give, when he giveth freely; and unleſs he increaſe in giving ſtill, to think that he hath given nothing.

Wherefore Abel, as appeareth in the 4th Chapter of Geneſis, who offered of the beſt to the Lord, was bleſſed of God. And therefore other Kings, the more they offered to God, the more they were both Spiritually and Tempo-
Numb. 18. rally bleſſed of him: as we read of Joſhua, David, Solomon, and others in the Book of the Kings, and therefore it is ſo written in the 18th of Numbers: and ye ſhall ſeparate unto the Lords treaſury, things that be chiefeſt and moſt principal. As likewiſe David ſaith in the firſt of
1. Paral. cap. ult. Paralipomenon the laſt Chapter: I have given all this with a glad heart, even with a good will, and now have I had joy to ſee thy people which here are preſent, offer with a free will unto thee. And no marvel, for David ſaith in that place: For of thy hand we have received all, and to thee we give. And therefore it ſeemeth to me, becauſe that
What benefit cometh by giving to the Church. the Kings of France, and Barons of the ſame, have given to God and his Church more than any other; therefore they were happy and bleſſed above all other Kings, and the more they did give to God, the more they received at his hands.

Examples whereof we have of Clovedo, Charles, and St. Lewis; the more one giveth to God, the more he re-
Luke 6. ceiveth of him: For he in the 6th of Luke hath promiſed, Give and it ſhall be given unto you: Wherefore a gift that Time of War. a Prince beſtoweth upon the Church is rendred again with triple encreaſe, and that no leſs in time of War, than in time of Peace. I ſay in War time, becauſe Victory proceedeth of no other, but only of God; for it is written in the 1 Mac. 3. firſt of Machabees, the third Chapter: the victory of the battel ſtandeth not in the multitude of the hoſt, but the ſtrength cometh from heaven. And likewiſe, in the ſeventeenth Chapter of Exodus, it is declared, that when KING Edw. 1 Moſes held up his hands, Iſrael had the victory: but when Ex. 17. he let down his hands, Amaleck had the victory. To this end alſo ſerveth the laſt Chapter of 2 Machabees 2. Where 2 Mac. 2. Judas being at the point to have the victory, thought he ſaw Onion and Jeremy (which had been high Prieſts and very vertuous men) holding up their hands toward heaven, and praying for their people and all the whole city, &c. Likewiſe in Peace time now, the long days of the King Time of Peace. and of his Sons, their Peace, Proſperity, and Obedience (by the prayer of the Church) is maintained and ſupported in the Realm. For as long as Solomon was bent and given in building the Houſe of God, ſo long he had Peace: who thus in the 16th Chapter of the Proverbs teacheth us: Prov. 16. When a mans ways pleaſe the Lord, he maketh his very enemies to be his friends: And alſo in 1 Eſd. the 6th Chapter, 1 Eſd. 6. where it is read, how the prieſts were commanded to offer ſweet ſavours to the God of heaven, and pray for the kings life and his children. And well therefore may it be called a gift both favourable and irrevocable, whereby victory is given, life granted, and peace with ſecurity conſerved. To ſerve God therefore, and liberally to give toward the worſhipping of him, is the chiefeſt ſign and token of Divine fear and love. Eccleſ. Chap. 2. O ye that fear the Lord, Eccleſ. 2. believe him, and your reward ſhall not be empty.

The ſecond part of fear-ing God. Secondly, Concerning the fear of God, I do you to underſtand, That among the Precepts of the Lord, the firſt and chiefeſt Commandement of the ſecond Table is to honour thy Father: Which Precept is very well expounded in the 12th Chap. to Heb. Where it is not only meant of the Heb. 12. Fathers of our Bodies, but alſo of the Father of Spirits. For as ſpiritual things do far exceed temporal matters, ſo Honouring Spiritual Fathers. much more a great deal the ſpiritual Son is bound to reverence the ſpiritual Father, and to be in ſubjection unto him, that he may live. And that the Prieſts and Prelates be the Spiritual Fathers, it is proved in the fourth Book of the Kings, the 6th Chapter: Where the King of Iſrael called Elizeus Father, ſaying: My father, ſhall I ſmite 4 Kin. 6. them? Unto this effect ſerveth the tenth of Luke, where Luke 10. our Saviour ſaid to the Apoſtles (whoſe ſucceſſors the Biſhops are) He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. Alſo in the firſt to the 1 Theſ. 4. Theſſalonians the fourth Chap. He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth not men, but God. Wherefore Juſtinian the Emperor in another place ſaith, We have great care to the Church of God, that therein may be true Doctrine and Integrity of Prieſts life. Which having, we truſt that for our great gifts we ſhall receive ſuch rewards at Gods hands, both as be durable, and ſhall remain: yea, and alſo that hitherto have not happened. Bleſſed St. Hierome in his Regiſter writing to a certain Emperor, which is alſo to be
17. Quæſt. cap. 1. Sacerdotibus. ſeen in the Decrees, Decret. 11. quæſt. 1. ſaith, Let not the Emperor diſdain Prieſts, but have ſpecial regard on them for his ſake whoſe ſervants they be: and ſo let him rule over them that due and condign reverence be given unto them. For they in Divine Scriptures are ſometime termed God, ſometimes named Angels: Exod. 22. Then Ex. 22. ſhall both their cauſes come before the God. Alſo Malac. Malac. 2. the ſecond, the prieſts lips ſhould be ſure of knowledge, that men may ſeek the law at his mouth: for he is a meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts. And therefore it is no marvel, if Honour to be given to Prieſts. we ſhould vouchſafe to honour them, when God himſelf in his ſpeech attributing to them hononour, tearmeth them Gods and Angels. And here is to be noted, how Conſtantine the Emperor, when certain of his ſubjects preſented unto him Libels accuſatory againſt the Biſhops, received them at their hands. But calling before him thoſe Biſhops which were accuſed therein, in their ſight he caſt thoſe Libels into the fire, ſaying, Depart you hence and diſcuſs theſe matters within your ſelves. For it is not convenient and meet that we judge Gods, becauſe it is written; God ſtood in the Synagogue of Gods, and in the midſt of them he did judge Gods. In which Chapter it is declared, how that the Pagans, who worſhipped golden and wooden gods, attributed great honour to the prieſts. What marvel is it then, if the godly and great and Chriſtian Emperors do honour and reverence the Prieſts of the true God? And doubtleſs, it is their duty ſo to do. And it is reaſon, which the Lord Peter the laſt day ſaid in this point; That there are two powers, Prieſthood and Domiſſion, the one Spiritual, the other Temporal which no leſs differ one from the other, than the Sun from the Moon, the Heaven from the Earth, and Gold from Lead. And therefore if honour is due to be given to the leſſer power, by them that be underneath him: he that is chief of the higher power, of right good duty, is to be honoured and reverenced of all under him, as expreſly is declared, Cap. Solit. De ma. & ob. In which Chapter anſwer is fully made to the allegation of the Lord Peter (alledged by him to make for his purpoſe) that is to ſay, Be ye ſubject to all Creatures for Gods ſake, &c. There he ſpeaketh of the ſubjection which ſtandeth upon the merit of vertue, and not upon the duty of neceſſity. For elſe if he ſhould ſpeak of the ſubjection which is by duty of neceſſity; then muſt it needs follow, that every Biſhop ought to be ſubject to every beggerly Raſcal in the City of Paris. For the Text is, Be ye ſubject to all human creatures: but a Raſcal is a human Creature: Ergo, Biſhops muſt be ſubject to a Raſcal. Of the Dignity of a Biſhop, Ambroſe talketh in his Paſtoral. The honour, ſaith he, and the majeſty of a Biſhop is without all compariſon. If you compare it to the Royalty of a King, it is even as you would compare Metal or Lead to the beauty of Gold: For that is to be ſeen, that Kings and Princes ſtooping under the knees of Prieſts and kiſſing their right hand, think themſelves to be defended by their prayer. And becauſe the Kings of France have more than other honoured and reverenced the Prelates, they have above all other flouriſhed and proſpered. It is ſaid in Eccleſ. 4. He that honoureth his father, ſhall rejoyce in his ſons. And it followeth there, He that honoureth his father, ſhall live a long life. This is therefore the ſign of the fear of God. And as it is written in Eccleſ. 4. He that feareth God honoureth his parents.

Thirdly, I ſay, That a man ought to fear God, in the full reverencing and reſtoring unto man that is his: For he that doth not give to another that is his, but goeth about to uſurp, doubtleſs he feareth not God. Contrary, he that reſtoreth all again, he is ſaid to love and fear God. Eccleſiaſt. 18. He that feareth God will do good things. And in the Pſalm, I have been afraid of thy judgments, and have done judgment and juſtice. For as the Lawyers ſay, which is true, A thing may be made mine divers ways, as by ſucceſſion, commutation, preſcription, or any other acquiſition, either by Law or Cuſtom; And ſo of the reſt. And whereas the Lord Peter the laſt day, by diſtinction of Juriſdiction Temporal and Spiritual, endeavoured to prove that he which had Spiritual Juriſdiction, ought not to have Temporal; otherwiſe there were no diſtinction thereof, but rather a confuſion of Juriſdictions: I will therefore prove the contrary, that theſe Juriſdictions are compatible both in one perſon, eſpecially in an Eccleſiaſtical man. And this will I prove by the Law of God, by the Law of Nature, Canon Law, Civil Law, by Cuſtom and Priviledge. But firſt I alledge, that accidental forms ſome of them are diſtinct, that they are not clean contrary, but diſlike, as whiteneſs and ſweetneſs. Other forms there be which are ſo diſtinct, that they are clean contrary one to the other, and are not compatible in one ſubject. For one contrary expels another, and importeth the Negative of the other. Wherefore thoſe things be contrary, which one from another are moſt of all diſtant and diſagreeing, and in one ſuſceptible may come one after the other, but not together, as the Philoſopher teacheth in the Predicaments. But thoſe forms which are ſo diſtinct that they be not contrary, but diſlike, are compatible in one ſubject, as quantity and quality, which, being diſtinct in reſpect of their Genus generaliſſimum, yet may be in one perſon. And fortitude and temperance, being under one kind of moral vertue, are found to be in one man, as Logick and Grammer, which are alſo ſpecies and kinds in one genus, viz. of intellectus. Therefore it is no good argument: Theſe forms be diſtinct, Ergo, they be not compatible in one ſubject. And therefore that the Juriſdictions Temporal and Spiritual are ſo diſtinct, that they are not contrary but compatible, it is evident hereby; becauſe things contrary be ſo, that the one cannot be ordained to concur with the other, but rather the one confoundeth and deſtroyeth the other: but in this caſe Juriſdiction Temporal is ordained for the Spiritual; and contrary, the Spiritual for the Temporal. Or rather, the one ſo dependeth on the other, as the clearneſs of the Moon doth on the brightneſs of the Sun. Alſo the one Juriſdiction ſo helpeth and comforts the other, that there is no contrariety in them. And therefore it is no good conſequence, becauſe they are diſtinct: Ergo, they are not compatible in one perſon. This alſo is to be proved de facto. For the Earth is the Lords, and the plenty of the whole univerſal World, and all that dwell therein. It is proved likewiſe by this reaſon: For if the Juriſdictions be not compatible, it ſhould follow, that no Eccleſiaſtical perſon ſhould have any jot of Temporal Juriſdiction, neither Land, Tower, Caſtle, Lordſhip, nor any thing elſe; which is moſt abſurd: and ſo by this means it ſhould follow, that no Eccleſiaſtical perſon ſhould be in ſubjection unto the King, which were to the great derogation of the Kings Majeſties Crown and Dignity. It muſt needs be therefore that theſe Juriſdictions be compatible, notwithſtanding the diſtinction of them one from another. And thus much for anſwer to all theſe reaſons, by the which Lord Peter proved the diſtinction of theſe Juriſdictions.

A thing made mine divers ways.

Six proofs. 1. By Divine Law. 2. By the Law of Nature. 3. By Canon Law. 4. By Civil Law. 5. By Cuſtom. 6. By Priviledge.

Forms being diſlike and not contrary, may be compatible in one ſubject.

Theſe things premiſed, thus I proceed further to prove that a perſon Eccleſiaſtical, which hath Juriſdiction Spiritual, may alſo have Temporal Juriſdiction: and that the Juriſdiction Temporal may be in an Eccleſiaſtical perſon, I will prove it by the Scriptures; and firſt out of the Old Teſtament, to the evident probation whereof, it is to be underſtood: That God, after the Creation of the World and Man, even unto Noah's time, would govern the World himſelf as King by the Miniſtry of Angels. By reaſon whereof he gave and pronounced Sentence himſelf againſt Cain, Geneſis the fourth. Noah alſo which offered burnt Offerings unto the Lord, and built an Altar, as teacheth the eighth of Geneſis (which thing appertained only unto the Prieſts) had the government and rule of all things, as well Spiritual as Temporal, which were in the Ark of Noah. Melchiſedech likewiſe, the which was the Prieſt of the moſt high God, and alſo King of Salem, as appeareth in the fourteenth of Geneſis, had both the Juriſdictions in his own hands. For Magiſter Hiſtoriarum, in the ſaid fourteenth of Geneſis, declareth, That all the firſt begot of Noah, even unto Aaron's time, were Prieſts: which at Meals and Offerings bleſſed the people, and which only had the Jus primogenituræ, whereby the Regiment of others was due unto them. Moſes in like manner (of whom it is ſaid in the Pſalm, Moſes and Aaron in ſacerdotibus ejus) conſecrated Aaron and his children to be prieſts; which Aaron did judge the whole people in Temporal matters, yea and that in Cauſes of Inheritance and meer real, as appeareth in the ſeven and twentieth Chapter of Numbers, and many other places. To which purpoſe ſerveth the ſeventeenth Chapter of Deuteronomie; where it is ſaid, If a matter be too hard for thee in judgment betwixt blood and blood, betwixt plea and plea, betwixt plague and plague, then ſhalt thou riſe and go up to that place, that the Lord thy God hath choſen, and ſhalt come to the Prieſts, the Levites, and to the Judge then being; and ſhalt ask, who ſhall ſhew unto us the truth of the judgment, and ſhalt follow their ſentence. And if any man preſumptuouſly ſhall refuſe to obey the Prieſts Commandments and Decree of the Judge, the ſame ſhall die. Behold how manifeſtly it doth appear, how not only the Judgment appertaineth to a Prieſt, between Plague and Plague, concerning the circumſtances and regularity of the Law; but alſo betwixt Blood and Blood, in matters criminal; yea, and betwixt Plea and Plea in civil matters; which thing doth appear to be in many Judges out of the Book of Judges. For Samuel, which was both a Prophet and Prieſt, was appointed Judge of long time over the People in matters Temporal. And when the people deſired a King, the Lord was highly offended with them, and ſaid unto Samuel; They have not refuſed thee but me, that I ſhould not be king over them. Furthermore as long as Kings among the people of God, uſed the Advice and Counſel of Prieſts and Biſhops, it was well with them and their Kingdom: But when they forſook and left the Counſel of Biſhops and Prieſts, then was their Kingdom divided, and finally they brought into Captivity. In which Captivity, the people were altogether governed and ruled by the Prieſts and Prophets, as by Eſdras and Nehemias. And laſt of all, by the means of the Macchabees, the Kingdom and Government was devolved and brought into the Prieſts hands, who were the Kings and Captains over the people; and had the Government as well of Spiritual mat-

1 Mac. 2. ters as of Temporal, as is read in the first Book of Machabees, the second Chapter; Of Mattathias and his Sons, videlicet, of Juda, Machaby, Jonathan, Simon, and John the Son of Simon, which, in all Spiritual and Temporal matters, were Governors over the people of God. More-
Jerem. 1. over, the first Chapter of Jeremy, which was one of the Priests, declareth after this manner: I have set thee over the people and kingdoms, that thou maist root out, break, destroy, and make waste, and that thou maist build up and plant, Jerem. capite primo. Besides this, in the time of Judge Eliah, a Priest in like manner had the Judgment of Temporal matters. And so much concerning the proof hereof, out of the Old Testament.

Secondly, I prove my former proposition by Authorities taken out of the New Testament. For Christ had not only by Divine Nature both the Powers, whereby he Created all things of nothing, and by consequence was God of all, but also by his humanity and both powers. For he was the Priest, secundum ordinem Melchisedec (as it is said in the Psalms, had also, is alledged to the Hebrews) which had both in his Vesture and Thigh written, King of kings, and Lord of lords. By this Vestiment or Thigh was meant his Humanity, which was joyned to his Divinity, as the Garment is to him that weareth it. He said of himself in the last of Matthew: Unto me is given all power both in Heaven and in Earth. As also to the Hebrews in the first Chapter: Whom he made and constituted heir of all universal things. And likewise in the second Chapter to the Hebrews, He hath made him not much inferior to the Angels. He hath crowned him with glory and honour, and Psalm 8. Heb. 2. hath set him above the works of his hands: Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet, sheep and oxen, and all the whole cattle of the field. When therefore it is said, He made all things subject unto him; He excludeth nothing as the Apostle there saith. Whereby it is apparent, that as concerning his Human Nature, in the which he was made less than the Angels, all things were subject to him.
Philip. 2. Also this appeareth in the second Chap. to the Philippians: He humbled himself, wherefore God exalted him, &c. And it followeth, That in the Name of Jesus, should every knee bow, both of things in Heaven, and of things in Earth, and of things under the Earth. Behold here, that in Nature, in which he did humble himself, he was exalted, because every knee should bow down to him. This in like Act. 2. manner hath St. Peter in the tenth Chapter of the Acts, where he saith, he was constituted of God, the judge over the quick and the dead: And he speaketh of the Nature which God raised up the third day, as the whole Scripture proveth. And likewise St. Peter had this Power given him, whom Christ Constituted and made his Vicar; who also condemned by Sentence judicially Ananias and Saphira, for lying and stealing; Acts Chapter 5. Paul also
Act. 5. condemned a fornicator convicted, 1 Cor. 5. And that Christ would have the correction and judgment of such matters to appertain to his Church: A Text in the 18*th* of Matthew expressly declareth, where it is said: If thy
Mat. 18. brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between him and thee: if he hear thee, thou hast won thy brother: But if he heareth not, then take with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses all things may be established: if he hear not then, tell it unto the congregation: if he hear not the congregation, take him as an heathen man and a Publican. Verily I say unto you, whatsoever you bind on earth, the same shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever you lose on earth, the same shall be loosed in heaven. Behold, how expressly it is commanded, that whensoever in any matter one offendeth the other, he being first charitably admonished, the matter must be published and referred to the order of the Church and Congregation. But if the offender do not obey and hear the admonition, he is to be taken as an Heathen and a Publican: which is as much to say, like one that is Excommunicate by the Church and Congregation, so that he may have no communion or participation with it. And that this was the intention of Christ, this seemeth much to prove it, where in giving the reason hereof, he immediately addeth: Verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever, &c. (where note this tearm distributive, whatsoever) so as the Apostle argueth to the Hebrews the second Chapter, that if he ordained all things to be subject unto him, he excludeth nothing unsubjected. Wherefore thus I may argue: If all things that the Church and Congregation doth lose, be loosed, and every thing that the Church bindeth, is bound: There is nothing that the Church may not lose and bind. Or by Logick thus I may reason; There is nothing bound by the Church, that is not bound in Heaven: which argument is good by a certain rule of Logick, which saith, That contraries, if the the Negation be put after, are equivalent. For every thing and nothing, whatsoever thing, and no manner of thing, be contrary one to the other. And so nothing not, is as much to say, as all things. Secondly, I do prove it out of another Text of St. Luke, Chap. 22. Which place he alledged to make for his purpose; but I will strike him with his own weapon. For where he said, That by the two swords the two powers temporal and spiritual were to be understood; it was so indeed: but to whose hands would he (I pray you) have these two Swords committed? Truly to the hands of Peter and other the Apostles, &c. But the holy Father the Pope succeeded Peter and the other Apostles, the Bishops, Disciples, Curates, Parsons, as in the Gloss appeareth, Luke 10. whereby thus I argue: That by the two Swords, the two powers are meant: But Christ willed those two Swords to be put into the Churches hands: Ergo, likewise the two powers. But you may reply and say, That Christ did reprehend Peter because he strook with a Temporal Sword, and cut off an Ear, saying unto him, Put up thy sword, &c. Which reason is of no force: for Christ did not will Peter to cast away quite from him the Sword, but to put it into the Scabbard and to keep it, giving to understand thereby, that such power, although it be in the Churches hands; yet the execution thereof (as much as appertaineth to bloodshedding in the new Law) he would have to appertain to the Secular Judge; notwithstanding yet perhaps, according to the discretion and will of the Clergy.

Thirdly, I prove this by the intent of St. Paul, in the 1 Cor. 6. where he saith, That they which have secular businesses, and contend one against another, ought to be judged by the Saints. And that they should Judge therein therefore he made this Argument: Know you not that the Saints shall judge the world? And if the World be Judged by you, are ye not good enough to Judge small trifles? As though he would say, Do ye not know how that ye shall Judge the Angels? How much more then may you Judge things secular? And it followeth; If you have judgment of secular and worldly matters, take them which are despised in the Church and Congregations, and make them Judges. Neither doth it make any thing against it, because the Apostle in the same place inferreth; Ad verecundiam vestram dico; I say it to your shame: for that is to be referred to those, where he saith, Appoint those which are despised. Wherefore the Apostle speaketh ironically in this matter, as meaning thus: Sooner and the rather you ought to run to the judgment of the despised which be in the Church, than to the judgment of those which be out of the Church.

1 Cor. 6.

I.

Ergo, the rather to resort to the judgment of the wise, who remain in the Church and Congregation. Wherefore the Apostle by and by added, when he said; I speak to your shame: What not one wise man among you that can judge between brother and brother? Meaning thereby that there were some. By these therefore and many other like reasons (which for brevity I omit) it appeareth that both the powers may be in an Ecclesiastical mans hand: and that an Ecclesiastical man, is Capax both of the Temporal and Spiritual Jurisdiction. Nor is it any matter if it be objected, that Peter, and other Apostles, and Christ himself used little this Temporal power: for in them was not the like reason as now is in us, as is proved in the 22. Q. 1. cap. and in many other places of the Law. The Apostles at the first beginning took no receit of Lands and Possessions, but the price only thereof; which now the Church with very good reason doth receive, and that to the great merit both of the giver and offerer, as it appeareth in Constantine and others: in the which foresaid 1. cap. the reason of diversity is well proved: for that the Apostles did foresee, that the Church should be among Gentiles, and not be only in Judea, &c. And further, at the beginning Christ and his Apostles were wholly bent and given to our health, salvation and erudition; little sticking or standing upon the exercise of every Churches Jurisdiction, having regard to that which is written in the sixth Chapter to the Corinthians, All things are lawful unto men, but all things are not expedient. And likewiſe in the 8*th. Chap.* of Eccleſ. it is read, that every thing hath his time. But now (through the grace of God) the whole People of the Realm of France have ſubmitted themſelves to the Chriſtian Faith; worthily therefore the Church is occupied about miniſtring of Juſtice, and puniſhing of vice; for peace ſhall be the work of Juſtice, Eſay Chap. 33. And in theſe Judgments this only is to be conſidered, that the life of man be reformed, &c. Thus you ſee how this our concluſion ſomewhat is confirmed by the Scriptures. Now will I prove it by natural law and reaſon, and firſt after this manner: He ſeemeth moſt fit to play a good Judges part, which followeth neareſt God; for properly God is the ruler and directer of all Judgments, who ſaith Proverb. capite octavo, By me the law-maker ſhall decree juſtice and juſt things: But Eccleſiaſtical Perſons follow next to God, and be neareſt him; for that they be elected of God into a peculiar people, whereof it is ſaid, 1 Pet. 2. You are a choſen Generation, a royal Prieſthood, a holy Nation, and a peculiar People, that you ſhould ſhew the vertues of him that called you, &c. Ergo, It is moſt fit that perſons Eccleſiaſtical, and Church-men ſhould judge of ſuch matters. Moreover none doubteth, but that the correction and puniſhment of ſin belongeth to Eccleſiaſtical perſons; wherefore when ſuch things be not committed without ſin & offence of the one party, it is evident that the Church may have cognition thereof. Alſo, whoſo hath power to judge of the end, hath alſo power to judge of things ordained to the end; for the conſideration of the things ordained to the end, riſeth of the end. When therefore the body is ordained for the life and ſoul, and temporal things for ſpiritual, as for the end; the Church which doth judge of ſpiritual things, may in like manner lawfully judge of temporal things. All which is ſufficiently confirmed In extr. c. Judiciis. where it is ſaid, that the acceſſary followeth the nature of the principal, which appeareth ſufficiently by example. Forſomuch therefore, as theſe two Juriſdictions be compared to two lights, that is to ſay, to the Sun and to the Moon, and all the whole clearneſs and brightneſs of the Moon, both in form and vertue, dependeth of the Sun, and in the Sun; and that the brightneſs of the Sun is not of the Moon, or in the Moon; it is plain, that ſpirituall Juriſdiction, which is compared to the Sun, hath in it, both in form and vertue the Juriſdiction temporal, and not contrary. Many other like reaſons might be brought in. But for that the time waxeth ſhort, I will omit them.

Eſay 33.

M. Probation, by civil law and reaſon.

1 Pet. 2.

Thirdly, I prove it by the Civil Law, Auth. Diſſe. Jud. ¶ Si tamen ix. col. where it is ſaid, If a Secular Judge be ſuſpected, let the Biſhop of the City be joyned unto him. But if he be negligent, then let the whole judgment be referred to the Biſhop. In like ſort Theodoſius the Emperor enacted ſuch a Law, that whatſoever ſuter being Plaintiff in any kind of matter, whether at the beginning thereof, or after conteſtation of Law, or when the matter came to confirmation, or to ſentence; if the Plaintiff had once choſen the Court and Juriſdiction of the holy See, there without all doubt (though the Defendant reſiſted and diſſented, the matter before the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſtical Judges ſhould be determined and ended. Which Law afterward Carolus the Great, who was King of France, confirmed in theſe words, We will and command, that all our Subjects, as well Romans and Frenchmen, as others under our Dominion whatſoever, be by law and cuſtom henceforth bound and charged to keep this for a perpetual and preſcript law; That whoſoever began, or commenced a Sute, &c. as is above mentioned, &c. 11. quæſt. 1. Quicunque, &c. 2. But you may object and ſay, that this Law is abrogated, as the Gloſs ſeemeth there to touch. But all will not ſerve; for although this Law is not redacted into the body of the law, yet for all that it is not abrogated. But ſurely it is a priviledge honourably granted to the whole Univerſal Church, which the Emperor cannot take away, no more than any other liberty of the Church. By the Canon Law alſo this priviledge is confirmed, extra. de jud. c. timor. Novil. and moreover, it ſeemeth to be confirmed by the Civil Law, C. de ſacroſ. Si. Eccle. privilegium: although it be not expreſly, but generally named. And ſo it is clear by the Civil Law, that ſuch Juriſdiction doth pertain to Eccleſiaſtical perſons. By Canon Law in like manner in places infinite: Diſtinct. 22. cap. Omnes Patriarchæ. 2. quæſt. 5. ca. Si quis Presbyte. 11. quæſt. 1. cap. Relatum. 25. diſtinct. cap. eccei Extra. de judiciis. Novit. De competenti foro. cap. Licet; with many other places infinite. Yea and further, the Canon Law ſo far proceedeth, that whoſoever goeth about by cuſtom to interrupt or hinder any, having ſuch Juriſdiction, incurreth ſentence (ipſo facto) of Excommunication, as is proved ca. Quoniam intelleximus de immunitate Eccle. lib. ſext. Which is moſt plain by the notorious cuſtom, time out of mind, in the days of the good and Chriſtian Princes, where to violate ſuch cuſtom, it is plain Sacriledge, 11. quæſt. 1. Tit. 1. &c. 2. For by the Law, Cuſtom winneth and gaineth Juriſdiction, eſpecially to him that is Capax thereof: yea and further, Cuſtom (time out of mind) is amongſt all perſons in place of written and confirmed law. Now ſeeing the Church of France hath in common uſed with the Temporalty, to judge and decree both of actions perſonal and real touching the Church, it is plain, that ſuch Cuſtom winneth Juriſdiction to it. Ergo, &c. But the Lord Peter avouched, that the Cuſtom could not prevail in this caſe, becauſe here lacked true dealing. Beſides, the ſaid law is called inpreſcriptible, for that it is Jus fiſci. But this maketh nothing againſt us; for the Church of France rather challengeth this law by cuſtom than by preſcription. Which cuſtom ſeemeth rather to be brought in of the free will and election of the people, frequenting more the Eccleſiaſtical Conſiſtories than the Secular Courts. Beſides this, cuſtom in that it hath been oftentimes decided in judgment contradictory, (many of the Barons diſſenting, and not conſenting thereunto) is much thereby confirmed. This cuſtom I ſay, of the Church, hath been faſt eſtabliſhed by the conſent and aſſent of the Prelates, and then confirmed by the Kings of France your Predeceſſors, and ſo peaceably obſerved of the Church.

Probation by the Canon law. N.

Cuſtom. O.

Judicium contradictorium.

And yet may the Church challenge this by preſcription; for that there are but three things which are required in preſcription; that is to ſay, title, true dealing, and continuance of time. And it is without doubt, that the Churches both purely have, and in times paſt had a good Title, as appeareth by the priviledge granted of Theodoſius the Emperor, and confirmed by Charles, who gave in commandment, to keep the ſame inviolably, which title it hath both by divine, natural and humane Law, as before is mentioned. Wherefore it muſt needs have true dealing, when ſo many great and clear Titles are known to condeſcend thereunto. Alſo there concurreth ſuch continuance of time, that even againſt Jus fiſci it is preſcriptible: for it hath not only continued by the ſpace of an hundred years, but alſo more than 600 years paſt. Neither is this always true, this Law is inpreſcriptible, eſpecially of the Church; the which, inaſmuch as it appertaineth to the Spiritualty, is not ſubject to the King, but is much more noble, and far excelleth; even no leſs than the Sun doth the Moon, Gold Lead, and Heaven the Earth. And this is certain, and no leſs reaſon, that the higher and equal may duly preſcribe law againſt him, that is either equal or lower in degree; as one King may do to another. Wherefore it appeareth, that the Church may preſcribe this although it were Jus fiſci, as indeed it is not.

The Church not ſubject to the King.

Finally, This is proved by priviledge granted by Carolus the Great King of France, as before, and by Ludovick the the ſecond, and by Philip your Uncle, and Ludovick and Philip your Kinſmen, which priviledges we have here ready to ſhew. But perhaps you will ſay, that theſe things cannot agree: That the Church hath this Juriſdiction both by law, cuſtom and priviledge, which all cannot well hang together; for if the Church have it by one of theſe, it ſhould follow, that the Church lacketh it by another. But this may I anſwer two manner of ways; Firſt, That the priviledge may be double, one as a bringer in of a new law, and thus it cannot be reconciled: The other, as a confirmative and declarative of the old law; and this way it may well be agreed, which diſtinction may alſo take place in cuſtom. Wherefore it may thus be anſwered, that although this Juriſdiction is due unto the Church by law, it appertaineth alſo unto the ſame by priviledge and cuſtom, but yet not by ſuch kind of cuſtom and priviledge which indureth a new law; but which declareth and confirmeth the old law. And if any will reply, demanding wherefore the Church of France ſhould more challenge this, than any other Churches in other Realms, which have no ſuch Prerogative; I can ſoon anſwer them. If the Kings of France (whom God with ſingular grace, honour and priviledge, far above all other Princes hath blessed and indued for three special causes, to wit, for their great faith and devotion unto God, for their honour & reverence to the Church, & for their good justice shewed unto the people) have granted to the Church special liberties, or have permitted those which before were granted, peaceably to be kept and observed; why then they should have them, it is no marvel. Yea and further, their devotion unto the Church hath been such, that the nearer the Churches were unto them, the more liberties they enjoyed; and yet had these Princes never the less therefore, but rather the more; which is evident, and redoundeth to the great honour and nobility both of the King and his Realm.

Five things do nobilitate the Realm of France.

I have oftentimes heard of other, how that four or five things do especially nobilitate and adorn this Realm.

First, Their sincere and inviolable faith; for it was at no time read, that the Kings of France (since the receiving of the faith) did ever swarve from the same.

The blood of France came out of Priamus K. of Troy.

Secondly, The nobility of blood, which descended from Priamus the King of the Trojans, and successively from Carolus and other Royal Kings.

Thirdly, The unity and peace of concord, which especially above all other reigned and flourished in the Realm of France.

Fourthly, The solemnity and pomp of the Prelates and Clergy.

Fifthly, The good disposed readiness of the Barons and Subjects to obey.

If therefore the Prelates of this Realm should not have this law, and Priviledge, but should be deprived thereof; then should the King and his Realm lose one of his Noble Estates, whereby they are highly magnified, I mean the bravery, solemnity and royalty of the Prelates: for then, they should not only be neither pompous nor royal, but more beggerly and miserable than any other, the most part of their living consisting herein. I do conclude therefore, that it is proved both by divine law, natural law, canon law, civil law, custom and priviledge, that the right of determining such Temporal matters of the Church may of right appertain to the Church of France; and so I return the Lord Peter's Theam against himself. Besides this, I will propound that which is most plain and manifest; that whatsoever things be offered up to the Church, and are converted to the dominion and property of the same, be Gods, and appertain to him; forsomuch as they are said to be dedicated and sanctified by him, as sufficiently throughout the Levites may appear, as declared in the 21 cap. 1 Regum, concerning the Bread offered to God, where it is said, I have no common bread under my hands to eat, but holy bread. Wherefore it was not lawful for the Laity to eat of the same bread, but in time of great necessity; which is also proved in Daniel the fifth Chapter, where it is read, Because King Balthazar, and his Lords, with his Queen, drunk in the golden and silver Vessels, which his Father Nabuchadonesor had taken out of the Temple of Jerusalem; in the same very hour there appeared Fingers, as it had bin of a Mans hand, writing right over the Candlestick upon the plain Wall in the Kings Palace. And the King saw the palm of the hand that wrote; and that which was written was Mene, Thekel, Phares; the interpretation whereof is this, as there it appeareth: Mene, God hath numbred this Kingdom and brought it to an end: Thekel, Thou art weighed in a balance, and art found too light: Phares, Thy Kingdom is dealt in parts, and given to the Medes and Persians. The very self same night was Belthazar the King of the Chaldees slain, and Darius succeeded in the Kingdom of the Medes; the Monarchy of the Assyrians being then translated unto the Medes. Whereby it appeareth, that those things which are offered up to the Church, belong to God, and are so dedicated to him, that no Layman may use them; which if they do, they must look to receive vengeance at Gods hand, as Balthazar did. These things now ended, I will argue out the Lord Peter's Theam (which was) Give unto the Emperor that is the Emperors, and unto God that is Gods. But this Jurisdiction, which (as I proved before) is diversly converted to the dominion and property of the French Church, is now Gods; and therefore to be reserved to and for him. Wherefore, whensoever any goeth about to take away the same, the good and godly ought to answer, as Ambrose did to the Gothen Soldiers sent to him by the Emperor, which was to this effect: If the Emperor (quoth he) had requested that which hath been mine, I would not have denied him, albeit that whatsoever I have, all is the poors; but because he demandeth those things which belong to God (wherein he hath no right or interest) I had rather he should imprison me, yea and cut off my head, than to condescend to his request therein: alluding to the History of Naboth, which is to be seen, 3 Reg. 21. how Naboth the holy man, possessor of his Vineyard, was requested by the King to give up his Vineyard; who made answer, I will not give unto thee the inheritance of my Fathers: at which answer the King was marvellously offended: Wherefore (quoth Ambrose) if Naboth would not deliver his Vineyard, shall we deliver to you the Church of Christ? No, God forbid, that I should deliver you Christs Heritage. Naboth did not deliver the Vineyard, nor surely will I deliver Christs Church. And further he addeth a good saying, I can neither diminish nor add any thing to the Church of God, for that I took not upon me the charge of keeping it: besides this, it is my duty and office to consult with the high Emperor of salvation in this matter what is to be done: and doubtless I may not deliver any thing to him, nor yet he receive any thing of me, as is proved 24 quæst. ultimo capite convenior. qui. Wherefore, by these and the like reasons it appeareth, that not only Jurisdiction Spiritual (as the Lord Peter falsly hath suggested) doth belong to God; but also all other kind of Jurisdiction whatsoever touching the Church, whether it be by law, custom or priviledge: insomuch that neither may we render the same to any, nor yet may the King at our hands take the same. Further, the Lord Peter affirmed, that Christ for example sake did pay tribute; which is untrue, as appeareth in Genesis the 48*th. chap.* For the Lands of Priests were free from paying of all kind of Toll and Tribute. And if the Lord Peter well considered the 17*th.* of Matthew, he should have found there, how that Christ did not only not pay Tribute for example sake, but rather proved, how he was not bound to pay any at all. To conclude therefore, the children be free; but ye pay, to avoid slander and offence: wherefore the Text saith: Lest we should offend them, go to the Sea, &c. But peradventure it may be answered, that by the example of Christ, (to avoid offence) ye ought to pay. But this is untrue, because there is double offence of the weaklings and of the Pharises: for as concerning the offence of the weaklings, which cometh of ignorance and not of malice, some things are to be omitted for a time, while they be better instructed; as the Apostle saith to the Romans in the 14*th. chap.* But for the offence of the Pharises, which commit and offend of a pretensed malice, there is nothing to be omitted, as Christ saith in Mat. 16. Whereto his Disciples saying, Do you not know how that the Pharises hearing this word are offended? he answered, Behold, suffer them, they are blind, and leaders of the blind; For that in the time of Christ, the offence then was of little ones; but now is the offence of the Pharises. Wherefore, then it was to be paid for avoiding of offence; but now not so. Now therefore it is appareent that the third token of the fear of God consisteth in the whole true restoring of goods: And of him which hath such fear whereby he restored to God his own, it is spoken in Eccles. 15. chap. The seed of the man that feareth God shall be brought to honour: the seed which transgresseth the commandments of the Lord shall be shamed. And thus it fully appeareth, how loving fear and obedience is due unto God, for the excellency of his Majesty; because the words be, Fear God.

Secondly, I do say, that especial honour and reverence is due unto the King, for his dignity sake; which followeth in the Theam. Now it is said, Honour the King. I will alledge the 10*th.* of Ecclesiast. where it is specified, In the midst of the Brethren the Ruler is holden in honour among them. Wherefore it seemeth to me that there are two kinds of honours, one which proceedeth from the lips, and that is named flattery, whererefore it is spoken in Mat. 17. Chap. This people doth honour me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me. There is another kind of honour which is real, and cometh from the heart. And this is the very true honour indeed, wherewith the King ought to be honoured. But me thinketh, that he doth really, and de facto in very deed honour the King; which wisheth and counselleth him to keep and do those things, whereby his Dominion is beloved, his Royalty not diminished, his Honour and Fame preserved, and his Conscience not burdened; and he that perſwadeth him contrary to theſe, I think doth not honour the King. To proceed therefore further; I ſay firſt, that he doth de facto honour the King, who perſwadeth him thoſe things whereby he may be beloved of his Subjects; for a Prince ought to ſtudy rather to be beloved than feared. And what greater treaſure can a Prince wiſh, than to have the hearts of his Subjects? According to the ſaying of Seneca, The love of the Citizens is a fortreſs invincible, and a bulwark not ſaultable. What thing is more to be wiſhed for? What better, than to live and reign, every Man willing and rejoicing thereof? And in my opinion, there is nothing which cauſeth a Prince more to be beloved, than if he keep and maintain his ancient liberties, and bring in no alteration. Wherefore it is ſaid in the 22*d.* of Prov. Thou ſhalt not remove the Land-marks, which thy fore-elders have ſet. This place the Lord Peter alledged to make for himſelf, which I will prove to make againſt him, and that by this reaſon, Ye ought not to tranſgreſs the old limits and bounds which the fathers have ſet; for novelty and alteration doth ingender diſcord. And for this cauſe, in making of new alterations there ought to be both evident utility, and urgent neceſſity. If therefore the Prince will abrogate and take away the liberties granted by his forefathers and predeceſſors, he ſhall not be of his Realm beloved, as it appeareth by Rehoboam in the 11*th. Chap.* of 3 Reg. All which likewiſe is to be ſeen in the Chronicles, how that by theſe meanes many Kingdoms and Dominions were tranſlated from Nation to Nation, and from their own native Regiment to the rule of ſtrange people. And now for this time, certain it is, that your grand predeceſſors Charles the great, Saint Ludowick, Philip the fair, Ludowick and Philip his Sons, with many others, have ſealed and confirmed this liberty of the Church. Wherefore for a Man to counſel and perſwade your Highneſs to ſpoil the Church of any thing; it is even the next way to ſpoil and undo your ſelf, and bereave you of that by which your dominion is beloved. And for this cauſe I thought good to put your Grace in remembrance of the 20*th.* of Matthew, where it is written, Remember the works of your forefathers, which they have done in their generations, and you ſhall receive great glory and renown for ever. Note here, your Highneſs by the way, how that King Philip, Grandfather to S. Lewis, foſtered and kept in his Realm S. Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury; who, for that he ſtoutly defended the liberties of his Church, was baniſhed out of England. How much more therefore are you bound to defend and maintain your own Prelates in their liberties ratified and confirmed by your Graces Predeceſſors, according to the ſaying of Gregory in 25. quæſt. cap. Si. If I ſhould deſtroy and pull down thoſe things which my predeceſſors have built and ordained, I ſhould not be called a builder and maker, but juſtly accounted a ſtroy-good and puller down, as the voice of the Lord ſaith, Every kingdom divided within it ſelf ſhall be confounded. All knowledge and learning divided one againſt the other, ſhall be deſtroyed. In another place he ſaith, It is overſharp, and againſt all good manner and civility (upon what reaſon and excuſe ſoever) to break and ſubvert thoſe things which are well ordained: or by his example, to teach others at their pleaſures to diſſolve old conſtitutions. Mark here a ſtory about a Caſtle which was given to S. Remige, to the Churches uſe, by Clodovy the King, which afterward King Pipin deſired to have by exchange and recovery. To whom the ſaid S. Remige appeared in his Dream, and highly blamed him therefore, ſaying, A better man than thou gave it me, and yet wilt thou take it away from me? And with that he ſmote him, who the next day was found all black; ſince which time, no King of France durſt even lie in that Caſtle. Verily therefore, he doth not honour the King, which giveth him counſel to paſs the old limits that his old fathers did ſet. Yea rather, the Kings Majeſty ought to ſay unto them, that which is written in S. John, Chap. 8. I do honour and glorifie my Father; that is, in keeping the liberties of the Church, as they did which granted them: but you have diſhonoured me, in counſelling me that which ſeemeth beſt to pleaſe your ſelves, as it is written in Eccleſ. 4. The worſhip of a mans father is his own worſhip, and where the father is without honour, it is the diſhonour of the ſon.

Secondly, I ſay, That he truly doth honour the King, who counſelleth him, whereby his power and dignity is not diminiſhed. For as it is great honour to the Kings Highneſs to increaſe and augment his power; ſo is it as much diſhonour for him to diminiſh any jot thereof. And therefore the Emperors were wont to call themſelves victorious, of augmenting and increaſing their Commonwealth. And to ſay that you and your predeceſſors could not grant theſe things to the Church, it were too too abſurd, and to the too much derogation of your Majeſties moſt honourable eſtate. And therefore for you (moſt ſovereign Lord) who hold and poſſeſs ſo ample right and title in the Realm of France, both by Election and Inheritance, not to grant and leave this to your poſterity, it were to the great debaſing of your Majeſties honour Crown and dignity. Yea, if it were (as God forbid) it would follow, that your predeceſſors lived continually in ſin; yea and further it were as much to ſay (which were too vile) that bleſſed S. Lewis, by whom all France is beautified, could not be juſtly canonized.

For as the Lord Speaker declared, if he took his Oath at his Coronation both to alienate nothing, and alſo to call in that which was before alienated, which is inſeparable from the Crown, it ſhould follow that he was forſworn, and conſequently committed deadly ſin, and ſo could never be Canonized, which is too too abſurd to be talked of. And if reply be made, that he might have repented; it is ſoon to be anſwered, That his Sin is read of, but of his Repentance it is not found, as it is ſaid of Solomon. But put caſe it be true that the Lord Peter ſaid, then it muſt needs follow, that your Grace could beſtow nothing, neither Country, Town nor Tower. And yet there be few, which willingly would not receive them, notwithſtanding their Allegiance and Homage, which they pretend to your Highneſs. Keep therefore and confirm (moſt renowned Prince) that which was granted by your noble Progenitors, otherwiſe your Royal Honour ſhall decreaſe; that it may be verified in you which is read of, in the 11*th.* to the Romans, I will honour my Miniſtry.

Thirdly, I do affirm, that he rightly honoureth the King, which perſwadeth him that whereby his honour and renown is preſerved. For in matters of weight and of great importance, next after conſcience we muſt have regard to name and fame, as it is written in the 22. of Prov. It is better to have a good name than riches. A good name far paſſeth all things, and is above Silver and Gold. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, Two things are neceſſary for thee, Conſcience and Name; Conſcience for God, and Name for thy Neighbour. And therefore it is written in the 4*th. chap.* of Eccleſ. Labour to get a good name, for that will continue ſurer by thee than many great treaſures of Gold. A good life hath a number of days. Which renown and name the Lord (who anointed your Grace with the oyl of gladneſs) hath in ſo little time more abundantly bleſſed you withal, than any other Prince; wherefore you ought to be more vigilant and careful how to keep and enjoy the ſame ſtill: for it is no leſs vertue to keep that which is gotten, than to ſeek and get; whereby not only while you live, but alſo when you are dead, your glorious renown may live for ever; yea and further, that by you nothing be done, whereby any blot or foil ſhould creep into that your ſo great renown; applying that to your Grace which is ſaid in the 10*th.* of Prov. The memorial of the juſt ſhall have good report, &c. Beware therefore, moſt Noble Prince, and take heed, that in your days and time, the liberties of the Church be not taken away (which God forbid) or diminiſhed in any jot; for if your glorious name ſhould be blotted therewith, there be thouſands which would Chronicle the ſame to perpetual Memory. Wherefore moſt Chriſtian Prince, if ſuch (as truſted after their death for no other life, but only for fame and renown) lived a life moſt godly and vertuous: how much more ought we Chriſtians, which look after another life, by our well-doings here, to win us a perpetual name and memory after our death? And you beſides, if you ſhould diſhonour your name and fame, what a matter were it? conſidering how the Kings of France were ever counted the moſt Chriſtian Princes, and moſt bountiful towards the Church, giving examples to other Princes how to inrich their Churches and liberties thereof. And now eſpecially, if your Grace, the Church in ſome places being in great perſecution (which God forbid) ſhould ſhew light to other to pull and take away that which was given by your forefathers to the Church; what might the World ſay? For then by the like reaſon might the Emperor deprive the Church of all, which was given to it by Conſtantine the Emperor. Alſo other Kings would do the like in their Realms. God forbid, that your Highneſs ſhould give ſuch example. And for my part, I would rather wiſh my ſelf to be dead, than give you ſuch counſel, that in ſo pernicious and naughty a matter you ſhould be example to other; eſpecially, when the Kings of France, your predeceſſors, were defenders always againſt ſuch as went about to take away the liberties from the Church, which is the office of a King. Hieronymus ſaith upon

Note you alſo, and read ſome examples out of Stories and Commentaries, what regard the Kings of France had in obſerving thoſe things; and ſee you by their example, to follow and do the like; and then ſhall it be ve-

The 4th. honouring of the King. Fourthly, I ſay, That he indeed doth honour the King, which perſwadeth him to do that whereby his Conſcience is not hurt. For above all things, a Chriſtian Man ought to beware how he do that thing, which ſhould be a grudge unto his Conſcience, becauſe the life is more than is meat,

Matth. 6. Mat. the 6 Chap. And aſſuredly I believe, that your Grace would not commit that thing willingly, wherewith your Conſcience ſhould be burdned, for all the Worlds good, and that juſtly. For the more miraculouſly God hath called your Highneſs to the ſtate of a King, and hath endued you with his grace; ſo much the more care ought you to have, and take heed that you offend him not. Nor is it to be doubted, whether in doing the contrary, he will not be the more grievouſly diſpleaſed with you, as he was with Saul, 1 King

1. Re. 15. Chap. 15. Conſider therefore moſt ſovereign Lord, that at what time you were crowned, you ſware only theſe things

Firſt, That you would defend and maintain the Canonical Law, priviledge and juſtice, granted to the Biſhops and the Church, and, as much as in you did lie, to inlarge and amplifie the ſame. Alſo, That by your arbitrement all Chriſtian People, at all times, ſhould keep the true peace of God and his Church. Alſo, That you ſhould forbid to all Nations all kind of ſacrileges, ſpoilings and iniquities. Alſo, That in all kind of Judgments, you ſhould will and command equity and mercy. Alſo, That throughout your whole Territory and Juriſdiction, you ſhould ſincerely, with all your endeavour, ſtudy to exterminate, and cut off from the Church the noted Hereticks: Which all, and no other, your Majeſty ſware to fulfil, at the time of your Coronation; under the leave and correction of the Lord Peter, which affirmed you were ſworn to ſome o-thing beſides. Now therefore, ſeeing it is a Canonical priviledge of the Church, and in the heart of the whole, Cano. 6. q. 1. Quicunque litem habens, incorporate; when alſo by Cuſtom, which is Canonical, it came in, that the Church and Spirituality, may have cognition in a number of caſes, againſt which divers Articles have been here laid in: If this amongſt the Laity ſhould not be obſerved in the Church, your Graces Conſcience thereby might ſomewhat be burdened. In like manner, if you be bound with all your whole might and power to procure, that all whole Chriſtendom ſhould keep the true peace of God and his Church: much more, have you to procure the ſame amongſt your own Barons and people; who evermore were all one with the Church. And always, where any Church was in honour and eſtimation, there were belonging to it 20 ſtout Barons and Knights; whoſe office, as it was to defend the Church, ſo was it the part of the Church to pray for them, and to offer ſacrifice for them unto God. And to this end, that bleſſed S. Lewis ſo much laboured in his time: who, when the greateſt Barons of his Realm, had confederate to ſuppreſs theſe liberties of the Church, and had conſulted to give him (to that end) the hundredth part of their goods, would never condeſcend thereunto, but always diſſwaded them therefrom: and finally, by his authority ſealed and confirmed theſe liberties of the Church. Conſider here your Majeſty, how that Pope Innocent at that time proceeded againſt thoſe Barons, &c. I dare be bold to ſay, that if there ſhould be now diſſention between the Prelates and Barons, it would not be long before the Commonalty would uſurp to rule and bear domination. As by experience it hath been ſeen in many places, and likewiſe by practice we of late time might have ſeen; at what time the people ſtomaking the Spiritualty in the parts of Campania and Burgundy, at laſt roſe, and made in every Town a King; and therewithal cauſed the Officers, which brought Citations and Abſolutions from the Pope and other, to be well banged; and not long after, made inſurrection againſt the Lords Temporal, and ſerved them with the like ſauce; until that by the Kings power they were ſuppreſſed, and many of them hanged. And this doubtleſs was in the days of Lewis laſt King of that name. Truly the Noblemen ought not to be grieved with that that the Church is poſſeſſed withal, for that there be few of them, who have not their Brothers and Kinſfolks which live, and are maintained by the goods and revenues of the Church. Amongſt whom if they ſhould divide their inheritance, perhaps they would bring a little to nothing at all. Let the Barons alſo conſider, how that there are but few which believe not in the Church; for the Church is one, as in the 6 of Cant. My Dove and Dearling is one. Wherefore without great peril of tranſgreſſion can they not perſwade and counſel ſuch liberties of the Church to be abrogated and taken away.

{KING} {Edw. 1}

Arg. By the poſſeſſions of the Church maintained by Brethren and Kinſmen of the Nobles be maintained. Ergo, Such poſſeſſions are not to be grudged at.

To believe in the Church, is one of our Faith.

That therefore your Majeſties Conſcience may remain pure and immaculate, pleaſeth it your Highneſs by your authority to ſeal and confirm this good ancient and Canonical priviledge; and contrary attempts (if any be made by way of Proclamation or otherwiſe) to revoke and call them in. And further, to keep your Mother the Church of France in her ancient frank choice, liberty and cuſtoms. And then by you in all things God ſhall be glorified and honoured; to whom be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen. Who then will honour you, as is ſaid, 1 Reg. 21. Whoſoever ſhall honour me, I will crown him with that glory, in which conſiſteth the true honour, and is granted to none unworthy. Whereunto alſo none is admitted but worthy, as bleſſed S. Auſtin ſaith, which honour grant he unto you and us, who is bleſſed world without end. Amen. And becauſe a Bill of many Articles was exhibited, whereof part did infringe the whole Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, to the defence thereof we will according to the 4th. Chap. of Eccleſiaſtic. ſtand even to the death, where it is ſaid, For the truth ſtrive thou unto the death, and God ſhall fight for thee againſt thine enemies. Some other of them contain only abuſe, and we believe none ſuch to be. But if there be, we will ſee redreſs therein. Therefore for the honour of God, for the unburdening of our conſciences, for the Kings Majeſties reverence, and for the peoples profit and peace, all we here aſſembled have concluded to ſee remedy, that the aforeſaid abuſes, if any ſuch be, ſhall be left, to the quietneſs of the people, and praiſe of Almighty God. To whom be honour and glory world without end, Amen.

Another Sitting in the Parliament.

Another days ſitting in the Parliament.

The next Friday following being the 29*th.* of December, the Prelates aſſembled themſelves again together at the Kings Palace in Paris, where the Reverend Father the Lord Peter Bertrand, by Gods permiſſion Biſhop of Edven, ſpake openly there before the King, ſitting with his Counſellors and Barons about him; taking to his Theam that which is written in the 18*th* of Geneſis, O Lord be not angry that I ſpeak yet more, &c. the which he applied to this end; that for the Majeſty of the King, the redency of his Council, and inſufficiency of himſelf (conſidering the weightineſs of the cauſe) he trembled and was afraid to ſpeak; yet nevertheleſs, truſting upon his accuſtomed clemency, he took to him audacity, and preſumed that which was appointed to him by the Prelates. Beginning with the 8*th. Pſal. Lord thou art our refuge, &c.* Which he proſecuted in extolling the Kings Perſon, and his miraculous attaining to the Crown of France; preaching further, how he ought to be the Champion and Defender of the Faith; all which he proved in few words, by many reaſons and authorities. Afterward, he touched thoſe propoſitions which were propounded by the foreſaid Lord Peter of Cugner, and for no other cauſe, as he proteſted, but only to inform the conſcience of his Sovereign Lord and King, and to adviſe his Grace concerning the ſame; not going about to make any final judgment, determination or anſwer, whereby either ſentence, order, ſtatute, right to any man, or other proceſs, might thereof enſue or be grounded. And namely, the firſt beginning with the Theam of the Lord Peter, firſt affirmed (Render unto the Emperor which is the Em- perors, and unto God which is his; Mark 12.) By which words was ſignified the obedience and ſubjection to the King, with the difference of the Spiritualty from the Temporalty; whereof the firſt member is proved by the 1 Pet. 2. where it is ſaid, Be ye ſubject to every humane creature, &c. Alſo by the Cap. ſolite, extra. de maio. & ob. and by the c. novit extra de judiciis cap. de ſacerdotibus 10. q. 1. with the notes about the ſame. Moreover, as touching the diſtinction of both Juriſdictions, whereof the Lord Peter proved the Temporal Juriſdiction to pertain to Secular Men, the Spiritual to the Clergy, by the words of our Saviour Chriſt, Luke 22. where he ſaid; Behold two Swords. Alſo for that Chriſt did pay tribute; teaching thereby, how that the Temporalties were to be reſerved to the Temporal Men, Mat. 17. 11. q. ca. Si tribut. ca. Magnum.

In like manner, by the Law of Juſtinian, where it is written, that two great gifts were ordained and granted of God; a Biſhoprick and a Kingdom: the firſt to bear rule over Gods matters, the other over worldly things, &c. And ſaid moreover, that theſe two be the caſes which in no wiſe could be altered or changed. Prov. 20. de Tion mo. lib. 1. & ult. And affirmed alſo, that of ſuch princely right the King could not abrogate and deprive himſelf; for that it was impreſcriptible, appertaining to the Crown and his Regal Seat (conſidering how he took his Oath at the time of his Coronation) not only not to break or alienate the Laws of his Realm, but alſo to reſtore and revoke ſuch as were broken and alienated. To which his reaſons it was anſwered, that the juriſdiction and determination of civil cauſes (whereabout the controverſie now ſtandeth) belongeth to the Church, both by Gods Law and Mans Law. By Gods Law it was proved, even from Adams time to Chriſts coming; per Innoc. ca. licet extra de foro compe. And from Chriſts coming, to Peters time and his ſucceſſors, 22 di. c. omnes patriarchæ, Matth. cap. 16. But how the Church, in the Realms of Catholick Princes, attained unto this right and intereſt which at this preſent it doth enjoy, the Law proveth, 2. q. ca. 5. Si quis Presbyter 11. q. 1. Relatum 25 diſt. Ecce. Which alſo is confirmed by the Emperors in the body of the Law, ff. 3. ¶ Si cauſam. col. 9. 23. q. ult. c. his, & a quibus. The Canon furthermore teacheth, how that S. Peter commanded all the Princes of the Earth, and others, to obey and give place to the Biſhops: c. omnes, extra de major. & ob. 16. diſt. duo ſunt Wherefore it was concluded, that in no wiſe this right is to be ſeparated and taken away from the Church. And albeit, in the Realms of tyrannous Princes, this ſtate of the Church is violated and not kept; yet in this bleſſed Realm of France it hath been always, even to theſe days duly obſerved: c. novit. extra. de judiciis. This Juriſdiction the Laws of Theodoſius the Emperor, and Carolus the great, hath alſo confirmed: extra. de judiciis. c. nonne. all. 11. q. 1. quæcunque, &c. ſe. juriſdictio. c. expreſſe. Where it is mentioned, that the ſame Carolus King of France (and Emperor) eſpecially conſtituted the ſaid Law. And likewiſe to ſpeak of Cuſtoms, it hath been known from time out of mind, the ſame to have belonged to the Church of France: He therefore which ſhall go about to violate this Law, committeth Sacriledge, 11. q. 1. ca. 1. & 2. And let not the King's Majeſty marvel, if that in this moſt noble Realm of France this prerogative be due unto the Church; As when hereby his power and nobility is beautified. Antho. ut. ind. ſine quoquo ſuffra. ſi. in principio col. 2. Beſides this, our Sovereign Lord and King, at what time he was crowned, was ſworn by the Evangeliſts to keep and obſerve this canonical priviledge of the Church. Further, the Barons, who in a manner are all ſworn to the Church, ſwore fidelity to the ſame: by which Oath of fidelity they are bound to keep theſe Liberties and Rites of the Church. When therefore every Oath, which tendeth not to the perdition of the ſoul, is to be kept, a fortiori that Oath, which is taken in the favour of the Church, is much more to be obſerved: c. Si vero extra de jure jurando, 22. quæſt. 4. c. ult. Beſides this bleſſed Ludovick, Philip of Arragon, Philip the fair, Ludovick, Carolus the Great, and Philip, confirmed theſe priviledges, cuſtoms and liberties of the Church, which all were ſworn at their Coronations, as before, &c. Theſe thing conſidered, who can adviſe the Kings Majeſty, without damning of his own ſoul, contrary to theſe liberties granted, and ſo confirmed to the Church? To him belongeth great reward, whoſoever beſtoweth any thing upon the Church: Antho. de non alie. ac permut. re. ecce: ff. ſi minis col. 3. Neither maketh it againſt us, where it is ſaid, that there are two Swords, &c. Neither yet the diſtinction between the Biſhoprick and Kingdom; becauſe it is true that there are two Swords, the power whereof is left to the Churches hand, although the execution of the material Sword is committed to the temporal and ſecular Men, Matth. 26. where Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Convert and put up the Sword into the place. But as touching the diſtinction betwixt the Biſhoprick and Kingdom, indeed it is true as much as appertaineth to the end, and to the execution of blood, but not concerning the beginning and ſubject: for that in one ſubject, both the powers are, may be, and ought to be, as is before proved. To that point, where it is ſaid, that Chriſt paid Tribute; it is anſwered, that not therefore he paid it, becauſe he ought, or was bound thereunto, becauſe it is certainly true, that the Sons of the King (as he was) ought not to pay; but this he did to avoid offence; yea alſo the Clergy is not bound hereunto, Eſdræ 1. & ult. Wherefore, ſuch things do not infer a conſequence. Neither yet maketh that againſt us, where it is ſaid, that the King our Sovereign Lord and Maſter cannot abdicate from himſelf this right, eſpecially for that he was ſworn thereunto at the time of his Coronation, &c. For it is anſwered, that he may well abdicate the ſame. And how doth he abdicate it from himſelf, which he giveth and beſtoweth to God and the Church? The land is the Lords. And doubtleſs, to give, is nothing elſe, but to render to God and the Church their own; for then by that reaſon, the gift given to the Church by Conſtantine, is naught and nothing worth, which is falſe; and this is proved 16 diſt. ca. Conſt. Whereby it appeareth, that an Emperor and King may alienate things of the Empire; ff. de legatis i. l. apud Julianum ſſ. ult. and yet hereby the Empire or Kingdom not be damaged; for that the thing returneth to the priſtinate ſtate, ff. de pactis l. unus ſſ. pactus 35 diſt. ab exordio. Furthermore, by this reaſon propounded, all the Kings of France which ever were (and eſpecially bleſſed Ludovick) ſhould be ſpotted; for if that were true (as God forbid) then all they were perjured and died in mortal ſin; which is too abſurd. Laſt of all it hurteth not where it is ſaid, that ſuch things are impreſcriptible. It is true indeed, they cannot of Subjects, or otherwiſe than of the Church be preſcribed: but in this cauſe we talk not of Subjects. Alſo ſeeing they may be alienated, they may be preſcribed, eſpecially (the Kings thus conſenting, who confirmed the ſame ſo long a time) which excludeth all right both Fiſcal and Eccleſiaſtical. The Prelates therefore, all with one conſent, agree and affirm to the ſame as a verity to be maintained and defended; beſeeching the Kings Majeſty their Lord, both for his ſouls health, and peace of the Church, to maintain the ſame, and to keep the liberties of the Church; deſiring him to conſider what commodity daily he receiveth by the Church; and that his Church never failed him yet, when he had need of the Laity, ſhewing the dangers and examples of them who did to the contrary. Further he beſeeched his Highneſs to weigh how entirely his Lord the Pope doth and hath loved his Perſon and Realm; affirming, that never any placed in the ſeat of Peter, loved better his Realm, than he doth. Alledging the Text of Eccleſ. 6. where it is ſaid, Stand in the multitude of the Prieſts, and believe them with thy heart.

After this, in the ſaid Seſſion, the foreſaid Biſhop of Edven Prolocutor inferred many things beſide, and anſwered particularly to the Articles above ſpecified, and exhibited by the Lord Peter in writing to the King and Parliament; which, becauſe they touch more the ſubtilty of the Law, and ſtiles of the Courts, than are neceſſary to this our Hiſtory, and becauſe we would not burden the Volume with them, they containing no great profit in them, we have here of purpoſe for brevities ſake, omitted them, paſſing to the next ſitting, which was the Friday next following the ſame, as enſueth.

The next Friday after this, the Prelates aſſembled at Vincennas before the King, to hear their anſwer: where the foreſaid Lord Peter of Cugner (being Prolocutor for the King) ſpake on this wiſe, taking for his Theam; I am peace unto you, do not fear, &c. which he proſecuted, moniſhing that they ſhould not be troubled in any thing that there had been ſpoken; for that the intent and mind of the Sovereign Lord their King was, to keep the Rites of the Church and Prelates; which they had by law and by good and reaſonable cuſtom: Where between the firſt and ſecond concluſion, he went about to prove, that the cognition of civil cauſes ought not to appertain to the Church; for that ſuch things were temporal, and ought to pertain to the Temporalty. as ſpiritual things to the Spiritualty. And beſides his other reaſons, he alledged the 86 diſt. declaring for a truth, that for this intent firſt the Clerks Crowns were ſhaven, in ſign that they ſhould be free from all worldlineſs, and forſake all temporal things. Alledging to that end, the 12, q. 2. Furthermore, he declared, that the Biſhops had cognition in certain caſes expreſſed by Law, wherefore, theſe ſaid caſes miniſtred a certain rule againſt him, alledging for the proof thereof, De Reg. juriſ. ff. de lega. I.L. ticie teytoris. Alſo he affirmed, that by reaſon of ſin, the Decretal Novit. could not make for them. For the ſame did ſpeak of the King of France his ſtate, which hath no ſuperiour; but in other perſons it was (he ſaid) otherwiſe. And theſe things thus being proved, then ſaid he, and concluded; That nevertheleſs, their Lord and King was ready to hear the information of them, which would inſtruct him of any cuſtome, and thoſe cuſtomes which were good and reaſonable he would obſerve. Which anſwer becauſe it did not ſeem to pleaſe and ſuffice the Prelates, incontinently the Biſhop of Edven anſwered for them all in manner following; Firſt, commending the good and general anſwer, he ſpake in this wiſe; The Prince of the people, (ſaid he) ſhall be praiſed for the prudence of his talk, commending therewith, as touching the former good general anſwer of the King, his purpoſe and talk propounded. But as concerning the words of the Lord Peter, which ingendred and brought darkneſs and obſcurity, and might give occaſion to the Temporal Lords to breake and infringe the Rites and Cuſtoms of the Church, his anſwer ſeemed not full and plain to the Prelates. Speaking moreover, to the ſaid Peter, he alluded to the words of the Virgin ſpeaking in the Scripture thus to her Son, why did you ſo to us? And ſo he proſecuted the ſame, both marvelling with himſelf, and yet covertly complaining of his anſwer. Afterward anſwering to thoſe things which the Lord Peter affirmed, and firſt to the Chapter, Ad verum, he ſaid, th t it was before anſwered, touching the diviſion of the two Juriſdictions, that they may be in one ſubject, as before is proved. Neither doth it let which the Lord Peter ſaid, that theſe two Juriſdictions could not be in one ſubject, becauſe that things which be in themſelves diverſe, and be under one Genus, as a Man and an Aſs cannot be in one ſubject. But if they were under divers kinds, as whiteneſs and ſweetneſs in Milk, they might be well in one ſubject. It was anſwered, that this rule was not true, becauſe juſtice and temperance are two divers vertues, and under one kind, and yet be in one ſubject. Beſides theſe differing Species, a Man and an Aſs be not compatible in one ſubject. Alſo to that which was ſpoken concerning the ſhaving of the Crown, it was anſwered, that the Crown did betoken rule and excellency; and the ſhaving did ſignifie, that they ought not to heap up ſtore of temporal things, ſo to apply their hearts thereunto; but that the temporal things ought to be ſubject to them, and not they to the temporalty, as is proved in the ſaid Chapter, duo ſunt genera. Alſo as concerning the thing which was talked of de regula: he anſwereth, that this maketh for the Church, as before was proved; yea alſo the Cuſtom doth make the rule for the Church. Alſo Laws in all kind of ſenſe do always except the Cuſtom. And therefore his ſaying makes nothing againſt it. And now to that place which the Lord Peter ſpake about the Decretal Novit. That the caſe was only in the Kings Perſon; yet for all that it is expreſly ſaid in the ſame Text of every Chriſtian Man. And although their Law doth ſpeak only of the Pope, yet the ſame is applied to all Biſhops in their Dioceſs. Wherefore the ſaid Biſhop concluded and beſeeched the King, that it would pleaſe his Grace to give unto them a more plain and comfortable anſwer, and that they might not depart from his preſence all penſive and ſad, whereby occaſion might be given to the Laity to impugne the Rites and Liberties of the Church, and that they doubted nothing hereof in the good nature and conſcience of their Sovereign Lord and King. In the end, it was anſwered to them in the behalf of the King, that his mind and intent was not to impugne the Cuſtoms of the Church.

85 Diſt cap. cum ad verum. Shaving of Prieſts Crowns wherefore, 12. queſt. 2.

The Biſhop findeth fault with the Kings anſwer.

The Sunday following, the Biſhops aſſembled themſelves again before the King at Vicenas, where the Lord Biſhop of Edven repealed their laſt ſuppoſition, with the laſt anſwer made unto them in the behalf of the King, when the Biſhop of Byturien had given them to underſtand how the King willed them not to fear; for that they ſhould ſuffer no hindrance or damage in his time; yea, and he would defend them in their Rites and Cuſtoms, becauſe it ſhould not be ſaid, that he would give enſample to other to impugne the Church, aſſuring them, that even the Kings Grace willed him ſo to declare unto them. The ſaid Lord Biſhop of Senon in the name of the whole Prelates gave humble thanks to the King therefore, and the ſaid Biſhop of Senon beſeeched that ſuch Proclamations, which were made to the prejudice of the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction might be repealed and called in. Hereunto the King himſelf anſwereth with his own mouth, that they were not publiſhed at his commandment neither did he know of them, nor ratifie them. Thirdly, the Biſhop propoſed, that theſe abuſes which the Temporalty complained of, ſhould be ſo ordered and reformed, that every Man ſhould be well contented therewith. Laſt of all, he beſeeched the Kings Highneſs, that he would of his gracious goodneſs give them a more comfortable and fuller anſwer. Then anſwered the Lord Peter in the name of the King; That if the Prelates and Biſhops would ſee reformation of thoſe things which were to be amended (whereabouts he would take reſpite between this and Chriſtmas next following) his Grace would innovate nothing in the mean ſeaſon. And if in the foreſaid ſpace they would not correct and reform that which was amiſs, His Majeſty would appoint ſuch order and remedy, that ſhould be acceptable both to God and his Subjects. After this the Prelates had leave of the King to depart, and went home.

The gentle anſwer of the King to the Biſhop.

The final anſwer of the King to the Prelates.

A brief recapitulation of the Biſhops anſwer, with certain Notes anſwering to his Popiſh reaſons unto the Reader.

THE Anſwer of Biſhop Edven, in the name of the other Prelates, to the Oration and Articles before objected by the Lord Peter, conſiſteth of two parts. Firſt, in declaring the fear due to God. Secondly, the honour due to the King. Whereof the firſt is, the fear of God, which (he ſaith) conſiſteth in three things. 1. In giving to God. 2. In honouring his Miniſters. 3. In reſtoring that which hath been taken away, &c. The ſecond, which is, the honouring of the King, he ſaith, conſiſteth in a double ſort, that is; in words only, wherein is flattery; and in deed; which again he divideth into four members. Firſt, when a man counſelleth a King to that whereby his dominion is loved. 2. When the King is counſelled to that whereby his honour and excellency is not diminiſhed. 3. When the King is counſelled to that, whereby his fame and renown is maintained. 4. When a King is counſelled to that, whereby his conſcience is not wounded, &c. And this is the order of his whole tractation. Now remaineth with like brevity, to recite the reaſons and arguments in order, whereby he proveth the premiſſes, with the ſubdiviſion of every member and part thereof. Wherein the ſtudious Reader may note both the ſubtil proceedings of theſe Popiſh Prelates, and alſo the feeble and impotent ground whereupon they build. Whoſe building (as by this diſcourſe and many other may appear) wholly and finally doth tend to this, to maintain their Liberties, Pomp and Eſtimation above all other ſecular Princes and perſons.

Notes upon the Biſhops anſwer pag. 402. col. 2.

Fear of God conſiſting in 3 things.

1 In giving.

2 In honouring.

3. In reſtoring.

Honour to the King, double. In word flattering: in deed effectual.

Honour effectual, ſtandeth in 4 points.

1. In maintaining the Kings love.

2. In maintaining his dignity.

3. In maintaining his good name.

4. In maintaining his conſcience.

Firſt, As concerning fear to be given to God, which he divideth into three parts, In giving, in honouring, and reſtoring; for the firſt, he proveth that Princes ought to give largely and without meaſure to the Church, by theſe arguments.

By the teſtimony of Juſtinian: Although nothing is good which is too much, yet, Pag. 406. col. 1. I anſwer, that in the time of Juſtinian, goods then given to the Church, were the goods of the poor: wherein was uſed faithful diſtribution, voluntary giving, and neceſſary charity. But now in our Popiſh Churches, Revenues and Lands given are not diſtributed to the poor, and yet are men compelled againſt their will to give ſtill. And again, ſo little neceſſity is now to give to ſuch, that the moſt wealth of Realms almoſt is in their hands and houſes; inſomuch that they, flowing in ſuch wealth, are now waxen ſo proud, that Kings can ſcarce bear any rule for them, as was proved before, pag. 407. col. 1. that the Popes revenues here in England, mounted to more more than three times double the stint of the Kings Crown, Wherefore by the counsel of Justinian, it was so then, and then might stand, quod Religio peperit divitias: But now as the time is altered, so that counsel holdeth not, postquam nunc filia devoravit matrem; that is, after that the Daughter hath devoured the Mother. Finally, concerning Mens giving to the Church in these our Popish days, four faults I note:

Incommodities that come in giving to the Church.

First, That they give superfluously more than sufficient is to necessity of life.

Secondly, That they give to such as abuse it wickedly.

Thirdly, That in giving to them that need not, Noblemen in mean time defraud their poor Neighbors, which need indeed, and yet do not complain.

Fourthly, Because of this Title of giving, men have used and yet do use to put great hope of salvation therein, contrary to the testament of God in Christs death, whereof examples are before.

Pag. 406. Coll. 1. Abel offered of the best to the Lord, and was blessed of God, Ergo, Every great man that would be blessed of God, must offer of the best he hath unto the Church. Answer: This Argument as it is far fet, so it is soon answered, wherein three notes are to be observed.

Three things to be noted in offering to God and to the Church.

First, That he which offereth unto the Church of God, doth not therein offer unto God immediately as Abel did.

Secondly, Neither is this to be granted, that he which offereth to all Churchmen, offereth by and by to the Church of God; for many times the Church-men are one, and the Church of God is another. Lawrence the Martyr shewing forth the Church of God, brought out the poor of the Parish, and not of the Priests of the Church.

The third note is; That if noble persons should offer unto God (by the example of Abel*) that which is the best and fattest of the flock; then should they offer unto the Lord of their flocks only, and not of their Lands. Yea, and to note the very truth, they are taught thereby to offer to God, neither Cattel nor Lands, but that which is the very best,* Rom. 12. that is, their own bodies for a lively Sacrifice to God. He that offereth up to God a proud heart, and killeth it with the Ax of humility, giveth unto him the best and fattest Pag. 406. c. 1 Bullock he hath in all his flock. With like reason also I answer the place of Num. 18, and of Paral. cap. ult. that to offer up, or to separate unto the Lords Treasury, is not now to give to Priests and Chaplains of the Church, which peradventure have more than they do well occupy; but to give liberally to the communion of Saints, which are needy, and are the true Treasury of the Church indeed, as Lawrence the true Treasurer said

Pag. 406. col. 2. By Gods commandment we are bound Pag. 406. c. 2. of duty to honour our temporal Fathers. Ergo, By the same duly we are bound much rather to honour our spiritual Fathers, that is, Priests and Prelates. Answer. A Father in common speech is diversly taken, as by Age, by Nature, by Office. And to all these we of duty are bound to yield, honour, reverence, obedience, submission; albeit not all after one sort, nor in like degree. For as we are bound to honour our Fathers and Mothers; so aged Men and Elders have also their honour and name of fathers; So Magistrates and spiritual teachers, in their kind have their honour and reverence. And S. Paul saith, that such are worthy 1 Tim. 5. of double honour, qui bene præsunt, & qui laborant in ser- Two things to be noted in giving honour, wherein consisteth honour giving to Priests. mone. But in this two things are to be noted, wherein this honour consisteth, and how far it extendeth. These Spiritual Fathers of the Church think they be not honoured enough, unless Kings and Emperors give and surrender unto them all the temporal rule and government, to do what they list, and none to controul them: and unless Noblemen and Subjects endow them with temporal Lands and Possessions so much as they would have. And this they call honour, which they define only by giving temporally: where indeed it rather consisteth in giving spiritually, as to have a reverent opinion of their ministration, to yield a prompt obedience to their Doctrine, reverence to them as the Ministers of God, and not to despise, defame or molest their persons; whereof S. Paul also about the same place speaketh, writing to Timothy, Let no man despise thy youth, &c. Also to 1 Tim. 5. Titus, Let no man despise thee, &c. And this is to honour Titus 2. our spiritual Fathers.

Qui bene præsunt.

Secondly, To consider how far this honour extendeth: As no man doth deny, but these Pastors are worthy their double honour which rule well; so if they administer not their office well, they are under the oversight of the King How far honour given to Priests extendeth. bearing the Temporal Sword, worthy of double punishment. And yet to consider this double honour in them that rule well, how far it doth extend: if it be compared to the honour due to our Parents, case of necessity will soon decide it. For be it that our parents on the one side, and Pastor of the other, stand in extream need of the Sons supportation, wherein he can help but the one: Nature, I suppose, will and ought sooner run, and the Word of Christ will sooner drive us to our Father, than to the Priests Corban, Mark 7. So that this distinction Mark 7. here may have place; that as the one standeth upon merit of vertue, so the other standeth upon meer duty of necessity.

Pag. 407. col. 1. These Jurisdictions Temporal and Pag. 407. c. 1 Spiritual, are compatible in one person. Answer: I grant pro ratione subjecti: That is, in the subject it self there is no cause to the contrary, but these vocations may be exercised both of one person, as they have been of the Pope, one after the other, (and so may contrary forms also) and yet the Popes person hath been able to sustain them both. But now here is to be considered, not what the nature of the Subject is able to bear by Logick, but what order is taken herein by the will of God, whose order is this: That they, which with Peter are called to the feeding of the Flock, should leave their Fishing-nets, and fish for men, and that they, which labour in the warfare of the Lord, should not intangle themselves with the business of this life, whereby they may be more free to please him, whose Soldiers they are, Tit. 2. &c. Titus 2.

Pag. 407. col. 1. The Jurisdictions Temporal and Pag. 407. c. 2 Spiritual, are so distinct that they are not contrary, &c. Answer: And what let is there then, but our Queen now, and other Kings hereafter may have the government of both states, as well Ecclesiastical as Temporal? Seeing both the forms being compatible, may concur both in one subject; why not as well in the person of the King within the Realm, as in the person of the Pope without the Realm? Two forms not contrary may be compatible in one subject.

And thus much concerning French matters, which becauſe they be Eccleſiaſtical, and bear with them ſome utility to the diligent Reader (ſuch as liſt to ſearch, note and obſerve the acts of men, and courſe of Religion) I thought therefore here to place and adjoyn them next after the other contention before proceeding between Philip the French King, and Pope Boniface. Albeit as touching the perfect keeping of years and time, I am not ignorant that this foreſaid Parliament, thus ſummoned and commenced againſt the French Prelates, falling in the year of our Lord 1329, was to be referred rather to the raign of King Edward the Second, of whom now remaineth (by the Grace of Chriſt) in order of Hiſtory to proſecute, declaring firſt the inſtructions and informations of his Father given to him in the time of his departing. The year of our Lord 1307, and the laſt year of the King, the foreſaid King Edward, in his journey marching toward Scotland, in the North fell ſick of the Flux, which increaſed ſo fervently upon him, that he deſpaired of life. Wherefore calling before him his Earls and Barons, he cauſed them to be ſworn that they ſhould Crown his Son Edward in ſuch convenient time after his death as they might, and keep the land to his uſe, till he were Crowned. That done, he called before him his Son Edward, informing and leſſoning him with wholſome precepts; and he charged him alſo with divers points upon his bleſſing: Firſt, That he ſhould be courteous, gentle, upright in judgment, fair ſpoken to all men, conſtant in deed and word, familiar with the good; and eſpecially to the miſerable to be merciful. After this, he gave him alſo charge not to be too haſty in taking his Crown before he had revenged his Fathers injuries ſtoutly againſt the Scots: but that he ſhould remain in thoſe parts to take with him his Fathers bones, being well boiled from the fleſh; and ſo being incloſed in ſome fit veſſel, ſhould carry them with him till he conquered all the Scots; ſaying, That ſo long as he had his Fathers bones with him, none ſhould overcome him. Moreover, he willed and required him to love his Brother Thomas and Edmund; alſo to cheriſh and tender his Mother Margret the Queen. Over and beſides, he ſtraightly charged him upon his bleſſing (as he would avoid his curſe) that he ſhould in no caſe call to him again, or ſend for Peter Gaveſton; which Peter Gaveſton the King before had baniſhed the Realm, for his naughty and wicked familiarity with his Son Edward, and for his ſeducing of him with ſiniſter counſel. For the which cauſe he baniſhed both Peter Gaveſton utterly out of the Realm, and alſo put the ſaid Edward, his Son in, priſon. And therefore ſo ſtraitly he charged his Son in no wiſe to ſend for this Gaveſton, or to have him in any caſe about him. And finally, becauſe he had conceived in himſelf a vow to have returned in his own perſon to the Holy Land (which for his manifold wars with the Scots he could not perform) therefore he had prepared 32000 pounds of ſilver; for the ſending of certain Souldiers with his heart into the Holy Land. Which thing he required of his Son to ſee accompliſhed: So that the foreſaid money, under his curſe and malediction be not imployed to other uſes. But theſe injunctions and precepts the diſobedient Son did nothing obſerve or keep after the deceaſe of his Father. Who forſaking and leaving off the war with the Scots, with all ſpeed haſted him to his Coronation. Alſo contrary to the mind of his Nobles, and againſt the precept of his Father, he ſent for the foreſaid Peter Gaveſton, and prodigally beſtowed upon him all that treaſure which his Father had bequeathed to the Holy Land. He was moreover a proud deſpiſer of his Peers and Nobles; and therefore raigned infortunately, as by the ſequel of the Story here following, by the Grace of Chriſt ſhall be declared. Thus King Edward firſt of that name, leaving behind him three Sons, Thomas and Edmund by his third wife, and Edward by his firſt wife, whom he had ſufficiently thus with precepts inſtructed, departed this mortal life, Ann. 1307, after he had raigned near 35 years. Of whom this Epitaph was written,

Dum viguit Rex, & vaſtit tuę magna poteſtas,
Fraus latuit, pax magna fuit, regnavit honeſtas.

In the time and raign of this King many other things happened, which here I omit to ſpeak of, as the long diſcord and ſtrife between the Prior of Canterbury, and the Prior of Dover, which continued above four years together, with much wrangling and unquietneſs between them. Likewiſe another like contention growing between John Romain, Archbiſhop of York, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury upon this occaſion, that when John Archbiſhop of York after his Conſecration returned from the Pope, coming to Dover, contrary to the inhibition of Canterbury, he paſſed through the middle of Kent, with his Croſs born up; although the ſtory reporteth that he had the Kings conſent thereunto, Ann. 1286.

Item, Between Thomas Biſhop of Hereford, and John Pecham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, fell another wrangling matter, in the time of this King. Which Biſhop of Hereford, appealing from the Archbiſhop to the Pope, went up to Rome, and in his journey died. Who with leſs coſt might have tarried at home, 1282.

King Edward the Second.

K. Edward, the Second.

EDWARD the Second of that name, and Son of Edward the Firſt, born, as is aforeſaid, at Carnarvan in Wales, after the departure of his Father, entred the Government of the Land, Anno 1307, but was not Crowned before the year next following, Anno 1308, by reaſon of the abſence of Robert Winchelſey, who was baniſhed by King Edward the Firſt. Whereupon the King this preſent year writeth to the Pope for the reſtitution of the ſaid Archbiſhop, for that by an ancient Law of the Realm, the Coronation of the King could not otherwiſe proceed without the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Which Edward as he was perſonable in body and outward ſhape, ſo in conditions and evil diſpoſitions much deformed; as unſtedfaſt of his word, and light to diſcloſe ſecrets of great counſel; alſo refuſing the company of his Lords and men of honour; he much haunted among Villains and vile perſonages; given moreover to over much drinking, and ſuch vices as thereupon be wont to enſue. And as of his own nature he was to the ſaid vices diſpoſed, ſo was he much worſe by the counſel and familiarity of certain evil diſpoſed perſons, as firſt of Peter, or Pierce Gaveſton before touched. Then after him, of the two Spenſers and others, whoſe wanton counſel he following, gave himſelf to the appetite and pleaſure of his body; body; nothing ordering his Commonweal by gravity, diſcretion and juſtice; which thing cauſed firſt great variance between him and his Nobles; ſo that ſhortly he became to them odious, and in the end was deprived of his Kingdom. In the firſt year he took to wife Iſabel, Daughter of Philip King of France; with whom (the year after) he was Crowned at Weſtminſter by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, for that Robert Winchelſey Archbiſhop of Canterbury was yet in exile not returned home. Notwithſtanding the Barons and Lords made firſt their requeſt to the King to put Peter Gaveſton from him, or elſe they would not conſent to his Coronation. VVhereupon he was inforced to grant them at the next Parliament to have their requeſts accompliſhed, and ſo he was Crowned. In the mean ſeaſon the foreſaid Peter or Pierce, bearing himſelf of the Kings favour bold, continued triumphing and ſetting at light all other ſtates and Nobles of the Realm, ſo that he ruled both the King and the Realm, and all things went as he would; neither had the King any delight elſe, or kept company with any, but with him; with him only he brake all his mind, and conferred all his counſels. This as it ſeemed ſtrange unto the Lords and Earls, ſo it inflamed their indignation ſo much againſt this Peter, that through the exciting of the Nobles, the Biſhops of the land did proceed in Excommunication againſt the ſaid Gaveſton, unleſs he departed the land. Upon the occaſion whereof the King the ſame firſt year of his raign, being grieved with the Biſhops, writeth to the Pope, complaining that they had proceeded to Excommunication of the ſaid Peter unleſs he departed the Realm within a time certain. The which Letter of the King what anſwer again it had from the Pope, I find not ſet down in Story. Over and beſides, it befell in the ſaid firſt year of the King, that the Biſhoprick of York being vacant, the King gave the office of the Treaſure to one of his own Clerks; whereof the Pope having intelligence, writeth to the King, commanding him to call back the ſame gift, and withal citeth up to Rome the ſaid Clerk, there to anſwer the matter to a Nephew of one of his Cardinals, upon whom he had beſtowed the ſaid dignity; whereunto the King maketh anſwer, Quod citationes hujuſmodi & illarum executio, &c. i.e. That if ſuch citations, and the execution of the ſame ſhould proceed to the impeachment of our Kingly Juriſdiction, and to the prejudice of our lawful inheritance, and the honour of our Crown (eſpecially if the deciding of ſuch matters which principally concern our eſtate, ſhould be proſecuted in any other place than within this our Realm by any manner of ways, &c.) Certes, although we our ſelves would wink thereat, or through ſufferance permit matters ſo to paſs our hands; yet the States and Nobles of our Kingdom, who upon allegiance are obliged and ſworn to the protection and defence of the dignity of the Crown of England, will in no wiſe ſuffer our right, and the Laws of the Land ſo to be violated.

Peter Gaveſton or Gaverſtone, a wicked doer about the King.

Beſides this, the foreſaid Pope wrote to the King, complaining that by certain Counſellors of King Edward his Father lying ſick, utterly ignorant thereof, a certain reſtraint was given out, charging his Nuncioes and Legates (whom he had ſent for the gathering of the firſt-fruits of the Benefices vacant within the Realm) not hereafter to intermeddle therewith, &c. VVhereunto the King maketh anſwer, viz. Pater Sanctiſ. Datum fuit vobis intelligi, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

Moſt holy Father, it hath been given you to underſtand otherwiſe than the truth of the matter is. For moſt true it is indeed that the foreſaid inhibition was ratified by good Act of Parliament holden at Karlin, upon certain cauſes concerning the execution of ſuch Collections (the ſaid our Father not only being not ignorant, but alſo witting, willing, and of his own meer knowledg agreeing to the ſame) in the preſence not only of his own Earls, Barons and States, and Commons of the Realm, but alſo your Legates and Lieger being called thereunto.

Item, Upon other Letters brought from the Pope to the King, for the Enſtalling of one Peter de Subaudia his Kinſman into the Biſhoprick of VVorceſter, being then vacant, and withal requiring that if the ſaid Peter would not accept thereof, the Election ſhould be referred to the Prior and Covent of the ſame place. The King therewith grieved, maketh anſwer by his Letters to the Pope, and ſundry his Cardinals: Quod cum Electiones de futuris Prælatis in Eccleſiis Cathedralibus, &c. That forſomuch as Elections of Prelates, to be placed in Cathedral Churches within his Kingdom are not to be attempted without his licenſe firſt had and obtained, &c. Therefore he could not abide that any ſuch ſtrange and unaccuſtomed reſervations ſhould, or could take place in his Realm without manifeſt prejudice of his Kingly eſtate, requiring further that he would not cauſe any ſuch novelties to be brought in into his Kingdom, contrary to that which his anceſtors before him have accuſtomed to do.

Thus the time proceeded, and at length the Parliament appointed came, Anno 1310, which was the fourth of this Kings raign. The articles were drawn by the Nobles to be exhibited to the King, which articles were the ſame contained In Magna Charta, and de Foreſta above ſpecified; with ſuch other articles as his Father had charged him with before; to wit, that he ſhould remove from him and his Court all Aliens and perverſe Counſellors, and that all the matters of the Commonwealth ſhould be debated by common Council of the Lords both Temporal and Spiritual; and that he ſhould ſtir no war out of England in any other foreign Realm, without the common aſſent of the ſame, &c. The King perceiving their intent to be, as it was indeed, to ſunder Peter Gaveſton from his company; and ſeeing no other remedy, but needs he muſt yield and grant his conſent, agreed that the ſaid Gaveſton ſhould be baniſhed into Ireland. And ſo the Parliament breaking up, the Lords returned to their own, well appeaſed; although of the other Articles they could not ſpeed, yet that they had driven Peter Gaveſton out of the Realm, at this time it did ſuffice them.

This Peter Gaveſton was a certain Gentlemans Son of Gaſcoin; whom being by young K. Edward the Firſt (for the good ſervice his Father had done him in his wars) received to his Court, and placed him with his Son Edward now raigning. Who in proceſs of time growing up with him, incenſed and provoked him to much outrage and wantonneſs. By whoſe occaſion firſt he began in his Fathers days to break the Park of Walter Biſhop of Cheſter, then Chancellor of England, and after Executor to the King; for the which ſo doing, the King (as is partly touched before) impriſoned his Son, and condemned this Peter to perpetual baniſhment. Notwithſtanding the young King after the death of his Father (as ye have heard) ſent for this Gaveſton again. And withal he ſo perſecuted this foreſaid Biſhop, that he clapt him in the Tower, and ſeized upon all his goods. Moreover he cauſed moſt ſtrait inquiſition to be made upon him for guiding his Office, wherein if the leaſt crime might have been found, it would have coſt him his life. And thus much of Peter Gaveſton, and of his origine. Now to the matter.

Peter Gaveſton.

The King thus ſeparated from his old compeere (that is, from the company of Peter Gaveſton now exiled into Ireland) continued in great mourning and penſiveneſs, ſeeking by all means poſſible how to call him home again, and conferring with ſuch as were about him upon the ſame; who did inſinuate to the King, that forſomuch as the Earl of Gloceſter was a man well loved and favoured in all the Realm; if a marriage might be wrought betwixt his Siſter and Peter Gaveſton, it might be a mean both for him to obtain more friendſhip, and for the King to have his deſire. To make ſhort, Peter Gaveſton in all haſt was ſent for, and the marriage through the Kings procuring, proceeded between the Earls Siſter, and the foreſaid Peter, albeit ſore againſt the Earls mind. Gaveſton thus reſtored and dignified, was ſo ſurprized in pride and exaltation more than ever before, that he diſdained and derided all other, whoſe rule and power more and more increaſed. Inſomuch that he having the guiding of all the Kings Jewels and treaſure, conveyed out of the Kings Jewel-houſe at Weſtminſter a Table and a pair of Treſſels of Gold unto Merchants beyond Sea, with other Jewels more; to the great impoveriſhing both of the King and Queen, and of the land. And over all that he brought the King (by means of his wanton conditions) to manifold vices, as adultery, and ſuch other like. Wherefore the Lords ſeeing the miſchief that daily increaſed ſed by occaſion of this unhappy man, took their counſel together at Lincoln, and there concluded to avoid him again out of England; ſo that ſhortly after he was exiled again, and went into Flanders; for in France or his own Country he durſt not appear, for fear Philip the French King, to whom the Queen of England his Daughter had ſent over great complaints of the ſaid Gaveſton, who had ſo impoveriſhed her and the whole Court, that ſhe had not wherewith to maintain her eſtate. Upon which complaint, the French King through all his Dominions laid ſtrait watch to apprehend the ſaid Gaveſton; but he not unwarned thereof, ſecretly coaſted into Flanders, from whence it was not long but he was ſet again by the King, as in further proceſs followeth; ſo much was the Kings heart infatuated by this wicked perſon.

Gaveſton again excluded out of the land.

The Crowched-Friers. The Knights of St. John, called the Knights of the Rhodes.

About this year, or the next before, came in firſt the Crowched-Friers; and alſo firſt began the Knights of the Order of St. John Baptiſt, otherwiſe called the Knights of Rhodes, for that they by manly Knighthood put out the Turks from the Iſle of Rhodes.

Templars burned at Paris, to the number of 54. The Order of the Templars put down.

In the Hiſtory of King Edward, this Kings Father before precedent, mention was made of Pope Clement the Fifth, who ſucceeded after Benedict; alſo of putting down of the Templars, which in this year hapned by means of the French King; who as he cauſed to be burned in the City of Paris this year fifty four Templars, with the great Maſter of the ſame Order, ſo by his procurement the foreſaid Pope Clement called a Council at Vienna, where the whole Order and Sect of Templars being condemned, was ſhortly after by the conſent of all Chriſtian Kings depoſed all in one day. After whom the French King thought to make his Son King of Jeruſalem, and to convert to him all the Lands of the ſaid Templars. But Clement the Pope would not thereto agree, transferring all their Lands to the Order of Hoſpitalers, for the great ſum of money given for the ſame. The cauſe why theſe impious Templars were put down was ſo abominable and filthy, that for reverence of chaſt ears it were better not told, if it be true that ſome write.

The horrible Sect of the Templars.

Another matter worthy to be noted of like abomination I thought here to inſert, touching a certain Nunnery in France called Provines, within the which at the cleanſing and caſting of a Fiſh-pond, were found many bones of young Children, and the bodies alſo of ſome Infants as yet whole unconſumed; upon occaſion whereof divers of the Nuns of the ſaid Nunnery, to the number of twenty ſeven, were had to Paris, and there impriſoned; what became of them afterward I find not in mine Author, Arpontacus Burdegalenſis.

Ciſtercian Monks for money redeem their exemptions of the Pope.

In the ſame Council alſo was decreed by the ſaid Clement That all Religious Orders exempted ſhould be ſubject under the common Laws as other were. But the Ciſtercian Monks with money and great gifts redeemed their Priviledges and exemption of the Pope, and ſo had them granted. Tho. Walſ. Theſe Ciſtercians ſped better herein, than did the Minorites of the Franciſcans in their ſuit. Of which Franciſcans when certain of them had offered unto the ſaid Pope Clement forty thouſand Florences of Gold, beſides other Silver, that the Pope would diſpenſe with them to have lands and poſſeſſions againſt their rule; the Pope asked them where was that money. They anſwered, In the Merchant-mens hands. So the ſpace of three days being given them to bring forth theſe Merchants; the Pope abſolved the Merchants of their Bond made to the Friers, and commanded all that money to be imployed and reverted to his uſe; declaring to the Friers that he would not infringe or violate the rule of St. Francis lately Canonized, neither ought he to do it for any money. And thus the beggarly rich Friers loſt both their money and their indulgence. Ex eodem autore.

Pope Clement Excommunicateth the Venetians for making a Duke.

Concerning this Pope Clement the Fifth, Sabellicus writeth, that he Excommunicated the Venetians for aiding and preferring of Azoda unto the State of Ferrarie; and wrote his Letters throughout all Europe, condemning them as enemies of the Church, and giving their Goods as a lawful prey unto all men; which cauſed them to ſuſtain great harm. But Francis Dandulus a Nobleman of Venice, being Ambaſſador from the Venetians to the ſaid Clement, for the obtaining of their abſolution and ſafeguard of their City and Country, and for the pacifying of the Popes fury toward them, was fain ſo to humble himſelf before this proud tyrannical Prelate, that he ſuffered a Chain of Iron to be tyed about his neck, and he to lye down flat before his Table, and ſo to catch the bones and fragments that fell from his Table, as it had been a dog, till the Popes fury was towards them aſſwaged; ſo that after that he in reproach (becauſe he ſo humbled himſelf for the behalf and helping of his Country) was of ſome called a Dog. But the City of Venice ſhewed themſelves not unkind again to Dandulus for his gentle good will declared to his Country; for as he had abaſed himſelf before in the vile and ignominious condition of a Dog for his Countries ſake, ſo they extolled him with as much glory again being returned home, decking and adorning him after the beſt array, with the chief Princely ornaments of the City, to make him amends for his former reproach received. *Sabel. The pride and tyranny of Pope Clement 5. Francis Dandulus humbleth himſelf for his Country. Out of Sabellicus, and is alledged in the Book named the Image of Tyranny. The piety of Dandulus to his Country. Piety thankfully rewarded.

Concerning the Conſtitutions of this Pope Clement, and of his Decretals and Clementines, and how Henricus the Emperor in his days was poyſoned in receiving of the Sacrament, ye have heard before. About this time Robert Winchelſey Archbiſhop of Canterbury (whom this Kings Father had baniſhed before) was releaſed and returned home from Rome.

Robert Winchelſey returned home from baniſhment.

Theſe things thus declared, let us proceed (by the Lords Grace) to the next year, which is of the Lord 1311, and the fifth year of this Kings raign. In the which year, counting the year from Michaelmaſs to the ſame Feaſt again, as then the uſage of the Realm was, Peter Gaveſton who had wandred the Countries about, and could find no reſting place (notwithſtanding he was utterly baniſhed, upon forfeiting life and goods out of the Realm, yet truſting upon the Kings favour, and the good will of the Earl of Gloceſter, whoſe Siſter he had married) ſecretly returning into England with a certain company of ſtrangers, preſented himſelf to the Kings ſight. At the beholding of whom the King for joy ran to him, and imbracing him, did not only retain him, but alſo for his ſake undid all ſuch Acts as had been in the Parliament before Enacted. The Queen and the whole Court ſeeing this doting of the King, made an heavy Chriſtmas. After this return of Gaveſton was noiſed among the Commons, the Peers and Nobles of the Realm were not a little ſtirred, caſting with themſelves what way were beſt to take. If he were ſuffered ſtill, they ſaw not only themſelves rejected, but alſo that the Queen could not enjoy the love of the King, neither could there be any quietneſs in the Realm. Again to ſtir up war in the land, it were not the beſt; to vex or diſquiet the King, alſo they were afraid. But foraſmuch as they could not abide all the Nobility, ſo to be thruſt out and vilipended for the love of one ſtranger, and alſo the Realm ſo to be ſpoiled and impoveriſhed by the ſame; this way they took, that Thomas Earl of Lancaſter ſhould be elected among them the Chieftain, and chief doer in that buſineſs; to whom all other Earls and Barons, and Prelates alſo did concordly condeſcend and conſent, except only Walter Biſhop of Coventry, whom Robert the Archbiſhop therefore afterward did Excommunicate. Which Thomas of Lancaſter, by the publick aſſent of the reſt, ſent to the King (lying then at York) humble Petitions in the name as well of the whole Nobility as of the Commons, deſiring his Grace to give the foreſaid Gaveſton unto them, or elſe according to the Ordinance of the Realm, that the land might be avoided of him. But the tyrannous King, who ſet more by the love of one ſtranger than by his whole Realm beſides, neither would hearken to their counſel, nor give place to their ſupplications; but in all haſty fury removed from York to Newcaſtle, where he remained almoſt till Midſummer.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſ.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury Excommunicateth the Biſhop of Coventry for holding with Peter Gaveſton.

In the mean ſeaſon the Barons had gathered an Hoſt of ſufficient and able Souldiers, coming toward Newcaſtle, not intending any moleſtation againſt the King, but only the execution of the Laws upon the wicked Gaveſton. The King not having wherewith to reſiſt their power, removeth in all ſpeedy manner to Tinmouth where the Queen lay. And hearing there that Newcaſtle was taken, he taketh ſhipping and ſaileth from thence (notwithſtanding the Queen there, being great with child, with weeping tears, and all inſtance deſireth him to tarry with her, as ſafely he might) but he, nothing relenting to her, took Peter his Compere with him, and coaſted over to the Caſtle of Scarbrough; where he leaving Peter Gaveſton to the ſafe keeping of his men, himſelf journeyeth toward the coaſt beſide Warwick. The Lords hearing where Peter was, bend thither all their power; power; ſo that at length Gaveſton ſeeing no remedy but he muſt needs come into their hands, yieldeth and ſubmitteth himſelf; requiring none other condition, but only that he might talk but a few words with the King in his preſence. Thus Gaveſton being apprehended, the King hearing thereof ſendeth unto the Lords, requiring his life to be ſpared; and that he might be brought to his ſpeech, and promiſed that in ſo doing he would ſatisfie their minds and requeſts whatſoever. About this advertiſement was taken: but then the Earl of Pembroke, hearing the Kings promiſe, perſwaded the Barons to grant unto his Petition; promiſing himſelf upon loſing all his lands, to take the charge upon him to be brought unto the Kings ſpeech, and ſo to be recommitted to them again. Which when he had obtained, he taketh Peter Gaveſton with him, to bring him where the King lay. And ſo coming to Dedington, not far from Warwick, he leaveth him in the keeping of his Souldiers, while he that night went to his wife, being not far off from theace.

Peter Gaveſton taken of the Nobles.

The King intreateth for Gaveſton.

Guy of Warwick.

Peter Gaveſton apprehended by Guy of Warwick.

The ſame night it chanced Guido the Earl of Warwick to come to the ſame place where Gaveſton was left; who taking him out of the hands of his Keepers, carrieth him to the Caſtle of Warwick, where incontinently they would have put him to death; but doubting and fearing the Kings diſpleaſure, a little they ſtayed. At what time one of the company (a man of ſage and wiſe counſel, as mine Author writeth) ſtanding up among them, with his grave Oration declareth the nature of the man, the wickedneſs of his own condition, the Realm by him ſo greatly endamaged, the Nobles deſpiſed and rejected, the pride and ambition of the man intolerable, the ruin of things like to enſue by him, and the great charges and expences they had been at in ſo long purſuing and getting of him; and now being gotten and in their hands, he exhorteth them ſo to uſe and take the occaſion now preſent; that hereafter being out of their hands, they afterward might ſeek, and ſhould not find it.

Peter Gaveſton Beheaded.

Briefly in ſuch ſort he perſwaded the hearers, that forthwith he was brought out, and by common agreement beheaded in a place called Blakelow; which place in Stories I find to be called Gaveſhead; but that name (as I think) was derived upon this occaſion afterward. And thus he that before had called the Earl of Warwick the Black dog of Ardeine, was thus by the ſaid Dog worried, as ye have heard, &c. His carcaſs the Dominick Friers of Oxford had in their Monaſtry Interred the ſpace of two years; but after that the King cauſed the ſaid carcaſs to be taken up and buried within his own Mannor of Langley.

The corpſe of Peter Gaveſton buried in the Kings Mannor of Langley.

After this great diſturbance began to riſe between the King and the Lords; who having their power lying about Dunſtable, ſent ſtout meſſage unto the King at London, to have their former Acts confirmed. Gilbert Earl of Gloceſter the Kings Nephew (who neither did hold againſt the King, nor yet againſt the Nobles) with the Biſhops and Prelates of the Realm, went between both parties with great diligence to make unity. At which time alſo came two Cardinals from Rome, with Letters ſent unto them from the Pope. The Nobles anſwered to the Meſſage of the Cardinals, lying then at St. Albans; that as touching themſelves, they ſhould be at all times welcome to them; but as touching their Letters (foraſmuch as they were men unlettered, and only brought up in war and feats of arms) therefore they cared not for ſeeing the ſame. Then meſſage was ſent again, that they would grant at leaſt but to ſpeak with the Popes Legates, which purpoſely came for the intent to ſet quiet and unity in the Realm. They anſwered again, that they had Biſhops both godly and learned, by whoſe counſel they would be led only, and not by any ſtrangers, who knew not the true cauſe of their commotion. And therefore they ſaid preciſely, that they would have no foreigners or aliens to be doers in their buſineſs and affairs pertaining to the Realm. Yet notwithſtanding through the mediation of the Archbiſhop, and of the Earl of Gloceſter, the matter at length was ſo taken up, that the Barons ſhould reſtore to the King or his Attorney of St. Albans all the Treaſure, Horſes, and Jewels of the foreſaid Gaveſton taken at Newcaſtle, and ſo their requeſts ſhould be granted. And ſo was the matter at that time compoſed.

The Nobles of England cared not for the Popes Letters.

The Popes Legates not admitted of the Nobles of England.

Shortly upon the ſame, Iſabel the Queen was delivered of a fair Child at Windſor, whom Lewis the French Kings Son (the Queens Brother, with other Frenchmen there preſent) would have to be called by the name of the French King; but the Engliſh Lords were contrary, willing him to be called by the name of Edward his Father. At the birth of which Edward great rejoycing was through all the land and eſpecially the King his Father ſo much joyed thereat, that he began daily more and more to forget the ſorrow and remembrance of Gaveſtons death, and was after that more agreeable to the will of his Nobles.

The King rules by foreign Counſel.

Makebates about the King.

Thus peace and concord between them began to be in a good towardneſs; which more and more might have been confirmed in wearing out of time, had not Satan the Author and ſower of diſcord, ſtirred up his inſtruments (certain Frenchmen, Titivillers and Make-bates about the King) which ceaſed not in carping and depraving the Nobles, to inflame the Kings hatred and grudg againſt them. By the exciting of whom the old quarrels being renewed afreſh, the King in his Parliament called upon the ſame, began to charge the foreſaid Barons and Nobles with ſedition and rebellion, and for ſlaying Peter Gaveſton. Neither were the Nobles leſs ſtout again in defending their cauſe, declaring that they in ſo doing had deſerved rather thanks and favour with the King than any diſpleaſure, in vanquiſhing ſuch a publick enemy of the Realm; who not only had ſpoiled and waſted the Kings ſubſtance, but alſo raiſed much diſturbance in the Realm. And foraſmuch as they had begun with the matter to their ſo great labours and expences; they would proceed further, they ſaid, not ceaſing till they ſaw an end thereof. To be ſhort, great threats there were on both parts, and a foul matter like to have followed. But again, through the diligent mediation of the Queen, the Prelates, and the foreſaid Earl of Gloceſter, the matter was taken up and brought to reconcilement upon theſe conditions, that the Lords and Barons openly in Weſtminſter-Hall ſhould humble themſelves before the King, and ask pardon there of their doings, and every man there to receive a Letter of the Kings pardon for their indemnity, and aſſurance. And ſo paſſed over that year, within the which year died Robert Winchelſey Archbiſhop of Canterbury. In whoſe room Thomas Cobham was Elected by the King and Church of Canterbury to ſucceed; but the Pope fruſtrating the Election, placed Walter Reinold Biſhop of Worceſter.

Mediation for making peace.

The King reconciled again with his Nobles.

Anno 1313.

What diſcord doth in a Common weal.

In the mean time the Scots hearing this civil diſcord in the Realm, began to be buſie, and to rebell of new through the means of Robert Bruis; who being chaſed out of Scotland by King Edward the Firſt, as is above premiſed, into Norway, was now returned again into Scotland; where he demeaned himſelf in ſuch ſort to the Lords there, that in ſhort proceſs he was again made King of the Realm, and warred ſo ſtrongly upon them that took the Kings part, that he wan from them many Caſtles and ſtrong holds, and invaded the borders of England. The King hearing this, aſſembleth a great power, and by water entreth the Realm of Scotland. Againſt whom incountred Robert de Bruis with his Scots at Eſtrivelin, where was fought a ſtrong battel; in the end whereof the Engliſhmen were diſcomfited, and ſo eagerly purſued by the Scots, that many of the Noblemen were ſlain, as the Earl of Gloceſter, Sir Robert Clifford, Sir Edmund Maule, with other Lords to the number of forty two, and Knights and Barons 227, beſides men of name, which were taken priſoners; of common Souldiers ten thouſand, or after the Scotiſh Story, fifty thouſand ſlain. After which time Sir Robert Bruis raigned as King of Scotland.

The Scots rebell againſt the Realm of England.

Engliſhmen overcome by the Scots.

About which time, and in which year died Pope Clement, who keeping in the Realm of France, never came to the See of Rome; after whoſe death the Papacy ſtood void two years.

Pope Clements never ſat in the See of Rome.

Anno 1314.

The Scots after this exalted with pride and fierceneſs, invaded the Realm of England ſo ſore, killing and deſtroying man, woman, and child; that they came winning and waſting the North parts as far as to York. Beſides this, ſuch dearth of victuals, and penury of all things ſo oppreſſed the whole land, ſuch murrain of Sheep and Oxen; as men were fain to eat Horſe-fleſh, Dogs, Cats, Mice, and what elſe they could get. Moreover ſuch a price of Corn followed withal, that the King hardly had bread for the ſuſtentation of his own houſhold. Moreover, ſome there were that did ſteal children and eat them, and many for lack of victual died. And yet all this amended not the King of his evil living.

Miſerable dearth and famine in England.

The

A deſcription of an horrible famine in the Realm of England.

The cauſe and origen of this great dearth, was partly the wars and diſſention between them and the Scots, whereby a great part of the land was waſted. But the chiefeſt cauſe was the untemperate ſeaſon of the year, which contrary to the common courſe, was ſo moiſt with abundance of rain, that the grain laid in the earth could have no ripening by heat of the Sun, nor grow to any nouriſhment. Whereby they that had to eat could not be ſatisfied with ſaturity, but eftſoons were as hungry again. They that had nothing were driven to ſteal and rob; the rich were conſtrained to avoid and diminiſh their houſholds; the poor for famine died. And not ſo much the want of victual, which could not be gotten, as the unwholſomeneſs of the ſame when it was taken, ſo conſumed the people, that the quick were not ſufficient to bury the dead. For the corruption of the meats, by reaſon of the unſeaſonableneſs of the ground, was ſo infectious that many died of the Flux, many of hot Fevers, divers of the Peſtilence. And not only the bodies of men thereby were infected, but alſo the beaſts by the putrifaction of the herbs and graſs fell into as great a murrain ſo far forth as that the eating of fleſh was ſuſpect and thought contagious. A Quarter of Corn and Salt, from the month of June to September grew from thirty ſhillings unto forty ſhillings. The fleſh of Horſes was then precious to the poor. Many were driven to ſteal fat Dogs, and to eat them. Some were ſaid in ſecret corners to eat their own Children. Some would ſteal other mens Children to kill them and eat them privily. The priſoners and thieves that were in bands, for hunger fell upon ſuch as were newly brought in unto them, and tearing them in pieces did eat them half alive. Briefly, this extream penury had extinguiſhed and conſumed (as it was thought) the greateſt part of the people of the land, had not the King by the advice of the Londoners given forth Commandment through all his land, that no Corn ſhould at that time be turned to the making of drink. Such a Lord is God, thus able to do where he is diſpoſed to ſtrike. And yet we miſerable creatures in our wealth and abundance will not ſurceaſe daily to provoke his terrible Majeſty.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſ. in vita Edwardi 2.

But let us return to the order again of our Story. After the Scots had thus plagued miſerably (as ye have heard) the Realm of England; they invaded alſo Ireland, where they kept and continued war the ſpace of four years. But in fine, the Iriſhmen (by aid ſent to them from England) quit themſelves ſo well that they vanquiſhed the Scots, and ſlew Edward Bruis, and many of the Nobles of Scotland, with many other, and drove the reſidue out of the Country.

The Scots driven out of Ireland.

{Anno 1317.} The King about the twelfth year of his raign, aſſembled a new Hoſt, and went into Scotland, where he laid ſiege to Barwick. But in the mean time the Scots by another way, invaded the Merchants of Yorkſhire, robbing and harrying the Country, and they ſlew much people. Wherefore the Archbiſhop of York, and other Abbots, Priors, Clerks, with Husbandmen, aſſembled a great company, and gave them battel at a place called Mitton, where the Engliſhmen were diſcomfited, and many of them ſlain; but the Archbiſhop and the Abbot of Selbie, and divers others there eſcaped. But becauſe there were ſo many Spiritual men there ſlain, it was called therefore the White Battel. By reaſon whereof the King hearing of this, and partly becauſe Winter did approach, was conſtrained to break up his ſiege, and ſo returned not without great danger.

The two Spenſers.

At this time the two Spenſers (Sir Hugh Spenſer the Father, and Hugh Spenſer the Son) were of great power in England, and by the favour of the King practiſed ſuch cruelty, and bear themſelves ſo haughtily and proud, that no Lord of this land might gain-ſay them in any thing that they thought good, whereby they were in great hatred and indignation both with the Nobles, and the Commons, no leſs than Peter Gaveſton was before.

Two Legates ſent from Rome. The Popes pillage. The Popes Legates ſpoiled of all their ill gotten treaſure. The Popes Curſe contemned of the Scots.

Soon upon this came two Legates from Rome, ſent by Pope John the 22*th*, under pretence to ſet agreement between England and Scotland; who for their charges and expences, required of every Spiritual perſon four pence in every Mark. But all their labour nothing availed: for the Legates as they were in the North parts (about Derlington) with their whole family and train, were robbed and diſſpoiled of their Horſes, Treaſure, Apparel, and what elſe they had, and with an evil favoured handling, retired back again to Dureſm, where they ſtaid a while waiting for an anſwer from the Scots. But when neither the Popes Legacy nor his curſe would take any place with the Scots, they returned again to London, where they firſt Excommunicated and curſed as black as foot all thoſe arrogant and preſumptuous robbers of Northumberland. Secondly, for ſupplying of the loſſes received, they exacted of the Clergy to be given and paid unto them eight pence in every Mark. But the Clergy thereunto would not agree, ſeeing it was their own covetouſneſs (as they ſaid) that made them venture farther than they needed. Only they were contented to relieve them after four pence in a Mark, as they promiſed before, further they would not grant. Whereof the King being advertiſed, and taking part with his Clergy, directed his Letters to the ſaid Legates in form as followeth:

The Clergy of England denieth to contribute to the Popes Legates.

A prohibition againſt ſtrange Taxes and Impoſitions.

REX Magiſtro Rigando de Aſſerio, Canonico Aurelian. Salutem, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The King to Maſter Rigand of Aſſerio, Canon of Aurelia, Greeting: We have taken notice of the clamors and lamentable petitions of the ſubjects of our Realm, perceiving by the ſame that you practiſe many and ſundry inconveniences very ſtrange, never heretofore accuſtomed nor heard of in this our Realm, as well againſt the Clergy and Eccleſiaſtical perſons, as againſt the Laity, even to the utter oppreſſion and impoveriſhing of many our liege people, which if it ſhould be winked at (as God forbid) may in proceſs of time be occaſion of greater perils to inſue, whereat we are (not without cauſe) moved, and not a little grieved: We forbid you therefore, that from henceforth you practiſe not, ne preſume in any caſe to attempt any thing within this our Realm, either againſt our Clergy or Laity, that may any manner of way tend to the prejudice of our Royal perſon, or of our Crown and dignity Regal. Witneſs the King at Windſor the ſixth day of February, in the 11*th* year of his Raign.

Per Concilium.

Likewiſe in the ſame year the ſaid King writeth to the ſame effect to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as followeth: Rex venerabili in Chriſto Patri, W. eadem gra. Archiepiſcopo Cant. &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The King to the Reverend Father in God, W. by the ſame Grace Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of England, Greeting: We are credibly informed by many our ſubjects, that certain ſtrange Impoſitions, never heard of before within any our Dominions, upon Lands and Tenements, Goods and Cattels, concerning the teſtaments and caſes of Matrimony, are brought into our Realm to be executed upon our ſubjects by you or ſome others; which if it ſhould proceed to execution, would manifeſtly tend to the diſheriſon, and impeachment of our Crown and dignity Regal, and the intolerable damage of the ſubjects of our Realm, to the due preſervation of the which you are bound by ſolemn Oath of Allegiance. We therefore command and ſtraitly charge you, that you proceed not in any caſe to the execution of any ſuch Letters, either in your own perſon, or by any other, nor yet preſume by colour of the ſame to attempt any thing that may be prejudicial or hurtful to our Crown or dignity Regal. And if you or any other in your name have done or attempted any thing by colour of the ſame, that ye call back and revoke the ſame forthwith without delay. Witneſs the King at Shene the 17*th* of February, the 11*th* year of his Raign.

Per ipſum Regem.

The like Letters in effect were directed to the Archbiſhop of York, and to every other Biſhop through England. By force of which Letters the greedy Legates being reſtrained of their ravening purpoſe, taking what they could get, and ſetling a peace (ſuch as it was) between the King and the Earl of Lancaſter, were fain to pack.

Beſides the reſtraint above mentioned for ſtrange Impoſitions, there followed moreover the ſame year the Kings prohibition for the gathering of Peter-pence, directed to the foreſaid Legate, the tenour whereof followeth.

A.

{KING Edw. 2}

A Prohibition of Peter-pence.

Rex Magiſtro Rigando, &c. In Engliſh thus:

A Prohibition for paying the Popes Peter-pence.

The King to Maſter Rigand of Aſſerio Canon of Aurelia, Greeting. We are given to underſtand that you do demand and purpoſe to levy the Peter-peny within our Realm, otherwiſe than the ſaid Peter-peny hath been heretofore accuſtomed to be levied in the time of any our Progenitors, exerciſing herein grievous cenſures Eccleſiaſtical to the great annoyance and damnifying of the Subjects of our Realm: for preſent remedy whereof our loving ſubjects have made their humble ſupplication unto us. And for as much as the ſaid Peter-peny hath been hitherto accuſtomed to be gathered and levied upon Lands and Tenements within our Realm after a due manner and form: we not willing that any ſuch unaccuſtomed impoſitions ſhall in any wiſe be made upon the Lands and Tenements of any our ſubjects within our Dominions, prohibite you, upon grievous pain, ſtraitly charging that in no wiſe you preſume to exact, gather, or levy the ſaid Peter-peny in any other form or manner than hath been heretofore accuſtomed to be gathered and levied in the time of our Progenitors, or ſince the beginning of our Reign until further order be taken in our high Court of Parliament by the advice of the Nobles and Peers of our Realm, ſuch as may well be taken without prejudice of our Crown and damage of ſubjects. Witneſs the King at Weſtminſter the firſt day of March.

Per ipſum Regem & Concilium.

To the ſame effect Letters were directed to the Archbiſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, and the reſt of the Clergy.

Touching the firſt original of which Peter-pence though mention be made before in the life of King Offa and others; yet to make a brief recapitulation of the ſame, according to the rolls as they come to our hands, thus it followeth, De Denariis beati Petri ſic ſcriptum, &c. That is to ſay, It is thus found recorded in Ancient Chronicles touching the Peter-pence of Saint Peter, Anno. 187. Offa King of Mercia travelled up to Rome in the time of Pope Adrian the firſt, to obtain the Canonizing of Saint Albane. And having performed his Vow, viſiting the Colledge of Engliſh Students which then floriſhed in Rome, he did give to the maintenance of the Scholars of England, Students in Rome, one peny out of every Tenement within this Realm that had land belonging to the ſame, amounting to the yearly value of thirty pence. And for this his munificence he obtained of the Pope Adrian, that no perſon within his Dominion publick, repenting him for not performing enjoyned penance, ſhould therefore be baniſhed.

Summa, 30. marcæ & dimidi.

Concerning which Peter-pence, it is touched in the Laws of King Edward the Saint, Chap. 10. when, where, of whom, under what pain this Peter-pence muſt be gathered, being but the Kings meer Alms, as is aforeſaid. And thus much touching Peter-pence. Now for other Letters writen by the King to the Pope, the ſame year, for other matters, as craving the Popes help in compounding the variance betwixt the two Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, for bearing the Croſs from the one Province to the other, thus it followeth: that the King grieveuſly complaineth, quod tantæ diſſentiones. i. e. that ſuch hurly burly and uproar aroſe thereof that they could not meet together in one place through the great multitude of Armed men aſſiſtants on both parts in the very bearing of the Croſs, to the great diſturbance of the People.

Now after this long digreſſion to turn to our Engliſh matters again, mention was made before of the variance between the King and the Earl of Lancaſter, and of a peace concluded between them. But this peace did not long endure: which the King by his own default did break; ſending to the Scots a privy Meſſenger (which was taken in the way) to have the foreſaid Earl of Lancaſter, by their means made away.

The pride of the Spenſers.

In the mean time the Lords and Nobles of England, deteſting the outragious pride of the Spenſers whereby they wrought daily both great diſhonour to the King, and hindrance to the Commonweal; in ſuch wiſe conſpired againſt them, that gathering their power together, they made a requeſt to the King, that he ſhould remove the Spenſers from his perſon. For the which there was a Parliament called at London, and the Barons came together with a great company. At the which Parliament both the Spenſers were baniſhed the Land for term of their lives: and they took Shipping at Dover, and ſo voided the Land. But it was not long after, but the King (contrary to the Ordinance made in the Parliament) ſent for the Spenſers again, and ſet them in High Authority; and they ruled all things after their ſenſual appetites, nothing regarding Juſtice nor the Commonwealth. Wherefore, the Barons intending again to reform this miſchief, aſſembled their powers: But the King (making ſo haſty ſpeed, and gathering his people ſo ſoon) was ſtronger than they, and purſued them ſo in divers places, that the Barons not fully joyned together (ſome flying, and ſome departing to the King, ſome ſlain by the way) in the end were chaſed ſo eagerly, that in ſhort ſpace, the foreſaid Thomas Earl of Lancaſter was taken and put to death with the reſt of the Nobility, to the number of two and twenty of the greateſt Men, and chiefeſt Captains of this Realm. Of whom only Thomas Earl of Lancaſter, for the Nobility of his Blood, was beheaded: All the other Lords and Barons, were hanged, drawn, and quartered, &c. Which bloody unmercifulneſs of the King toward his natural ſubjects, not only procured to him great diſhonor within the Realm, but alſo turned afterward to his much more greater harm and hindrance, in his foreign Wars againſt the Scots: and finally wrought his utter confuſion, and overthrow of his Seat Royal, as in the ſequel of his end, appeared, and worthily.

{ANNO 1321}

That Thomas Earl of Lancaſter came of Edmund younger Son of King Henry the Third.

Twenty two of the greateſt Nobility of the Realm put to death by the King.

After the ruine of theſe Noble Perſonages, the King as thought he had gotten a great conqueſt (who then indeed began firſt to be overcome and conquered himſelf, when he ſo oppreſſed and cut off the ſtrength and ſinews of his Chivalry) began to triumph not a little with the Spenſers; and to count himſelf ſure as though he were in Heaven, to exerciſe more ſharp ſeverity upon his ſubjects, truſting and committing all to the counſel only of the foreſaid Spenſers: Inſomuch, that both the Queen and the reſidue of the other Nobles could little be regarded. Who, as they grew ever in more contempt with the King; so they increased in more hatred against the Spensers: but strength and ability lacked to work their will.

The next year the King being at York, after he had made Sir Hugh Spenser Earl, and Sir John Baldock a Man of evil Fame, to be Chancellor of England; he then arreared a mighty Host against the Scots. But for lack of skilful guiding, expert Captains, and for want specially of due provision of Victuals necessary for such an Army, the great multitude, to the number reckoned of an hundred thousand (wandring through Scotland, from whence the Scots had conveyed all their goods and cattel into mountains, and marshes) were so pinched and starved with famine, that a great part of the Army, there presently perished; and they that returned home, as soon as they tasted of Meats, escaped not. The King not having resistance of his Enemies, and seeing such a destruction of his subjects, was forced without any act done to retire. But in his retiring, Sir James Duglas and the Scots having knowledge thereof, pursued him in such wise, that they slew many English-men, and had well neer taken the King himself. After which distress, the King, thus beaten and wearied with the Scots, would fain have joyned in Truce with the Scots: But because they stood Excommunicate by the Pope, he standing in fear thereof, desired licence to intreat with them of peace, the said Excommunication notwithstanding: which licence being obtained, a treaty was appointed by Commissioners on both parts at Newcastle at the Feast of Saint Nicholas next ensuing; and so Truce was taken for 12. years. Whereupon this is to be noted by the way (gentle Reader) not unworthy of observation, That whereas in former times, and especially of the late King Edward the first, so long as the Scots were under the Popes Blessing, and we in displeasure with his Holiness for dealing with them, so long we prevailed mightily against them, even to the utter subversion in manner of their whole Estate. But now so soon as the Pope took our part, and the Scots were under his Curse and Excommunication, then gat they greater victories against us, than at any time either before or sithence, insomuch as being before not able to defend themselves against us, they now pursued us into the bowels of our Country.

The King distressed again in Scotland.

The King purposing to erect a House of Friers Augustines, within the Town of Boston in Lincolnshire, first payed the Popes licence in that behalf.

Polydorus Virgilius among other Histories of our English Nation which he intermedleth withal, prosecuting also the Acts and life of this present King, and coming to write of the Queens going over into France, inferreth much variety and diversity of Authors and story-writers concerning the cause thereof. Otherwise, he giveth himself no true certainty of that matter, neither yet toucheth he that which was the cause indeed. By reason partly, that he being an Italian and a Foreigner, could not understand our English Tongue: And partly again, being but one Man, neither could he alone come to the sight of all our Latin Authors. One I am sure came not to his perusing, an old ancient Latin History fair written in Parchment (but without name) belonging to the Library of William Cary Citizen of London. In which Story, the truth of this matter, without all ambiguity, is there fully and with all Circumstances expressed, as here briefly is insested.

The King of England had been divers and sundry times cited up to the Court of France, to do Homage to the French King, for the Dukedom of Aquitain, and other Lands which the King then held of France. Which Homage, because the King of England refused to tender, the French King began to enter all such possessions as the King then did hold in France: whereupon great contention and conflicts there were on both sides. At length in this year now present, a Parliament was called at London; Where (after much alteration) at last it was determined; that certain should be sent over, to wit, the Bishops of Winchester, and Norwich, and the Earl of Richmond, to make agreement betwixt the two Kings. For the better help and fortification of which agreement, it was thought good afterward, that Queen Isabel, Sister to Charles then the French King, should be sent over. Where is to be noted first, that the Queens Lands, and possessions and Castles a little before, upon the breach between the French King and the King of England, were seised into the Kings hands, and the Queen put unto her Pension, &c. Thus the Queen being sent over with a few to attend upon her, only Sir John Cromwel Baron, and four Knights, took their passage into France: By whose mediation, it was there concluded, that the King of England (if he would not himself come to do his Homage) he should give to his Son Edward the Dukedom of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Pontine, and so he to come to make his Homage to the King, and to possess the same. This being in France concluded, was sent over by message to the King of England, with the Kings Letters Patents adjoyned for the safe Conduct of him or of his Son. Upon this, deliberation was taken in the Council of England. But the two Spensers fearing either to take the Seas with the King, or else without the King to remain behind, for fear of the Nobles, so appointed, that Prince Edward the Kings Son was sent, which happened after to their utter desolation, as it followed. For all things being quieted and ordered according to the agreement in France, King Edward of England, soon after Michaelmas, sendeth for his Wife and his Son again out of France. But she sending home most part of her family, refuseth her self to return. For what cause it is not fully certain, whether for indignation that her possessions and lands were seized to the King, as is before premised; or whether for fear and hatred of the Spensers, as is likely; or else for love and familiarity of Sir Roger Mortimer. For here is to be noted, that the said Sir Roger Mortimer, with divers other of the Barons part, which had broken prison in England, were fled before into France and now resorted unto the Queen. The King seeing this, giveth forth in Proclamation, and limiteth a certain day to the Queen and his Son to return; or else to be proclaimed Traytors to the King and to the Realm. Notwithstanding, the Queen persisting in her purpose, denieth to return, unless the other Nobles which were fled might be permitted safely also to return with her. Whereupon, the King immediatly caused them both to be proclaimed Traytors, and all them that took their parts.

Here then began great hatred between King and King, between the King and the Queen, much preparation of War, great spoiling on the Sea, much sending between the Pope and them; but that would not serve. Then the King (by the Counsel of the Spensers) sendeth privily to procure the death of the Queen and of his Son; which should be wrought by the execution of the Earl of Richmond, the Queens familiar. But as the Lord would, that imagination was prevented and utterly frustrate. Albeit, the Queen yet notwithstanding, (whether misdoubting what corruption of Money might do in the Court of France: or whether the French King being threatned by the King of England, and by the Pope durst not detain her) removed from thence, and was received, with Edward her Son, joyously and Honorably in the Court or Country of the Earl of Henawde. Where by means of such as were about her, a marriage was concluded between the said Edward her Son being of the age of fourteen years, and Philip the foresaid Earls Daughter. When this was noised in England, divers Men of Honor and name came over to the Queen. And soon after the Earl of Haynawde prepared a Crew of five hundred men of Arms to set over the young Prince with his Mother into England. Of this the Fame sprang shortly through the Realm. Wherefore the King in all defensible ways made provision to have the Havens and Ports of his Land surely kept, to resist the landing of his Enemies. On the contrary side the Queen with no less preparation provideth all things to her expedition necessary. Who when she saw her time, speeding her self to the Sea Coast with Prince Edward her Son, Lord Edmund Earl of Kent the Kings Brother, Sir Roger Mortimer, the Lord Wygmore and other Exiles of England, accompanied also with the foresaid Henawders, of whom Sir John Henawde the Earls Brother was Captain, having with her of English-men and Strangers, the number of 2757. Souldiers: she took shipping in those parts and had the Wind so favourable, that they landed in England, at a Port called Orwel by Harwich in Suffolk, in the Dominion of the Earl Marshal, the month of September. To whom after her landing resorted Earl Marshal, the Earl of Leicester, with other Barons, Knights, and Bishops {KING Edw. 2} Biſhops alſo; namely of Lincoln, Hereford, Dureſme, and Ely. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury, though he came not himſelf, yet ſent his aid and money. Thus the Queen, well furniſhed with plenty both of men and victual, ſetteth {Anno 1326} forward toward London: So that the further ſhe came, the more her number daily increaſed, and the Kings power contrarily decreaſed; inſomuch that, as mine Author affirmeth, not one almoſt in all the Realm could be hired with any wages to fight on the Kings behalf againſt the Queen, neither did the Queens Army hurt any Man or Child, either in goods or any other thing, by the way.

The King deſtitute of help and Souldiers.

At the arriving of the Queen, the King was in London, which firſt would not believe it to be true. Afterward (ſeeing and perceiving how it was) he asketh help of the Londoners. Who after mature adviſement, rendred this anſwer to the King again: That as touching the King, the Queen, and their Son (the lawful Heir of the Kingdom) they were ready with all duty and ſervice, to Honor and Obey. As for Strangers and Traytors to the Realm, they would receive none ſuch within their City gates. Furthermore, to go out of the City to fight, that they ſaid they would not, unleſs it were ſo, that according to the Liberties of their City, they might return home again before Sun ſet. The King hearing this anſwer (which liked him not well) fortifieth the Tower of London with men and victual, committing the Cuſtody thereof to John Ealtham his younger Son, and to the Wife of Hugh Spenſer his Niece. And leaving Walter Stapleton Biſhop of Exeter behind him to have the Rule of the City of London, he himſelf hearing daily the great recourſe of the people that drew to the Queen, for more ſafegard to himſelf, fled with a ſmall Company Weſtward toward Wales. But before his departing from London, he cauſed a Proclamation to be made, wherein all and ſingular perſons were charged, upon forfeit of life and goods, every Man with all his power to riſe and invade the rebels and deſtroy them all, only the life of the Queen, his Son, and his Brother reſerved. Alſo that no Man upon pain Pretaxate, ſhould help, reſcue, or relieve the ſaid rebels, with goods, victuals, or otherwiſe. Item, it was alſo proclaimed, that whoſoever would bring to the King the Head and Body of Sir Roger Mortimer, either dead or alive, ſhould have out of the Kings Coffers a Thouſand pounds.

Moreover, whoſoever would bring to the Queen the Head of Hugh Spenſer the younger, Chopt off from his Body, ſhould receive for ſo doing of the Queen, two Thouſand pounds. This done the Queen ſendeth her Letters to the City of London for aid and ſuccor to ſubdue the oppreſſor of the Realm, to the which Letters firſt no anſwer was made. Again, ſhe wrote the ſecond Letter, which was then Tacked upon the Croſs in Cheape, which was then called the new Croſs. The Copy and Tenor of which Letter was this.

The Queens Letter.

I. Sabel by the Grace of God, Queen of England, Lady of Ireland, and Counteſs of Pountif. And We Edward the firſt Son of the King of England, Duke of Guayn, Earl of Cheſter, of Pountif, and of Mounſtrel, to the Maior and all the Communalty of London, ſend Greeting. For as much as we have before this time ſent to you by our Letters, and how we come into this Land in good Array, and good manner, for the profit of Holy Church, and of our right dear Lord and King, and all the Realm, with all our might and ſtrength to keep and maintain the Realm, as all good people ought to do: and upon that we prayed you and deſired you that ye would be helping to us for the health and profit of the Realm; and we have had none anſwer of you, nor know not your will in that part. Wherefore we ſend to you again, and pray you, and charge you, that ye bear you ſo toward us, that ye have nor make us no cauſe to grieve, but that ye be helping to us in all the ways that you may. And weet you well in certain, that we and alſo thoſe that come with us into this Realm, intend nothing to be done, but what ſhall be pleaſing to God, and the common profit to all the Realm: nor any thing elſe, but to deſtroy the Spenſers, Enemies to the Realm, as ye well know. Wherefore we pray and charge you in the Faith that you owe to our Lord the King, to the Crown and to us, and upon all that we may forfeit, that if Hugh Spenſer, both the Father and the Son our Enemies, come within your power, that ye cauſe them haſtily to be taken, and ſafely kept, till we have ordained for them our will, as ye deſire Profit and Honour of us, and of the Realm. Underſtanding well, if it be ſo that ye do our deſire and prayer, we ſhall the more be beholden to you. And alſo we ſhall do you profit and worſhip if that you ſend us haſtily word again of your will. Given at Baldock the ſixth day of October.

The Biſhop of Exeter beheaded of the Commons at the ſtandard in Cheape.

This Biſhop of Exeter builded in Oxford two Colledges, Exeter Colledge, and Hart-Hall, whoſe name was Gualter Stapleton.

These aforeſaid Letters being publiſhed and peruſed, the Biſhop of Exeter, to whom (as ye heard) was committed the Rule of the City, ſent to the Maior for the Keyes of the Gates, uſing ſo ſharp words in the Kings name, that variance began to kindle between him and the Citizens; ſo far forth that the Commons in their rage took the foreſaid Biſhop and beheaded him and two of his Houſhold at the Standard in Cheape. Then the King went to Briſtow, and ordained Sir Hugh Spenſer the Father there to keep the Caſtle and the Town; and the King with Hugh Spenſer the Son, and Sir Robert Baldock Chancellor, and the Earl of Arundel went into Wales. And the Queen ſo purſued them, that firſt they took the Town yielded up to her; Then they took Sir Hugh Spenſer the Father, whom being drawn and torn, they at laſt hanged up at Briſtow in Chains of Iron. As the King was thus flying, the Queen cauſed to be proclaimed through her Army, that the King ſhould come and appear, and ſo receive his Kingdom again, if he would be comfortable to his Liege Subjects. Who when he did not appear, Prince Edward his Son was proclaimed high Keeper of the Realm.

Hugh Spenſer the Father, taken and hanged in Chains.

In the mean time Henry Earl of Lancaſter, and Brother to the good Earl Thomas which before was beheaded, alſo Lord William Souch, and Maſter Uphowel were ſent by the Queen into Wales to purſue the King; and there they took him and ſent him to the Caſtle of Kenelworth: and took Hugh Spenſer the Son, and Sir Robert Baldock Chancellor, and Sir John Earl of Arundel, and brought them all to the Town of Hereford. And anon after Hugh Spenſer the Son was drawn and hanged on a Gallows Fifty Foot high, and after beheaded and quartered, whoſe quarters were ſent into four quarters of the Realm. Sir John of Arundel was beheaded, Sir Robert Baldock was put in Newgate at London, where ſhortly after he Pined away and died among the Thieves. This done, a Parliament was Aſſembled at London, from whence meſſage was ſent to the King, that if he would reſign up his Crown, his Son ſhould have it after him: If not, another ſhould take it to whom the lot would give it. Whereupon the King, being conſtrained to yield up his Crown to his Son, was kept in priſon, and after had to Barkley; where he is ſaid to take great repentance. After this meſſage being ſent, and the King half condeſcending thereunto (the Parliament notwithſtanding proſecuting and going forward) there was a Bill exhibited and put up, containing certain Articles againſt the ſaid King, then in priſon in the Caſtle of Barkley, touching his misbehaviour and imprudent governing of the Realm: which Bill openly before the Lords and Commons, by the Speaker of the Parliament Houſe was read. After long conſultation thereof amongſt themſelves touching thoſe Articles, and alſo for the better and more circumſpect Government of the Realm from that time forth: it was conſulted and agreed upon by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons there Aſſembled, that the ſaid Edward was a Man not meet to be their King, nor from that time forth any more to bear the Crown Royal or Title of a King: But that Edward his Eldeſt Son, who there in the ſame Court of high Parliament was preſent, as he was rightful Heire and Inheitor thereunto, ſo ſhould he be Crowned King thereof in his Fathers ſtead, with theſe conditions thereunto annexed, That he ſhould take wife, Sage, and true Counſellors unto him, that the Realm might be better and more circum-ſpectly governed, than before in the time of Edward his Father it was: That the old King his Father ſhould be honourably provided for and kept, ſo long as he lived, according as unto his eſtate it appertained, &c. Theſe and other things thus finiſhed and ended, the Parliament breaketh up, and all things neceſſary to the Coronation of a Prince appertaining were in ſpeedy wiſe prepared whereof more hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be ſpecified.

In the mean time as touching the King which was yet in priſon, it is thought by ſome Writers, that the next year following by the means of Sir Roger Mortimer he was miſerably ſlain, with a Spit (as is ſaid) being thruſt up into his body, and was buried at Gloceſter, after he had Reigned nineteen years.

In the time and Reign of this King, the Colledge of Cambridge, called Michael Houſe, was founded and builded by Sir Henry Stanton Kinght, to the uſe and increaſe of learning, a thing in a Commonwealth very profitable and neceſſary to be had; the want and need whereof, many ſundry times, is ſooner felt in this Realm of ours and other Realms abroad, than is the diſcommodity thereof of moſt Men commonly underſtood.

Tyranny odious to the people.

In the tractation of this Kings Hiſtory, before was declared what grudge did kindle in the Hearts of the Barons againſt the King, for revoking ſuch Acts and Cuſtoms, as had been before in the Parliament eſtabliſhed, both for Peter Gaveſton, and for the two Spenſers. Alſo what ſevere puniſhment the King did execute upon them for the ſame, in ſuch cruel and rigorous ſort, that as he ſpared none of them, whom he could there find; ſo he never ceaſed all his life after to enquire out, and to be revenged of all ſuch, as had been in any part, or conſenting to that matter. For the which his extream and implacable Tyranny, he was in ſuch hatred of all the people; that as he ſaid, he could not find one of all the Commons to take his part, when need required. Among all other which were for that matter troubled, was one Adam Biſhop of Hereford: who being impeached of Treaſon with other more, was at length arreſted in the Parliament to appear and anſwer to that which ſhould be to him Objected. Many things there were laid againſt him, for taking part with them that roſe againſt the King, with matters more, and Hainous rebukes, &c. Whereunto the Biſhop a great while anſwered nothing.

KING { *Edw.*2 Simon Mepham Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

After Pope Clement the Fifth, by whoſe deceaſe the Romiſh See ſtood vacant (as ye have heard) two years and three months, next was Elected Pope John the two and twentieth, a Ciſtercian Monk, who ſate in that Papacy eighteen years. He was ſtout and inflexible, given ſo much to the heaping of riches, that he proclaimed them Hereticks, which taught that Chriſt and his Apoſtles had no poſſeſſions of their own in this world. At this time was Emperor Ludovicus Bavarus, a worthy Man; who with this Pope, and other that followed him, had no leſs contention, than had Fredericus before mentioned in the time of King Henry the Third. Inſomuch that this contention and variance continued the ſpace of four and twenty years. The cauſe and firſt origine of this Tragical conflict, roſe upon the conſtitution of Clement the fifth Predeceſſor to this Pope; by whom it was ordained, as is afore mentioned, that Emperors, by the German Princes elected, might be called Kings of the Romans, but might not enjoy the Title or right of the Empire, to be Nominated Emperors, without their confirmation given by the Pope. Wherefore, this aforeſaid Emperor, becauſe he uſed the Emperial Dignity in Italy, before he was Authoriſed by the Pope, the ſaid Pope therefore Excommunicated the Emperor. And notwithſtanding the Emperor oftentimes did proffer himſelf to make entreaty of peace and concord; yet the Pope inflixible would not bend. The writings of both parts yet be extant, wherein the ſaid Biſhop doth make his vaunt, that he had full power to create and depoſe Kings and Emperors at his pleaſure. In the ſame time were divers learned Men, which ſeeing the matter, did greatly diſallowed the Biſhops of Romes doings; among whom was Gulielm Ocham, whoſe Tractations were afterward condemned by the Pope, for writing againſt the Temporal Juriſdiction of their See. And another named Marſilius Patavinus, which Wrote the Book intituled Defenſor Pacis, which was given into the Hands of the ſaid Emperor; wherein the controverſie of the Popes unlawful Juriſdiction in things Temporal is largely diſputed, and the uſurped Authority of that See ſet forth to the uttermoſt. It is found in ſome Writers, that a great cauſe of this variance firſt began, for that one of the Emperors Secretaries, unknown to the Emperor, in certain of his Letters had likened the Papal See to the beaſt riſing out of the See in the Apocalypſe. At length when the Emperor after much ſute made to the Pope at Avinion, could not obtain his Coronation; coming to Rome he was there received with great Honour, where he with his Wife were both Crowned by the full conſent of all the Lords and Cardinals there; and moreover, another Pope was there ſet up, called Nicolas the fifth. After which things done, the Pope not long after departed at Avinion in France; after whom ſucceeded then Benedictus the twelfth a Monk of Benedictus order, and Reigned ſeven years. Who by the Counſel of Philip the French King, confirmed and proſecuted the cenſures and curſings that John his Predeceſſor had publiſhed againſt Lewes the Emperor: Moreover, he deprived him of his Emperial Crown, and alſo of his Dukedom of Bavaria. The Emperor upon this cometh to Germany, and Aſſembling the Princes Electors, Dukes, Biſhops, Nobles, and the learned in a Council at Frankford, there declared before them out of the Ancient Laws and Cuſtoms of the Empire, how it ſtandeth only in the Princes Electors, and in none other to Elect the Kings or the Emperors of the Romans, for in both theſe names was no difference) ſo that the ſame Electors, in chooſing the King of the Romans, did alſo Elect and chuſe the Emperor. Which Emperor ſo by them conſtitute had lawful right, without any information of the Apoſtolical See, to exerciſe the Adminiſtration of the Empire. And if he were lawfully Elect, he ought to be annointed of the Roman Biſhop: which if he do refuſe, then might he be annointed and declared Emperor and Auguſtus by any other Catholick Biſhop thereunto appointed; (as by the old manner and cuſtom hath been) eſpecially ſeeing theſe Injunctions are but certain ſolemnities added and invented by the Biſhops, only for a token of unity between the Church and Empire, to govern and defend the Faith together. Wherefore in that the Emperor ſweareth to the Biſhop of Rome; in that is to be underſtood no Homage or fealty made to the Biſhop, but only it is a Sacrament and a promiſe given to defend the faith. The which Oath or Sacrament ſo given, giveth no Majority to the Pope in any temporal Rule, but only bindeth the Emperor to be preſt and ready to defend the Faith and Church of Chriſt, when need ſhall require obedience. Wherefore, whereas the Pope leaneth only to the Electors Authority to make the King of Romans, and taketh upon himſelf alone power to make the Emperor; that, as it is newly brought in and deviſed of late by Pope Clement the fifth, ſo is it contrary both to all Ancient Order, and alſo derogatory to the liberty and Majeſty of the ſacred Empire. Again, neither is that alſo leſs abſurd and contrary to all right and reaſon, that the Pope, in time of the Imperial Seat being vacant, taketh upon him to have the whole and full doings of the Empire, as lawful Emperor for the time. Which prerogative and function, by Ancient Orders of our fore-elders, ſhould properly and only appertain to the Palatine of Rhene; the Conſtitution Clementine of the foreſaid Pope Clement to the contrary notwithſtanding. Then in the end, for his own excuſe, he in the preſence of them all reciteth the publick confeſſion of his faith, to anſwer and purge himſelf of thoſe objections laid to him by the Pope. This did the meek Emperor Ludovick in that Council. Yet all this notwithſtanding, the ſaid Emperor remained ſtill excommunicate, till time that variance fell between this Pope Benedict and Philip the French King. Wherefore to make his party good, at leaſt to have ſome friends to flee to, he began to pretend favour and abſolution, rather for neceſſity, than for any good will to the Emperor. But not long after, this Pope died; of whom this Epitaph was made.

Pope Clement the ſixth.

The trouble of Ludovick the Emperor.

After whom followed Pope Clement the ſixth, a man moſt furious and cruel. Who renewing again the former Excommunications of his former Predeceſſors, cauſed his Letters to be ſet upon Church doors, wherein he threatned and denounced moſt terrible Thunderbolts againſt the ſaid Lewis the Emperor, unleſs within three days he ſhould ſatisfie to God and the Church, and renounce the Imperial poſſeſſion of the Crown. The Emperor upon this cometh to Frankford, and there ready to ſtand in all things to the ordinance of the Pope, ſendeth his Orators to the Court of Rome, to intreat the Pope of his favour and good will towards him. To the which Meſſengers the Pope anſwered again, that he would never pardon the Emperor, before he gave over and confeſſed his errors and Hereſies, and reſigning up his Empire to his hands, would ſubmit himſelf, his children, and all his goods to the will and pleaſure of the Biſhop; promiſing that he ſhould not receive again any part of the ſame, but upon his good grace, as his will ſhould be to reſtore them.

Hereſie of the Popes making objected againſt the Emperor.

The Hereſie here mentioned, which was to this Emperor objected by the Pope, was this; becauſe (as is above touched) he uſed and executed the Imperial Dignity after his election, before he was of the Pope confirmed. Over and beſides, the Pope ſendeth to the Emperor by the ſaid Orators a certain form of a bill contained in writing with certain conditions, which he commanded to be given to the hands of the Emperor, Here if the Emperor Lewis had as much mind to ſet upon the Pope with dint of ſword, as he lacked neither occaſion nor power ſo to do; what blood might here have been ſpilt? But the good Emperor, ſparing the effuſion of blood, receiveth gently the bill: and not only with his Seal doth confirm it, but alſo ſweareth to obſerve all the conditions thereof. Which the Pope hearing of, doth greatly marvel. But yet all this would nothing help to mollifie the modeſt heart of this Pharao.

The proud Heart of the Pope.

The Princes and Electors, ſeeing the Bill of the Articles and conditions, whereof ſome ſounded to the malicious defacing and deſtruction of the Empire, abhorring the wickedneſs thereof, deſired the Emperor to ſtand to the defence of the Imperial Dominion, as he had begun, promiſing that their aſſiſtance and aid to the uttermoſt thereunto ſhould not lack. Upon that other Orators were ſent to Pope Clement from the Princes, deſiring him to abſtain from ſuch manner of Articles conceived againſt the ſtate and majeſty of the Empire. The Pope ſurmiſing all this to ſpring from Lewis the Emperor, to the utter ſubverſion of him and all his poſterity, on Maundy-Thurſday bluſtreth out moſt black Curſes againſt him, alſo reneweth all the former Proceſſes of his Predeceſſor againſt him, as againſt both an Heretick and a ſchiſmatick; commanding moreover the Princes Electors to proceed in chuſing a new Emperor. The Archbiſhop of Mentz, ſeeing the innocency of the Emperor, would not conſent to the violating of his Majeſty; wherefore he was deprived by the Pope of all his Dignities. The other Biſhops Electors, as the Archbiſhop of Colen, which took eight thouſand Marks, with the Duke of Saxony, which took two thouſand Marks, being corrupted with money by John King of Boheme, elected Charls the Son of the ſaid John; whom Pope Clement eftſoons in his conſiſtory did approve. Who ſeeth not here what matter of war and bloodſhed was miniſtred by the Pope between theſe two Emperors, if the patience of Ludovick had not been more prudent to quench the fire, than the Pope was to kindle it? Charles then the new Emperor elect, ſped him to Aquiſgrane, according to the cuſtom, there to be Crowned. But by the Citizens there, and the Empreſs (Ludovicus Wife keeping thereabout) he was repelled. All this happened in the time and Reign of Edward the third, King of England; with whom the ſaid Charles with the French King, and King of Boheme, ſet on the Pope, encountred in war; where the King of England had againſt them a noble Victory, and ſlew a great number of the French-men and Almains, and put Charles the new Emperor to flight. In the mean time, among the Princes and Citizens of Germany what ſorrow and what complaints were againſt Pope Clement and thoſe Electors, it cannot be expreſſed. For as they were all together at Spires Congregated in a general Aſſembly, ſo there was none among them all, that allowed the election of Charls, or that cared for the Popes proceſs, promiſing all to adhere and continue faithful ſubjects to Ludovick, their lawful Emperor. But Ludovick remembring his Oath made before to the Popes bill, voluntarily and willingly gave over his Imperial Dignity, and went to Burgravia; where ſhortly after, through the procured practice of Pope Clement (as Hieronymus Marius doth write) poiſon was given him to drink. After the which being drunk, when he would have vomited out and could not, he took his Horſe and went to hunt the Boar, thereby through the chafing and heat of his body to expel the venom. And there the good and gentle Emperor, wickedly perſecuted and murdered of the Pope, fell down dead, whom I may well recount among the innocent and bleſſed Martyrs of Chriſt. For if the cauſe being righteous doth make a Martyr, what Papiſt can juſtly diſprove his cauſe or faith? If perſecution joyned thereunto cauſeth Martyrdom, what Martyr could be more perſecuted than he who having three Popes like three Banddogs upon him, at length was devoured by the ſame? The Princes then hearing of his death, aſſembled themſelves to a new Election, who refuſing Charles aforeſaid, elected another for Emperor, named Gunterus de Monte Nigro. Who, ſhortly after falling ſick at Frankford, was likewiſe poiſoned through his Phyſitians ſervant, whom the foreſaid Charles had hired with money to work that feat. Gunterus taſting of the poiſon, although he did partly caſt it up again, yet ſo much remained within him, as made him unable afterward to ſerve that place. Wherefore for concord ſake, being Counſelled thereto by the Germans, he gave over his Empire to Charles. For elſe, great bloodſhed was like to enſue. This Charles thus ambitiouſly aſpiring to the Imperial Seat contrary to the minds of the States, and Peers of the Empire, as he did wickedly and unlawfully come by it, ſo was he by his ambitious guiding, the firſt and principal mean of the utter ruine of that Monarchy. For that he, to have his Son ſet up Emperor after him, convented and granted to the Princes Electors of Germany all the publick Taxes and Tributes of the Empire. Which covenant, being once made between the Emperor and them, they afterward held ſo faſt, that they cauſed the Emperor to ſwear never to revoke or call back again the ſame. By reaſon whereof, the Tribute of the Countries of Germany, which then belonged

The year of Jubilee reduced to the fiftieth year.

This Pope Clement firſt reduced the year of Jubilee to every fiftieth year, which before was kept but on the hundreth year. And ſo he being abſent to Avinion (which he then purchaſed with his money to the See of Rome) cauſed it to be celebrated at Rome, Anno 1350. In the which year were numbred, of Peregrines going in and coming out every day at Rome, to the eſtimation of five thouſand. Premonſtrat. The Bull of Pope Clement, given out of this preſent year of Jubilee, proceedeth in theſe words as followeth, What perſon or perſons ſoever, for devotion ſake, ſhall take their Peregrination unto the holy City, the ſame day when he ſetteth forth out of his houſe, he may chuſe unto him what Confeſſor or Confeſſors either in the way or where elſe he liſteth: unto the which Confeſſors we grant, by our Authority, plenary Power to abſolve all Caſes Papal, as fully as if it were in our proper Perſon there preſent. Item, we grant that whoſoever being truly confeſſed ſhall chance by the way to die, he ſhall be quit and abſolved of all his ſins. Moreover, we command the Angels of Paradiſe to take his Soul out of his Body, being abſolved, and to carry it into the Glory of Paradiſe, &c. And in another Bull, We will (ſaith he) that no pain of Hell ſhall touch him; granting moreover to all and ſingular perſon and perſons, ſigned with the holy Croſs, Power and Authority to deliver and releaſe three or four Souls, whom they liſt themſelves, out of the pains of Purgatory, &c.

This Clement (as mine Author affirmeth) took upon him ſo prodigally in his Popedom, that he gave to his Cardinals of Rome Biſhopricks and Benefices, which then were vacant in England, and began to give them new Titles for the ſame Livings he gave them in England. Wherewith the King (as good cauſe he had) was offended, and undid all the proviſions of the Pope within his Realm: Commanding, under pain of Impriſonment and Life, no man to be ſo hardy, as to induce and bring in any ſuch proviſions of the Pope, any more within his Land. And under the ſame puniſhment he charged the two Cardinals to avoid the Realm, Anno 1343. In the ſame year of the tenths, as well of the Templars as of other ſpiritual men, were given and paid to the King through the whole Realm, Anno 1343. And thus much concerning good Ludovick Emperor and Martyr, and Pope Clement the Sixth his enemy. Wherein, becauſe we have a little exceeded the courſe of years whereat we left, let us return ſomewhat back again, and take ſuch things in order as belong to the Church of England and Scotland, ſetting forth the Reign of King Edward the Third, and the doings of the Church which in his time have happened, as the Grace of Chriſt our Lord will aſſiſt and enable us thereunto.

A ſtory of the commotion between the Town and Abbey of Bury.

Here I omit alſo by the way the furious Outrage and Conflict which happened in the time of this King, a little before his death, Anno 1236, between the Townſmen and the Abbey of Bury; wherein the Townſmen gathering themſelves together in a great multitude (for what cauſe or old grude between them, the Regiſter doth not declare) invaded and ſackt the Monaſtery. And after they had impriſoned the Monks, they rifled the goods and treaſure of the whole houſe, ſpoiling and carrying away their Plate, Money, Copes, Veſtiments, Cenſers, Croſſes, Chalices, Baſons, Jewels, Cups, Maſers, Books, with other Ornaments and Implements of the houſe, to the value uneſtimable. In the which Conflict, certain alſo on both ſides were ſlain. Such was the madneſs then of that people, that when they had gathered unto them a great concourſe of Servants and light perſons of that Country to the number of twenty thouſand, to whom they promiſed liberty and freedom; by vertue of ſuch writs which they had out of that houſe, firſt they got into their hands all their Evidences, Copies and Inſtruments, that they could find; then they took off the lead; that done, ſetting fire to the Abbey-Gates, they burnt up near the whole houſe. After that they proceeded further to the Farms and Granges belonging to the ſame Abbey, whereof they waſted, ſpoiled and burnt to the number of two and twenty Manor places in one week, tranſporting away the Corn, Horſes, Cattel, or other moveables belonging to the ſame, the price whereof is regiſtred to come to 922 l. 4 s. 11 d. beſides the valuation of other riches and treaſure within the Abbey, which cannot be eſteemed.

{KING Edw. 3}

The Abbot was all this ſpace at London in the Parliament, by whoſe procurement at length ſuch reſcue was ſent down, that 24 of the chief of the Town (ſubmitting themſelves) were committed to ward; Carts full of the Townſmen were carried to Norwich, of whom 19 were there hanged, divers convict were put to priſon. The whole Townſhip was condemned in ſevenſcore thouſand pound to be paid for damages of the houſe. John Berton Alderman, W. Herling, with 32 Prieſts, 13 women, and 138 other of the ſaid Town were outlawed. Of whom divers, after grudging at the Abbot for breaking promiſe with them at London, did confederate themſelves together; and privily in the night coming to the Manor of Chenington, where the Abbot did lie, braſt open the Gates, who then entring in, firſt bound all his Family; and after they had robbed him of all his Plate, Jewels and Money, they took the Abbot and ſhaved him, and ſecretly with them conveyed him away to London; where they removing him from ſtreet to ſtreet unknown, from thence had him over Thames into Kent; at length over the Sea they ferried to Diſt in Brabant: where they a ſufficient time kept him in much penury, miſery and thraldom; till at length the matter being ſearched out, they were all Excommunicated, firſt by the Archbiſhop, then by the Pope. And at laſt it being known where he was, by his Friends he was delivered and reſcued out of the Thieves hands, and finally brought home with proceſſion, and reſtored to his houſe again. And thus was that Abbey with the Abbot of the ſame (for what demerits I know not) thus vexed and afflicted about this time, as more lagely I have ſeen in their Latine Regiſter. But thus much briefly; the reſt I omit here (about the later end of this Edward the Second ceaſeth the Hiſtory of Nic. Trivet, and of Flor. Hiſt.) paſſing over to the Reign of the next King.

King Edward the Third.

CConcerning the Acts and ſtory of King Edward the Second, his depoſing, and cruel death, wrought by the falſe and counterfeit Letter of Sir Roger Mortimer, ſent in the Kings Name to the Keepers (for the which he was charged, drawn, and quartered,) I have written ſufficiently before, and more peradventure than the profeſſion of this Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory will well admit. Notwithſtanding, for certain reſpects and cauſes I thought ſomewhat to extend my limits herein the more; whereby both Kings and ſuch as climb to be about them may take the better example by the ſame; the one to have the love of his Subjects, the other to learn to flee Ambition, and not bear themſelves too brag of their fortune and ſtate, how high ſoever it be: Conſidering with themſelves nothing to be in this world ſo firm and ſure, that may promiſe it ſelf any certain continuance, and is not in perpetual danger of mutation, unleſs it be faſtened by God his protection.

After the ſuppreſſion of this King, as is above expreſſed, Edward his Son was Crowned King of England, being about the years of fifteen, and reigned the ſpace of fifty years, who was a Prince of much and great Temperance; in feats of Arms very expert, and no leſs fortunate and lucky in all his Wars, than his Father was infortunate before him. For liberality alſo and clemency he was worthily commended; briefly, in all Princely vertues, famous and excellent. Concerning the memorable Acts of which Prince, done both in Wars and Peace, as how he ſubdued the Scots, had great Victories by the Sea, how he Conquered France, Anno 1332. won Calice, 1348. and tranſlated the ſtaple thither, took the French King Priſoner, and how the French Arms firſt by him were brought in, and conjoyned with the Engliſh Arms; alſo how the Order of the Garter firſt by the ſaid King was invented and and ordained, Anno 1356. alſo Anno 1357. How the King in his Parliament at Nottingham decreed, That all ſuch in Flanders, or other where, that had skill in making Cloth, ſhould peaceably inhabit the Land, and be welcome. For three years before that, it was Enacted, That no Wool ſhould be tranſported over the Sea. Which was to bridle the pride of the Flemmings, who then loved better the Sacks of Wool, than the Nation of Engliſhmen. All theſe, with other noble Acts of this worthy Prince, although in other Chronicles they be fully intreated of: yet according to that order I have begun (ſaying ſomewhat of each Kings Reign, although not pertinent to our Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory) I have here inſerted the ſame, making haſte to other matters, ſhortly and compendiouſly abridging them out of divers and ſundry Authors together compacted, mentioned in this wiſe.

The Coronation and Solemnity of King Edward the Third, and all the Pomp thereof was no ſooner ended: but Robert of Bruce King of Scotland, underſtanding the State and Government of the Realm to be (as it was indeed) in the Queen, the young King, the Earl of Kent, and Sir Roger Mortimer: And that the Lords and Barons, as he was informed, did ſcarcely well agree amongſt themſelves (although he grew now in age, and was troubled with the falling diſeaſe) yet thought he this a meet time for his purpoſe, to make invaſion: hoping for as good ſucceſs and like Victory now, as but lately before he had at the Caſtle of Euſtrivelin. Whereupon, about the Feaſt of Eaſter he ſent his Embaſſadors with Heralds and Letters of Defiance to the young King Edward the Third, the Queen and the Council; declaring, that his purpoſe was with fire and ſword to enter and invade the Realm of England, &c. The King, Queen, and Council hearing this bold defiance, commanded in all ſpeedy preparation Muſters to be made throughout all the Realm: appointing to every Band Captains convenient, and at the City of York by a day aſſigned them, commanding every man to be with all their neceſſary furniture ready and throughly provided. They directed their Letters alſo with all ſpeed to Sir John of Heinault, requiring him with ſuch Souldiers and men at Arms as he might conveniently provide in Flanders, Heinault, and Brabant, to meet the King and Queen upon the Aſcenſion-day next enſuing at their City of York.

The defiance of the King of Scots.

The King and Queen made ſpeedy preparation for this Expedition: the Noblemen provided themſelves of all things neceſſary thereunto: the Engliſh Captains and Souldiers (their Bands throughly furniſhed) were ready at their appointed time and place: Sir John of Heinault, Lord Bedmount muſtering his men as faſt, was ready to take ſhipping: where at Wyſant (in Engliſh Bottoms, there lying for him ready) he went aboard, and with a merry wind landed at Dover, travelling from thence by ſmall Journeys daily, till he came within three days after the Feaſt of Pentecoſt to the City of York: where the King and Queen with a great Power of 60000 men (within and about the City of York) expected his coming: Before whom, in courteous wiſe he preſented himſelf, and muſtered his Troop, wherein he had to the number of 500 good men at Arms well appointed and mounted. His coming and furniture was well liked both of the King and Queen: and he was by the Harbinger appointed to be lodged, with his Houſhold retinue, in the Abbey of white Monks. To be brief, ſuch grudge and variance fell between ſome of the Kings Souldiers and his, within the Suburbs of the Town being together lodged, that from the little to the more, whilſt the King and Queen with divers other of the Nobles, (ſtrangers and others) were at dinner, the ſaid Fray ſo greatly increaſed, that the whole Army, ſo many as were in the Town then lodged, ſtood to their defence; ſo that there were ſlain of the Engliſh Archers in ſhort ſpace by the ſtrangers to the number of 300 men. Whereupon grew (after the Fray was with much difficulty both of the King and Queen ended) ſuch heart-burning between the parties; as that the number of 6000 conſpired together againſt them, thinking to have burnt them in their Lodgings; had they not been, by the great Grace of God and diſcreet handling, otherwiſe prevented and let. Whereupon the Heinaulders were fain to take and keep the field, uſing as diligent watch and ward, as though they had been among their Hoſtile Enemies. After this, the King ſet forward his Army towards Durham, and encamped himſelf near about the ſame, who alſo ſent the Lord Vifford and the Lord Mounbrey to Carlile with a ſufficient Company to keep that Entrance; and alſo the Lord Marſhall of England to keep the Town of New-Caſtle with a ſufficient Company to defend the ſame, and the Country adjoyning. For well knew the King, that by one of theſe two Entries the Scots muſt paſs into England, ſtanding both of them upon the River of Tine, 24 miles diſtant.

The King and Queen at York, with an Army of 60000 men, ready to meet the King of Scots entring the Realm.

Carlile and New-Caſtle then the Keys of England. Northward kept with Garriſons.

But the Scots privily with their Army paſſed the River betwixt the two Towns into England, few underſtanding thereof, till that the great fires which the Scots had kindled and made in England, bewrayed them: who came burning and deſtroying the Country all about as far as Stanop Park. This thing being declared to the King, he commandeth his Hoſt with all ſpeed to march towards them; which he ſo long travelled that they came in ſight each of other. The King alſo commanded the paſſages of the River to be ſo ſtraitly and narrowly guarded, that by no means the Scots could retire and have eſcaped back again into Scotland, without battel given them of the King. But the Scots, underſtanding the great Power the King was of, kept always the advantage of the Hills, retiring in the nights from one to another: that without great odds and advantage on the one ſide, and hazard to the other, the King could not ſet upon them.

The Scots privily paſs over the River of Tine, burning and ſpoiling the Country all about.

The Kings Army and the Scots are ſo near, that each ſeeth other.

Thus in the day time the Scots keeping the advantage of the hills, and in the night time retiring to the advantage of ſuch other like, came near againſt that River where they firſt paſſed over, where they made a ſhew to offer battel to the King upon the morrow. Whereupon the King being buſied in putting his men and battels in a readineſs to fight the next morning, being almoſt forewearied in purſuing the Scots from place to place: the Scots in the mean ſeaſon gate over the River, and eſcaped the danger of the King. Which thing as it could not be done without great Treaſon of ſome near about the King; ſo Sir Roger Mortimer was grievouſly ſuſpected thereof, and after it was laid unto his Charge. But to be ſhort, by this means the Scots eſcaped the River; after whom it ſhould have availed the King very little to have made purſuit, as the wily Scots knew full well. For the joy whereof, the Lord William Douglas, one of the Scots Generals, with 200 horſes, gave alarum in the Kings Camp; and came ſo near, that he cut certain of the lines of the Kings Tent in ſunder with his Sword, and retired to his Company without great loſs of any of his men. Then on the morrow the King, perceiving the Scots to be gone, came to the place where over-night they lodged, where were found 500 great Oxen and Kine ready killed; five hundred Cauldrons made of Beaſts skins full of fleſh, over the fire ſeething; a thouſand Spits full of fleſh ready to be roſted, and more than 10000 ſhooes of raw Leather (the hair ſtill upon the ſame) which the Scots had left behind them; and five poor Engliſh Priſoners tied to Trees, and their legs broken. All which the King ſeeing, returned with his Army (and left any further purſuing the Scots) to Durham: where he diſmiſſed his Army, and came again to London, ſending with Sir John of Heinault two hundred men at Arms for their better ſafeguard againſt the Engliſh Archers (with whom at York, as you have heard, they frayed) till they had taken ſhipping, and ſo returned home.

The Scots through Treaſon eſcape out of England unfought withall.

The provi-ſion left in the Scots Camp.

The King returneth to London.

The great Fray in York.

The King then being at London, confirmed the Liberties of the Citizens, and Ordained, That the Mayor ſhould ſit in all places as chief Juſtice within the Liberties of the ſame. And that what Alderman ſoever had been Mayor before, ſhould be a Juſtice of Peace within his own Ward.

Then the King, the Queen, and the Council ſent over to the Earl of Heinault certain Embaſſadors, touching the Solemnization of the Marriage between the King and the Lady Philip his Daughter: who in ſuch ſort ſped their Meſſage, that ſhe was ſoon after conveyed over to England very honourably, and at Dover arrived. And from thence ſhe came to London (ſome Chronicles affirm to York) where upon the day of the Converſion of S. Paul, the year above ſpecified, the Marriage and Coronation of the Queen was with much Triumph during the ſpace of three weeks ſolemnized.

The marriage of King Edward ſolemnized.

After which Coronation and Marriage, the King ſummoned his Parliament to be kept at Northampton: where-at, by the means of Sir Roger Mortimer and the old

A Parliament at Northampton

Queen,

Queen, a Peace was purchaſed for the Scots (who had for that purpoſe ſent their Embaſſadors) for four years to endure. Alſo the King (then being within age) granted to releaſe the Scots of all their Homage and Fealty unto the Realm of England, which by their Charter enſealed they were bound to; as alſo their Indenture, which was called the Ragman Role, wherein was ſpecified the foreſaid Homage and Fealty to the King and Crown of England, by the ſaid King of Scots, Nobles, and Prelates to be made; having all their Seals annexed to the ſame. Alſo there was then delivered unto them the black Croſs of Scotland, which King Edward before for a rich Jewel and Relique had conquered and brought from Scone Abbey; with all ſuch Rights and Titles as any the Barons elſe had enjoyed in the ſaid Realm of Scotland, with many other things more, to the great prejudice both of the Realm, and diſcontent of all the Nobles and Barons for the moſt part, more than the old Queen, Sir Roger Mortimer and the Biſhop of Ely. Who in ſuch ſort ruled the Roſt, that all the reſt of the Nobles and Barons caſt with themſelves how beſt they might redreſs and remedy the great inconveniences, that unto the Realm by means of them grew and happened. Whereupon the King and Queen, and Sir Roger Mortimer, cauſed another Parliament to be called at Salisbury; where the ſaid Sir Roger Mortimer was made Earl of March, againſt all the Barons wills, to prevent and diſappoint the foreſaid purpoſe of them; but the Earl Henry of Lancaſter, with others, would not be at the ſame: wherefore it was laid unto their Charges, that they went about to conſpire the Kings death.

The Ragman Role delivered up to the Scots.

The black Croſs of Scotland.

The Barons give up their Titles in Scotland.

A Parliament at Salisbury.

Earl Henry of Lancaſter refuſeth to come to the Parliament.

And further, for that the King was as well under the Government of the Earl of Kent his Uncle, as the Queen his Mother, and the Earl of March; and for that they could not do in all things as they liſted for the ſaid Earl the Kings Uncle, who loved the King and the Realm: envy began to riſe between the Earl Mortimer and him; and, by Iſabel the Queens practice, he found the means to perſwade the King, that the Earl of Kent (to enjoy the Crown, as next Heir unto the King) went about to poiſon him. Whereunto the King giving light credit cauſed his ſaid Uncle to be apprehended; and, without anſwer making to his Accuſation and Accuſers, to be beheaded at Wincheſter, the third of October, and third year of his Reign. But the juſt Judgment of God not permitting ſuch odious Crimes in him to be unpuniſhed nor undetected, ſo in fine it fell forth, that Iſabel the old Queen, the Kings Mother, was found and underſtood to be with child by the ſaid Mortimer. Complaint hereof was made to the King, as alſo of the killing of King Edward his Father, and of the Conſpiracy of him againſt the Earl of Kent the Kings Uncle before put to death. Whereupon, divers other Articles laid againſt him, and manifeſtly read in the Court, he was arraigned and indited, and by Verdict found guilty; having his Judgment as in caſes of High Treaſon, and ſuffered death accordingly at London: where, upon London Bridge, next unto Spenſers, his head obtained a place. The Queen his Mother alſo (by good advice of Council) was reſtrained of her liberty, and within a certain Caſtle not permitted once to come abroad: Unto whom the King her Son once or twice a year would reſort, and viſit her.

The Earl of Kent put to death guiltleſs.

The Queen with child by Sir Roger Mortimer.

Sir Roger Mortimer Earl of March arraigned, condemned, and put to execution.

The Queen put in priſon, and ſo kept a long time.

This year Prince Edward was born at Woodſtock; who in proceſs of time and years grew to be a moſt valiant Prince, and was, before he died, accounted throughout the world the Follower of Chivalry.

The birth of Prince Edward.

After this the King prepared another Army into Scotland in the year prefixed. But firſt he ſummoned King David of Scotland, who had (in the laſt truce, four years to continue as you heard, his Father then living) married the Lady Jane, Siſter to the King; (termed Jane Make-peace) to do his Homage to the King; but that he refuſed. Whereupon, not forgetting therewithall the ſcoffing Rimes, which daily from that time of truce the Scots had in their mouths; he did ſo much, that with an Army well furniſhed he entred Scotland by the River Twede; for the Scots had then the poſſeſſion of the Town of Barwick. The Scotiſh Giggs and Rimes were theſe, Long Boards heartleſs, Painted Hoods witleſs; Gay Coats graceleſs, Makes England thriftleſs. To be ſhort, the King waſted the Land, burnt, deſtroyed, and took Towns and Caſtles with ſmall reſiſtance or none: and the ſpace of ſix months together did in that Land what him liſted, without any battel offered to him. For the King of Scots was but a Child, and not above the age of 15 years, and wanted good Captains that ſhould have defended the Realm: inſomuch that they were all fain, ſaving thoſe that kept in Holds for their defence, to take the Foreſt of Godworth, and there kept themſelves ſo long as the King remained in Scotland. Who at length, when he had ſufficiently waſted, and ſpoiled, and burnt the ſame, returned toward Barwick, about the which he bent his Siege, vowing not to remove the ſame, till he had gotten the Town.

The Scots that kept the ſame, after a certain time and many Aſſaults made, were contented upon certain conditions to have delivered up the Town. But that the King refuſed, unleſs that, all conditions ſet apart, they would with bag and baggage depart. Whereupon they condeſcended to the King, that if by a certain time they were not by the King of Scots reſcued, they would render up the Town, and with bag and baggage depart; and ſo the time expired, fruſtrate of all hope and reſcue, at the day appointed they did. The King then entred the Town, and tarried there the ſpace of twelve days: who after he had appointed Sir Edward Baillew Captain over the Town, and leaving alſo behind him other Knights, Squires, and Souldiers, as well to keep the ſame as other Holds the King had conquered in Scotland and Frontiers thereof; he returned with his people towards London, permitting every man to depart and go what way them liked.

Barwick beſieged and yielded up to the King.

The King entreth the Town of Barwick, and appointeth the Captain thereof.

Then Sir Robert de Artois, a Nobleman of France, and which deſcended of the blood Royal, being in England with the King, ceaſed not oftentimes to advertiſe the King, and put him in memory of his good and right Title to the Inheritance of the Crown of France. This Sir Robert for a certain diſpleaſure that Philip the French King took againſt him for a certain Plea which by him was moved before the King; was fain for the ſafegard of his life to flee the Realm of France, and ſo come to the Kings Court. King Edward was not unwilling at all to hear thereof, but took delight oftentimes to reaſon and debate that matter with him concerning his Right, Title, and Inheritance to the Crown of France. But yet notwithſtanding, he thought it not good to make any attempt thereunto without adviſed and circumſpect counſel; for that it contained matter of no ſmall, but moſt difficult importance: neither yet he took it to deſerve the fame either of wiſdom or proweſs to let ſo good a Title die, or ſo fit opportunity to paſs. Wherefore he, calling together certain of his Council, uſed their deliberate advices touching the ſerioufneſs of this matter. In fine, it was by them thought good, that the King ſhould ſend certain Embaſſadors over to the Earl of Heinault, whoſe Daughter he had married, as well to hear his advice and counſel herein; as alſo what Friends and Aid, by him and his means, in this ſo great an Expedition to be begun in the Empire, to him might be procured. The King hereunto condeſcended, and appointeth for this Embaſſage the Biſhop of Lincoln with two other Baronets, and two Doctors: who in ſuch ſpeedy wiſe made their Voyage, that in ſhort ſpace they returned again to the King with this anſwer, That not only the Earl his council and advice ſhould be herein preſt to the King of England their Maſter, but alſo the whole Country of Heinault. And further, for that to ſuch an Expedition as appertained, he ſaid, The Province of Heinault was but a ſmall matter to make account of; he would procure for the King greater Aid and Friendſhip in the Empire, as the Duke of Brabant his Coſin-German, and a puiſſant Prince, the Duke of Guelles, the Archbiſhop of Coloyn, the Marqueſs of Juliers, &c. which are all good men of War, and able to make ten thouſand fighting men, ſaith he. Which anſwer well liked the King, and made him joyous thereof. But this counſel of the King, as ſecret as it was, came to Philip the French Kings ears: whereupon he ſtayed the Voyage of the Croſs which then he had in hand, ſending forth Countermands to ſtay the ſame, till he knew further the purpoſe of the King of England.

Sir Robert de Artois a Nobleman of France inciteth the King to proſecute his Title in France.

Embaſſadors are ſent to the Earl of Heinault concerning the Title.

The Embaſſadors return with anſwer from the Earl that pleaſeth the King.

King Philip of France heareth of the Kings purpoſe, and ſtayeth his Voyage of the Croſs.

The King hereupon himſelf taketh ſhipping accompanied as to a King appertained, and when he had conſulted with all the foreſaid Lords of the Empire in this matter, and underſtood their fidelity; he made his repair to the Emperor, at whoſe hands he was well entertained, and honourably received, whom the Emperor appointed pointed to be his Lieutenant-General, having thereby more Authority both to will and command ſuch as for this his Expedition he ſted unto, and had made convention with. Philip hearing this, prepared his Army, and rigged his Navy; that ſo ſoon as the King ſhould enter into the Dominion of France, they alſo might enter into England, requiting like for like.

The firſt Voyage King Edward made to France.

The King of England, after the Feaſt of S. John Baptiſt, according to his purpoſe prepared all things ready to ſuch an Expedition, conducting his Army, and gathering a greater ſtrength in the Empire, as before to him was promiſed, uſing the Emperors Authority therein, as his Lieutenant-General, howbeit at the charge altogether of the King of England. The French King, as ſoon as King Edward had landed his Army at Macheline in Flanders, hearing of the defiance, which the King and other Noblemen of the Empire had ſent unto him, ſent certain Ships lying ready thereunto, and waiting for ſuch opportunity upon the Coaſt of England; which upon a Sunday, whilſt the Townſmen were at the Church little looking for any ſuch matter, entred the Haven of Southampton, took the Town and ſpoiled the ſame, deflowred Maidens, enforced Wives, burnt, kill'd, took Captives, and carried away rich Spoils and great Booties to their Ships, and ſo again departed into France. Further as the King of England had allied himſelf with the Noblemen of the Empire, and had the friendly favour of the Emperor alſo thereunto: ſo the French King made the like League and Alliance with David the King of Scots, whom the King had ſo hardly dealt withall in Scotland (as partly before you heard) and kept the moſt part of Scotland under his Subjection; Binding the ſaid David as well by writing as oath and pledge, that without his conſent he ſhould make no peace, nor conclude any truce with the King of England. Who again aſſured him of Aid, and Reſcue, and Help, and to recover his Kingdom and Dominion to his uſe: and forthwith ſent certain Garriſons and Bands into Scotland to keep play with the Engliſhmen, and there to fortifie divers places till further opportunity ſerved. He alſo fortified with men, money, victual, and munition, the Town of Cambrey: which he ſuſpected would be beſieged, lying ſo near upon the Empire, as indeed it came to paſs. For King Edward, departing from Macheline, ſet forward his Hoſt toward Heinault, and by the way aſſembled ſuch Power as in the Empire he looked for, marching forward ſtill till that they came to Cambrey, and beſieged it with 40000 men, while that with another Company the Flemings, Brabanters, and Hollanders, went to S. Quintin. But in effect, neither there, nor at Cambrey, nor elſe-where, any thing notorious was atchieved. But the Summer being well ſpent, and little prevailing in the Siege of Cambrey, being of ſituation ſtrong and well defenced therewithall with men and munition, he brake up the Siege, and marched further into the heart of France towards Mutterel. Which thing the French King having underſtanding of, prepared himſelf to give battel to the King of England, who with another great Army came to Viromfoſſe, where days were appointed to meet in battel: but in the end, nothing was done nor attempted between the Princes. And the King of England (without any battel either giving or taking) returned with his Army from thence to Gaunt. Concerning the cauſe of the ſudden removing of the King out of France, it ſeemeth moſt ſpecially to riſe of the Pope: which at the ſame time ſent down his Legates; for the Order of a peace to be taken between the Kings. At Gaunt were gathered by the Kings appointment all the Nobles as well of England, as of the Empire in Council together what was beſt to be done. What plain anſwer was made to the King of England, that unleſs he would take upon him the Claim and Title of France, as his lawful Inheritance, and as King thereof proſecute his Wars; it might not be lawful for them any further to Aid the King of England, or to fight with him againſt the French King: for that the Pope had bound them in two Millions of Florens of Gold, and under pain of Excommunication, that they ſhould not fight againſt the lawful King of France. Whereupon, the King thought good therefore preſently to make open Challenge to the Realm and Crown of France: and further, to quarter and intermingle the Arms of France with the Arms of England in one Scutcheon. Whereupon eſtſoons King Edward made anſwer unto the Pope again, directing unto him his Letters, wherein he declareth at large his Right and Title unto the Crown of France, purging thereby himſelf and his cauſe unto the Biſhop. The Copy and tenour of which Letter, becauſe it is too long to expreſs, it is to be found in ſtory of Tho. Walſingham, remaining in the Library of J. Stephenſon Citizen of London, who ſo hath liſt or leiſure to peruſe the ſame. Beſides this Letter to the Pope, he directed another to the Peers and Prelates of France (he remaining yet at Gaunt) in tenour as followeth.

The Letter of King Edward to the Nobles and Commons of France.

King Edward to the Nobles and Commons of France.

EDward by the Grace of God King of France and of England, Lord of Ireland. Unto all Prelates and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, to the Peers, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and to the Commons of France, greeting. The high Lord and King above, to whom although his Will be in his own Power, yet would that Power ſhould be ſubject unto Law; commanding every thing to be given unto him which is his, declaring thereby that Juſtice and Judgment ought to be the preparation of the Kings Seat. Wherefore ſeeing the Kingdom of France, through the Providence of God, by the death of Charles laſt King of France of famous memory, Brother-German to our Lady Mother, is fallen unto us by plain and manifeſt Law; And forſomuch as Lord Philip de Valois, being the Son of the Uncle of the foreſaid King, and ſo being far from the Crown by a farther degree of Conſanguinity, through force and uſurpation hath intruded himſelf in the foreſaid Kingdom (whilſt we were yet in our Minority) and ſo contrary both to God and to Juſtice doth detain and occupy the ſame; And leſt we ſhould ſeem to neglect our own Right and the Gift given us of God, or not to ſubmit our Will to Gods Ordinance: We have thought good to acknowledge the Title of France, and by ſupportation of the Almighty King have taken upon us the Defence and Regiment of the ſaid Kingdom; Firmly purpoſing with our ſelves (as every good man ought to do) graciouſly to miniſter Juſtice to every one, according to the Rites and laudable Cuſtom of the foreſaid Kingdom. Alſo to renew the good Laws and Cuſtoms which have been in the time of Ludovike our Progenitor; adding moreover, that which ſhall ſeem expedient according to the condition and quality of the time. As any change of Coin, or any other inordinate Exactions, we intend not to ſeek our Profits by your Detriments: when as (the Almighty be praiſed therefore) we abound and have enough. And as concerning the Affairs of the Realm, our purpoſe is not to proceed raſhly or by our own will, but by the diſcreet advice and counſel of the Peers, Prelates, Nobles, and other our faithful Subjects of the Kingdom, ſo far forth as ſhall make for the Honour of God, the Defence and Advancement of the Church (which in all fulneſs of devotion we do reverence) and to the profit both publick and private of all the Subjects thereof, with full execution of Juſtice by the Grace of God to be executed upon all and ſingular perſons, being earneſtly careful for the Honour, profit, and tranquility of you all. For, as the Lord knoweth, nothing ſhall be more grateful to us, than that by our carful ſolicitude, peace may be engendred, ſpecially betwixt us, and univerſally among all Chriſtian men: ſo that by our concord the force and ſtrength of all Chriſtian Princes may be joyned together for the recovery of the holy Land: which our Saviour and Redeemer hath dedicated with his own proper blood, whereunto we will endeavour our ſelves through the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt: And foraſmuch as we have offered to the foreſaid Lord Philip divers friendly and reaſonable conditions of Peace, whereunto he would neither condeſcend, neither agree to any Conformation; yea, rather moveth againſt us unjuſt War, to the utter ſubverſion of our State: we are inforced of neceſſity to the uttermoſt of our Power (for the defence both of us, and recovery of our Right) to defend our ſelves by force of battel; not ſeeking any ſlaughter of good and humble Subjects, but deſiring their ſafegard and profit.

The Title of France how it came to King Edward.

Note the groſſeneſs of this time when the blood of Chriſt was thought but only dedicated to the holy Land.

For the which cauſe, all and ſingular ſuch Subjects of the Kingdom of France, which ſhall ſubmit themſelves to us as the true King of France, at or before the Feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing; profeſſing unto us their Fealty, and doing to us as to the King of France by duty appertaineth, ſo as our beloved Subjects of Flanders have done already, or be ready to offer themſelves ſo to do; all ſuch we willingly admit and receive to our Peace and Grace under our Protection to be defended, them to maintain as is convenient from all moleſtation and unquietneſs whatſoever, in perſon or goods hereafter to be inforced either by us or by our Officers, upon whatſoever occaſion of Rebellion afore paſſed. And foraſmuch as the premiſſes cannot eaſily be intimated to all and ſingular perſons; we have provided the ſame to be fixed upon Church doors, and other publick places, whereby the manifeſt notice thereof may come to all men, to the comfort of you that be to us devout, and to the true information of them, which through ſiniſter ſurmiſes of our Enemies are otherwiſe informed of us. Dated at Gaunt the 8*th* of February, the year of our Kingdom of France the firſt, of England the 14*th*.

Southampton burnt and ſpoiled By the Frenchmen.

This done, for that the Winter then drew on, neither was there any hope as the time ſerved, of farther doing good; the King thought beſt for a ſeaſon to return again to England with his Company, giving over the Wars until the next Spring; and ſo did, taking ſhipping, and ſo arrived at Dover. When he came to London, it was declared unto him, of the great ſpoil the Frenchmen had made at Southampton: who anſwered again, That within one year he doubted not but the ſame ſhould be well paid for and recompenſed. And according to the ſame purpoſe of his he lingred no time, but calling a Parliament at Weſtminſter, with much grudge and evil will of his Subjects there was for the maintenance of his Wars granted to him a great Subſidy, which was the fifth of every mans goods, and alſo the Cuſtoms of his Wools two years before hand, and the ninth Sheaf of every mans Corn. At the Counſel of the Archbiſhop given to the King.

Spring the King again prepared his Army, and rigged his Navy, purpoſing to land in Flanders. But the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then Lord Chancellor, having underſtanding of the French Power upon the Sea, lying for the King, gave him advertiſement there, willing him to go more ſtrongly, or elſe not to venture. But the King not crediting the Archbiſhop, and being angry with him therefore, ſaid, That he would go forward: whereupon the Biſhop reſigned the Chancellorſhip, and removed himſelf from his Council: then the King conſulting hereupon farther with the Lord Morley his Admiral, and others (hearing alſo the ſame of them) furniſhed himſelf with ſtronger Power, and committed him to his Ship: and did ſo much, that a few days before Midſummer, he was upon the Sea with a great Fleet.

Battel upon the Sea between King Edward and the Frenchmen.

Before the Town of Sluſe, the French King to ſtop his paſſage, had laid ready a great Navy, well near to the number of twenty ſcore Sail; and had made the Chriſtopher of England (which before the Frenchmen took at Southampton) their Admiral: betwixt which two Navies was a long and terrible fight. But in the end, the Victory by Gods Grace fell to the King of England, in which fight he himſelf was perſonally. So that of the number of thirty thouſand Frenchmen, few or none were left and eſcaped alive, and two hundred Sail of Ships taken: in one of the which were found 400 dead bodies.

After this great ſlaughter of the Frenchmen (of whom many for fear of the Sword lept into the Sea) when no man durſt bring tydings thereof to the French King; they which were next about the King did ſuborn his Fool, to inſinuate the underſtanding thereof by ſubtilty of covert

The words of the Fool to the French King words; which was thus. As the forſaid Fool being in the Kings preſence, and was talking of many things; among other talk he ſuddenly braſt out (being prompt by others) into a vehement railing againſt the Engliſhmen, calling them Cowards and Daſtards, with many ſuch opprobrious words tending to that effect. The King not knowing whereunto the words of the Fool did appertain, asked the Fool, Why he called the Engliſhmen ſuch Weaklings and Cowards, &c. Why, ſaith the Fool? Becauſe the fearful and cowardly Engliſhmen had not the hearts to leap into the Sea ſo luſtily, as our Normans, and Gentlemen of France had. Whereby the French King began to underſtand the Victory of his part to be loſt, and the Engliſhmen to be Victorers.

This Victory atchieved, the fame thereof ſpreading abroad in England, firſt was not believed, till Letters thereof came from the King to Prince Edward his Son, being then at Waltham, directed to the Biſhops and Prelates of the Realm: the effect of which Letters here followeth under written.

The Letters of King Edward to the Biſhops of England.

THe bountiful benignity of Gods great Clemency poured upon us of late, for your true certification and rejoycing, we thought good to intimate unto you. It is not unknown (we ſuppoſe) to you, and to other our faithful Subjects, which alſo have been partakers with us of the ſame, with what ſtorms of boiſterous Wars of late we have been toſſed and ſhaken, as in the great Ocean. But although the riſing ſurges of the Sea be marvelous, yet more marvelous is the Lord above: who turning the Tempeſt into a Calm, in ſo great dangers, ſo mercifully hath reſpected us. For whereas we of late did ordain our paſſage upon urgent cauſes into Flanders: the Lord Philip de Valois our bitter Enemy underſtanding thereof, laid againſt us a mighty Navy of Ships, intending thereby either to take us, or at leaſt to ſtop our Voyage. Which Voyage if it had been ſtaid, it had been the cutting off of all the great Enterprizes by us intended and taken in hand, and moreover we our ſelves had been brought to a great confuſion. But the God of Mercies, ſeeing us ſo diſtreſſed in ſuch perils and dangers, hath graciouſly and beyond mans expectation ſent to us great ſuccour and ſtrength of fighting Souldiers, and a proſperous Wind after our own deſires. By the means and help whereof, we ſet out of the Haven into the Seas, where we eſtſoons perceived our Enemies well appointed and prepared with a main multitude to ſet upon us, upon Midſummer-day laſt paſt. Againſt whom notwithſtanding Chriſt our Lord and Saviour hath rendred to us the Victory, through a ſtrong and vehement Conflict. In the which Conflict, a mighty number of our Enemies were deſtroyed, and well near all their whole Navy was taken; with ſome loſs alſo of our part, but nothing like in compariſon to theirs. By reaſon whereof we doubt not but our paſſage by the Seas hereafter ſhall be more quiet and ſafe for our Subjects, and alſo many other Commodities ſhall enſue thereof, as we have good cauſe to hope well of the ſame. For which cauſe we, devoutly conſidering the heavenly Grace ſo mercifully wrought upon us, do render moſt humble Thanks and Praiſe to Chriſt our Lord and Saviour: Beſeeching him, that as he hath been and always is ready to prevent our neceſſities in time of opportunity, ſo he will continue his helping hand ever towards us, and ſo to direct us here temporally, that we may reign and joy with him in heaven eternally. And in like ſort we require your Charity, that you alſo with us riſing up to the praiſe of God alone, who hath begun ſo favourably to work with us to our goodneſs, in your Prayers and Divine Service do inſtantly recommend us unto the Lord, travelling here in theſe foreign Countries, and ſtudying to recover not only our Right here in France; but alſo to advance the whole Catholick Church of Chriſt, and to Rule our people in Juſtice. And that alſo ye call upon the Clergy and people, every one through his Dioceſs to do the ſame, invocating the Name of our Saviour, that of his mercy he will give to us his humble Servant a docible heart, ſo to Judge and Rule hereupon rightly, doing that which he hath commanded, that at length we may attain to that which he hath promiſed, &c. Which Letter was written to the Biſhops and Prelates, Anno 1340.

After this foreſaid Victory upon the Sea, and News thereof, with due Thanks to our Saviour, ſent into England: the King ſtriking into Flanders, came to Gaunt in Brabant, where he had left the Queen; who joyfully received him, being a little before purified or churched, as we term it, of her fourth Son, whoſe name was John, and commonly called John of Gaunt, and was Earl of Richmond, and Duke of Lancaſter. At Villenorth the King aſſembled his Council, whereat the Noblemen of Flanders, Brabant, and Heynalt conjoyning together in moſt firm League, the one to help and defend the other, with the King of England, againſt the French King, purpoſing and determining from thence to march toward Tourney, and it to beſiege. But the French King, underſtanding their counſel, fortified and victualled the ſame before their coming thither.

A Council at Villenorth. Flanders, Brabant and Heynault take part with King Edward.

Further-

{KING Edw. 3} Furthermore the said French King the same time, to stop the Siege of King Edward, sent with King David of Scotland a great Power, to that intent to make invasion in England, thereby the sooner to cause the King to remove his Siege. In the mean time King Edward wrote his Letters to Philip de Valois, making unto him certain Requests, as in the same his Letters here following is to be seen: who, for that he wrote not unto him as King of France, but by the name of Philip de Valois, refused to answer him touching the same, as by their Letters here placed may be seen.

The Letter of the King of England, to Philip de Valois, the French King, going to the Siege of Tourney.

The Letter of King Edward to the French King.

PHilip de Valois, of long time we have gently requested you by our Embassadors (by all the reasonable means we might) to that intent you should have rendred unto us our lawful Right and Inheritance to the Crown of France, which from us a long time you have by great wrong and force detained. And for that we well perceive you mean to persevere in the same your purpose and injurious detayne, without making any reasonable answer to our demand: We let you understand, that we are entred into the Country of Flanders, as the Sovereign Lord of the same, and so pass through the Country. And further signifie unto you, how that by the help of our Saviour Jesus Christ and our righteous Cause therein, and with the Power of the said Country, our People and Allies, we purpose to recover the Right which we have to that Inheritance you detain from us by your injurious force, and therefore approach we towards you to make a short end of this our rightful Challenge, if you also will do the like. And for that so great an Host assembled as we bring with us on our part, (supposing you also on the other part to do the like) cannot long remain together without great destruction both to our People and Country, which thing every good Christian ought to eschew; especially Princes and others which have the Government of the same, avoiding, by as short an end as may be, the mortality of Christian men, according as the quarrel is apparent between you and me: For the which causes here touched, let the Challenge (if you think meet) between our own persons and bodies be discussed, that the great Nobility and Prowess of each other, may of every one be seen. And if you refuse this way, then let there (to finish this Challenge) be an hundred of the best Souldiers you can choose out of your part matched with so many of our Liege-Subjects to try the same. And if of these two ways you refuse both the one and the other, then that you will assign unto us a certain day before the Town of Tourney, to fight with us Power against Power, which may be within ten days next ensuing after the date of these our Letters: offering the said conditions unto you above specified (as we would all the world to know and understand) not upon any orgoil, presumption or pride we take therein, but for the Causes before alledged, and to the end that (the will of our Saviour Jesus Christ betwixt us two herein declared and shewed) rest and peace might grow amongst Christian men; the power and force of Gods Enemies may be abated: and in fine, the limits of Christianity enlarged and enfranchised. And therefore hereupon consider with your self, what way you will take concerning our foresaid Offers, and by the bearers of these our Letters send unto us herein quick and speedy Answer. Given under our Great Seal at Chin in the plain of Leece the 27*th* day of this present month of July.

The Answer of the Lord Philip de Valois unto the Letter aforesaid.

The Answer of the French King to King Edward.

PHilip by the Grace of God, King of France, to Edward King of England. We have seen the Letters which you have sent unto our Court to Philip de Valois, wherein are contained certain Requests which you make to the said Philip de Valois. But for that the said Letters come not as directed unto us, neither yet the said Requests seem to be made unto us (which thing clearly by the tenour of the said Letters appeareth) we therefore write unto you no Answer touching the same. Notwithstanding this sufficeth, that we understand by the said Letters of yours, as also other ways, that you are entred into our Realm of France, to the great damage both unto us, our Realm and People (more proceeding of will, than reason) and not regarding that which a Liege-man ought to do unto his Lord. For you are entred into our Homage by you lieged unto us, acknowledging your self as reason is, a Liege-man unto the King of France; and have promised unto us such Obeisance as men are wont to do unto their Liege-Lords (as more plainly by your Letters Patents appeareth, ensealed with your Great Seal, the which we have with us:) for the which thing we will you to understand, that our purpose is (when it shall seem good unto us) to drive you out of our Realm, to the honour both of us and our Kingdom, and to the profit and commodity of our people. And this thing to do we have firm and assured hope in Jesus Christ, from whom we have all our power and strength. For by your unreasonable demand more willful than reasonable, hath been hindred and stayed the holy Voyage to those parts beyond the Seas, where a great number of Christian-men have been slain; the Divine-Service diminished, and the Service of the Church less reverenced. And as touching that where you say, Ye intend to have the Obeisance of the Flemmings, we think and believe that the good people and Commons of that Country will behave themselves in such sort toward our Cosin the Countess of Flanders their Lady, as it be not to their reproach; and to us their Sovereign Lord, they will respect their Honour and Loyalty. And that thing wherein they have done otherwise than well hitherto, hath been by the evil counsel of such people, as neither regard the Weal-publick nor Honor of their Country, but their own only gain and commodity. Given in the field near adjoyning to the Priory of S. Andrew, under our Privy-Seal in absence of our Great-Seal, the 30*th* day of July, Anno 1340.

The Scots invade England.

Mention was made a little before of David King of Scots, whom the French King had supported and stirred up against the King and Realm of England: which David (with the Aid of the Scots and Frenchmen) did so much prevail, that they recovered again almost all Scotland, which before he had lost, and was constrained to live in the Forest of Gedworth many years before. Then invaded they England, and came with their Army, wasting and burning the Country before them, till they came as far as Durham, and then returned again into Scotland, where they recovered all their Holds again saving the Town of Barwick. Edenborough they took by a stratagem or subtil device practised by Douglas, and certain other: who apparelling themselves in poor mens habits, as Victuallers with Corn and Provender, and other things, demanded the Porter early in the morning what need they had thereof? Who nothing mistrusting, opened the outward Gate, where they should tarry till the Captain rose: and perceiving the Porter to have the Keys of the inward Gate, they threw down their Sacks in the outward Gate, that it might not be shut again, and slew the Porter, taking from him the Keys of the Town. Then they blew their Horn as a warning to their Bands, which privily they had laid not far off: who in hastiwise coming, and finding the Gates ready opened, entred upon the sudden, and killed as many as resisted them, and so obtained again the City of Edenborough.

Edenborough recovered from the Englishmen by the Scots.

The Scots being thus busie in England, the French King in the mean season gathered together a puissant Power, purposing to remove the Siege from Tourney: and among other, sent for the King of Scots, who came to him with great force, besides divers other Noblemen of France: insomuch that the French King had a great Army, and thought himself able enough to raise the Siege, and theither bent his Host. But the French King, for all this his foresaid huge Power and Force, durst not yet approach the King so near, as either to give him battel, or else remove his Siege, but kept himself with his Army aloof, in a sure place for his better defence. And notwithstanding the King of England wasted, burnt, spoiled and destroyed the Country, twenty miles in manner compass about Tourney, and took divers and sundry strong Towns and Holds, as Ortois, Urses, Greney, Archies, Odint, S. Amand, and the

Town

Town of Liſle, where he ſlew above three hundred men of Arms, and about S. Omers, he ſlew and kill'd of Noble men, the Lord of Duskune, of Mauriſleou, of Rely, of Chaſtillion, of Melly, of Fenu, of Hamelar, Mountfaucon, and other Barons, to the number of fourteen; and alſo ſlew and killed above 130 Knights, being all men of great Poſſeſſions and Prowes, and took other ſmall Cities and Towns to the number of three hundred: yet for all this Philip de Valois, the French King, durſt neither reſcue his Towns, nor relieve his own men: But of his great Army he loſt (which is to be marveled at, being in the midſt of his own Country) by Famine and other inconveniences, and for want of water, more than twenty thouſand men without any battel by him given. Whereupon at the intreaty of the ſaid Philip by his Embaſſadors to the King ſent, and by the mediation of the Lady Jane, Siſter to the ſaid Philip, and Mother to the Earl of Henault, whoſe Daughter King Edward, as you heard, had married; a truce containing the number of fifteen Articles for one year was concluded, the King of England being very unwilling and loth thereunto. Yet notwithſtanding, partly by the inſtance of the foreſaid Lady, but ſpecially for that the King was greatly diſappointed, through the negligence of his Officers in England, which ſent him not over ſuch money as he needed for the continuance of his Wars, and payment of his Souldiers wages (the Articles being ſomewhat reaſonable) he agreeth to the truce thereof: the conditions of which truce there concluded, here follow under written.

Articles of Truce.

1. Firſt, that during the ſaid truce no tales or miſtruſt of either part ſhall be a detriment or cauſe of breach of the ſame.

2. Item, that during the ſaid reſpite or truce either of the Princes, their Helpers Coadjutors and Allies whatſoever, ſhall remain and be in quiet poſſeſſion of all ſuch Poſſeſſions, Holds, Territories and Lands, as at this preſent day they keep and enjoy within the Realm and Dominion of France, in what manner ſoever they have atchieved the ſame, during the ſaid truce.

3. Item, that the ſaid Princes, their Aiders, Coadjutors, and Allies whatſoever, ſhall paſs ſafely from one Country to another, and all Merchants with their Merchandiſe, as well by Sea as by Land, as accuſtomably they have been wont: except ſuch baniſhed men as have been baniſhed out of the ſaid Realms, or any of them for other cauſes, than the Wars, between the ſaid Princes.

4. Item, that the ſaid two Princes ſhall not procure, either by themſelves or any other, any practice or other moleſtation to be made the one to the other, by the Biſhop of Rome, or any other belonging to the holy Church whatſoever; either for the Wars begun, or any other cauſe, nor for the Service of any of their Allies, Coadjutors, and Aiders, or any of them. And that neither our holy Father the Pope, nor any other ſhall diſturb or moleſt either of the ſaid two Kings during the ſaid time.

5. Item, that immediately after the truce be proclaimed in both the Hoſts, that may ſtand bound of either ſide, to keep and obſerve all and every ſuch Article as ſhall be therein contained.

6. Item, that within 20 days next and immediately enſuing, each of the Princes ſhall cauſe to be proclaimed in Gaſcoine and Guyen, and other their Lands theſe Articles of truce, to the intent they may be the better obſerved, kept and known.

7. Item, if by any the ſaid Princes, their Allies, People or Coadjutors, any ſiege be laid in Gaſcoin, or the Dutchy of Guyen, or any other Iſles of the Sea Giernſey or Gerſey, or any other; that the ſame Sieges be raiſed ſo ſoon as they ſhall hear of this truce.

8. Item, that ſuch as are Thieves and Fugitives out of the Country of Flanders ſhall not return during the truce: and if they do, that then ſuch as apprehended them ſhall ſee juſtice done upon them, and they ſhall forfeit all the goods they have in Flanders.

9. Item, it is recorded, that the debts due to Arras, Treſponois, or other Titles of France, ſhall neither be demanded nor executed during the ſaid truce.

10. Item, that all ſuch Priſoners, as have been taken during theſe Wars, ſhall be releaſed out of priſon, and ſent home upon their Faith and Oath to return, if they be not ranſomed during the ſaid truce. And if any ſhall refuſe ſo to do, that then the Lord under whom he is, ſhall conſtrain him to return again to priſon. KING Edw. 3

11. Item, that all the Bands whatſoever they be, which he made before this ſaid truce in the time of War (whether they be of goods Spiritual or Temporal) be releaſed without reſtitution, during the ſaid truce.

12. Alſo, that theſe conditions of truce immediately may take effect between the Engliſh and Scots, their Lords, Aiders, and Allies; and the ſame to endure until the Nativity of Saint John Baptiſt. And that certain perſons be appointed by a certain day to be at the Marches of England and Scotland to confirm the ſaid truce, under ſuch conditions as have been accuſtomed in thoſe parts. And if the ſaid Scots refuſe ſo to do, that then they have no Aid out of France during the ſaid truce.

13. Item, that this ſaid truce be proclaimed in England, and in Scotland, within 26 days after the date hereof.

14. Item, it is accorded that within this truce be contained Eſpanels, Chatellon, Genovous, the Biſhop and the Town of Cambrey and Caſtles of the ſame.

In witneſs whereof we John by the Grace of God King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburge, Adulph Biſhop of Liege, Radulph Duke of Lorgn, Aymes Earl of Savoy, and John Earl of Darminack on the one party; and B. Duke of Brabant, C. Duke of Gelre, D. Marqueſs of Juſliers, Sir John of Henault, and Sir Beaumont on the other party, betwixt the high and puiſſant Princes of France and England, have ſealed this Inſtrument of truce and peace, and delivered the ſame accordingly in the Church of Eſpleteline on Monday the 25*th* day of September, the year of Grace, 1340.

King Edward returneth from Tourney.

This truce thus finiſhed, King Edward broke up his Camp, removing his Siege from Tourney, and came again to Gant. From whence (very early in the morning,) he with a ſmall Company took ſhipping, and by long Seas came to the Tower of London, very few or none having underſtanding thereof. And being greatly diſpleaſed with divers of his Council and high Officers (for that through their default he was conſtrained againſt his will, not having money to maintain his wars, to condeſcend unto the foreſaid truce) he commanded to be apprehended and brought unto him to the Tower, the Lord John Stonehore Chief Juſtice of England, and Sir John Poultney, with divers others. And the next morning, he ſent for L. R. Biſhop of Chicheſter, and the Lord Wake, the Lord Treaſurer, and divers other ſuch that were in Authority and Office, and commanded them all to be kept as Priſoners in the ſaid Tower, only the ſaid Biſhop excepted: whom, for fear of the Conſtitution of Pope Clement, which commanded that no Biſhop ſhould be by the King impriſoned, he ſet at liberty, and ſuffered him to go his way, and in his place ſubſtituted Sir Roger Boucher Knight, Lord Chancellor of England.

The King deceived by his Officers.

No Biſhop muſt be impriſoned by the Popes Law.

The Hiſtory intreating of this matter reporteth thus, that the King had at this time under him evil Subſtitutes, and covetous Officers: who attending more to their own gain than to the public Honour and Commodity of the Realm, left the King deſtitute and naked of money. With which Crime alſo John Stratford then Archbiſhop of Canterbury was vehemently noted and ſuſpected; whether of his true deſerving, or by the ſetting on of other, hereafter ſhall more appear. Inſomuch that the King ardently incenſed againſt him, charged him with great falſhood uſed againſt his Perſon, as by theſe his Letters written and directed to the Dean and Chapter of Pauls againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, manifeſtly appeareth; the tenor of which Letter here followeth under written.

Covetous Officers.

John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Edward by the Grace of God King of England and France and Lord of Ireland, To his welbeloved in Chriſt the Dean and Chapter of the Church of S. Paul in London, greeting in the Lord.

IT is manifeſt by ancient Hiſtories, but more plainly it appeareth by thoſe things which daily are practiſed amongſt us, that many men abuſing (through pride) the

The King's Letter to the Dean and Chapter of Pauls.

KING Ed. 3. the favour of Princes, and honour beſtowed upon them, have malicioufly gone about to deprave the laudable endeavour of Kings. And now that the words which we ſpeak may be more manifeſt unto our ſubjects; we ſuppoſe that neither you nor they have forgotten, that we being eſtabliſhed in our Kingly Throne in younger years, and coveting even then to guide this our Regal charge taken upon us with wholeſome counſels, have called upon us John the Biſhop of Wincheſter, now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whom we ſuppoſed for his fidelity and diſcretion to exceed others: whoſe counſel in matters appertaining unto the health of our ſoul, as in matters alſo reſpecting the augmenting and conſervation of our Kingdom, both ſpiritually and temporally we uſed, and he was received of us into all familiarity. We found in him alſo ſuch humanity, that he was ſaluted by the name of Father, and of all next unto the King had in honour. Now afterwards when by right of Succeſſion the Kingdom of France ſhould have deſcended unto us, and was by violent injury by the Lord Philip of Valois holden from us; the ſaid Archbiſhop by his importune inſtancy perſwaded us to enter league of amity with the Princes of Almain againſt the ſaid Philip, and to commit our ſelf and ours unto the hazard of wars; promiſing and affirming that he would bring to paſs, that the revenues of our lands, and other helps by him deviſed, ſhould ſuffice abundantly for the maintenance of our ſaid wars; Adding moreover that our only care ſhould be for the furniture of ſtrong and able Souldiers, ſuch as were fit for the purpoſe, and expert in warfare; for the reſt he himſelf would effectually procure, for money convenient to ſuffice our neceſſity, and the charges thereof. Whereupon (intending great exploits) we conveyed our Army beyond the Seas, and with marvellous great charges (as behoved) we ſet forward; we became alſo bound in great ſums of money, making ſure account of the aid aforeſaid promiſed unto us. But alas, unhappy is that man that repoſeth confidence in mans deceitful ſtaff of brittle reed; whereunto (as ſaith the Prophet) if a man lean, it breaketh and pierceth the hand. Thus being defrauded of our long looked for Subſidy, for very neceſſity ſake we were conſtrained to take upon us importable charges of debts by grievous uſury. And ſo our expedition being ſtayed, we were compelled to retire into England, deſiſting from our enterprizes ſo valiantly begun. Now when we were returned into England, we laid before our Archbiſhop our manifold calamities and misfortunes before rehearſed, and thereupon called a Parliament; wherein the Prelates, Noblemen, and other the faithful ſubjects of our Dominions, granted unto us a new ſubſidy of Corn, Lamb, Wool, &c. beſides the tenth granted by the Clergy; which Subſidy (if it had been faithfully collected and obtained in due time) had greatly availed for the expedition of our ſaid wars, the payment of our debts, and confuſion of our enemies. Our ſaid Archbiſhop promiſed diligently to do his endeavour, as well in collecting the ſame, as alſo in procuring other neceſſaries to ſerve to our purpoſe: Whereupon truſting unto theſe fair promiſes, having all things in a readineſs, both men and furniſhed Ships, we made Sail towards Flanders, and by the way upon the dangerous Seas buckled with our enemies (ſworn to the deſtruction of our Engliſh Nation) of whom we triumphed and were Victors, not by our merits (their multitude far exceeding ours) but by the merciful clemency of him that ruleth both Wind and Sea. Which being done, we paſſed from thence with a mighty power for the recovery of our right, and pitched our Tents near unto the puiſſant City of Tourney; where being detained for a time in the ſiege thereof, and wearied with continual toil, our charges ſtill increaſing, awaiting with ſilence our promiſed aid; day by day we hoped from our Archbiſhop to receive ſuccour in theſe our ſo great neceſſities. At length being fruſtrate of all conceived hope, we ſignified unto our ſaid Archbiſhop, and other his adherents, by divers Meſſengers, and ſundry Letters, our great neceſſity and perils which we were in for lack of the ſaid Subſidy granted unto us. We added alſo the utility and honour, which we ſaw might be atchieved if we had received money in time. All this notwithſtanding we received from them no ſuccour at all; for that preferring their private buſineſs and proper commodities, they cloaked their ſloth, or rather (as I may call it) their fraud and malice with vain excuſes, and painted gloſing words, like unto the deceitful, which (as ſaith Eſay) uſe to deride with theſe words, Manda remanda, &c.

By means whereof (alas for ſorrow) it came to paſs, that whiles good hope of ſubduing our enemies graciouſly ſmiled upon us, we were conſtrained (penury prevailing againſt us) to take truce to our ſhame, the hinderance of our expedition, and no ſmall rejoicing of our evil willers; and ſo we returned into Flanders all void of money, oppreſſed with infinite debts, neither had we in our Treaſuries wherewith to diſcharge our neceſſities, nor yet to pay our Souldiers wages: inſomuch that we were compelled to enter into the devouring gulf of uſury, and to ſuſtain on our ſhoulders great burthens of debts, heap upon heap. This being done, our faithful friends, companions in wars, and partakers of our tribulations came unto us, with whom we conſulted diligently by what means we might beſt deliver our ſelves from this dangerous ſtorm of evil fortune. They all agreed, affirming certainly, that the protracting of our wars, and cauſe of our manifold neceſſity happened unto us through the fault and negligence (or rather the malice) of the ſaid Archbiſhop (upon whoſe diſcretion the diſpoſition of the whole Kingdom ſeemed to depend) and other Officers whom we had adjoyned in counſel with him touching the affairs of our Kingdom; vehemently ſwearing and murmuring amongſt themſelves (for that we had left ſo long uncorrected the inſolency of the Biſhops and other Officers) that if remedy in theſe caſes were not had with ſpeed, they would withdraw themſelves from our Allegiance, and the Covenant which they had ſworn unto; to the utter ſubverſion of our Kingdom, and perpetual ignominy, and the everlaſting ſhame of our Engliſh Nation, which God our moſt merciful Father forbid ſhould come to paſs in our days, in whom is fixed immoveably the anchor of our hope. Whereupon intending the due correction of our Officers, we removed from Offices (as ſeemed good to our Wiſdom) divers perſons whom we ſuſpected in cauſes evident, of evil adminiſtration of juſtice, of ſubverſion, and oppreſſion of our ſubjects, of corruption, of bribes, and other heinous offences. Others alſo of inferior degree offending in the premiſſes, we cauſed to be detained in ſafe cuſtody; leſt by their liberty, juſtice might be troden under foot, and the inquiſition of the truth concerning the premiſes not to come to light. Foraſmuch therefore as the knowledg of the truth in theſe caſes might of none more certainly be known, than from the ſecret breſt of our foreſaid Archbiſhop, for that nothing pertaining to our information ought to lye hid from him, unto whom of ſo long a time had been committed the adminiſtration of our whole Commonweal, and ſum of our buſineſs: We ſent unto him our faithful ſubject Nicolas de Cantilupe with ſpecial Commandments from us, that all delays ſet apart he ſhould forthwith make his perſonal appearance before us at our City of London. But he (as one always timorous as well in proſperity as in adverſity, and fearing where no fear was) untruly alledgeth that ſome of our aſſiſtants had threatned him, and laid wait for his life, if at any time he departed from the Church of Canterbury, which (God we take to witneſs, and a pure conſcience) we never meant nor any of our aſſiſtants.

Archbiſhop of Canterbury falſe to the King.

Evil Officers diſplaced by the King.

We ſuppoſe he touched thereby our Couſin, although to all other, as well of the Clergy as Commonalty through his malicious miſdemeanors he was become odious.

Archbiſhop of Cant. odious to all the Clergy.

Wherefore intending the ſafeguard of our ſubjects by Letters, or otherwiſe called before us, we appointed our truſty and welbeloved Ralfe Stafford our Harbinger, to offer unto him ſafe conduct, and moreover to preſent unto him our Letters Patents under our ſeal; willing and commanding him thereby again Perſonally to come before us, that we might be informed what of ſo long a time he had done touching the affairs of the Kingdom. Whereunto contemning our commandment and gentle requeſt, he anſwereth, that neither he would in perſon appear, neither yet in any matter confer with us, except it were in a full Parliament, which for divers reaſonable cauſes could not then be called. Thus may you ſee this Archbiſhop, whom our Royal benignity had amplified with large honours, admitted into all familiarity, received into the bond of unanimity and friendſhip, upon whom as on a Father our whole hope did conſiſt (who ſo long as we accompliſhed his will in all things, pretended towards us a face of counterfeit love, cloaked with diſſembling benevolence, even as though he had been a loving Father) how cruelly againſt reaſon he hath now forſaken us, requiting benefits with ingratitude, oppreſſing his benefactor with the arrogancy of fear; and finally (according to the vulgar Proverb) rewarded us as a Horſe in a Satchell, a Snake in a mans boſom, and fire cheriſheth next the skin, rewardeth their receivers. When we were firſt exalted unto the Throne of our Kingdom, deſcended unto us by right of inheritance (Gods Divine Providence ſo working) we thought, and always think it a deteſtable thing to abuſe ſo high authority, but rather deſire to govern with clemency, lenity, and moderation of juſtice, that peace, of all men deſired, might firmly take place.

The Archb. of Cant. denieth to come to the King.

The Archb. charged with diſſembling, and ingratitude.

The Archb. defamer of the King.

Nevertheleſs, our ſaid Archbiſhop hath gone about to defame our innocency, and the fidelity and diligence of our faithful Counſellors, proſecutors of true juſtice; openly declaring in his Letters Patents, and publiſhing abroad in divers places, that he was oppreſſed by the Kings power contrary to juſtice; the Clergy and Commonalty confounded, and the Church over-charged with divers grievous Taxes and Exactions. He ſubtilly uſurped the name of a good Paſtor, when indeed he was nothing leſs, but rather (as it ſhould ſeem by his own confeſſion, and the common opinion had of him) a very hireling. He cloaked his crafty ſubtilneſs with the zeal of defending the Church, although he himſelf in very deed was the only cauſe, by his evil counſel and crafty devices, of the tribulation of the ſame. He alſo fained that not long ago, certain writings were brought unto him to be ſealed, containing in effect the defence and excuſation of all ſuch in general that were violaters of the Liberties of the Church: hoping thereby to defame the opinion had of us and our faithful Counſellors, to ſtir up ſedition amongſt the people, and finally to withdraw from us the hearts of our Nobility. He gave commandment by his Letters, that theſe things ſhould be proclaimed in all places of great reſort by divers ſpecial articles contrary to his former order in his Provincial Council. Wherefore reſpecting the integrity of our fame, intending to prevent the malice of the ſaid Archbiſhop, and alſo to decline from us the ſnares prepared for us and ours; we have thought good at this preſent (over and beſides thoſe which before are rehearſed) amongſt ſo many which we omit, to declare unto you ſome of his perverſe and wicked acts. When in our minority we were conſtituted over our Dominions, he cauſed us through his unadviſed counſel and raſh perſwaſion (thereby to win exceſſive favour) to give away ſo many waſtful gifts, and ſo many unlawful alienations, that now by means thereof our Treaſury is clean conſumed, the revenues of our Exchequer without all order diminiſhed, and he corrupted with bribes innumerable. Oftentimes alſo without cauſe why, when neither neceſſity nor utility ſo required, only through his perſwaſion, we forgave divers men great ſums of money due unto us, yea and the rents and revenues which ought to have been conſerved for our neceſſity and profit, we applied to the uſe of his friends, largely beſtowing upon ſuch as evil deſerved it. Moreover (accepting as well perſons as money) contrary to our mind, and his Oath of fidelity made unto us; he admitted unto publick offices throughout our Dominions perſons unworthily, neglecting thoſe that had well deſerved. Many other things he raſhly took in hand, to the detriment of our ſtate, the hurt of our dignity Royal, and no ſmall damage of our ſubjects, by abuſing his authority and office committed unto him. But if he perſiſt in his proud obſtinacy and ſtout rebellion, we ſhall hereafter in convenient time and place, cauſe it to be more openly known; willing and commanding you to publiſh and cauſe to be publiſhed, all and ſingular the premiſſes openly and diſtinctly in places where you ſhall think it expedient, and to ſet forth (as ſhall ſeem beſt to your godly wiſdoms) our good intent for the ſuppreſſing of incommodities, and furthering of the commodities of our ſubjects, that we may worthily commend your circumſpect care herein.

The Archb. abuſeth his Office.

Teſte me ipſo apud Weſtm. 10, die Februar. Anno Regni noſtri Angliæ 15, Regni vero Franciæ ſecundo.

By theſe foreſaid objections and accuſations of the King premiſed, and laid againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; what is to be thought of the doings of the ſaid Archbiſhop, I leave it to thy judgment, gentle Reader, (as I ſaid before) to be conjectured: For ſo much as our Hiſtories ſomewhat bearing with the ſaid Archbiſhop, ſeem either to be uncertain of the truth of the matter, or elſe covertly to diſſemble ſome part of that they knew. And eſpecially of Polydore Virgil I marvel, who having ſo good occaſion to touch the matter, doth ſo ſlightly paſs it over without any word of mention. In which matter, if probable conjecture (beſides Hiſtory) might here be heard, it is not unlike but that ſome old practice of Prelates hath herein been put in ure, through ſome crafty conſpiracy between the Pope and the Archbiſhop. And the rather it is to be gathered, for that as the Pope was enemy unto the King in this his challenge to the Crown of France; ſo the Archbiſhop againſt his Prince (as for the moſt part always they have been) was a friend, as no man need to doubt thereof, unto the Pope. Which thing alſo more probably may be ſuppoſed, becauſe of the coming down of the two Cardinals the ſame time, from the Pope to the King of England, about the matter of further Truce; whereof (Chriſt willing) more hereafter ſhall follow. Albeit the Archbiſhop (this yet notwithſtanding) ſubtilly and featly excuſeth himſelf to the King of the foreſaid objections, and cunningly handleth the matter in words by his Letter directed to the King as followeth.

The Letter of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to the King.

The Letter of the Archbiſhop to the King.

'REdoubted Sir, may it pleaſe your Majeſty to underſtand, that the moſt chief and ſpecial thing that 'keeps Kings and Princes in the favour of God, and beſt 'preſerveth them in their eſtate is ſage, wiſe, and deliberate 'counſel. And therefore ſaith the wiſe man concerning 'counſel in this wiſe, Good men have thereby their ſafety. 'And it is written in the Book of Kings, how Solomon, 'which was the wiſeſt Prince that ever was, took unto 'him the moſt ancient and ſage men of his Realm to be 'his Counſellors; by whoſe adviſement and diſcretion, he 'always kept the land of Iſrael in quiet and in peace, and 'beſides that, had all other Kings and Princes that bordered 'upon him at his will and commandment. After whoſe 'death raigned Roboboam his Son, who neglecting the good 'counſel of his Father, and good advice of his ſage and 'diſcreet Counſellors, hearkened to ſuch counſel as lighter 'and younger men perſwaded him unto, that ſought rather how to pleaſe and flatter him, than the quiet eſtate of 'his Realm; whereby he loſt all the whole land of Iſrael, 'the twelfth part only excepted. In like manner have 'many Kings of Iſrael, and other Kingdoms beſide, by 'raſh and evil counſel come to great ruin and miſchief. 'And Sir, (ſaving your Princely patience) you may call to 'remembrance your own time; for by the wicked and miniſter counſel to our late Soveraign Lord your Father 'given (whom God forgive) which he took and followed, 'both againſt the Law of his land, and grand Charter of 'the Peers, and other his people of the land; ſome he put 'to ſhameful death; from otherſome he took their goods; 'and ſuch as fled he put unto their ranſome, and what 'enemies he purchaſed thereby, your Grace well underſtandeth. And after this, Sir, you know, even in your 'own time, how by following and believing over-light 'counſel, you your ſelf loſt the hearts of many of your 'ſubjects, from the which God deliver you, if it be his 'will. And after that time again until now, by the good 'adviſement of your Prelates, Peers, and ſage Counſellors 'of your land, your Graces buſineſs and affairs have been 'ſo demeaned and ordered; that you have had the hearts 'again of all your ſubjects, as well Spiritual as Temporal; 'as much or rather more, than any of your Graces Predeceſſors, Kings of England have had. So that by means 'of the ſaid good counſel, the good will and aid of your 'people, and ſpecial grace of God, you have had the victory of all your enemies, as well in Scotland as in France, 'and all other places beſides; that unto this day (Gods 'name be bleſſed therefore) your Grace hath been eſteemed 'as one of the moſt noble Princes in all Chriſtendom. And 'now your Grace (by the evil and perverſe counſel of ſome 'ſuch within the Realm which are not ſo wiſe as they 'might be, and ſuch alſo as conſider and reſpect rather 'their own private commodity, than your Graces honour 'and ſafety of your Realm) beginneth to apprehend divers 'Clerks, Peers, and other people of the land, and to direct 'proceſs againſt them, not beſeeming, but contrary to the Good Counſellors neceſſary about a King.

Law

{KING Edw. 3.} 'Law of the land, which to keep and maintain you are 'bound by the Oath you took at your Coronation; and 'contrary to the Grand Charter, whereof all the Realm 'are witneſſes, and all the Prelates of the ſame, and con- 'trary to the ſentence confirmed by the Bull of our holy 'Father the Pope, which we have to ſhew. All which 'things as they are to the great peril and danger of your 'ſoul; ſo are they alſo to the utter debating of your Re- 'gal ſtate and honour. And Sir, although ſuch as be your 'Graces Governours and Counſellors (being a calling above 'their degree) do give your Grace to underſtand that their 'enterpriſes and yours do pleaſe and content your ſubjects 'and commons; yet your Grace ſhall know for certain, 'and prove it your own ſelf to be far otherwiſe, than they 'bear you in hand. And that unleſs God do remedy the 'ſame, if you proſecute your purpoſe begun in this order, 'you will loſe the hearts of all your ſubjects, as alſo your 'good and rightful enterpriſe; and ſhall ſee ſuch diſcord 'about the ſame, that you ſhall not be able to perform that 'you have begun, but rather inforce your enemies to ſeek 'your deſtruction, to loſe your noble and renowned fame, 'and in the end your Kingdom it ſelf, which God forbid. Wherefore Soveraign Lord and King, I beſeech you that for the ſafeguard of your Honour and Realm, and enter- priſe begun, you will take unto you the moſt diſcreet and wiſeſt men within your Realm, and work by their ad- vice and counſel, as before this time you have been ac- 'cuſtomed; without the aid and counſel of whom you can 'neither maintain your enterpriſe, nor govern your Realm. 'And for that ſome ſuch as are about your Grace falſely 'deviſe againſt us treaſon and ſuch like troubles (and there- 'fore are of us Excommunicate, and as perſons Excom- 'municate we do eſteem of them) as your Spiritual Paſtor, 'we alſo deſire you ſo to eſteem and think of them; which alſo make like report of other that have been with your 'Grace beyond the Seas, that they have naughtily and falſly 'ſerved you, whereby you have loſt the Town of Tourney, 'and much honour elſe, which you might have won and 'gotten there. May it pleaſe your Grace to call before you 'the Prelates and Peers of your Realm in ſome convenient 'place, where we and other moe may ſafely come and re- 'ſort, and there alſo to make ſearch and inquiry, in whoſe 'hands, after the beginning of your wars, the money, and 'what things elſe ſoever, which was granted unto you in 'aid of the ſame your wars, until this preſent day, doth re- 'main and is not laid out again, as alſo by whoſe default you were ſo inforced to leave the ſaid ſiege of Tourney; 'and that thoſe which ſhall be found in any point faulty 'and guilty therein againſt you, as a good juſticer, your 'Grace will cauſe to be puniſhed according to the Law; 'and inſomuch as appertaineth unto us therein, we ask 'judgment of our Peers (the ſtate always of holy Church, 'of us, and of our Order reſerved inviolate) according as we have written unto you herein. And for Gods ſake, Sir, believe not either of us, or any other your true ſubjects elſe, more than that you ſhall underſtand the verity of; for if men ſhould be puniſhed without making anſwer to that which is objected againſt them, there ſhould be then no difference in judgment betwixt the good doer and the bad.

Excommunication in his own private cauſe abuſed.

'And Sir, may it pleaſe you well to conſider of the great enterpriſe you have in hand, the great good will which you have need of for this cauſe, and of our great enemies the Scots, and the great jeopardy of your Realm beſides. For if your Prelates, your Nobles, and all the wiſe men of your Realm were of one mind and will (without any diſcord or diviſion amongſt them) to diſpoſe and ſet in order thoſe things which are needful in ſo great affairs and buſineſs; they ſhould have all enough to beat their heads about, for the maintenance of your great enterpriſe begun, the honour of you, and ſafeguard of your Realm. And Sir, may it pleaſe your Grace, not to be diſpleaſed that ſo rudely and groſly we declare unto you the verity; for why, the great love and affection which we bear unto you, and always have done the ſame, the preſervation of your Honour, and ſafeguard of your Realm, as alſo for that we are (although unworthy) the Primate of the whole Realm of England, which thing appertaining un- to us by our office (and we being your Spiritual Father) doth incite us the rather both to ſay and command that which may turn to the benefit of your ſoul, and profit of your Realm and Kingly eſtate. Thus the Holy Spirit ſave 'you both body and ſoul, and give your Grace both to hear 'and believe good counſel, and further, give you victory over 'all your enemies. Written at Cant. the firſt of Janu. By 'your Graces Chaplain the Archbiſhop of the ſame.

The return of the Kings Army from Tourney.

And thus ſtood the caſe between the King and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who coming thus (as is ſaid) in ſecretwiſe into England from the Siege of Tourney, his Army in the mean while by Ships was conveyed to Little-Britain. Of whom a great number through unſeaſonable and inconvenient meats and drinks, was there conſumed. To whom alſo no leſs danger happened by the Seas, coming out of Britain into England by Tempeſt, Thunder and Lightning ſtirred up as is thought, by the Necromances of the French King.

{Anno 1341.} About which ſeaſon approaching to the year of our Lord 1341, were ſent from the Pope two other Cardinals to Entreat with King Edward for three years Truce more to be concluded with the French King, beſides the former Truce taken before for one year, and all by the Popes means. For here is to be underſtood, that as it was not for the Popes purpoſe to have the King of England to raign over ſo many Countries, ſo his privy ſupportation lacked not by all means poſſible, both by the Archbiſhops and Cardinals, and alſo by the Emperor, to maintain the ſtate of the French King, and to ſtabliſh him in his poſſeſſions. Ex Thom. Walſing. Ex Chron. Albanenſ.

Truce taken for three years between King Edward and the French King.

In the ſaid Hiſtories where theſe things be mentioned, it is alſo noted, that the ſame year ſuch plenty there was here in the Realm of victuals, that a Quarter of Wheat was ſold for 2 s. a fat Ox for a Noble, and as ſome ſay, a Sheep for 4 d. And thus far endureth the Hiſtory of Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis, called Polychronicon.

{Anno 1342.} The next year following, which was 1342, Ludovicus Bavarus the Emperor, who before had ſhewed great courteſie to King Edward, in his firſt Voyage over, inſomuch that he made him his Vicar or Vicegerent General, and offered him alſo aid againſt the French King; now (either turned by inconſtancy, or ſeduced by the Pope) writeth to him contrary Letters, wherein he revoketh again the Vicegerentſhip granted to him, and ſeeketh all means in the favour of the French King, againſt King Edward, as by his Letters here under-written may better appear.

The Letter of the Emperor unto the KING of ENGLAND.

'Ludovicus by the Grace of God Empeſor of the Romans always Auguſtus, &c. To Edward King of 'England, his beloved Brother, Greeting and unfained love. 'Although great and urgent buſineſs of our own do op- 'preſs us, and about the ſame our weighty affairs we are 'daily incumbred, yet with the diſcord and variance be- 'tween your Kingly dignity and the renowned Philip the 'King of France our Couſin, for your ſake, we are not a 'little troubled. And the rather, the great charges which 'may hereafter grow both to you and to your Kingdom 'thereby conſidered, both of men and money, unleſs the 'ſame be taken up, doth more eaſily provoke us to give 'our ſelf to the careful ſtudy of your affairs. Wherefore 'we give you to underſtand that the foreſaid Philip (at our 'requeſt) hath given unto us by his Letters authority and 'power to intreat and conclude a peace between you, 'touching the variance begun: which peace (all the ſtate 'diligently conſidered both of your ſelf, your Kingdom 'and ſubjects) we take and believe to be right expedient 'for you; moving therewithal your charity, and earneſtly 'deſiring you, that to this alſo you will give your conſent; 'whereby we may bring you both to concord and unity, 'and eſtabliſh between you a firm peace to endure, where- 'unto with willing mind we would apply our ſelf, and be- 'ſtow our painful labour in proſecuting of the ſame. And 'herein if you will condeſcend and agree unto our counſel, 'as we truſt you will; it may pleaſe you by your Letters 'to give unto us the like authority as is above ſaid, to in- 'treat peace or ordering of a Truce for one year or two at 'leaſt to continue. Neither let it move you, that between 'us and the ſaid Philip of France a Truce is taken. For ſee- 'ing that you without our conſent took Truce with him: 'we by the adviſe of our Princes which know the bonds, 'deeds, and Covenants betwixt us, who alſo though no

'leſs, but that ſaving your honour we might do the ſame; 'have alſo made a league with the ſaid Philip King of 'France; and for certain cauſes do revoke and call back 'the Lieutenantſhip which we aſſigned unto you by our 'Letters. Nevertheleſs, giving you for a certain to under-'ſtand that in our ſaid Treaties and peace concluded, we 'have ſo brotherly conſidered you, that if you will agree 'and condeſcend unto our counſel; your cauſe (by our 'mean, and help) ſhall be brought to good paſs and effect. 'About which things further to confer with your Brother-'hood herein, we have ſent a devout and religious man, 'Eliarhardus, Reader and Brother of the Heremites of 'Saint Auguſtine, and Chaplain of our Court; whom 'about the premiſſes we deſire with ſpeedy expedition to 'be ſent unto us again.

'Dated at Francford the 14*th* day of June, in the 24*th* 'year of our Raign, and 14*th* of our Empire.

The anſwer of the King of England, to the Emperor.

TO the High and Mighty Prince Lord Ludovick, by the Grace of God, Emperor of the Romans, always 'Auguſtus, Edward by the ſame Grace King of France, 'and England, and Lord of Ireland, Salutation and proſ-'perous ſucceſs.

'We have reverently received your Highneſs Letters, a-'mongſt other things containing, that the Noble Philip de 'Valois (to the intent a peace and concord between us and 'him might be concluded) hath given unto you by his Let-'ters full power and authority thereunto at your Highneſs 'requeſt; and that if the ſame might content us to do in 'like ſort, your Highneſs would travel to bring the con-'cord to paſs; and that it would not move us any whit 'at all, that your Highneſs and the ſaid Philip are in League 'together: For inſomuch as we without your aſſent and 'conſent (you ſay) took Truce with the ſaid Philip, you 'have alſo done the like with him (which thing you might 'well do ſaving your honour, by the counſel of all your 'Nobles and Princes) and for certain cauſes you revoke a-'gain the Lieutenantſhip which you committed unto us. 'Doubtleſs the zeal and good will you have to make this 'concord and agreement, we much commend; letting 'you to underſtand that we always have been deſirous, and 'ſtill are, to have a reaſonable peace with the ſaid Philip; 'which peace as much as to us (our honour ſaved) apper-'tained, we have in juſtice and by law proſecuted; and in 'very deed, it ſhould be to us acceptable, and as we would 'wiſh, if by ſuch a Mediator as your celſitude is, it might 'be brought to paſs. But foraſmuch as we underſtand the 'ſame our right and title to the Kingdom of France to be 'manifeſt and clear enough; we purpoſe not to commit 'the ſame by any of our Letters to doubtful arbitrement. 'But while we well conſider and revolve with our ſelves, 'how upon circumſpect conſideration (you manifeſtly be-'holding our juſt and rightful doing, and the ſtrait deal-'ing and obſtinate purpoſe and injury of the ſaid Philip) 'your gracious Highneſs made a ſpecial League with us, 'and in our behalf againſt the ſaid Philip, adopting us of 'your great and bountiful love towards our Perſon to be 'one of your Sons; wherefore you ſhould thus again alter 'and break the ſame, we cannot ſufficiently marvel: See-'ing your invincible Highneſs being inſtituted of God to 'the aid and commendation of good men, and revenge 'of evil and wicked doers, hath made a League againſt 'us with the ſaid Philip de Valois, our notorious and in-'jurious enemy. And as touching that which you ſay, with-'out your aſſignment and conſent we took a Truce, or 'days of reſpite with the ſaid Philip, which we ought not 'to have done; if your Grace well conſider the circum-'ſtance of the matter, we have done but as we might 'therein. For when we laid our ſiege to Tourney, it was 'requiſite that we ſhould follow their advice, whoſe aid 'and ſociety therein we had. Beſides the ſudden and emi-'nent neceſſity which we there ſtood in, and the diſtance 'of the place betwixt your Highneſs and us furthermore 'was ſuch, as that by no means we might attain the ſame, 'nor uſe your aſſent therein. Yea and further, if your Grace 'well remember your ſelf, your grant unto us was ſuch, 'that whenſoever opportunity thereunto ſhould ſerve, we 'might intreat of any peace, and grant what time we 'thought meet thereunto, without your conſent therein: 'So that to conclude any final peace with the ſaid Philip 'de Valois, without either your conſent, or otherwiſe ma-'king your Highneſs privy thereunto, it might not be law-'ful for us; which thing without your ſaid counſel, conſent 'and advice, we never minded or purpoſed to do, but have 'in all our doings done that which us beſeemed, ſo far as 'by any means our power would ſtretch; hoping likewiſe 'that your brotherly benevolence for a time would have 'more lovingly ſupported us." It is thought alſo by ſome, 'that the revoking back again, or reſtraint of your foreſaid 'Lieutenantſhip, was prematurate or done all out of time, 'when as according to your promiſe made to us herein, by 'your Letters Imperial, you ought not ſo to have done be-'fore the Realm and Kingdom of France (or at the leaſt 'the greateſt part thereof) were of us obtained and quietly 'in peaceable wiſe enjoyed. Theſe things premiſed there-'fore we deſire you according to your Nobility, duly to 'conſider, and hereafter to do that which ſhall be thought 'both meet and convenient, becauſe that (God willing) 'we mean to recompence and gratifie both you and yours, 'according to the meaſure of your benevolence beſtowed 'upon us. The Almighty grant unto your celſitude ſo 'much felicity as your heart deſireth.

'Dated at London the 18*th* day of July, in the ſecond 'year of the Raign of our Kingdom of France, and of 'England the 15*th*.

[KING Edw. 3]

In this mean time died Pope Benedict the Twelfth, mentioned a little before; after whom ſucceeded in that room Pope Clement the Sixth. Of whom it is reported in Stories, that he was very liberal and bountiful to his Cardinals of Rome, enriching and heaping them with goods and poſſeſſions, not of his own, but with the Eccleſiaſtical Dignities and Preferments of the Churches of England. For ſo recordeth the Author, that he beſtowed upon his Cardinal the Livings and Promotions, ſuch as were or ſhould be vacant in the Churches of England, and went about to ſet up new Titles for his Cardinals, here within this Realm. But the King being offended therewith, made void and fruſtrate all thoſe foreſaid proviſions of the Pope; charging moreover and commanding that no perſon whatſoever ſhould buſie himſelf with any ſuch proviſions, under pain of impriſonment and loſing his life. Which Law was made the next year following, which was Anno 1344.

Pope Clement the 6.

Ex Chron. Eccleſ.

The King diſanulleth the Popes proviſions.

It followeth then that the ſaid Pope Clement again began to make new proviſions for two of his Cardinals, of Benefices and Churches that ſhould be next vacant, beſides Biſhopricks and Abbotſhips, to the extent of two thouſand Marks. Whereupon the Procurators of the ſaid Cardinals were ſent down for the ſame. But the King and Nobility of the Realm not ſuffering that under pain of impriſonment cauſed the ſaid Procurators forthwith to depart the Realm, whereupon the Nobles and Commons ſhortly after writ a fruitful Epiſtle to the Pope, for the liberties and maintenance of the Engliſh Church. Whereunto, as ſaith the Author, the Pope and the Cardinals were not able to anſwer. The argument and tenor of which Letter, out of French, we have cauſed to be tranſlated into Engliſh, as enſueth.

The Popes Procurators driven out of England.

The Letter of the King of England, and Nobles of the ſame, to the Pope, againſt the reſervations and proviſions which he had in England.

TO the moſt Holy Father in God, Lord Clement, by the Grace of God, of the holy Church of Rome, and 'of the Univerſal Church, chief and high Biſhop; his 'humble and devout Children, the Princes, Dukes, Earls, 'Barons, Knights, Citizens, Burgeſſes, and all the Com-'monalty of the Realm of England, aſſembled at the Par-'liament holden at Weſtminſter the fifteenth day of May 'laſt paſt: Devout kiſſings of his holy feet, with all hum-'ble reverence and humility. Moſt holy Father, the holy 'diſcretion, government and equity which appeareth to be 'in you, and ought of duty ſo to be (being ſo high and holy 'a Prelate, and head of the holy Church) by whom the 'holy Univerſal Church and people of God ought to be 'as by the Sun-beams enlightened, giveth us good hope and 'likelihood, that the juſt petitions (to the honour of

A Letter of the Nobles and Commons of England to the Pope.

Jeſus

{KING Edw.3} 'Jesus Christ and holy Church, and your Holiness also) by 'us declared, shall be of you graciously heard and consider- 'ed; And that all errors and other iniquities should be quite 'taken away and removed; in stead whereof, fruitful ex- 'ploits and necessary remedies (by the grace of the holy Spi- 'rit which you in so high an estate have received) may be by 'you likewise graciously ordained and disposed. Wherefore 'most holy Father, all we (upon great deliberation and com- 'mon assent) come unto your Holiness, shewing and declaring 'that the noble Kings of England our Progenitors, our An- 'cestors, and we (according to the grace of the holy Spirit 'to them and us given, every one according to his devoti- 'on) have established, founded and endowed within the 'Realm of England, Churches, Cathedrals, Colledges, Ab- 'bies, Priories, and other divers houses of Religion in the 'same ordained; and to the Prelates and Governors of the 'same places, have given Lands, Possessions, Patrimonies, 'Franchises, Advowsons, and Patronages of Dignities, Re- 'venues, Offices, Churches, with many and divers other Be- 'nefices unto them given; whereby the service of God and 'faith of Christ might have been honoured and had in reve- 'rence, that the Hospitals and Alms-houses that are made, 'with all the Churches and Edifices, might be honestly kept 'and maintained, and that devout prayers might in those 'places be made for the Founders, and the poor Parishio- 'ners aided and comforted. And such only ought to have 'the Cure thereof, as are able to hear Confessions; and in 'their own natural Tongue are otherwise meet to inform 'and teach their Parishioners. And forsomuch as (most 'holy Father) you cannot well come to the notice of di- 'vers such errors and defaults, neither yet understand the 'condition of the places, being so far off, unless your Holi- 'ness be informed and advertised; We having the perfect 'intelligence and understanding of the said errors and de- 'faults of the places aboveſaid, within the said Realm, have 'thought meet to signifie the same unto your Holiness: 'That divers reservations, provisions and collations by your 'Predecessors Apostolick of Rome, and by you, most holy 'Father, in your time have been granted (and that more 'largely than they have been accustomed to be) unto di- 'vers persons, as well strangers, and of sundry Nations, as 'unto some such as are our enemies having no understand- 'ing at all of the Tongue and conditions of them, of 'whom they have the government and cure. Whereby a 'great number of souls are in peril, a great many of their 'Parishioners in danger, the service of God destroyed, the 'Alms and devotion of all men diminished, the Hospitals 'perished, the Churches with their appurtenances decayed, 'Charity withdrawn, the good and honest persons of our 'Realm unadvanced, the charge and government of souls 'not reguarded, the devotion of the people restrained, ma- 'ny poor Scholars unpreferred, and the treasure of the Realm 'carried out against the minds and intents of the Founders.

Decay of the Church of England by the Pope

'All which errors, defaults and slanders, most holy Father, 'we neither can nor ought to suffer or endure. We there- 'fore most humbly require your Holiness, that the slan- 'ders, errors and defaults, which we have declared unto 'you, may be through your great discretion considered; 'and that it may please you that such reservations, provisi- 'ons and collations may be utterly repelled, that from hence- 'forth the same be no more amongst us used; and to take 'such order and remedy therein, that the said Benefices, E- 'difices, Rights, with their appurtenants, may be to the ho- 'nour of God by our own Countrymen cured, defended 'and governed. And that it may further please your Ho- 'liness by your Letters to signifie unto us, without delay 'and other protract of time, what your pleasure is touching 'this our lawful request and demand; that we may do our 'endeavour with diligence herein for the remedy, correcti- 'on and amendment of those enormities above specified. In 'witness whereof, unto these Letters Patents we have set 'our Seals. Given in the full Parliament at Westminster, the '18*th.* day of May, Anno 1343.

The Popes Message to the King.

After these things thus passed over, the King shortly af- ter sent over his Procurators, the Earl of Lancaster and Darby, Hugh Spenser, Lord Ralph Stafford, with the Bi- shop of Exeter, and divers other, to the Popes Court to dis- cuss and plead about the right of his Title before the Pope. Unto whom the said Pope Clement the 6th. not long after sent down this Message; how that Ludovick Duke of Bavaria the Emperor, whom the Pope had before depos- ed, had submitted himself to him in all things; and there- fore deserved at his hands the benefit of Absolution; and how the Pope therefore had conferred and restored unto him justly and graciously the Empire, which he before un- justly did hold, &c. Which Message when the King did hear, being therewith moved to anger, he answered again, saying, That if he also did agree and compound with the French King, he was ready to fight with them both, &c. Ex Chron. Albanen.

The Kings answer to the Popes message.

Within the time of this year, Pence, Half-pence and Farthings began to be coined in the Tower. And the next year following, which was An. 1344. the Castle of Windsor (where the King was born) began to be repaired; and in the same house called the Round-Table was situate, the diameter whereof, from the one side to the other, contained 200 feet; to the expences of which House Weekly was al- lowed an hundred Pound for the maintaining of the Kings Chivalry, till at length by the occasion of the French Wars, it came down to nine Pounds a Week. By the example whereof the French K. being provoked, he began also the like Round-Table in France, for the maintaining of the Knight- hood. At which time the said French King moreover gave free liberty through his Realm to fell down Trees for mak- ing of Ships and maintaining of his Navy, whereby the Realm of England was not a little damnified.

During the same year the Clergy of England granted to the King Tenths for three years; for the which the King in recompence again granted to them his Charter, con- taining these priviledges, That no Archbishop nor Bishop should be arraigned before his Justices, sive ad sectam suam, sive patris, if the said Clerk do submit and claim his Cler- gy, professing himself to be a Member of holy Church; whoso doing, shall not be bound to come to his answer be- fore the Justices. And if it shall be laid unto them to have married two Wives, or to have married a Widow, the Ju- stices shall have no power to proceed against them, to en- quire of the matter: So that the cause shall be reserved to the Spiritual Court, &c.

Tenths granted to the King by the Cler- gy for three years. Priviledges granted by the K. to the Clergy.

By this it is like that Priests had Wives.

About this present time at the setting up of the Round- Table, the King made Prince Edward, his eldest Son, the first Prince of Wales. All this while yet continued the Truce between the two Kings. Albeit it is likely to be thought that the French King gave many attempts to infringe the same. Whereupon Henry Earl of Lancaster, with 600 Men at Arms, and as many Archers, was sent over to Gascoine, the year after 1345, who there so valiantly is said to have behaved himself, that he subdued 55 Town- ships unto the King, 23 Noblemen he took Prisoners, en- countring with the Frenchmen at Allebroke. So courte- ously and liberally he dealt with the Soldiers, that it was a joy to them, and a preferment to fight underneath him. His manner was in winning any Town, to reserve little or nothing to himself, but to sparse the whole spoil to his Sol- diers. One example in the Authour (whom I follow) is touched; how the foresaid Earl at the winning of the Town of Briers, where he had granted to every Soldier for his Booty, the House with all the implements therein, which he by Victory should obtain; among other his Soldiers, to one named Reb, fell a certain House with the implements thereof, wherein was contained the Mint and Mony coined for that Country, to the value of a great substance; which when the Soldier had found, in breaking up a House where first the gross Metal was not yet perfectly wrought, he came to the Earl declaring to him the Treasure, to know what was his pleasure therein. To whom the Earl answer- ed, That the house was his, and whatsoever he found there- in. Afterward the Soldier, finding a whole Mint of pure Silver ready coined, signified the same to the Earl, forso- much as he thought such Treasure to be too great for his portion; to whom the said Earl, again answering, Declared that he had once given him the whole House, and that he had once given, he would not call back again, as children use to play. And therefore bad him enjoy that which was granted to him; and if the Mony were thrice as much, it should be his own, Ex Chron. Alban. Which Story whether it was true or otherwise in those days, I have not to affirm. But certes, if in these our covetous, wretched days now present, any Author should report the like act to be practised, I would hardly believe it to be true.

Prince Ed- ward, first Prince of Wales.

{Anno 1345.} Henry Earl, after made Duke of Lancaster, sent over to Gascoine.

A rare ex- ample of a liberal Cap- tain to his Soldiers.

The liberal heart and constant voice of a worthy Captain.

The Scots partly a mean of breaking Truce.

As the Earl of Lancaſter was thus occupied in Gaſcoin, the Scots were as buſie here in England, waſting and ſpoiling without mercy; which were thought (and not unlike) to be ſet on by the French King. And therefore he was judged both by that, and by other divers ways to have broken the Covenants of Truce between him and the King of England.

{Anno 1346.} The ſecond voyage of K. Edward into France.

Wherefore the next year enſuing, *An.*1346. King Edward firſt ſending his Letters to the Court of Rome, and therein complaining to the Pope of Philip de Valois, how he tranſgreſſed and broke the Truce between them made, which by evident probations he there made manifeſt; about the Month of July he made his Voyage into Normandy, in ſuch ſecret wiſe, that no Man well knew whether he intended. Where firſt he entred the Town of Hogs, from thence proceeded unto Cardone. Where, about the 27*th.* of July, by the River of Cardone, he had a ſtrong Battel with the Normans and other Frenchmen, which to ſtop his paſſage, defended the Bridge. At the which Battel were taken of the Lords of France, the Earl of Ewe, the Earl of Tankervile; and of Knights with other Men of Arms, to the number of one hundred; of footmen ſix hundred; and the Town and Suburbs beaten down to the hard Walls. And all that could be born away was tranſported to the Ships.

The Battel at Cardone.

A little before, mention was made how the French King began firſt to infringe the Truce taken, and how the Earl of Lancaſter, upon the ſame, was ſent unto Gaſcoine. Now for the more evidence of the matter concerning the falling of the French King from the League, and other his wrongs and untrue dealing, it ſhall better in the Kings Letter appear; who hearing word, that the Lord Philip de Valois (contrary to the form of Truce taken at Vanes) had apprehended certain of his Nobles of England, and had brought them to Paris to be impriſoned and put to death; beſides other ſlaughters and ſpoilings made in Britain, Gaſcoin, and other places more: He therefore ſeeing the Truce to be broken of the French Kings part, and being thereto of neceſſity compelled, in the year above prefixed, the 14*th.* of the Month of June, did publiſh and ſend abroad his Letters of defiance, containing this effect.

The Kings Letters of defiance againſt the French King.

The Kings Letters of defiance againſt the French K.

TO all and ſingular, to whom theſe Preſents ſhall come, publick greeting. We think it is not unknown unto you all, that after the deceaſe of Charles late King of France of famous memory, Brother to our redoubted Lady Mother Queen Iſabel Queen of England; the Crown of France, by juſt inheritance, hath fallen unto us, as to the next Heir Male now living after the ſaid King. Now Philip de Valois, being Son but only to the Uncle of the foreſaid King Charles, and therefore by degree of Conſanguinity being further off removed from the ſame (we being in the time of our minority) hath violently by force and power contrary to God and Juſtice uſurped, occupied, and yet doth occupy the ſame, invading further, and ſpoiling our Lands in the Dukedom of Aquitania, and joyning himſelf with our rebellious enemies the Scots, ſeeking our ſubverſion both by Land and by Sea, to the utter moſt of his endeavour. And although we, to prevent the damages which might riſe by War, have offered to the ſaid Philip divers friendly ways of Peace; to the intent we might better intend our purpoſed Voyage againſt Chriſts enemies the Turks: yet could nothing prevail with him in obtaining any peaceable way of reformation, driving us off by crafty diſſimulation, through falſe pretended words, but performing nothing with heart and deed. Whereupon, we not neglecting the grace and gift of God, to defend the right of our inheritance, and to repulſe the injuries of our enemy, have not refuſed by force of Arms, coming down to Britany, to encounter with him in open field. And ſo we being occupied in our Wars, there repaired unto us the Reverend Father Biſhop of Preveſt, and of Tuſculane Cardinals, and Legates from Pope Clement the 6th. to entreat ſome reformation of peace between us. At whoſe requeſt we conſented, agreeing to ſuch forms and conditions of peace as then were taken between us, ſending moreover our Embaſſadors to the Court of Rome, ſpecially to intreat of the ſame matter. And thus while ſome hope of Truce ſeemed between us to appear; News ſuddenly came unto us, which not a little aſtoniſhed our mind, of the death of certain of our Nobles and Adherents, whom the ſaid Philip unjuſtly and cruelly at Paris commanded to be executed. Beſide the waſting and ſpoiling our Lands and Subjects in Britany, Gaſcony, and other places; with innumerable wrongs and injuries, deceitfully intended againſt us both by Sea and Land. By reaſon whereof, the Truce on his part being notoriouſly broken, it is moſt manifeſt that it had been lawful for us, forthwith to have ſet upon him with open War. Yet notwithſtanding, to avoid thoſe incommodities that come by War, we thought firſt to prove, if by any gentle means ſome reformation might be had touching the premiſſes. And therefore ſundry times, we have ſent Embaſſadors to the Popes preſence for the Treaty of a Peace and Reformation to be had in thoſe aforeſaid exceſſes; requiring alſo, for the tractation thereof, certain terms of times to be appointed, always reſerving to our ſelves notwithſtanding, free liberty to reſume War at our pleaſure, according as the doings of the ſaid Philip ſhall conſtrain us thereunto. And now forſomuch as the foreſaid terms be already expired, and yet no reaſonable offer of peace appeareth, neither will the ſaid Philip come to any conformity, being required and moniſhed notwithſtanding by the Popes Letter thereunto (as the Pope by his Letter hath written unto us) but always hath multiplied his Conſpiracy and Obligations, uſing extremities againſt us; and to omit here to ſpeak of the exceſſive enormity of the Popes Legate, who being ſent by the Biſhop of Rome for the keeping of Truce, and whoſe part had been rather to have quenched and ſtaid the diſcord, hath ſtirred up our enemies more eagerly againſt us. In the which doing, neither hath the Biſhop of Rome (ſaving his reverence) as yet provided any remedy, albeit he hath been divers times required of us ſo to do. Which thing being ſo, we ought to be excuſed both before God and Man, if for the defect of other remedy to be had, we ſhall be conſtrained our ſelves to find remedy againſt ſuch wrongs and injuries; the caſe of juſtice and neceſſity conſtraining us to give out theſe our Letters of defiance againſt the violator of the Truce, and the unjuſt invader of our Kingdom. Proteſting, that this we do, not upon any diſpleaſure to the Biſhop of Rome, or to the Apoſtolick See, but only for the moderation of equity, ſtanding upon the defence of our own right and lawful inheritance, intending always rather to have peace, if by any reaſonable way it might be had. And thus much, for the ſtopping of ſlanderous fame and the mouths of backbiters, We thought good to ſignifie, firſt to the high Biſhop of Rome, and the foreſaid Cardinals; that by them as perſons indifferent, and Mediators, the ſame may be inſinuated to the contrary part; and alſo unto your whole Univerſity in general; recommending unto you all the innocency of my cauſe, and the community of juſtice. Dated at Weſtminſter the 14th. of June, the 19th. year of our Reign in England, and of France the ſixth.

The Legate reth War. Like

And thus much for the Kings Letters. Now let us again return to his paſſage, from whence a little we have digreſſed. Concerning the which paſſage of the King, with the order of his acts atchieved in the ſame, from the winning of Codane or Cardoine, unto the Town of Puſiake, it is ſufficiently deſcribed by one of the Kings Chaplains and his Confeſſor; who being a Dominick Frier, and accompanying the King through all his journey, writeth thereof as followeth:

A Letter of the Kings Confeſſor touching his acts doing at Cardoine.

BEnedicere debemus Deum Cœli, &c. Great cauſe we have to praiſe and laud the God of Heaven, and moſt worthily to confeſs his holy name, who hath wrought ſo his mercy to us. For after the conflict had at Codane, in the which many were ſlain, and the City taken and ſackt even to the bare Walls, the City of Baia immediately yielded it ſelf of his own accord, fearing leſt their counſels had been bewrayed. After this the Lord our King directed his progreſs toward Roan: Who being at the Town of Lexon, there came certain Cardinals to him, greatly exhorting him to peace. Which Cardinals being courteouſly entertained of the King for the reverence of the Popes See, it was thus anſwered to them again; That the King being much

The Cardinals again intreat for peace.

KING Ed. 3. The Kings anſwver to the Cardinals.

deſirous of peace, had aſſaied by all ways and means reaſonable how to maintain the ſame; and therefore hath offered conditions, and manifold ways of peace to be had to the no ſmall prejudice of his own cauſe. And yet is ready to admit any reaſonable offer of peace, if by any means it my be ſought, &c. With this anſwer the Cardinals going to the French King the Kings adverſary, to perſwade with him in like manner, returned to King Edward again, offering to him in the French Kings name, the Dukedom of Aquitania, in as full aſſurance as his father before him ever had it: beſides further hope alſo of obtaining more, if intreaty of peace might be obtained. But forſomuch as that contented not enough the Kings mind, neither did the Cardinals find the French King ſo tractable and propenſe to the ſtudy of peace as they looked for, the Cardinals returned, leaving the matter as they found it. And ſo the King ſpeeding forward, by the way as his journey did lie, he ſubdued the Country and the great Towns, without any reſiſtance of the inhabitants, who did all flee and run away. Such fear God ſtruck into them, that it ſeemed they had loſt their hearts. In the ſame Voyage, as the King had gotten many Towns and Villages, ſo alſo he ſubdued Caſtles and Munitions, very ſtrong, and that with little ſtreſs. His enemy being at the ſame time at Roan had reared a great Army, who notwithſtanding being well manned, yet ever kept on the other ſide of the River Seane, breaking down all the Bridges that we ſhould not come over to him. And although the Country round about continually was ſpoiled, ſackt, and with fire conſumed by the circuit of 20 miles round about; yet the French King, being diſtant ſcarce the ſpace of one mile from us, either would not, or elſe durſt not (when he might eaſily have paſſed over the River) make any reſiſtance for defence of his Country and People. And ſo our King journeying forward, came to Puſiake or Poiſy, where the French King had likewiſe broken down the Bridge, and keeping on the other ſide of the River would reſt in no place.

The French King ſheweth no great ſtudy of peace.

K. coming to Puſiake

After, whoſe coming to Poiſy, the foreſaid Chaplain and Confeſſor to the King, named Michael Northburgh, deſcribing the Kings Voyage, and the acts of the Engliſhmen from the Town of Poiſie, to his coming to Calis, in his Letters writeth in this wiſe.

A Letter of William Northburgh the Kings Confeſſor, deſcribing the Kings Voyage into France.

'SAlutations premiſed, we give you to underſtand, that 'our Sovereign Lord the King came to the Town of 'Poiſie, the day before the Aſſumption of our Lady, where 'was a certain Bridge over the water of Seane, broken 'down of the enemy, but the King tarried there ſo long till 'that the Bridge was made again. And whiles the Bridge 'was in repairing, there came a great number of Men at 'Arms, and other Soldiers armed, to hinder the ſame. But 'the Earl of Northampton iſſued out againſt them and ſlew 'of them more than one thouſand; the reſt fled away, 'thanks be to God. And at another time our Men paſſed 'the Water, although with much travel, and ſlew a great 'number of the common Soldiers of France, about the 'City of Paris, and Country adjoyning, being part of the 'French Kings Army, and thoroughly well appointed; ſo 'that our people have now made other good Bridges upon 'our enemies, God be thanked, without any great loſs 'and damage to us. And on the Morrow after the Aſſump-'tion of our Lady, the King paſſed the water of Seane, and 'marched toward Poiſie, which is a Town of great defence, 'and ſtrongly immured, and a marvellous ſtrong Caſtle 'within the ſame, which our enemies kept. And when our 'Vanguard was paſſed the Town, our Rereguard gave an 'aſſault thereunto, and took the ſame: where were ſlain 'more than three hundred Men at Arms of our enemies 'part. And the next day following, the Earl of Suffolk and 'Sir Hugh Spenſer marched forth upon the Commons of 'the Country aſſembled and well armed, and in fine diſ-'comfited them, and ſlew of them more than 200, and 'took 600 Gentlemen Priſoners, beſide others. And after 'that, the King marched toward Grand Villers, and while 'he was there encamped, the Kings Vanguard was deſcried 'by the Men of Arms by the King Bename; whereupon our 'Men iſſued out in great haſte, and joyned Battel with 'them, but were inforced to retire. Notwithſtanding, 'thanks be unto God, the Earl of Northampton iſſued out, 'and reſcued the Horſemen with other Soldiers; ſo that 'few or none of them were either taken or ſlain, ſaving on-'ly Thomas Talbot, but had again the enemy in chaſe with-'in two Leagues of Amiens, of whom we took 8, and 'ſlew twelve of their beſt Men at Arms; the reſt being well 'horſed, took the Town of Amiens. After this, the King of 'England marched toward Pountiſe upon Bartholomew 'day, and came unto the water of Som, where the French 'King had laid 500 Men at Arms, and three thouſand foot-'men, purpoſing to have kept and ſtopped our paſſage; 'but thanks be to God, the King of England and his Hoſt 'entred the ſame water of Som, where never Man paſſed 'before, without the loſs of any of our Men; and after 'that encountred with the enemy, and ſlew of them 'more than two thouſand; the reſt fled to Abevyle, in 'which chaſe were taken many Knights, Squires, and Men 'at Arms. The ſame day Sir Hugh Spenſer took the Town 'of Croylay, where he and his Soldiers ſlew 400 Men at 'Arms, and kept the Town, where they found great ſtore 'of Victuals. The ſame night encamped the King of Eng-'land in the Foreſt of Creſſy upon the ſame water, for that 'the French Kings Hoſt came on the other ſide of the Town 'near unto our paſſage; but he would not take the water 'of us, and ſo marched toward Abevyle. And upon the Fri-'day next following, the King being ſtill encamped in the 'ſaid Foreſt, our Scuriers deſcried the French King, which 'marched toward us in four great Battels. And having then 'underſtanding of our enemies (as Gods will was) a little 'before the evening tide we drew unto the plain field, and 'ſet our Battels in aray; and immediately the fight began, 'which was ſore and cruel, and indured long, for our enemies 'behaved themſelves right nobly. But thanks be given to 'God, the Victory fell on our ſide, and the King our ad-'verſary was diſcomfited with all his Hoſt, and put to flight, 'where alſo was ſlain the King of Bename, the Duke of Lo-'rain, the Earl of Dabeſon, the Earl of Flanders, the Earl 'of Blois, the Earl of Arcot, with his two Sons, the Earl of 'Damerler, the Earl of Navers, and his Brother, the Lord 'of Tronard, the Archbiſhop of Meymes, the Archbiſhop 'of Saundes, the high Prior of France, the Earl of Savoy, 'the Lord of Morles, the Lord de Guis, Seigniour de S. No-'vant, Seigniour de Roſinburgh, with ſix Earls of Almain, 'and divers other Earls, Barons, Knights and Squires, whoſe 'names are unknown. And Philip de Valois himſelf, with 'another Marqueſs, which was called Lord Elector among 'the Romans, eſcaped from the Battel. The number of the 'Men at Arms which were found dead in the field, beſides 'the common Soldiers and footmen, were 1542. And all 'that night the King of England with his Hoſt, abode arm-'ed in the field where the Battel was fought. On the next 'morrow before the Sun roſe, there marched toward us 'another great Hoſt, mighty and ſtrong of the Frenchmen. 'But the Earl of Northampton, and the Earl of Norfolk iſſu-'ed out againſt them in three Battels; and after long and 'terrible fight, them in like wiſe they diſcomfited, by Gods 'great help and grace (for otherwiſe it could never have 'been) where they took of Knights and Squires a great 'number, and ſlew above 2000, purſuing the chaſe three 'Leagues from the place where the Battel was fought. The 'ſame night alſo the King encamped himſelf again in the 'Foreſt of Creſſey, and on the morrow marched toward 'Boleine, and by the way he took the Town of Staples; and 'from thence he marched toward Calis, where he intendeth 'to plant his Siege, and lay his Battery to the ſame. And 'therefore our Sovereign Lord the King willeth and com-'mandeth you, in all that ever you may, to ſend to the 'ſaid Siege Victuals convenient. For after the time of our 'departing from Chaam, we have travelled through the 'Country, with great peril and danger of our people, but 'yet always had of Victual plenty, thanks be to God there-'fore. But now as the caſe ſtandeth, we partly need your 'help to be refreſhed with Victuals. Thus fare you well. 'Written at the Siege before the Town of Calis the 14*th.* 'day of September.

After the Siege and winning of Poiſie, the third day of September An. 1346. the King through the midſt of France directed his paſſage unto Calis, as by the tenor of this Letter you you hear, and beſieged the ſame. Which Siege he continued from the 3d. of September aforeſaid, till the 3d. day of Auguſt next enſuing, upon the which day it was rendred up unto the ſaid Edward the 3d. and ſubdued unto the Crown of England, as after, the Lord willing, ſhall more appear.

David K. of Scots invadeth England

In the mean time, during the Siege of Calis, David the Scotiſh King, at the requeſt of the French King, with a great Army braſt into the North parts of England; and firſt beſieging the Town of Lidel, within ſix days obtained the greateſt part of the Town; and there taking all that he could find, with Sir Walter Salby a valiant Knight, which was the keeper of the Hold, he cauſed him uncourteouſly to be put to the Sword; and ſo from thence proceeded further into England; till at length being met withal by William Surch Archbiſhop of York, and the Lord Percy, and the Lord Nevil, with other Nobles of thoſe parts (calling and gathering their men together) in the Plain near to Durham, the ſeventeenth day of October in the year above ſaid, through the gracious hand of Chriſt, there they were ſubdued and conquered. In the which conflict, the Earls of Murrife and Stratheron, with the flower of all the Chivalry, and principal Warriors of Scotland were ſlain.

The Scots overthrown.

David the Scotiſh K. taken priſoner

Alſo the foreſaid King David, with the Earls of Mentiffe and Fiffes, and other Lords, and William Douglaſs Maſklime, Fleming, and William Douglaſs, and other many more Men of Arms were taken Priſoners; and ſo the miſchief which they intended to other, fell upon their own heads.

During moreover, the ſaid Siege of Calis, the foreſaid Pope Clement the 6th. writing to the King of England, went about under the pretence of peace to ſtop his proceedings: whoſe Letters follow here under written.

The Letter of the Pope to the King of England, in the behalf of the Frenchmen.

'Clement the Biſhop, Servant of Gods Servants, To 'his well-beloved Son in Chriſt, Edward the puiſſant 'King of England, Salutation and Apoſtolical Bleſſing. If 'you diligently conſider, dear Son, (as ought a Catholick 'Prince to do) the ſlaughter of ſuch an innumerable ſort, 'bought with the precious bloud of Chriſt our Redeemer; 'the loſs of their ſubſtance and ſouls, and the lamentable 'perils which the diſſentions and Wars ſtirred up between 'you and our well-beloved Son Philip, the noble King of 'France, have brought upon us, and yet daily do without 'intermiſſion; and alſo the bewailing of ſo many poor peo- 'ple, crying out of Orphans and Pupils, lamentation of Wi- 'dows, and other miſerable People which be robbed and 'ſpoiled, and almoſt famiſhed; what exclamation they 'make with tears running down their Cheeks, yelling and 'crying unto God for help; as alſo the deſtruction of 'Churches, Monaſteries and holy places, holy Veſſels, and 'other ornaments unto Gods ſervice dedicated; the ſacrile- 'legious Robberies, Sackings, and Impriſonings, the ſpoil- 'ing of holy Churches, and religious perſons, with many 'other ſuch innumerable, deteſtable, execrable miſchiefs, 'offending the eies of the Divine Majeſty; all which, if 'your Princely heart would conſider and well remember; 'with this alſo, that Catholick Faith (eſpecially in the Eaſt 'parts) and the Chriſtians there abiding by means of the 'ſame diſſentions and Wars, deſtitute of the helps of ſuch 'Catholick Men as are in the Weſt parts, are ſo afflicted of 'the Infidels, ſeeing the other parts of Chriſtendom ſo trou- 'bled with cruel Perſecutions, yea, and more cruel than 'ever it hath been (although in theſe times to amplifie this 'our Faith in the ſaid Eaſt parts is cruel Perſecution ſhew- 'ed, more than hath been of many years paſt) doubtleſs we 'believe it would pity your heart. And to the end that ſuch 'and ſo great evils ſhould no further proceed; nor yet that 'ſo great good might be done by dilating of our foreſaid 'faith in theſe times ſhould be let and hindred, we deſire 'you that you would apply your mind to make ſome agree- 'ment and peace with the foreſaid King. For if (my well- 'beloved Son) God hath given unto you proſperous ſuc- 'ceſs and fortune, ye ought rather to humble than to extol 'your ſelf; and be ſo much the more readier to incline to his 'peace, and to endeavour your ſelf to pleaſe God, which 'loveth peace, and delighteth in peaceable Men; and to eſ- 'chew the foreſaid evils, which without doubt do grievouſly 'offend him. Furthermore, we marvel greatly, that unto our { KING Ed. 3. } 'reverend Brother Anibaldus Biſhop of Tuſculane, and our 'beloved Son Stephen, of the Title of S. John and Paul, 'Prieſt and Cardinal of the Apoſtolical See, being ſent as 'Legates by us and the ſame See Apoſtolical, to intreat a 'Peace, who diligently and faithfully labouring for the ſame, 'as lovers of verity, juſtice and equity, and therewithal, re- 'guarders of your honour, could not be ſuffered touching the 'intreaty of the ſame Pecace, to come unto your Graces pre- 'ſence.

'Wherefore we deſire your Kingly Highneſs more ear- 'neſtly, and for the mercy of God, with more vehemence 'require the ſame; that you taking up the foreſaid horrible 'evils, and preventing the ſweetneſs of piety and compaſſi- 'on; may eſcape the vengeance of Gods indignation, which 'were to be feared, if you ſhould perſevere in your former 'evils, as God forbid. And as touching the intreaty for 'Peace, for which our foreſaid Cardinals were ſent unto 'you (howbeit ſecretly, leſt it ſhould be any derogation to 'your honour) we deſire you to condeſcend thereunto, and 'that with all your affection you will incline your mind 'to the ſame, ſo pleaſant unto God, ſo deſired of the world, 'as alſo to you, the foreſaid King, and unto the Catholick 'faith profitable. And that the ſame peace by Gods help 'grace eſtabliſhed and made perfect, you might allay your 'puiſſant ſtrength about Gods buſineſs in the foreſaid Eaſt 'parts (ſo good occaſion ſerving, as before is ſaid, in theſe 'our times) being ſo apt advancements of your honour, and 'happy increaſing of your Princely Name; for we have 'heard it of you reported, that you behave your ſelf fer- 'vently in all your attempts. Thus we doubt not but that 'you will write unto us again touching the premiſſes, and 'the purpoſe of your intention touching the ſame. Dated at 'Avinion the 18th. of February, and 5th. year of our Pepacy.

The Anſwer of the King of England, to the foreſaid Letter of the Pope.

K. Edward anſwereth to the Pope.

Moſt holy Father, we underſtand by the Letters of the reverend Fathers in God, the Biſhop of Tuſculane, and Stephen of the Title of S. John Prieſt, Cardinals and Legates of the Court of Rome, as alſo by the Letters of your Holineſs ſent unto us, that ye marvel greatly for that your ſaid Legates were of purpoſe ſent unto us, and commanded to intreat of a Peace between our adverſary of France and us, that we would not ſuffer them ſecretly to talk with us, for the ſafeguard of our honour; the intention of your heart being to make the foreſaid peace; compaſſing and bewailing therein the death of Chriſtian Men, the loſs of their goods, the peril of their ſouls, the lamentable wailings of the poor, of Orphans, of Widows, and deſtruction of other pitiful perſons, the pillage and robberies of Churches, and other miſchiefs innumerable, and namly, the diminiſhing of Chriſtian faith in the Eaſt parts, which by the War between our adverſary of France and us is ſore decayed, as the ſaid Letters plainly do import. And that foraſmuch as God hath given us triumphant fortune, ſo much the more we ought to abaſe and humble our heart, and to be the readier to make and incline to a peace. As touching theſe things, holy Father, we give you holineſs to underſtand, that as well unto your foreſaid Legates, as other meſſengers ſent from you unto us, we have offered unto every of them reaſonable ways of peace, and every day declare the ſame, and that not ſecretly, but openly. For we doubt not to let our purpoſe be underſtood; for he that is the high Judge both of him and us, in whoſe diſpoſition all things lie, hath given unto us the Crown of France to our right and proper heritage. The which right our foreſaid adverſary hath by force of long time detained from us, we ſeeking to obtain the ſame in peaceable wiſe; and yet do, if we might obtain the ſame in any good manner, rather for the benefit of Chriſtian Men, and that the foreſaid evils might ceaſe, which by his wrongful means only have increaſed and grown. Yet notwithſtanding, as before this time you know, we aſſented to a Truce, with certain Articles contained in the ſame writing; all this he hath infringed: Neither doth the wrong ſuffice him which he offereth us in our foreſaid Heritage, but he indeavoureth himſelf, during the ſaid Truce, to invade our Realm of England, and other our Lands; and furthermore, maintaineth the Scots, and aideth them to the utter deſtruction of us, our People and Lands aforeſaid; wherein we were inforced for the ſafeguard of our People and Lands, by ſuch lawful means as we may, to defend our ſelves, and put him from his wicked purpoſe. And furthermore for the ſame, our quarrel being in the hands of God, have we come againſt him to conquer our Inheritance of France; over whom God hath given us divers Victories, as we have truſted he would by his right-wiſe judgment and power; which thing he hath ſhewed upon us, (all chance of fortune ſet apart) in reſpect of our rightful Title therein, and without our deſerts: wherefore with all humility of heart we give him thanks always therefore, moſt devoutly night and day praiſing his holy name; for we acknowledge the ſame cometh not by our ſtrength and force. Wherefore, moſt holy Father, we deſire your Holineſs, and, ſo much as in us lieth, require the ſame, that you that ſupply the place of the Son of God in earth, and have the government of the ſouls of all Chriſtian men, and ought to be upright and equal towards all men, without exception of perſons, that ye, I ſay, will receive good information and true, of the objections aboveſaid, and will put to your holy helping hand, as much as in you is, that our ſaid adverſary of France may acknowledge his wrong which he hath done to us herein, and may be by your aid redreſſed, and that he in this his wrong have no maintenance and aid at your hand. For if it be ſo, we then appeal unto the Judge of Judges, which ſuffereth for a time wrongs to be done for the ſinful default of Man, but in the end redreſſeth the ſame, leaving no good deed unrewarded, nor evil unpuniſhed; moſt humbly requiring him to be to us a true and upright Judge of all our controverſies, for his mercies ſake, as in the mean time we repoſe our full truſt and confidence in him. The holy Spirit of God, &c.

The K. appealeth from the Pope to God.

Offers made to the men of Flanders.

Moreover, during yet the Siege of Calis, the French King had ſent certain offers to the Men of Flanders, that if they would relinquiſh the King of England, and adhere to him:

Firſt, He would remit all their former tranſgreſſions.

Secondly, He would unburden them of their indict.

Thirdly, He would ſend unto them ſuch plenty of Corn, that what was ſold for 12 ſhillings with them, ſhould be ſold for 4 ſhillings, and that for ſix years.

Fourthly, He would ſtore them with plenty of French Wooll to make Cloth for a ſmall price; and that they might ſell the ſaid Cloths, both in Flanders and in France, and that the Frenchmen ſhould uſe the ſame Cloth, forſomuch as all other manner of Cloth ſhould be forbidden in France, ſo long as any of that (made of French Wooll) might be found.

Fifthly, He would reſtore to them theſe three Cities, Inſulam, Bovocum and Betony.

Sixthly, He would defend them from all their adverſaries; and in pledge of the ſame would ſend them mony beforehand.

Seventhly, Such as were able and forward men among them, he would retain and promote them, &c.

But theſe offers, ſeeming to proceed more of fair words to ſerve the preſent turn, than of any hearty truth, were not received. Then the Lord John, Prince and Heir to the French King, during the foreſaid Siege of Calis above mentioned, coming with a mighty Army of Frenchmen, ſet upon the Men of Flanders and Engliſhmen in the Town of Caſſels. In the which conflict, during from morning to noon, the Frenchmen were vanquiſhed, and the young Dolphin driven back from whence he came. Of whoſe number divers were ſlain and taken priſoners. Where on the other ſide (through the Lords defence) not one is reported to be grievouſly wounded.

The Dolphin with the French diſcomfited at Caſſels.

Ann. 1347

This paſſed on, not long after, about the ſeventh day of June, An. 1347. King Edward continuing ſtill his Siege againſt Calis, Philip the French King came down with a mighty Army, purpoſing to remove the Siege; where, not far off from the Engliſh Hoſt, he encamped himſelf. Which done, two Cardinals, Ambaldus and Stephanus (procured for the ſame purpoſe) going between the two Kings, gave to the King of England thus to underſtand; That if he would condeſcend to any reaſonable way of peace, the French King was ready to offer ſuch honeſt proffers unto him, as to reaſon and to his contentation ſhould ſeem agreeable. But in concluſion, when it came to talk, the Nobles could not agree upon the conditions. Wherefore the French King, ſeeing no other remedy, cauſed it to be ſignified to King Edward; that between that preſent Tueſday and the next Friday, if he would come forth into the field he ſhould have Battel given him. Thus the place being viewed of four Captains of either Hoſt for the Battel to be fought; it fo fell, that the French King on Wedneſday at night, before the Battel ſhould joyn, ſecretly by night ſetting his pavilions on fire, returned back with his Army out of the ſight of the Engliſhmen.

The French K. flieth before the Battel.

Upon the Friday following, they which were beſieged in the Town of Calis, ſeeing the King to be retired (upon whoſe help they truſted, being alſo in great penury and famine for lack of victuals, and otherwiſe in much miſery vehemently diſtreſſed) ſurrendered the Town to the Kings hands: who like a merciful Prince, only detaining certain of the chief, the reſt with the whole Commons he let go with Bag and Baggage, diminiſhing no part of their goods, ſhewing therein more Princely favour to them, than they did of late in Queen Marys days unto our Men, in recovering the ſaid Town of Calis again.

The town of Calis won.

After the winning thus of Calis, as hath been premiſed, King Edward, remaining in the ſaid Town a certain ſpace, was in conſultation concerning his Voyage and proceeding further into France. But by means of the foreſaid Cardinals, Truce for a certain time was taken, and inſtruments made (ſo provided) that certain Noblemen as well for the French King, as for the King of England, ſhould come to the Pope, there to debate upon the Articles. Unto the which King Edward, for peace ſake, was not greatly diſagreeing. Which was Anno 1347. Ex Tho. Walſing.

Truce concluded between England and France.

The next year following, which was An. 1348. fell a ſore Plague, which they call the firſt general Peſtilence in the Realm of England. This Plague (as they ſay) firſt ſpringing from the Eaſt, and ſo proceeding Weſtward, did ſo mightily prevail here in this Land, beginning firſt at Dorceſter, and the Countrys thereabout, that every day lightly twenty, ſome days forty, ſome ſixty, and more dead Corpſes were brought and laid together in one pit. This beginning the firſt day of Auguſt, by the firſt of November it came to London. Where the vehement rage thereof was ſo hot, and did increaſe ſo much, that from the firſt day of February, till about the beginning of May, in a Churchyard then newly made by Smithfield, about 200 dead Corpſes every day were buried, beſides them which in other Church-yards of the City were laid alſo. At length by the grace of Chriſt, ceaſing there, it proceeded from thence to the North parts. Where alſo the next year after, An. 1349. it ſwaged.

After this, in the next year enſuing, An. 1350. the Town of Calis was, by Treaſon of the keeper of the Caſtle, almoſt betrayed and won from the Engliſhmen. Within the compaſs of which year died Philip the French King. After whom King John his Son ſucceeded in the Crown. Who the next year after, under falſe pretence of friendſhip, cauſed the Conſtable of France Earl of Ewe, to be beheaded; who being taken priſoner before in war by Engliſhmen, and long detained in priſon in England, was licenſed by K. Edward to viſit his Country of France. In the ſame year the Town of Gwines was taken by Engliſhmen, while the keepers of the hold were negligent and aſleep.

The year next following, the Marſhal of France with a great Army was put to flight by Sir Roger Bentele Knight, and Captain in Britain, having but only 600 Soldiers with him. In this Battel were taken 9 Knights, Eſquires and Gentlemen 140. The Frenchmen and Britains by this Victory were exceedingly diſcouraged, and their pride cut down.

In the year after, was Henry firſt made Duke of Lancaſter, which before was Earl of Darby and Lancaſter. Alſo divers good Ordinances were appointed in the Parliament at Weſtminſter. Which after, by avarice and partial favour of the head men, were again undone.

Firſt Duke of Lancaſter

Concord and agreement about the year 1354. began to come well forward, and Inſtruments were drawn upon the ſame between the two Kings. But that the matter being brought up to Pope Innocent the ſixth, partly by the quarrelling of the Frenchmen, partly by the winking of the Pope, which ever held with the French ſide, the conditions were repealed, which were theſe: That to the King

It followed after this, the year of our Lord 1355. that King Edward hearing of the death of Philip the French King, and that K. John his Son had granted the Dukedom of Aquitain to Charles his eldeſt Son and Dauphin of Vienna, ſent over Prince Edward with the Earls of Warwick, of Saliſbury, of Oxford, and with them a ſufficient number of able Soldiers into Aquitania. Where he being willingly received of divers, the reſt partly by force of ſword he ſubdued, partly received, ſubmitting themſelves to his protection.

The third Voyage of K. Edward into France.

Not long after this, in the ſame year, word being brought to King Edward, that John the French King was ready to meet him at S. Omers, there to give him Battel, he gathered his power, and ſet over to Calis with his two Sons, Leonel Earl of Wilton, and John of Gaunt Earl of Richmond, and with Henry Duke of Lancaſter, &c. Who being come to Saint Omers, the French King with a mighty Army of his Francklings, hearing of his coming, the nearer he approached to them, the further they retired back; waſting and deſtroying behind them, to the intent that the Engliſh Army in purſuing them, ſhould find no Victuals. By reaſon whereof, King Edward following him by the ſpace of nine or ten days unto Hadem (when neither he could find his enemy to fight, nor Victuals for forrage for his Army) he returned unto Calis; where war again being offered in the name of the King, upon unſtable conditions, and yet the ſame not performed, King Edward ſeeing the ſhrinking of his enemy, from Calis croſſed the Seas into England, where he recovered again the Town of Barwick, which the Scots before by ſubtil train had gotten. At which time was granted unto the King in Parliament, 50 s. for every Sack or Pack of Woull that ſhould be carried over, for the ſpace of ſix years together. By the which grant, the King might diſpend every day by eſtimation above 100 Marks ſterling. And foraſmuch as every year 100000 Sacks of Woull were thought to be tranſported out of the Realm, the ſumm thereof for ſix years ſpace was eſteemed to mount to 1500000 pound ſterling.

The ſame year, when King Edward had recovered Barwick, and ſubdued Scotland, Prince Edward being in Gaſcoine, made toward the French King. Who, notwithſtanding by the way all Bridges were caſt down, and great reſiſtance made; yet the victorious Prince made way with his Sword, after much ſlaughter of the Frenchmen, and many Priſoners taken, at length joyning with the French King at Poytiers, ſcarce with 2000, gave the overthrow to the French King with 7000 Men of Arms and more. In which conflict, the French King himſelf, and Philip his Son, with Lord James of Bourbon, the Archbiſhop of Senon, 11 Earls, 22 Lords were taken. Of other Warriers and Men of Arms 2000. Some affirm, in this conflict were ſlain 2 Dukes, of Lords and Noblemen 24. of men of Arms 2002; of other Soldiers about 8000. The common report is, that more Frenchmen were there taken Priſoners, than were the number of them which took them. This noble Victory gotten by the grace of God, brought no little admiration to all Men.

The French King taken Priſoner by Prince Edw.

It were too long, and little pertaining to the purpoſe of this Hiſtory, to comprehend in order all the doings of this King, with the circumſtances of his Victories, of the bringing in of the French King into England, of his abode there, of the ranſom levied on him, and of David the Scotiſh King; of which, the one was rated at three millions of Scutes, the other at an hundred thouſand Marks, to be paid in ten years, how the Staple was after tranſlated to Calis, with ſuch like. I refer them that would ſee more, to the Chronicle of Tho. Walſing. of St. Albans, of John Froyſard, Adam Merimouth, who diſcourſe all this at large.

Every Scute valuing ſix ſhilling eight pence.

Thus having diſcourſed at large all ſuch Martial Affairs and Warlike Exploits, incident in the Reign of this King betwixt him and the Realms of France and Scotland: now, to return again to our matters Eccleſiaſtical, it followeth in order to recapitulate and notifie the troubles and contentions growing between the ſame King and the Pope, and other Eccleſiaſtical perſons in matters touching the Church in order of years remaining in the Tower, taken out of the Records, as followeth. As where firſt in the fourth year of his Reign, the King wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to this effect: That whereas King Edward the firſt his Grandfather did give to a Clerk of his own, being his Chaplain, the Dignity of Treaſurer of York, the Archbiſhoprick of York being then vacant and in the Kings hands, in the quiet poſſeſſion whereof the ſaid Clerk continued, until the Pope miſliking therewith, would have diſplaced him, and promoted to the ſame Dignity a Cardinal of Rome, to the manifeſt prejudice of the Crown of England; the King therefore ſtraitly chargeth the Archbiſhop of York not to ſuffer any matter to paſs, that may be prejudicial to the donation of his Grandfather, but that his own Clerk ſhould injoy the ſaid dignity accordingly, upon pain of his Highneſs diſpleaſure.

The like precepts were alſo directed to theſe Biſhops following, videlicet, to the Biſhop of Lincoln, Biſhop of Worceſter, Biſhop of Sarum, Monſieur Marmion, Archdeacon of Richmond, Archdeacon of Lincoln, the Prior of Lewen, the Prior of Lentoy, to Maſter Richard Benitworth, to Maſter Iherico de Concore, to the Popes Nuncio, to Maſter Guido of Calma. And withal, he wrote his Letters unto the Pope, as touching the ſame matter, conſiſting in three parts. Firſt, in the declaration and defence of his Right and Title to the donation and gift of all manner of Temporalties, of Offices, Prebends, Benefices and Dignities Eccleſiaſtical, holden of him in capite, as in the right of his Crown of England. Secondly, In expoſtulating with the Pope for intruding himſelf into the aforeſaid right of the Crown of England, intermedling with ſuch Collations, contrary to right and reaſon, and the example of all his predeceſſors which were Popes before. Thirdly, Intreating him that he would henceforth abſtain and deſiſt from moleſting the Realm with ſuch Novelties and ſtrange Uſurpations; and ſo much the more, for that, in the Publick Parliament lately holden at Weſtminſter, it was generally agreed upon, by the univerſal aſſent of all the Eſtates of the Realm, that the King ſhould ſtand to the defence of all ſuch Rights and Juriſdictions as to his Regal Dignity and Crown any way appertained.

After this, in the ninth year of the Reign of this King, Pope Benedict the twelfth ſendeth down Letters touching his new Creation, with certain other matters and requeſts to the King; whereunto the King anſwering again, declareth how glad he is of that his preferment; adding moreover, that his purpoſe was to have ſent unto him certain Embaſſadors for congratulation of the ſame. But being otherwiſe occupied by reaſon of Wars, could not attend his Holineſs requeſts, notwithſtanding he minded to call a Parliament about the Feaſt of Aſcenſion next, where, upon the aſſembly of his Clergy and other Eſtates, he would take order for the ſame, and ſo direct his Embaſſadors to his Holineſs accordingly.

The next year after, which was the tenth year of his Reign, the King writeth another Letter to the Pope; that foraſmuch as his Clergy had granted him one years tenth for the ſupportation of his Wars, and for that the Pope alſo had the ſame time to take up the payment of ſix years Tenths granted him by the Clergy a little before, therefore the Pope would vouchſafe at his requeſt to forbear the exaction of that mony for one year, till that his Tenth for the neceſſities of his Wars were diſpatched.

The ſame year he wrote alſo to the Pope to this effect: That whereas the Prior and Chapter of Norwich did nominate a Clerk to be Biſhop of Norwich, and ſent him to Rome for his inveſtiture, without the Kings knowledge; therefore the Pope would withdraw his conſent, and not intermeddle in the matter appertaining to the Kings peculiar Juriſdiction and Prerogative.

After this, in the ſixteenth year of this King, it happened that the Pope ſent over certain Legates to hear and determine matters appertaining to the right of patronages of Benefices; which the King perceiving to tend to the no ſmall derogation of his right, and the liberties of his Subjects, writeth unto the ſaid Legates, admoniſhing and requiring them not to proceed therein, nor attempt any thing unad-

{ O Edw. 3 } unadviſedly, otherwiſe than might ſtand with the lawful ordinances and cuſtoms of the Laws of his Realm, and the freedom and liberties of his Subjects.

Writing moreover the ſame year to other Legates being ſent over by the Pope to treat of Peace between the King and the French King, with requeſt that they would firſt make their repair to the French King, who had ſo oftentimes broken with him, and prove what conformity the French K. would offer; which if he found reaſonable, they ſhould ſoon accord with him: otherwiſe he exhorted them not to enter into the Land, nor to proceed any further in that behalf.

The year following, which was the ſeventeenth of his Reign, enſueth another Letter to the Pope, againſt his proviſions and reſervations of Benefices, worthy here to be placed and ſpecified, but that the ſumm thereof is before ſet down, to be found in the Page 440.

The year following, another Letter likewiſe was ſent by the King to the Pope, upon occaſion taken of the Church of Norwich, requiring him to ſurceaſe his reſervations and proviſions of the Biſhopricks within the Realm, and to leave the Elections thereof free to the Chapters of ſuch Cathedral Churches, according to the ancient Grants and Ordinances of his noble Progenitors.

Proceeding now to the nineteenth year of this Kings Reign, there came to the preſence of the King certain Legates from Rome, complaining of certain Statutes paſt in his Parliament, tending to the prejudice of the Church of Rome, and the Popes Primacy, viz. That if Abbots, Priors, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Patrons of Benefices ſhould not preſent to the ſaid Benefices within a certain time, the lapſe of the ſame ſhould come to the Ordinary or Chapter thereof; or if they did not preſent, then to the Archbiſhop, if the Archbiſhop likewiſe did fail to preſent, then the gift to pertain not unto the Lord Pope, but unto the King and his Heirs. Another complaint alſo was this, That if Archbiſhops ſhould be ſlack in giving ſuch Benefices as properly pertained to their own Patronage in due time, then the collation thereof likewiſe ſhould appertain to the foreſaid King and his Heirs. Another complaint was, That if the Pope ſhould make void any Elections in the Church of England for any defect found therein, and ſo had placed ſome honeſt and diſcreet perſons in the ſame, that then the King and his Heirs was not bound to render the Temporalties unto the parties placed by the Popes proviſion. Whereupon the Pope being not a little aggrieved, the King writeth unto him, certifying that he was miſinformed, denying that there was any ſuch Statute made in that Parliament. And further, as touching all other things, he would confer with his Prelates and Nobles, and thereof would return anſwer by his Legates.

In the 20*th.* year of his Reign, another Letter was written to the Pope by the King, the effect whereof in few words to expreſs it, was this; to certifie him that, in reſpect of his great charges ſuſtained in his Wars, he hath by the counſel of his Nobles, taken into his own hands the fruits and profits of all his Benefices here in England.

To proceed in the order of years, in the twenty ſixth year of this King, one Nicholas Heath Clerk, a buſie-headed body, and a troubler of the Realm, had procured divers Biſhops, and others of the Kings Councel to be cited up to the Court of Rome, there to anſwer ſuch complaints as he had made againſt them. Whereupon commandment was given by the King to all the Ports of the Realm for the reſtraint of all Paſſengers out, and for ſearching and arreſting all perſons bringing in any Bulls or other Proceſs from Rome, tending to the derogation of the dignity of the Crown, or moleſtation of the Subjects: concerning which Nicholas Heath, the King alſo writeth to the Pope his Letters, complaining of the ſaid Heath, and deſiring him to give no ear to his lewd complaints.

The ſame year the King writeth alſo to the Popes Legate reſident in England, requiring him to ſurceaſe from exacting divers ſummes of Mony of the Clergy, in the name of firſt fruits of Benefices.

The 31*ſt.* year of this Kings Reign, the King by his Letters complaineth to the Pope of a troubleſome fellow named Nicholas Stanway, remaining in Rome, which by his ſlanderous complaints procured divers Citations to be ſent into the Realm, to the great diſturbance of divers and ſundry honeſt Men. Whereupon he prayeth and adviſeth the Pope to ſtay himſelf, and not to ſend over ſuch haſty Citations upon every light occaſion.

To paſs further to the 38*th.* year of the ſame King, thus we find in the Rolls; That the King the ſame year took order by two of his Clergy, to wit, John a Stock, and John of Norton to take into their hands all the Temporalties of all Deanries, Prebends, Dignities and Benefices being then vacant in England, and to anſwer the profits of the ſame to the Kings uſe.

The ſame year an Ordinance was made by the King and his Council, and the ſame was proclaimed in all Port-Towns within the Realm, That good and diligent ſearch ſhould be made, that no perſon whatſoever coming from the Court of Rome, &c. do bring into the Realm with him any Bull, Inſtrument, Letters Patents, or other Proceſs, that may be prejudicial to the King, or any of his Subjects: Nor that any perſon, paſſing out of this Realm toward the Court of Rome, do carry with him any Inſtrument or Proceſs that may redound to the prejudice of the King or his Subjects; and that all perſons paſſing to the ſaid Court of Rome, &c. with the Kings ſpecial Licence, do notwithſtanding promiſe and find Surety to the Lord Chancellor, that they ſhall not in any wiſe attempt or purſue any matter to the prejudice of the King or his Subjects, under pain to be put out of the Kings protection, and to forfeit his Body, Goods and Chattels, according to the Statute thereof made Anno 27.

And thus much concerning the Letters and Writings of the King, with ſuch other domeſtical matters, perturbations and troubles paſſing between him and the Pope, taken out of the publick Records of the Realm, whereby I thought to give the Reader to underſtand the horrible abuſes, the intolerable pride, and the unſatiable avarice of that Biſhop, more like a proud Lucifer than a Paſtor of the Church of Chriſt, in abuſing the King, and oppreſſing his Subjects with Exactions unmeaſurable; and not only exerciſing his Tyranny in this Realm, but raging alſo againſt other Princes, both far and near, amongſt whom neither ſpared he the Emperor himſelf. In the ſtory and acts of which Emperor Ludovicus, mentioned a little before, page 425, whom the Pope did moſt arrogantly excommunicate upon Maundy Thurſday, and the ſelf-ſame day placed another Emperor in his room; relation was made of certain learned Men which took the Emperors part againſt the Pope. In number of whom was Marſilius Patavinus, Guillermus Ockam, Johannes Gandavenſis, Luitpoldus, Andreas Landenſis, Ulricus Hangenor Treaſurer of the Emperor, Dantes, Aligerius, &c. Of whom Marſilius Patavinus compiled and exhibited unto the Emperor Ludovick a worthy work intituled Defenſor pacis, written in the Emperors behalf againſt the Pope. Wherein (both godly and learnedly diſputing againſt the Pope) he proveth all Biſhops and Prieſts to be equal, and that the Pope hath no ſuperiority above other Biſhops, much leſs above the Emperor: That the Word of God ought to be only the chief Judge in deciding and determining cauſes Eccleſiaſtical; that not only ſpiritual perſons, but Laymen alſo being godly and learned, ought to be admitted unto General Councils; That the Clergy and the Pope ought to be ſubject unto Magiſtrates; that the Church is the Univerſity of the faithful, and that the Foundation and Head of the Church is Chriſt, and that he never appointed any Vicar or Pope over his Univerſal Church; That Biſhops ought to be choſen every one by their own Church and Clergy; That the Marriage of Prieſts may lawfully be permitted; That S. Peter was never at Rome; That the Clergy and Synagogue of the Pope is a Den of Thieves; That the Doctrine of the Pope is not to be followed, becauſe it leadeth to deſtruction; And that the corrupt manners of the Chriſtians do ſpring and flow out of the wickedneſs of the Spiritualty, &c. He diſputeth moreover, in another work, of free Juſtification by Grace; and extenuated merits, ſaying, that they are no cauſes efficient of our Salvation, but only ſine qua non, that is to ſay, that works be no cauſe of our Juſtification, but yet our Juſtification goeth not without them. For the which his Doctrine moſt ſound and Catholick, he was condemned by the Pope, Anno 1324. by the Popes Decree Extravagant, cap. Licet inter doctrinam.

Con-

Concerning the which Man and his Doctrine, I thought good thus much to commit to Hiſtory, to the intent Men may ſee that they which charge this Doctrine now taught in the Church with the note of novelty or newneſs, how ignorant and unskilful they be in the Hiſtories and order of times forepaſt.

Johannes Gundavenſis condemned by the Pope

In the ſame part of condemnation at the ſame time alſo was Johannes de Gunduno, Anno 1330. and contained alſo in the foreſaid Extravagant with Marſilius Patavinus. Which Johannes wrote much upon Ariſtotle and Averrois, and his Books are yet remaining. And no doubt but he wrote alſo of Divinity, but it is not unlike that theſe works have been aboliſhed.

Guillelmus Ockam wrote againſt the Pope.

In the ſame number and catalogue cometh alſo Guillelmus Ockam, who was in the year of our Lord 1326. as is afore mentioned, *pag.*424. and wrote likewiſe in defence of Ludovicus the Emperor againſt the Pope; and alſo in defence of Michael, General of Grayfriers, whom the Pope had excommunicated and curſed for an Heretick. Divers Treatiſes were by the ſaid Ockam ſet forth, whereof ſome are extant and in Print, as his Queſtions and Diſtinctions; ſome are extinct and ſuppreſſed (as Aſcentius reporteth) quod eſſent aliquando aſperiora. Some again be publiſhed under no name of the Author, being of his doing; as the Dialogue between the Soldier and the Clerk; wherein it is to be conjectured, what Books and Works this Ockam had collected againſt the Pope. Of this Ockam, John Sleidane in his Hiſtory inferreth mention, to his great commendation, whoſe words be theſe: William Ockam, in time of Ludovicus the fourth, Emperor, did flouriſh about the year of our Lord 1326. who among other things wrote of the authority of the Biſhop of Rome. In the which Book he handleth theſe eight Queſtions very copiouſly; Whether both the adminiſtrations of the Biſhops office, and of the Emperors, may be in one Man? Secondly, Whether the Emperor taketh his power and authority only of God, or elſe of the Pope? Thirdly, Whether the Pope and Church of Rome have power by Chriſt to ſet and place Kings and Emperors, and to commit to them their Juriſdiction to be exerciſed? Fourthly, Whether the Emperor being elected, hath full authority upon the ſaid his Election, to adminiſter his Empire? Fifthly, Whether other Kings beſides the Emperor and King of Romans, in that they are conſecrated of Prieſts, receive of them any part of their power? Sixthly, Whether the ſaid Kings in any caſe be ſubject to their Conſecrators? Seventhly, Whether if the ſaid Kings ſhould admit any new Sacrifice, or ſhould take to themſelves the Diadem without any further Conſecration, they ſhould thereby loſe their Kingly right, and title? Eighthly, Whether the ſeven Princes Electors give as much to the Election of the Emperor, as ſucceſſion rightfully giveth to other Kings? Upon theſe Queſtions he diſputeth and argueth with ſundry Arguments and ſundry reaſons on both ſides, at length he decideth the matter on the part of the Civil Magiſtrate; and by occaſion thereof entreth into the mention of the Popes Decrees extravagant; declaring how little force or regard is to be given thereunto.

Gregorius Ariminenſis maintained the ſame Doctrine now received.

Ex Trithem.

Trithemius maketh mention of one Gregorius Ariminenſis, a learned and a famous and right godly Man; who not much differing from the age of this Ockam, about the year of our Lord 1350. diſputed in the ſame Doctrine of Grace and Free-will as we do now, and diſſented therein from the Papiſts and Sophiſters, counting them worſe than Pelagians.

Andreas de Caſtro and Burdianus, both Goſpellers 200 years agoe.

Of the like judgment, and in the ſame time was alſo Andreas de Caſtro, as appeareth *ſuper lit.*1. *Sent. diſt.*45. and Burdianus upon the Ethicks of Ariſtotle; which both maintained the grace of the Goſpel, as is now in the Church received above 200 years ſince.

Eudo Duke of Burgundy againſt the Popes Decrees about 200 years ſince.

Ex Carole Molineo.

And what ſhould I ſpeak of the Duke of Burgundy, named Eudo, who at the ſame time *An.*1350. perſwaded the French King not to receive in his Land the new found Conſtitutions, Decretal and Extravagant, nor to ſuffer them within his Realm: whoſe ſage counſel then given, yet remaineth among the French Kings records, as witneſſeth Carol. Molineus.

Dantes an Italian Writer againſt the Pope.

Dantes an Italian Writer, a Florentine, lived in the time of Ludovicus the Emperor, about the year of our Lord 1300. and took part with Marſilius Patavinus againſt three ſorts of Men, which he ſaid were enemies to the truth: that is, the Pope; ſecondly, the order of religious Men, which count themſelves the children of the Church, when they are the children of the Devil their Father: thirdly, the Doctors of Decrees and Decretals. Certain of his Writings be extant abroad, wherein he proveth the Pope not to be above the Emperor, nor to have any right or Juriſdiction in the Empire. He proveth the donation of Conſtantine to be a forged and a fained thing, as which neither did ſtand with any law or right; for the which he was taken of many for an Heretick. He complaineth moreover very much, the preaching of Gods Word to be omitted, and inſtead thereof, the vain fables of Monks and Friers to be preached and believed of the people, and ſo the flock of Chriſt to be fed not with the food of the Goſpel, but with wind. The Pope, ſaith he, of a Paſtor is made a Wolf, to waſte the Church of Chriſt, and to procure with his Clergy, not the Word of God to be preached, but his own Decrees. In his Canticle of Purgatory, he declareth the Pope to be the Whore of Babylon. And to her Miniſters, to ſome he applieth two Horns, to ſome four. As to the Patriarchs, whom he noteth to be the Tower of the ſaid Whore Babylonical. Ex libris Dantis Italice.

Donation of Conſtantine, a thing forged.

The Pope the Whore of Babylon.

Hereunto may be added the ſaying out of the Book of Fornandus, imprinted with the foreſaid Dantes; that for ſomuch as Antichriſt cometh not before the deſtruction of the Empire, therefore ſuch as go about to have the Empire extinct, are in ſo doing fore-runners and meſſengers of Antichriſt. Therefore let the Romans (ſaith he) and their Biſhops beware, leſt their ſins and wickedneſs ſo deſerving, by the juſt judgment of God, the Prieſthood be taken from them. Furthermore, let all the Prelates and Princes of Germany take heed, &c.

Ex lib. Fornandi.

An admonition to the Romans.

And becauſe our adverſaries which object unto us the newneſs of our Doctrine ſhall ſee and perceive the courſe and form of this Religion now received, not to have been either ſuch a new thing now, or a thing ſo ſtrange in times paſt: I will add to theſe above recited, Maſter Taulerus a Preacher of Argentine in Germany, Anno 1350. Who, contrary to the Popes proceedings, taught openly againſt all mens merits, and againſt Invocations of Saints, and preached ſincerely of our free Juſtification by Grace; referring all Mans truſt only to the mercy of God, and was an enemy to all ſuperſtition.

Taulerus of Germany, a Preacher againſt the Popes proceedings.

Franciſcus Petrarcha. Vide 20 epiſtolam Franciſci Petrarchæ.

Rome the Mother and Nourſe of Error.

With whom alſo may be adjoyned Franciſcus Petrarcha, a Writer of the ſame Age, who in his Works and his Italian Meeter, ſpeaking of Rome, calleth it the Whore of Babylon, the School and Mother of Error, the Temple of Hereſie, the Neſt of Treachery, growing and increaſing by the oppreſſing of others: and ſaith further, that ſhe, (meaning the Popes Court) extolleth her ſelf againſt her Founders; that is, the Emperors who firſt ſet her up, and did ſo inrich her; and ſeemeth plainly to affirm, that the Pope was Antichriſt, declaring that no greater evil could happen to any Man, than to be made Pope. This Franciſcus was about the year of our Lord 1350.

Johannes de rupe ſciſſa. John caſt into Priſon.

And if time would ſerve us to ſeek out old Hiſtories, we ſhould find plenty of faithful witneſſes, of old and ancient time, to give witneſs with us againſt the Pope, beſide the other above rehearſed: as Johannes de rupe ſciſſa, *An.*1340. Who for rebuking the Spiritualty for their great enormities, and neglecting their office and duty, was caſt into Priſon.

The Church of Rome the Whore of Babylon.

Illyricus a Writer in our days, teſtifieth that he found and read in an old Pamphlet, that the ſaid Johannes ſhould call the Church of Rome the Whore of Babylon; and the Pope to be the Miniſter of Antichriſt; and the Cardinals to be the falſe Prophets. Being in Priſon, he wrote a Book of Propheſies, bearing the Title; Vade mecum in tribulationem: in which Book (which alſo I have ſeen) he propheſied and admoniſhed, affliction and tribulation to hang over the Spiritualty. And he pronounceth plainly, that God will purge his Clergy, and will have Prieſts that ſhall be poor, godly, and that ſhall faithfully feed the Lords Flock: Moreover, that the goods of the Church ſhall return again to the Laymen. He propheſied alſo the ſame time, that the French King and his Army ſhould have an overthrow; which came likewiſe to paſs during the time of his Impriſonment. Of this Johannes de rupe, writeth Froyſard in his time, and alſo Wickliff; of whoſe Propheſies much more may be ſaid at more leiſure (Chriſt willing) hereafter.

The deformation of the Church before propheſied.

About

{KING Edw.3} Conradus Hager.

About the ſame year of our Lord 1340. in the City of Herbipoli, was one named Maſter Conradus Hager. Who (as appeareth by the old Bulls and Regiſters of Otho Biſhop of the ſaid City) is there recorded to have maintained and taught the ſpace of twenty four years together, the Maſs to be no manner of Sacrifice: neither that it profiteth any Man either quick or dead, and that the money given of the dead for Maſſes, be very Robberies and Sacrileges of Prieſts, which they wickedly do intercept and take away from the poor. And he ſaid moreover, that if he had a Stove full of gold and ſilver, he would not give one farthing for any Maſs. For the ſame his Doctrine, this good Preacher was Condemned and incloſed in-priſon: what afterward became of him, we do not find.

The Maſs to be no Sacrifice.

Conradus Hager priſon. Ex Vſſ. quibuſdam Epiſc. Herbipoli.

There is, among other old and ancient Records of antiquity belonging to this preſent time, a certain Monument in Verſes Poetically compiled, but not without a certain Moral, Intituled, Panitentiarius Aſini, The Aſſes Confeſſor; bearing the date and year of our Lord in this number, Completus, Anno. 1343. In this Treatiſe are brought forth the Wolf, the Fox, and the Aſs, coming to ſhrift and doing penance. Firſt, The Wolf confeſſeth himſelf to the Fox, who eaſily doth abſolve him from all his faults, and alſo excuſeth him in the ſame. In like manner the Wolf, hearing the Foxes ſhrift, ſhewed to him the like favour again. After this cometh the Aſs to Confeſſion, whoſe fault was this; That he being hungry took a ſtraw out from the ſheaf of one that went in peregrination unto Rome. The Aſs both repenting of this fact, and becauſe he thought it not ſo hainous as the faults of the other, he hoped the more for his abſolution. But what followed? After the ſilly Aſs had uttered his crime in Auricular Confeſſion, immediately the diſcipline of the Law was executed upon him with ſeverity: neither was he judged worthy of any Abſolution, but was apprehended upon the ſame, ſlain, and devoured. Whoſoever was the Author of this fabulous tale, he had a myſtical underſtanding of the ſame; for by the Wolf no doubt was meant the Pope: But the Fox was reſembled to the Prelates, Curteſans, Prieſts, and the reſt of the Spiritualty. Of the Spiritualty the Lord Pope is ſoon abſolved, as contrarily, the Pope doth ſoon Abſolve them in like manner. By the Aſs is meant the poor Laity, upon whoſe back the ſtrait cenſure of the Law is ſharply executed; eſpecially when the German Emperors come under the Popes Inquiſition, to be examined by his diſcipline, there is no Abſolution, nor Pardon to be found, but in all haſte he muſt be depoſed, as in theſe ſtories may partly appear before. And though the matter be not the weight of a ſtraw, yet what ſaith the Holy Father the Wolf, if it pleaſe him to make any matter of it?

Gerhardus Ridder a writer againſt Monks and Friers.

Not long after theſe above reherſed, about the year of our Lord 1350. Gerhardus Ridder wrote alſo againſt the Monks and Friers a Book, Intituled, Lacryma Eccleſiæ: wherein he diſputeth againſt the foreſaid Religious Orders, namely againſt the begging Friers; proving that kind of life to be far from Chriſtian Perfection, for that it is againſt Charity to live upon others, when a Man may live by his own labors: And affimeth them to be Hypocrites, filthy livers, and ſuch as for mans favor, and for lucre ſake, do mix with true Divinity, Fables, Apocryphaes, and Dreams of Vanity. Alſo that they, under pretence of long prayer, devour Widows Houſes, and with their Confeſſions, Sermons and Burials, do trouble the Church of Chriſt manifold ways. And therefore perſwaded the Prelates to bridle and keep ſhort the inordinate licence and abuſes of theſe monaſtical perſons, &c.

Yet I have made no mention of Michael Seſenus, Provincial of the Gray Friers, nor Petrus de Corbaria, of whom writeth Antoninus, in quarta parte ſummæ, and ſaith they were condemned in the extravagant of Pope John, with one Johannes de Poliaco. Their Opinions, ſaith Antoninus, were theſe, That Peter the Apoſtle was no more the head of the Church, than the other Apoſtles: And that Chriſt left no Vicar behind him or head in his Church: And that the Pope hath no ſuch authority to correct and puniſh, to inſtitute or depoſe the Emperor: Item, That all Prieſts, of what degree ſoever, are of equal authority, power and juriſdiction by the inſtitution of Chriſt: but by the inſtitution of the Emperor, the Pope to be ſuperior, which by the ſame Emperor alſo may be revoked again. Item, That neither the Pope nor yet the Church may puniſh any Man, punitione coactiva: That is, by extern coaction; unleſs they receive licence of the Emperor. This foreſaid Michael, general of the Gray Fryers, wrote againſt the Tyranny, Pride, and Primacy of the Pope, accuſing him to be Antichriſt, and the Church of Rome to be the Whore of Babylon, drunk with the blood of Saints. He ſaid there were two Churches, one of the wicked flouriſhing, wherein reigned the Pope; the other of the godly afflicted. Item, That the verity was almoſt utterly extinct; And for this cauſe he was deprived of his dignity, and condemned of the Pope. Notwithſtanding, he ſtood conſtant in his aſſertions. This Michael was about the year of our Lord 1322. And he left behind him many fautors and followers of his Doctrine, of whom a great part were ſlain by the Pope: ſome were condemned, as William Ockam; ſome were burned, as Johannes de Caſtilione, and Franciſcus de Arcatara. *In extravag. With him alſo was condemned, in the ſaid extravagant, Johannes de Poliaco above touched, whoſe aſſertions were theſe: That the Pope could not give licence to hear Confeſſions to whom he would, but that every Paſtor in his own Church ought to ſuffice. Item, That Paſtors and Biſhops had their authority immediately from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and not from the Pope. Item, That the conſtitution of Pope Benedict the 11*th*. wherein he granteth larger priviledges to the Friers above other Paſtors, was no declaration of the Law, but a ſubverſion. And for this he was by the ſaid Friers oppreſſed, about the year of our Lord, 1322.

After Simon Mepham Archbiſhop of Canterbury before mentioned, who lived not long, ſucceeded John Stratford. After whom came John Offord, who lived but ten months. In whoſe room ſucceeded Thomas, and remained but one year, Anno. 1350. And after him Simon Iſlip was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by Pope Clement the 6th. who ſate 17 years, and builded Canterbury College in Oxford. Which Simon Iſlip ſucceeded the Biſhop of Ely, named Simon Langham, who within two years was made Cardinal. In whoſe ſtead Pope Urban the 5*th*. ordained William Wittleſey Biſhop of Worceſter to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury, An. 1366. In which year, William Biſhop of Wincheſter elected and founded the new College in Oxford.

Again, in the order of the Popes, next unto Pope Clement the 6th. before mentioned, about the ſame time, An. 1353. ſucceeded Pope Innocent the 6th. In the firſt year of which Pope, two Friers Minors or Franciſcans were burned at Avinion, Pro opinionibus (as mine Author ſaith) erroneis, prout D. Papæ & ejus Cardinalibus videbatur. 1. For certain Opinions, as ſeemed to the Pope and his Cardinals, Erronious. Ex Chron. Walſ. Of the which two Friers I find, in the Chronicles De actis Rom. pontificum, and in the Hiſtory of Premonſtratenſis, that the one was Johannes Rochtaylada; or rather, as I find in Catal. teſtium, cited out of the Chronicle of Henricus de Herfordia, his name to be Hayabalus. Who being (as he recordeth) a Frier Minorite, began firſt in the time of Pope Clement the 6th. An. 1345. to preach and affirm openly, that he was by Gods revelation charged and commanded to preach; that the Church of Rome was the Whore of Babylon, and the Pope with his Cardinals to be very Antichriſt. And that Pope Benedict, and the other before him his predeceſſors were damned; with other ſuch like words tending much againſt the Popes tyrannical majeſty. And that the foreſaid Hayabalus being brought before the Popes face, conſtantly did ſtand in the ſame, ſaying, That he was commanded by Gods revelation ſo to ſay, and alſo that he would preach the ſame if he might. To whom it was then objected, That he had ſome Heretical Books, and ſo was committed to priſon in Avinion. In the time of his accuſation it happned that a certain Prieſt, coming before the Pope, caſt the Popes Bull down before his feet, ſaying; Lo here, take your Bull unto you, for it doth me no good at all. I have labored now theſe three years withal, and yet notwithſtanding, for all this your Bull, I cannot be reſtored to my right. The Pope hearing this, commanded the poor Prieſt to be ſcourged, and after to be laid in priſon with the foreſaid Frier. What became of them afterward, the foreſaid Writer Henricus de Herfordia maketh no mention. But I may probably conjecture this Prieſt and this Frier, Rochtayladus, or rather Hayabalus, were the two, whom mine Author Thom. Walſ. writeth to be burned at this time in Avinion, about the firſt beginning of this Pope Innocentius the ſixth. Of this Rochtaylada I thought good here to infer the teſtimony and mention of John Froyſard, written of him in his firſt Volume, Chapter 211. in theſe words:

The Church of Rome declared to be the Whore of Babylon by Gods revelation. Rochtaylada with another Frier Martyred.

A Prieſt for caſting the Popes Bull before the Popes feet, ſcourged, caſt in priſon, and after burned at Avinion.

{Anno 1354}

There were (ſaith Froyſard) a Frier Minor, full of great Clergy in the City of Avinion, called Frier John of Rochtaylada, the which Frier Pope Innocent the ſixth held in priſon in the Caſtle of Baignour, for ſhewing of many marvails after to come; principally he ſhewed many things to fall unto the Prelates of the Church for the great ſuperfluity and pride, that was then uſed among them. And alſo he ſpake many things to fall of the Realm of France, and of the great Lords of Chriſtendom, for the oppreſſions that they did to the poor common people. This Frier, ſaid he, would prove all his ſaying by the authority of the Apocalypſe, and by other Books of Holy Saints and Prophets, the which were opened to him by the grace of the Holy Ghoſt: he ſhewed many things hard to believe, and many things fell after as he ſaid. He ſaid them not as a Prophet, but he ſhewed them by authority of antient Scriptures, and by the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, who gave him underſtanding to declare the antient Prophets, and to ſhew to all Chriſtian people the years and times when ſuch things ſhould fall. He made divers Books founded on great Sciences and Clergy, whereof one was made the year of our Lord 1346. wherein were written ſuch marvels, that it were hard to believe them; howbeit many things according thereto fell out after. And when he was demanded of the wars of France, he ſaid that all that had been ſeen was not like that ſhould be ſeen after. For he ſaid that the wars in France ſhould not be ended, till the Realm were utterly waſted and ſpoiled in every part. The which ſaying was well ſeen after, for the noble Realm of France was ſore waſted and ſpoiled, and ſpecially in the term that the ſaid Frier had ſet. The which was in the years of our Lord 135, 657, 58, and 59. He ſaid in thoſe years, the Princes and Gentlemen of the Realm ſhould not for fear ſhew themſelves againſt the people of low eſtate, aſſembled of all Countries without head or captain; and they ſhould do as they liſt in the Realm of France; the which fell after, as ye have heard, how the companions aſſembled them together, and by reaſon of their robbery and pillage waxed rich, and became great Captains.

Ex Joanne Froyſardo volu. 1. cap. 211.

About the ſame time happned in France a certain contention between the French Prelates, and the Friers of Paris, teſtified and recorded by Godfridus de Fontanis; the brief effect of which ſtory is this: The Prelates of France Conventing and Aſſembling together in the City of Paris, after a long deliberation among themſelves, cauſed by the Beadles to be called together all the Students, Maſters, and Batchelors of every faculty, with the chief heads alſo of all the Religious Houſes and Friers in the Univerſity of Paris. Who being all there Congregated together in the Biſhop of Paris his Houſe, where there were preſent four Archbiſhops, and twenty Biſhops: firſt ſtood up the Biſhop of Biturecenſe, who, there making his Sermon, took for his Theam the place of Saint Paul to the Epheſians; Fratres, ut ſciatis quæ ſit longitudo, latitudo, altitudo & profunditas charitatis, &c. and concluded thereupon, firſt, that true charity would compel them to ſee and provide for their flocks. Secondly, That the vigor of Charity would arm them to withſtand errors. Thirdly, he concluded, That by duty of Charity they were bound to give their lives for the ſouls of their flock committed to their charge. Fourthly, That by the ſame Charity every Man ought to hold himſelf content with that which was his own, and not to intermeddle or buſie himſelf further than to him appertained or belonged to his Office. For there (ſaith he) all Order Eccleſiaſtical is diſſolved, whereas Men, not containing themſelves in their own Precincts, preſume in other Mens Charges where they have nothing to do. But this Charity (ſaith he) now adays waxeth cold, and all Eccleſiaſtical Order is confounded and utterly out of order. For many there be, which now adays preſume to thruſt in themſelves where they have nothing to do; ſo that now the Church may ſeem a monſter. For as in a natural body appeareth a monſter, where one member doth the office of another; ſo in the ſpiritual body which is the Church, it may be thought likewiſe. As when our learned and prudent brethren, to wit, the Friers majors and minors, do take upon them to uſurp and occupy the office to us eſpecially appertaining; namely, whereas the Scripture warneth us all, none to take upon him any office, except he be called thereunto of the Lord, as Aaron was. Wherefore we have heretofore oftentimes cauſed the ſaid Friers both by the King himſelf in his own perſon, and alſo by other Nobles to be ſpoken to and deſired to ſurceaſe from doing and intermeddling in our Office, and yet they would not, but have preached againſt our wills through all our Dioceſs, and have heard Confeſſions, ſaying, That they have the Popes priviledge to bear them out therein. For the which cauſe we come to you, and not we here preſent only, but alſo we have the hand-writing, and the full conſent of all other our fellow Biſhops throughout the Kingdom of France, to complain to you of this ſo great inſolence and preſumption of the Friers. For that as we are, you ſhall be. Neither do I think that there be any of us Prelates here now, which have not ſometime been taken out of this Univerſity of yours. We have deſired moreover, and cauſed to be deſired of the foreſaid Friers, that they would ſend their priviledges to the See Apoſtolical, to be interpreted and expounded more plainly by the Lord Pope: which they refuſed alſo to do. Wherefore to the intent you may the better underſtand and ſee what their priviledges be, and how far they do extend, we have appointed the ſaid priviledges here openly to be read unto you.

{KING Edw. 3}

A Sermon of the Biſhop of Bytern to the Students of Paris againſt the Friers.

That is the Dominick Friers, and the Franciſcan Friers.

Then ſtood up another in the publick place, and there read the priviledges of both the Orders: and afterward read alſo the conſtitution of Pope Innocent the third, written in the fifth of the Decretals, and beginneth, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c. Which conſtitution was repugnant and contrary to the foreſaid priviledges, as he there manifeſtly proved, declaring how both the priviledges were derogatory to that conſtitution.

The conſtitution of Pope Innocent 3.

Omnis utriuſque ſexus.

This done, then roſe up the Biſhop Ambianenſis, a great Lawyer, who, diſcourſing from Article to Article, there proved by good Law, that the ſaid conſtitution ſtood in his full force and vigor, and ought not to be infringed by the Friers priviledges in any part. And therefore by the vertue of that conſtitution, that the Friers ought not ſo miſorderly to intrude themſelves in hearing Confeſſions, in injoyning of penance, and preaching in Churches and Dioceſſes, without ſpecial licence of the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, and curate of the Pariſh: unto whoſe words never a Frier at that time replyed again. And ſo the Biſhop proceeding to his concluſion, deſired the Univerſity to aſſiſt them in that caſe, wherein they were all determined (ſaith he) to ſtand firmly to the ſhedding of their blood, in reſiſting that miſorder and injuries of the Friers. This happned the ſixth day of December which they dedicated to Saint Nicolas.

The Friers priviledges proved contrary to the Popes conſtitution.

The Biſhop Ambianenſis.

Friers ought not to preach in Churches without ſpecial licence of them to whom the Church belonged.

The

KING Edw. 3

The next day being Sunday, one of the Order of the Minorites or Franciſcans, went to the Church of the Minorites or preaching Friers: where he made a Sermon (which was never ſeen before, the one Order to come and reſort to the other) beginning in the foreſaid matter to reply, and to expound in order through every Article as well as he could; adding moreover and ſaying, That they went not ſo far in their priviledges, as they lawfully might. And he ſaid moreover, That what time the ſaid priviledges were in obtaining in Rome, the Biſhop Ambianenſis was there preſent himſelf, reſiſting the ſame with all his power; yea all the Prelates alſo of France ſent and wrote up to the Court againſt the ſame, and yet did not prevail. For when the Friers there preſently declared and opened to the Pope in what manner and how far they had uſed their priviledges; the Pope the ſame time ſaid, Placet, that is, agreed unto the ſame. And now (ſaith he) the Prelates require and demand of us to ſend up our priviledges to the Court; which were great folly in us. For in ſo doing, what ſhould we elſe but give place and occaſion, to revoke again the authority which is given into our hands already? Furthermore, our Warden and Maſter is now lately dead, and the Maſter here of the Dominick Friers, is not now preſent. Wherefore we dare not determine in ſuch a weighty cauſe (touching the priviledges of our Order) without the preſence of them. And therefore we deſire you of the Univerſity to hold us therein excuſed, and not to be ſo lightly ſtirred againſt us, for we are not the worſt and vileſt part of the Univerſity, &c.

The Friers reply againſt the Prelates.

The next day, being the 8th. day of the ſame month, is alſo dedicate to the Conception of our Lady: upon which day it was determined likewiſe, that one of the Dominick Friers ſhould Preach in the Church of the Franciſcan or Gray Friers, and ſo he did: tending to the ſame end, as the other Frier in the other Church had done before. Whereto it may ſeem the Proverb well anſwered, wherof we read in the Goſpel: Facti ſunt amici Herodes & Pilatus in ipſa die.

How and Pilate were made friend in crucifying of Chriſt.

It was not long after, that the Feaſt of S. Thomas the Apoſtle followed, in whoſe Vigil all the heads of the Univerſity again were warned the third day after to congregate together in the Church of Saint Bernard at the Sermon time. Which being done, and the Aſſembly meeting together, another Sermon was made by a Divine of the Univerſity, whoſe Theam was, Prope eſt Dominus omnibus invocantibus eum in veritate, &c. Wherein he with many words and great authorities argued againſt them that would not be obedient unto their Prelates, &c. The Sermon being ended, then roſe again the Biſhop Ambianenſis, who proſecuted the reſt of the Theam, and coming to the word in veritate divided it into three parts, according to the common Gloſs of the Decretals:

Another Sermon againſt the Friers.

Biſhop Ambianenſis. In veritate, &c.

Eſt verum vitæ, dictæ, doctrinæ, juſtitiæque,
Primum ſemper habe; duo propter ſcandala linque.

Shewing and declaring by many authorities both of Canonical Scriptures and out of the Law, and by evident demonſtration of experience; that the Friers firſt had no verity of life, becauſe they were full of Hypocriſie; neither had they verity of Doctrine, becauſe in their heart they bare gall, and in their tongue honey: neither verity of Juſtice, becauſe they uſurped other Mens Offices. And thus concluding with the ſame, he cauſed again to be read the ſaid priviledges, with the Conſtitution above ſpecified. And ſo expounding place by place, he did argue and prove that the ſaid conſtitution in no part was evacuate or infringed by the priviledges aforeſaid. Which thing being declared, he added moreover, That whereas the Friers ſay (ſaith he) that I ſhould be preſent in the obtaining of the priviledges, I grant it to be true; and when word came to me thrice thereof, I went to the Pope reclaiming and requiring the ſaid priviledges to be revoked: but the next day after, it ſo pleaſed the Pope to ſend me out abroad upon weighty affairs, ſo that then the matter had no end. After that, we ſent alſo other Meſſengers with our Letters, for the ſame cauſe unto the Court of Rome, whom the Friers ſay not to have prevailed, but they lie therein. For the ſaid Meſſengers again brought us Letters, from the chief of the Court of Rome, ſealed with their Seals: which Letters we have divers times preſented to our King, and will ſhortly ſhew them unto you all. In the which the Lord Pope hath promiſed the ſaid priviledges either to be utterly abrogate, or elſe to be mitigated with ſome more plain interpretation; of the which we truſt ſhortly to have the publick Bull or Writ from the Pope.

Verity in three parts conſiſteth.

The Friers proved with a lie.

At laſt, the ſaid Biſhop required and deſired of all there, of what Dioceſs or Country ſoever they were, that they would Copy out the foreſaid priviledges, and ſend them abroad into their Countries, that all Men might ſee what they were, and how far they did extend. In fine the matter coming into open diſputation, it was concluded by Maſter Giles one of the Auſtine Friers (who was thought to be moſt reaſonable of all the other Friers) in this wiſe, that after his Sentence the Prelates were in the truer part, &c. Hæc ex Godfrido de Fontanis.

The Friers priviledges confuted in diſputation at Paris.

Concerning this wrangling contention between the Univerſity and Friers of France here before mentioned, whereof partly the original cauſe may be underſtood, by that which hath been ſaid, to riſe upon certain priviledges granted by Popes to the Friers, to intermeddle in matters of Pariſh Churches; As to hear Confeſſions, to Preach and Teach, with power thereunto annexed to gather for their labour, to Bury within their Houſes, and to receive Impropriations, &c. becauſe it were too long here to deſcribe the full circumſtances thereof, alſo becauſe the ſaid contention did indure a long time, not only in France, but alſo came over into England: the whole diſcourſe thereof more amply (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in the beginning of the next Book following, when we come to the ſtory of Armachanus.

A ſeditious commotion between the Townſmen and the Scholars in the Univerſity of Oxford.

About what time and year this brawl was in the Univerſity of Paris between the Friers and Prelates there, as hath been declared; the like contention happned alſo in the Univerſity of Oxford in the year above prefixed, 1354. ſave only that the ſtrife among the Maſters of Paris, as it roſe upon Friarly Ceremonies, ſo it went no further than brawling words and matter of Excommunition: but this tumult, riſing of a drunken cauſe, proceeded further unto bloody ſtripes. The firſt original whereof began in a Tavern, between a Scholar and the good Man of the Houſe; Who falling together in altercation, grew to ſuch height of words, that the ſtudent (contra jus hoſpitii) poured the wine upon the head of the Hoſt, and brake his head with the quart pot. Upon this occaſion given, eſtſoons parts began to be taken between the Townſmen and the Scholars. Inſomuch that a grievous ſedition and conflict followed upon the ſame; wherein many of the Townſmen were wounded, and to the number of twenty ſlain. Divers alſo of the Scholars were grievouſly hurt. The ſpace of two days this hurly-burly continued. Upon the ſecond day certain Religious and devout perſons ordained a ſolemn Proceſſion General, to pray for peace. Yet notwithſtanding all that Proceſſion, as holy as it was, it would not bring peace. In the which proceſſion (the skirmiſh ſtill waxing hot) one of the ſtudents, being hardly purſued by the Townſmen, for ſuccour in his flight came running to the Prieſt or Frier, which carried about (as the manner was) the Pixe; thinking to find refuge at the preſence of the Tranſubſtantiated God of the Altar there carried inboxed. Notwithſtanding, the God being not there preſent, or elſe not ſeeing him, or elſe peradventure being aſleep, the Scholar found there ſmall help. For the Townſmen in heat of the chaſe, forgetting belike the vertue of the Popes Tranſubſtantiation, followed him ſo hard, that in the preſence of the Pixe they brake his head, and wounded him grievouſly. This done, at length ſome peace or truce for that day was taken. The next morrow following, other Townſmen in the Villages about, joyning with the Townſmen of Oxford, confederated together in great force and power to ſet upon the ſtudents there, and ſo did, having a black flag born before them, and ſo invaded the Univerſity Men. Whereupon the Scholars being overmatched, and compelled to flee into their Halls and Hoſtles, were ſo purſued by their enemies, that twenty of the doors of their Halls and Chambers were broke open, and many of them wounded (and as it is ſaid) ſlain and thrown into Privies; their Books with Knives and Bills cut all in pieces, and much of their goods carried away. And thus the ſtudents of that Univerſity being conquered by the Townſmen of Oxford, and of the Country about, departed and left the Univerſity. So that for a time the Schools there, and all School acts, did utterly ceaſe from all exerciſe of ſtudy, except only Merton College-Hall, with a few other remaining behind.

This being done the 12th. day of February, the Queen at the ſame time being at Woodſtock was brought to bed, and purified on the firſt Sunday in Lent with great ſolemnity of Juſting. About which time the Biſhop of Lincoln their Dioceſan, hearing of this exceſſive outrage, ſendeth his inhibition to all Parſons and Prieſts, forbidding them throughout all Oxford, to celebrate Maſs or any Divine Service in the preſence of any Lay perſon within the ſaid Town of Oxford, interdicting withal the whole Town. Which Interdiction indured the ſpace of a whole year and more.

The Town of Oxford interdicted.

The King alſo ſent thither his Juſtices to examine and inquire of the matter. Before whom divers Lay-men and of the Clergy were indicted, and four of the chief Burgeſſes of the ſaid Town were indicted, and by the Kings commandment ſent to the Tower of London, and were there impriſoned. At length through much labor of the Nobles, the King ſo took by the matter, that ſending his writings unto all Sheriffs in England he offered pardon to all and ſingular Sudents of that Univerſity, (whereſoever diſperſe) for that tranſgreſſion: Whereby the Univerſity in ſhort time was repleniſhed again as before. Moreover it was granted to the Vice-Chancellor or Commiſſary (as they term him) of the Town and Univerſity of Oxford, to have the Aſſize of Bread, Ale, Wine, and all other Victual, the Major of the ſaid Town being excluded. Alſo it was granted and decreed, that the Commons of Oxford ſhould give to the Univerſity of Oxford, 200. pound ſterling, in part of ſatisfaction for their exceſſes: reſerved notwithſtanding to every one of the Students his ſeveral action againſt any ſeveral perſon of the Townſmen, &c.

Granted to the Commiſſary of Oxford to have the aſſiſe of bread and Ale and other privileges about the Major of the Town.

About the year of our Lord 1354. the King, with the conſent of his Council, revoked home again out of Flanders the Staple of Wool, with all things thereunto appertaining, and ſtabliſhed the ſame in ſundry places within the Realm, namely in Weſtminſter, Canterbury, Chichiſter, Briſtow, Lincoln, and in Hull. Which Staple after An. 1362. was tranſlated over into Calis.

Of Simon Iſlip Archbiſhop of Canterbury mentioned a little before, pag. 445. I read in the ſaid Author above ſpecified, That he by his Letters Patent directed to all Parſons and Vicars within his Province; ſtraightly charged them and their Pariſhoners, under pain of Excommunication, not to abſtain from bodily labor, upon certain Saints days, which before were wont to be Hallowed and Conſecrated to unthrifty idleneſs. Item, That to Prieſts ſhould be given no more for their yearly ſtipend, but three pound ſix ſhillings and eight pence, which made divers of them to rob and ſteal, &c. Anno. 1362. The next year following, which was 1363. the foreſaid King Edward kept his Parliament at London in the month of October: wherein was prohibited, that gold nor ſilver ſhould be worn in Knives, Girdles, Brooches, Rings, or in any other ornament belonging to the body, except the wearer might diſpend 10 pound by year. Item, That none ſhould wear either Silks or coſtly Furrs, except ſuch as might diſpend 100 pounds by year. Alſo that Merchant Venturers ſhould not export over any Merchandiſe out of the Realm, or ſeek for Wines in other Countries, whereby other Nations ſhould be conſtrained rather to ſeek to us, &c. But none of this did take any great effect.

Moreover in the time of this Pope Innocent, Frier John Lyle Biſhop of Ely, moved with certain injuries (as he thought) done to him by the Lady Blanch, made his complaint to the Pope. Who ſending down his Cuſſe to the Biſhop of Lincoln, and other Prelates to be executed upon the adverſaries of the Biſhop of Ely, commanded them, That if they did know any of the ſaid adverſaries dead and buried (that notwithſtanding) they ſhould cauſe the ſame to be taken up: which alſo they performed accordingly, of whom ſome had been of the Kings Council. Wherefore the King being diſpleaſed, and not unworthily, did trouble and moleſt again the ſaid Prelates. This coming to the Popes hearing, certain were directed down from the Court of Rome, in the behalf of the foreſaid Biſhop of Ely: who meeting with the Biſhop of Rocheſter, the Kings Treaſurer, delivered unto him, being armed, Letters from the Biſhop of Rome, the tenor whereof was not known. Which done, they incontinently avoided away. But certain of the Kings Servants purſuing, did overtake them: of whom ſome they impriſoned, ſome they brought to the Juſtices, and ſo they were condemned to be hanged. Wherein may appear what reverence the Popes Letters, in this Kings days, had in this Realm of England. *Ex Chro. But by the count of other Authors (namely by the Chronicle of the Monk of Dover) he ſeemeth to be deceived, as he was in the 28. years of Dunſtan, which indeed did ſit but nineteen or twenty at the moſt. This error of Polydore ſeemeth to come by leaving out either Effius, which was the 23*th.* or by leaving out Elfricus, which was the 26*th.* as in ſome Authors I find.

Moreover, here is to be noted, that although the ſaid Elfricus were left out, yet Lanfrancus cannot be 33.

Note alſo, That in the Table of the third Book before, after Siricius, you muſt put in Sanctus Aluredus. Which in order of Archbiſhops I left out in the end of the third Book, page 191.

This Lanfrancus was an Italian, and a ſtout Champion of the Pope. After his ſtubborn diſſention with Thomas Archbiſhop of York he wrote againſt Berengarius, Intituling his Book, Opus Scintillarum, page 196.

Alſo the ſame Lanfrank builded the new Church at Canterbury, and pluckt down the old. By him was builded the Church of S. Gregory. At length he was expulſed by King William Rufus.

35. Anſelmus. 20.

Of this Anſelmus, and the ſtrife between him and the King, look in the page 209.

36. Radulphus. 8.

Under Rad the Order of Ciſtercians began.

37. Guliel-mus Curboil. 13.

By this William the new work of the Church of Saint Martins at Dover was builded.

38. Theobaldus. 24.

By This Theobald, Monks were firſt brought into the Church of Dover. He was expulſed by King Stephen. In his time the Church of Saint Gregory was burned at Canterbury.

39. Thomas Becket. 9.

Of the life and death of this Becket, ſee the page 232.

Ex Chron. Radenſi

Ex Crickeladenſi: Magnates in Anglia interdixerunt, ne quis Martyrem Thomam nominaret, ne quis ejus miracula prædicaret, interminantes minas mortis ſeu maximarum pœnarum omnibus confitentibus eum fuiſſe Martyrem, & miracula ejus prædicantibus, &c.

40. Richard. 10.

This Richard was a Monk: in his time Chriſts Church in Canterbury was burned.

41. Baldwinus. 7.

Between this Baldwin and the Monks was great diſcord. He ſuſpended the Prior from his Priorſhip, and two and twenty Monks from all Service. He cauſed the Sub-Prior with all his adherents to be Excommunicated through all Kent.

42. Hubertus. 14.

In the time of this Hubert the Chapel of Lambeth was pluckt down. Alſo the Church of Dover was burned.

This Stephen, with the Monks of Canterbury, were expulſed by King John.

This Stephen, intending to give Orders in the Chappel of Lambeth, was ſtopped by the Monks of Canterbury, through their appeal and prohibition. Wherefore he required Euſtace Biſhop of London to Miniſter the ſame Orders in the Church of S. Paul.

43. Stephanus Langton. 22.

In his time fell great variance between the Monks of Rocheſter and the Monks of Canterbury, for the Election of their Biſhop, which Election the Monks of Canterbury would not admit before the Rocheſter Monks had preſented the Biſhops ſtaff in the Church of Canterbury; ſo that both the Churches ſent their Meſſengers to the Court of Rome.

44. Richardus Magnus. 4.

At the Conſecration of this Richard, contention roſe between the Biſhop of Rocheſter and the Biſhop of Bath, who ſhould Conſecrate him.

Item, Between the ſaid Richard and the Monks of Canterbury fell a grievous diſcord, about certain Liberties belonging to the Archbiſhop.

The ſaid Archbiſhop, for certain quarels againſt the King, went up to Rome, who died in Tuſcia.

After this Richard the Election of three Archbiſhops was diſannulled at Rome, of Radulphus de Nova Villa, of John Prior of Canterbury, of John Blund.

45. Edmund of Abenden. 7.

This Edmund was called Saint Sdmund, at whoſe Election the Prior of Dover thinking to be preſent, as at the marriage of his Mother, was not permitted by the Monks of Canterbury. For the which injury he appealed and went to Rome to complain, not againſt the Elect, but againſt the Election: where he obtained of the Pope, for all the Priors and Succeſſors of Dover to have full intereſt in the Election of the Archbiſhops, beſides other priviledges which he obtained, percaſe not without ſome good ſtore of money. Afterward the Monks of Canterbury accuſed him to the Archbiſhop, as though he ſtood againſt the perſon of the Elect, and ſo obtained of the Archbiſhop being angry with him, to have brought him under the Chapter of Canterbury, there to be puniſhed. Whereupon the Prior, ſeeing himſelf ſo deſtitute of all help of Lawyers, was conſtrained in the foreſaid Chapter to cry peccavi. Then being ſuſpended from his Priorſhip, he was at length ſent home from Dover, being compelled firſt to ſet his hand to a certain compoſition between him and the foreſaid Monks.

The ſaid Edmund Archbiſhop, having alſo ſome quarrel againſt the King, went up to Rome, and died before his coming home.

In the time of this Boniface, Pope Gregory wickedly granted to King Henry the Third (for the getting of the Kingdom of Sicily, which belonged not to him to give, nor to the other to take) tenths of goods temporal and ſpiritual, for five years. Item, All the firſt years fruits of Churches that ſhould be vacant for five years. Item, Half of all the goods of Beneficed Men, not reſident at their Benefices. Item, All Legacies not diſtinctly given. And yet the Kingdom of Sicily never came to his hands, which belonged to Manfredus, Son of Frederick the Emperor. Striſe there was between this Boniface and the Prior of Canterbury.

Item, Between him and the Biſhop of Roff. Item, Between him and the Chapter of Lincoln: all which was after agreed; Chro. Doverenſ. fol. 20. pag. 2.

Strife alſo in Wincheſter; about chuſing the Biſhop after the death of Ayonarus the Kings Brother.

46. Bonifacius. 25. Strife alſo in the Convocation which Boniface did hold at Lambeth. In the which Council were recited the Statutes of Octobonus, and other new Statutes made; againſt which John Hemelingford the Kings Chaplain with other more, and Prince Edward on the Kings behalf, did appeal. Chron. Dover. fol. 21.

Under this Boniface Archbiſhop, Tunbridge and Hadlo firſt came under the cuſtody of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Maſter John of Exeter bought the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter for 6000. Marks; which being known, he was fain to pay the ſame ſumm again to the Pope, and ſo was ſent home.

Boniface the Archbiſhop being in the parts of Subaudia, An. 1262. there fell another altercation between the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury on the one part, and the Prior and Chapter of Dover on the other part. Which two Houſes almoſt were never in quiet, and all about certain liberties and priviledges; as for making the Sub-Prior, for receiving in of Monks, and for Viſitations of the Church of Dover.

An. 1268. Boniface Archbiſhop Interdicted the City of London, becauſe in the ſame City the Archbiſhop of York did hold up his Croſs, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury being there preſent, the King holding then his Parliament at Weſtminſter.

This Archbiſhop died in the parts of Subaudia

John Prior of Canterbury was Elected by the Monks againſt the Kings mind, but by the Pope refuſed.

Adam Chilinden was Elect, but he reſigned his Election to the Pope.

In the time of this Robert Kilwarby, appeal was taken againſt the Chapter of Canterbury by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, of Worceſter, and Exeter; for the which cauſe the ſaid Biſhops went up to Rome to proſecute the Appeal. The matter was, becauſe they did not their obedience to the Monks of Canterbury, the See being empty.

Walter Giffard Archbiſhop of York, going toward the General Council, bare up his Croſs through the middle of Kent, in the time of this Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Anno. 1272.

47. Robert Kilwarby. Frier. 6. By Pope Gregoty the 10*th.* in the General Council at Lions, all the Orders of Friers were put down, Four Orders only excepted, that is, Dominicks, Franciſcans, Carmalites, and Auguſtines.

This Robert Kilwarby by the commandment of Pope Nicholas was made Cardinal of Rome, Biſhop of Porvenſis.

An untruth in Polydore Virgil. Where is to be noted an untruth in Polydore Virgil, which ſaith, That he was made Cardinal by Pope Gregory, which could not be.

Robert Burnel Biſhop of Bath was Elected, but by the Pope refuſed; For whom John Peckham a Grey-Frier, was placed by Pope Nicholas.

In the firſt year of this Frier Peckham, W. Wikewane Archbiſhop of York coming from his Conſecration at Rome to Dover, bare up his Croſs through the midſt of Kent, whereat was no little ado.

Robert Gernemine Archdeacon of Canterbury went to Law at Rome for the liberties and poſſeſſions of his Archdeaconſhip two years, and there died.

In this time alſo another wrangling fell between the Monks of Canterbury and the Monks of Dover, in the time of this John Peckham, for admitting certain Novices of Dover into Orders. Ex chr. Monach. Dover. fol. 42.

This Peckham, holding a Council at Lambeth, Ordained divers Statutes, and cauſed the Ordinances of the Council of Lions, and of Boniface Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his predeceſſor to be obſerved.

Great grief and hatred was between this Peckham and Thomas Biſhop of Hereford: who being Excommunicated by Peckham, appealed to Rome, and went to the Pope.

The Prior and Covent of Canterbury made their appeal againſt this Archbiſhop Peckham, that he ſhould not conſecrate Walter le Schamel new Elect Biſhop of Salisbury, in any other place, except only in the Church of Canterbury, but by their leave and licence firſt obtained. Notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop, nothing regarding their appeal, proceeded in the Conſecration of the ſaid Biſhop near to the Town of Reding, whereupon the Prior and Covent ceaſed not to proſecute their appeal againſt the Archbiſhop.

48. John Peckham. 13. Between Richard Ferrings Archdeacon of Canterbury of the one party, and the Barons of Dover of the other party, the ſame year fell out another like wrangling, for that the Archdeacon claimed to viſit the Church of Dover: contrarily the Barons affirmed, That none had nor ſhould have to do there to or order or diſpoſe in Spiritual matters, but only the Archbiſhop, and the Prior and Convent of Saint Martin. Ex eod. Chron. fol. 46.

After the death of William Whicwane Archbiſhop of York, John de Roma ſucceeded after him; and coming from his Conſecration at Rome to Dover, bare his Croſs through the middle of Kent, contrary to the inhibition of John Peckham.

This Robert, which was Archbiſhop in the later time of King Edward the Firſt, for certain diſpleaſure of the King conceived againſt him, departed the Realm, and in his baniſhment remained two or three years. And about the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the Second was reſtored again: Anno. 1309. Ex Chron. Rich. 2. Thus few Archbiſhops of Canterbury we find, with whom Kings have not had ſome quarrel or other. The cauſe between the King and him (ſaith mine Author) was this: That the King accuſed him to Pope Clement to diſturb his Realm, and to take part with Rebels, &c. Ex Chron. S. Albani.

49. Robert Winchelſey. 19. This Robert alſo Excommunicated Walter, Biſhop of Coventry, for holding with the King and Peter Gaveſton againſt the Ordinances of the Barons; wherefore the ſaid Biſhop appealed to the Pope, againſt whom the Archbiſhop ſent Adam Merimouth.

In the time of this Robert Archbiſhop, the Order of Templars were aboliſhed by Pope Clement the 5*th.* in the Council of Vienna with this Sentence definitive:

Quam-

Quantum de jure non poſſumus, tamen ad plenitudinam poteſtatis dictum ordinem reprobamus.

After the deceaſe of Robert Winchelſey, who departed Anno 1312, Thomas Cobham a learned man was Elected by full conſent of the Monks: who came to Avinion to have his Election Confirmed. But the Pope reſerving the vacant Seat in his own hands, put in Walter Reynald Biſhop of Worceſter, Chancellor of England, who Governed the Seat 15 years.

The Chronicler of St. Albans, Recordeth alſo, how in the days of this Archbiſhop, Anno 1319, certain Lepers conſpiring with the Turks and Jews went about to impotionate, and infect all Chriſtendom, by invenoming their Fountains, Lakes, Pits, Barrels, and ſuch other places. Of the which crime divers of them being Convict were worthily burned in France.

50. Gualter Reynald. 15

About the which year, the ſaid Author maketh alſo Relation, how in the Realm of England much murrain fell among the Beaſts: inſomuch, that the Dogs eating upon their fleſh (infected belike by the Waters and Fountains) fell down dead incontinently. Neither durſt men for that cauſe almoſt taſte of any Beef: An. 1318, 1319. Ex Ch. Alban.

This Walter Archbiſhop taking part with the Queen Iſabel againſt King Edward her Husband, died the ſame year in which he was depoſed: An. 1237. Ex Chro. Sanct. Albani.

After Walter the Archbiſhop, as affirmeth the Chronicle of St. Alban, ſucceeded Simon Mepham. Of whom I marvel that Polydore maketh no word nor mention: belike he ſate not long: after followed John Stratford.

In the Story of Adam Merimouth, it is Recorded that this John Stratford, intending to viſit the Dioceſs of Norfolk, was not received by the Biſhop, the Chapter and Clergy there alledging that he obſerved not the ordinary Canon therein.

51. John Stratford. 29.

To whom the Archbiſhop ſaid again, He had the Popes Letters, and ſhewed the ſame. But the other anſwered, That thoſe Letters were falſly obtained and tended to the ſuppreſſion of the Clergy, and therefore they would not obey: wherefore the Archbiſhop Excommunicated the Biſhop, and Suſpended the Prior, and Interdicted the Covent: An. 1347.

52. John Offord 10 Months.

Maſter John Offord, Chancellor of England, was Elected and Confirmed Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but not Conſecrated, and ſate but ten months, about the year of our Lord, 1350, Peſtilentia in Anglia.

53. Thomas Braidwarden. 1.

This Thomas Braidwarden following after John Stratford, ſate not long, but died within 10 months of the Plague, as they ſay. Which was called then the firſt great Plague in England, raging ſo ſore in all quarters, that it was thought ſcarce the tenth part of men to be left alive.

The firſt great Plague in England.

In the time of Simon Iſlyppe, which followed after Braidwarden, King Edward, Anno 1362, is reported, after the blind Superſtition of thoſe days, to offer in the Church of Weſtminſter the Veſtiments wherein St. Peter did Celebrate Maſs. Which belike were well kept from Moths, to laſt ſo long. Ex Ch. Alban.

The Veſtiments wherein St. Peter ſaid Maſs, or elſe the Papiſts do lye.

54. Simon Iſlyppe. 17.

The ſame Simon Iſlyppe among other Conſtitutions, Ordained through all Churches and Chappels under pain of Excommunication; that no man ſhould abſtain from Bodily labours upon certain Saints days, as is before touched: which Fact of his is not a little noted in our Monkiſh Hiſtories.

This Simon builded Canterbury Colledge in Oxford.

The concluſion of this Fourth Book.

The concluſion of this Book. Antichriſt in his pride.

Foraſmuch as Satan being Chained up all this while for the ſpace of a Thouſand Years, beginneth about this time to be looſed and to come abroad, according to the fore-warning of St. John's Revelation: Therefore to conclude the Fourth Book, wherein ſufficiently hath been deſcribed the exceſſive pride and pomp of Antichriſt, flouriſhing in his ruff and ſecurity, from the time of William Conqueror hitherto: Now (Chriſt willing and aſſiſting us thereunto) we mind in theſe later Books hereafter following, in order of Hiſtory to expreſs the later Perſecutions and horrible Troubles of the Church, raiſed up by Satanas in his miniſter Antichriſt; with the reſiſtance again of Chriſts Church againſt him. And ſo to proſecute (by the merciful Grace of Chriſt) the proceeding and courſe of times, till we come at length to the fall and ruin of the ſaid Antichriſt. To the intent that if any be in ſuch error to think that Antichriſt is yet to come, he may conſider and ponder well the Tragical Rages, the miſerable and moſt ſorrowful Perſecutions, Murthers, and Vexations of theſe later Three Hundred Years now following, and then I doubt not but he will be put out of all doubt, and know that not only Antichriſt is already come, but alſo will know where he ſitteth, and how he is now falling apace (the Lord Chriſt be thanked for ever) to his decay and confuſion.

The looſing out of Satan.

THE

THE FIFTH BOOK,

CONTAINING

The laſt Three Hundred Years from the looſing out of Satan.

The fifth Book.

THUS having diſcourſed in theſe former Books the order and courſe of Years, from the firſt tying up of Satan unto the Year of our Lord 1360. I have a little overpaſſed the ſtint of time in the Scripture, appointed for the looſing out of him again. For ſo it is written by St. John, Apoc. 20. that after a thouſand years, Satan the old Dragon ſhall be let looſe again for a ſeaſon, &c.

The years and time of looſing out Satan examined.

For the better explanation of the which Myſtery, let us firſt conſider the context of the Scripture: afterward let us examine, by Hiſtory and courſe of Times, the meaning of the ſame: And firſt, to recite the words of the Apocalypſe, the Text of the Propheſie is this, Chap. 20.

Apoc. 20.

And I ſaw an Angel deſcending from heaven, having a key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he took the Dragon the old Serpent, which is the Divel and Satanas, and bound him for a thouſand years, and put him in the bottomleſs dungeon and ſhut him up, and ſigned him with his ſeal, that he ſhould not more ſeduce the Gentiles, till a thouſand years were expired. And after that he muſt be looſed again for a little ſpace of time. And I ſaw ſeats, and they ſate upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and the ſouls I ſaw of them which were beheaded for the teſtimony of Jeſus, &c.

By theſe words of the Revelation, here recited, three ſpecial times are to be noted.

Firſt, The being abroad of Satan to deceive the World.

Secondly, The binding up of him.

Thirdly, The looſing out of him again, after a thouſand years conſummate, for a time.

The place of the Apoc. 20. expounded, for the looſing out of Satan.

Concerning the intepretation of which times, I ſee the common opinion of many to be deceived by ignorance of Hiſtories, and ſtate of things done in the Church; they ſuppoſing that the chaining up of Satan for a thouſand years, ſpoken of in the Revelation, was meant from the Birth of Chriſt our Lord. Wherein I grant that Spiritually the ſtrength and dominion of Satan, in accuſing and condemning us for ſin, was caſt down at the Paſſion and by the Paſſion of Chriſt our Saviour, and locked up not only for a thouſand years, but for ever. Albeit, as touching the malicious hatred and fury of that Serpent, againſt the outward bodies of Chriſts poor Saints (which is the heel of Chriſt) to afflict and torment the Church outwardly; That I Judge to be meant in the Revelation of St. John, not to be reſtrained till the ceaſing of thoſe terrible Perſecutions of the Primitive Church. At what time it pleaſed God to pity the ſorrowful affliction of his poor flock, being ſo long under Perſecution, the ſpace of three hundred years, and ſo to aſſwage their griefs and torments. Which is meant by binding up of Satan, worker of all thoſe miſchiefs: underſtanding thereby, that for ſo much as the Divel, the Prince of this World, had now by the Death of Chriſt the Son of God loſt all his power and intereſt againſt the Soul of man, he ſhould turn his furious rage and malice, which he had to Chriſt, againſt the People of Chriſt (which is meant by the heel of the ſeed, Gen. 3.) in tormenting their outward bodies. Which yet ſhould not be for ever, but for a determinate time, when as it ſhould pleaſe the Lord to bridle the malice, and ſnaffle the power of the old Serpent, and give reſt unto his Church for the term of a thouſand years. Which time being expired, the ſaid Serpent ſhould be ſuffered looſe again for a certain or a ſmall time, Apoc. 20.

What the looſing of Satan doth mean in Scripture.

And thus to Expound this Prophetical place of Scripture I am led by three reaſons:

Three reaſons.

The firſt reaſon.

The firſt is, For that the binding up of Satan, and cloſing him in the bottomleſs pit by the Angel, importeth as much that he was at liberty, raging and doing miſchief before. And certes thoſe ſo terrible and ſo horrible Perſecutions of the Primitive Time univerſally through the whole World, during the ſpace of three hundred years of the Church, do declare no leſs. Wherein it is to be thought and ſuppoſed, that Satan all that time, was not faſtened and cloſed up.

The ſecond reaſon.

The ſecond reaſon, moving me to think that the cloſing up of Satan was after the ten Perſecutions of the Primitive Church, is taken out of the twelfth Chapter of the Apocalypſe: Where we read, That after the Woman (meaning the Church) had travelled forth her man-child the old Dragon the Divel, the ſame time being caſt down from Heaven, drawing the third part of the Stars with him, ſtood before the Woman with great anger, and perſecuted her (that is, the Church of God) with a whole flood of water, (that is, with abundance of all kinds of torments) and from thence went moreover to fight againſt the reſidue of her ſeed, and ſtood upon the Sands of the Sea; whereby it appeareth that he was not as yet locked up.

The third reaſon. Apoc. cap. 13.

The third reaſon I Collect out of the Apocalypſe thirteenth Chapter; where it is written of the Beaſt, ſignifying the Emperial Monarchy of Rome, that he had power to make War forty and two months. By the which months is meant, no doubt, the time that the Dragon, and the perſecuting Emperors ſhould have in afflicting the Saints of the Primitive Church. The computation of which forty two months (counting every month for a Sabbath of years; that is, for ſeven years, after the order of Scripture) riſeth to the ſum (counting from the Paſſion of the Lord Chriſt) of three hundred years, lacking ſix; at what time Maxentius the laſt Perſecutor in Rome, fighting againſt Conſtantinus, was drowned with his Soldiers, like as Pharaoh perſecuting the Children of Iſrael was drowned in the red Sea. Unto the which xlii months, or Sabbaths of years, if ye add the other ſix years wherein Licinius perſecuted in the Eaſt; ye ſhall find juſt three hundred years, as is ſpecified before in the firſt Book of this Volume, pag. 96.

xlii months in the Apoc. cap. 13. examined.

What time Satan was tied up.

After the which forty and two months, being expired, manifeſt it is that the fury of Satan; that is, his violent malice and power over the Saints of Chriſt, was diminiſhed and reſtrained univerſally through the whole World.

Thus then the matter ſtanding evident, that Satan after 300 years, counting from the Paſſion of Chriſt, began to be chained up, at what time the perſecution of the Primitive Church began to ceaſe: now let us ſee how long this binding up of Satan ſhould continue, which was promiſed in the Book of the Revelation to be a thouſand years. Which thouſand years, if ye add to the xlii months of years, that is, to 294 years; they make 1294 years after the Paſſion of the Lord. To theſe moreover add the 30 years of the age of Chriſt, and it cometh to the year of our Lord 1324, which was the year of the letting out of Satan, according to the Propheſie of the Apocalypſe.

About the time and year Satan was let out by the count of the Apocalypſe.

KING Edw. 3

A Table containing the time of the Perſecution both of the Primitive, and of the later Church, with the count of years from the firſt binding up of Satan, to his looſing again, after the mind of the Apocalypſe.

The firſt Perſecution of the Primitime Church, beginning at the 30 year of Chriſt, was Prophecied to continue 42 months, that is, Anno 294

The ceaſing of the laſt Perſecution in the Primitive Church.

The ceaſing of the laſt Perſecution of the Primitive Church by the death of Licinius the laſt perſecuter, began Anno 324, from the Nativity of Chriſt, which was from the 30 year of his age. 294. 294

The binding up of Satan after peace given to the Church, counting from the 30 years of Chriſt, began An. 294

The binding up of Satan.

And laſted a thouſand years, that is, counting from the thirtieth year of Chriſt, to the year 1294

The time of looſing of Satan.

About which year Pope Boniface the eighth was Pope, and made the ſixth Book of the Decretals, confirmed the orders of Friers, and priviledged them with great freedoms, as appeareth by his conſtitution, Super cathedram. An. 1294

The time of Antichriſt, examined.

Unto the which count of years doth not much diſagree that which I found in a certain old Chronicle propheſied and written in the later end of a Book; which Book was written, as it ſeemeth, by a Monk of Dover, and remaineth yet in the cuſtody of William Carie, a Citizen of London; alledging the Propheſie of one Hayncardus a Gray Frier, grounded upon the Authority of Joachim the Abbot, Propheſying that Antichriſt ſhould be born the year from the Nativity of Chriſt 1260. Which is, counting after the Lords Paſſion, the very ſame year and time when the orders of Friers both Dominicks and Franciſcans began firſt to be ſet up by Pope Honorius the third, and by Pope Gregorius the ninth, which was the year of our Lord, counting after his Paſſion. 1226

And counting after the Nativity of the Lord, was the year 1260

Whereof theſe Verſes in the Author were written:

Verſes Propheſying of the coming of Antichriſt.

Cum fuerint anni completi mille ducenti,
Et decies ſeni poſt partum virginis almæ:
Tunc Antichriſtus naſcetur dæmone plenus.

And theſe Verſes were written, as appeareth by the ſaid Author, An. 1285.

Theſe things thus premiſed for the looſing out of Satan, according to the Propheſie of the Apocalypſe, now let us enter (Chriſt willing) to the declaration of theſe later times which followed after the leting out of Satan into the World. Deſcribing the wondrous perturbations and cruel tyranny ſtirred up by him againſt Chriſts Church; alſo the valiant reſiſtance of the Church of Chriſt againſt him and Antichriſt, as in theſe our Books here under-following may appear.

The Argument of the Book after looſing.

The argument of which Books conſiſteth in two parts; Firſt, To entreat of the raging fury of Satan now looſed, and of Antichriſt; againſt the Saints of Chriſts fighting and travelling for the maintainance of Truth, and Reformation of the Church. Secondly, To declare the decay and ruin of the ſaid Antichriſt, through the Power of the Word of God, being at length, either in a great part of the World overthrown: or at leaſt univerſally in the whole World detected.

Anno 1360

Thus then to begin with the year of our Lord 1360, wherein I have a little, as is aforeſaid, tranſgreſſed the ſtint of the firſt looſing out of Satan: we are come now to the time wherein the Lord, after long darkneſs, beginneth ſome Reformation of his Church, by the diligent induſtry of ſundry his faithful and learned ſervants: of whom divers already we have fore-touched in the former Book before; as namely, Guliel. de Sancto Amore, Marſilius Patavinus, Ockham, Robertus Gallus, Robertus Groſthead, Petrus de Cugneriis, Johannes Rupeſciſſanus, Conradus Hager, Johannes de Poliaco, Ceſenas, with other more; which withſtood the corrupt errors, and intolerable enormities of the Biſhop of Rome, beſide them which about theſe times were put to death by the ſaid Biſhop of Rome, as Chaſtilio and Franciſcus de Arcatara in the Book before Recorded; alſo the two Franciſcans, Martyrs, which were burned at Avinion, mentioned pag. 357.

A brief rehearſal of faithful learned men, which withſtood the proceedings of the Pope.

Now to theſe (the Lord willing) we will add ſuch other Holy Martyrs and Confeſſors, who following after in the courſe of years with like zeal and ſtrength of Gods Word, and alſo with like danger of their lives, gave the like reſiſtance againſt the enemy of Chriſts Religion, and ſuffered at his hands the like perſecutions. Firſt, beginning with that godly man, whoſoever he was, the Author of the Book (his name I have not) Intituled, The Prayer and Complaint of the Ploughman; written as it appeareth, about this preſent time.

The Author of the Ploughmans Prayer not known.

Which Book as it was faithfully ſet forth by William Tindal, ſo I have as truly diſtributed the ſame abroad to the Readers hands: neither changing any thing of the matter, neither altering many words of the Phraſe thereof. Although the oldneſs and age of his ſpeech and tearms be almoſt grown now out of uſe; yet I thought it ſo beſt, both for the utility of the Book to reſerve it from oblivion, as alſo in his own Language to let it go abroad, for the more credit and teſtimony of the true antiquity of the ſame. Adding withal in the Margent for the better underſtanding of the Reader, ſome interpretation of certain difficult tearms and ſpeeches, which otherwiſe might perhaps hinder or ſtay the Reader. The matter of this complaining Prayer of the Ploughman thus proceedeth:

An old ancient writing, Intituled, The Prayer and Complaint of the Ploughman.

An old Book, Intituled, The Ploughmans Prayer, written as it ſeemeth about Wicliffes time. The complaint of Iſaiah applied to theſe times.

JEſus Chriſt that was ybore of the maid Mary, have on thy poor ſervants mercy and pity, and help them in their great need to fight againſt ſin, and againſt the Divel that is Author of ſin; and more neeedneſs there never was to cry to Chriſt for help, than it is right now. For it is fulfilled that God ſaid by Iſaiah the Prophet, Ye riſeth up earlich to follow drunkenneſs, and to drink till it be even, the harp and other minſtrelſies beeth in your feaſts and wine. But the work of God ye ne beholdeth not, ne taketh no keep to the works of his hands: And therefore my people is take priſoner, for they ne had no cunning. And the noble men of my people deyeden for hunger, and the multitude of my people weren dry for thirſt, and therefore hell hath drawn abroad their ſoul, and hath yopened his mouth without any end. And eftſoons ſaith Iſaiah the Prophet, The word is ſloten away, and the highneſs of the people is ymade ſick, and the earth is infect of his wonnyers, for they have broken my laws, and ychanged my right, and han deſtroyed mine everlaſting bond and † forward between them and me. And therefore curſing ſhall devour the earth, and they that wonneth on the earthly ſhallen done ſin. And therefore the earth tilyars ſhullen waxe wood, and few men ſhullen ben yleft upon the earth. And yet ſaith Iſaiah the Prophet, This ſaith God, Forasmuch as this people nigheth me with their mouth, and glorifieth me with their lips, and their heart is far from me; And they han ydrad more mens commandment, than mine, and more draw to their doctrines, than mine; Therefore will I make a great wondring unto this people, wiſdome ſhall periſh away from wiſe men, and underſtanding of ready men ſhall be yhid. And ſo it ſeemeth that another ſaying of Iſaiah is fulfilled here, as God bad him go teach the people, and ſaid, Go forth and ſay to this people: Ears have ye, and underſtand ye not; and eyes ye have, and ſight ne know ye not. Make blind the heart of this people, and make their ears heavy, and cloſe their eyen, leſt he ſee with his eyne, and yheare with his ears, and underſtand with his heart, and be yturned, and yeh heal him of his ſickneſs. And Iſaiah ſaid to God, How long Lord ſhall this be? And God ſaid, For

Here is mychel nede for to make ſorrow, and to cry to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt heartilech for help and ſuccour, that he wole forgive us our ſins, and give us grace and conning to ſerven him better hereafter. And God of his endleſs mercy give us grace and conning trulich to tellen which is Chriſts Law in helping of mens ſouls; for we beth lewd men and ſinful men, and uncunning, and if he woll be our help and our ſuccour, we ſhullen well perform our purpoſe. And bleſſed be our Lord God that hideth his wiſdom from wiſe men, and fro ready men, and teacheth it to ſmall Children, as Chriſt teacheth in the Goſpel.

The Law of Chriſt ſtandeth on two parts.

Chriſten men have a Law to keep, the which Law hath two parties. Believe in Chriſt that is God, and is the foundment of their Law, and upon this foundment, as he ſaid to Peter, and the Goſpel beareth witneſs, he woll byelden his Church, and this is the firſt party of Chriſts Law. The ſecond party of this Law beth Chriſts Commandments that beth written in the Goſpel, and more verilich in Chriſten mens hearts.

And as touching the Beleve, we beleven that Chriſt is God, and that there ne is no God but he. We beleven nevertheleſs that in the Godhead there bene Three Perſons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, and all theſe Three Perſons ben one God, and not many gods, and all they beth ylich Mighty, ylich Good, and ylich Wiſe, and ever have ben, and ever ſhullen ben. We beleven this God made the World of nought, and man he made after his own likeneſs in Paradiſe, *that was a Land of bliſs, and gave him that Land for his Heritage, and bad him that he ſhould not eat of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, that was * amid* Paradiſe. Then the Divel, that was fallen out of Heaven for his pride, had envy to Man, and by a falſe ſuggeſtion he made Man eat of this Tree, and break the Commandment of God, and tho was Man overcome of the Divel, and ſo he loſt his Heritage, and was put out thereof into the World that was a Land of travel, and of ſorrow under the fiends thraldome, to be puniſhed for his treſpaſs. There Man followed wickedneſs and ſin, and God for the ſin of Man ſent a flood into this World, and drownd all mankind ſave eight ſouls. And after this flood he let men multiply in the World, and ſo he aſſayed whether man dread him or loved him, and among other he found a man, that hight Abraham: this man he proved whether he loved him and dread him, and bad him that he ſhould offeren Iſaac his Son upon an Hill; and Abraham as a true ſervant fulfilled the Lords Commandment: and for his buxumneſs and truth, God ſware unto Abraham that he would multiply his ſeed as the gravel in the Sea, and as the Stars of Heaven, and he behight to him and to his Heirs the Land of beheſt for Heritage for ever, gif they wolden ben his true ſervants and keep his heſts. And God † hold him forward, for Iſaac, Abraham's Son, begat Jacob and Eſau: and of Jacob, that is ycleped Iſrael, comen Gods People that he choſe to be his ſervants, and to whom he behight the Land of beheſt. This people was in great thraldome in Egypt under Pharaoh that was King of Egypt: and they orieden to God that he ſhould deliveren them out of that thraldome, and ſo he did: for he ſent to Pharaoh, Moſes and his Brother Aaron, and bad him deliver his People to done him Sacrifice: and tofore Pharaoh he made Moſes done many wonders, or that Pharaoh would deliver his People, and at the laſt day by night he delivered his People out of thraldome, and led them through a deſert toward the Land of beheſt, and there he gave them a Law, that they ſhoulden liven after, when they comen into their Country, and in their way thitherward, the Ten Commandments God wrote himſelf in two Tables of Stone: the remnant of the Law he taught them by Moſes his ſervant, how they ſhould do everichone to other, and gif they treſpaſſed againſt the Law, he ordained how they ſhoulden be puniſhed. Alſo he taught them what manner Sacrifices they ſhould do to him, and he choſe him a People to ben his Prieſts, that was Aaron and his Children, to done Sacrifices in the Tabernacle, and afterward in the Temple alſo. He choſe him the remnant of the Children of Levi to ben ſervants in the Tabernacle to the Prieſt, and he ſaid; When ye come into the Land of beheſt, the Children of Levi they ſhullen have none Heritage amongſt their Brethren, for I would be their part, and their heritage, and they ſhullen ſerve me in the Tabernacles by days and by nights, and he ordained that Prieſts ſhould have a part of the Sacrifices that were offered in the Tabernacle, and the firſt begotten Beaſts, both of Men and Beaſts, and other things, as the Law telleth. And the other Children of Levi, that ſerved in the Tabernacle, ſhould have Tithings of the people in their livelode, of the which Tithings they ſhould given the Prieſts the tenth part in form of offering. The Children of Levi, both Prieſts and other, ſhould have Houſes and Crofts, and Leſſewes for their Beaſts in the Land of beheſt, and none other Heritage: and ſo God gave them their Land of beheſt, and bad them that they ne ſhould worſhip no other than him: ſo he bad them that they ſhould keep his Commandments; and gif they did ſo, all their Enemies about them ſhould dreed them, and be their ſervants. And gif they worſhipped falſe gods, and ſo forſaken his Laws, he behight them that he would bring them out of that Land, and make them ſerve their Enemies; but yet he ſaid he would not benemen his mercy away from them, if they would cry mercy and amend their defaults; and all this was done on Gods ſide.

God's love to man.

And here is much love ſhowed of God to man. And who ſo looketh the Bible, *he ſhall find thus man ſhowed him little love againward: for when they were comen into their Heritage, they forgaten their God, and worſhipped falſe gods. And God ſent to them the Prophets and his Servants * feile times to bid them withdrawen them from their ſins, and other they have ſlowen them, or they beaten them, or they led them in Priſon: and oft-times God took upon them great vengeance for their ſins; and when they cried after helpen to God, he ſent them help and ſuccour. This is the general proceſs of the* Old Teſtament, that God gave to his People by Moſes his ſervant. And all this Teſtament and this doing ne was but a ſhadow and figure of a New Teſtament that was given by Chriſt. And it was byhoten by Jeremiah the Prophet, as St. Paul beareth witneſs in the Epiſtle that he writeth to the Jews. And Jeremiah ſaith in this wiſe; Lo days ſhall come, God ſaith, and I will make a new band to the houſe of Iſrael, and to the houſe of Judah, not like the forward that I made with their fathers, in that day that I took their hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, the which forward they maden veine, and I had Lordihip over them. But this ſhall be the forward that I wold make with them after thoſe days: I will give my laws with them in their inwardneſs, and I will written them in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they ſhould be my people: and after that a man ſhall not teach his neighbour, ne his brother. For all (God ſaith) from the leaſt to the moſt, ſhall know me, for I will forgiven them their ſins, and will no more think on their ſins.*

* Feile times, that is, oft-times.

This is the New Teſtament, that Chriſt both God and Man, born of the Maid Mary, he taught here in this World to bring man out of ſin, and out of the Divels thraldome and ſervice to Heaven, that is a Land of Bliſs and Heritage, to all tho that beleeven on him, and keepen his Commandments, and for his teaching he was done to the death. But the Third Day he aroſe again from death to life, and ſet Adam and Eve, and many other folk out of Hell, and afterward he came to his Diſciples, and comforted them. After, he ſtied up to Heaven to his Father, and tho he ſent the Holy Ghoſt amongſt his Diſciples; and in time coming, he will come and demen all mankind after their works, and after the words he ſpake upon earth; ſome to bliſs, within body and in ſoul ever withouten end; and ſome to pain withouten end, both in body and in ſoul.

This is our beleeve and all Chriſten mens, and this beleeve is the firſt point of the New Teſtament, that ych Chriſten man is hold ſtedfaſtly to believe, and rather to ſuffer the death, than forſaken this beleeve; and ſo this beleeve is the Bread of Spiritual life, in forſaking ſin, that Chriſt brought us to life.

But forasmuch as mans living ne ſtondeth not all only ch by Bread, he hath ygiven us a draught of Water of Life to drink. And who that drinketh of that Water he ne ſhall never afterward ben athurſt. For this Water is the clear teaching of the Goſpel, that encloſeth ſeven Commandments.

The firſt is this: Thou ſhalt love thy God over all other things, and thy Brother as thy ſelf, both enemy and friend.

KING Eaw. 3

The ſecond Commandment is of meeekneſs, in the which Chriſt chargeth us, to forſake lordſhip upon our Brethren, and other worldly worſhips; and ſo he did himſelf.

The Third Commandment is, In ſtonding ſtedfaſtlich in truth, and forſaking all falſeneſs.

The fourth Commandment is, To ſuffer in this World diſeaſes and wrongs, withouten againſtondings.

The fifth Commandment is, Mercy to forgiven our Brethren their treſpaſs, as often time as they gilteth, without asking of vengeance.

The ſixth Commandment is, poorneſs in ſpirit, but not to ben a begger.

The ſeventh Commandment, is chaſtity; that is, a forſaking of fleſhlich likings diſpleaſing to God. Theſe Commandments encloſen the Ten Commandments of the old, and ſomewhat more.

This Water is a bleſſed drink for Chriſten mens Souls. But more harm is, much folk would drink of this Water, But they mowe not come thereto: for God ſaith by Ezekiel the Prophet, When ich geve to you the moſt clean waters to drink, ye troubled that water with your feet, and that water is ſo defouled, ye geve my ſheep to drink. But the clean water is yhid fro the ſheep, and but gif God clear this, it is dread left the ſheep dyen for thurſt. *And Chriſt that is the Wiſdome of the Father of Heaven, and Well of this Wiſdome, that come from Heaven to Earth to teach man this Wiſdome, through the which man ſhould overcome the ſleights of the Divel, that is the principal enemy of mankind; have mercy and pity of his people, and ſhew, if it be his will, how this water is troubled, and by whom: and * ſith clear this water that his ſheep mowne drinken hereof, and kele the thirſt of their Souls. Bleſſed were our Lord ben, for he hath ytaught us in the Gospel, that ere then he would come to the univerſal dome, then ſhould come many in his Name, and ſayen, that they weren Chriſt; and they ſhoulden done many wonders, and begilen many men; and many falſe Prophets ſhoulden ariſen and beguilen much folk.*

Chriſts ſheep ſtopped from clean water, and compelled to drink ruddle.

* Sith, that is, afterward.

A Lord, yblefſed mote thou ben of everich Creature: which ben they that have yſaid that they weren in Chriſt, and have thus begiled thy people? Trulich Lord I trow, they that ſayen that they ben in thy ſtead, and † bineme thy worſhip, and maken the people worſhippen them as God, and have hid thy Laws from thy people: Lord, who durſt ſit in thy ſteed, and benemen thee thy Worſhip and thy Sacrifice, and durſt maken the people worſhippen them as Gods? The Sauter tells, That God ne wole not in the day of dome demen men for bodilich Sacrifices and Holocauſtes; but God ſaith; Yeld to me Sacrifice of hering, and yeld to God thine avowes, and clepe me in the day of tribulation, and ich will defend thee, and thou ſhalt worſhip me.

† Benemen, that is, take away.

*The * hering of God ſtandeth in three things. In loving God over all other things; in dreading God over all other things; in truſting in God over all other things.*

* Hering, that is, worſhipping.

Theſe three points Chriſt teacheth in the Goſpel. But I trow men loven him but a little. For who ſo loveth Chriſt, he wole kepen his words. But men holden his words for Hereſie and Folly, and keepeth mens words. Alſo men dreden more men and mens Laws and their curſings, than Chriſt and his Laws and his Curſings. Alſo men hopen more in men and mens helps, than they do in Chriſt and in his help. And thus hath he, that ſetteth in Gods ſtede, bynomen God theſe three herynges, and makes men loven him and his Laws more than Chriſt and Chriſts Law, and dreaden him alſo. And there as the people ſhulden yeeld to God their avowes, he ſaith, he hath power to aſſoylen them of their avowes, and ſo this Sacrifice he † nemeth away from God. And there as the people ſhould cry to God in the day of tribulation, he letteth them of their crying to God, and bynemeth God that Worſhip. This day of tribulation is when man is fallen through ſin into the Divels ſervice, and then we ſhullen cry to God after help, and axen forgiveneſs of our ſin, and make great ſorrow for our ſin, and ben in full will to do ſo no more, ne none other ſin, and that our Lord God wole forgiven us our ſin, and maken our ſoul clean. For his mercy is endleſs.

The honoring of God ſtandeth in three things

† Nemeth, that is, taketh.

But Lord, here men have benomen thee much worſhip: for men ſeyn that thou ne might not clean aſſoylen us of our ſin: But if we knowledgen our ſins to Prieſts, and taken of them a Penance for our ſin, gif we mowen ſpeak with them.

Againſt auricular confeſſion.

A Lord, thou forgave ſometime Peter his ſins, and alſo Mary Magdalen, and many other ſinful men without ſhriving to Prieſts, and taking Penance of Prieſts for their ſins. And Lord thou art as mighty now as thou were that time, but gif any man have bynomen thee thy might. And we lewd men beleven, that there is no man of ſo great power, and gif any man maketh himſelf of ſo great power, he heighteth himſelf above God. And St. Paul ſpeaketh of one that ſitteth in the Temple of God, and heighten him above God; and gif any ſuch be, he is a falſe Chriſt.

Sins forgiven without ſhrift.

* Heighteth, that is, exalteth.

But hereto ſeyn Prieſts, that when Chriſt made clean Leprous men, he bade them go and ſhew them to Prieſts. And therefore they ſeyn that it is a Commandment of Chriſt, that a man ſhould ſhewen his ſin to Prieſts. For as they ſeyn, lepre in the old Law betokenneth ſin in this new Law. A Lord God, whether thine Apoſtles knew not thy meaning as well as men done now? And gif they hadden yknow that thou haddeſt commanded men to ſhriven them to Prieſts, and they ne taught not that Commandment to the People, me thinketh they hadden ben to blame. But I trow they knowen well that it was none of thy Commandments, ne needful to heal of mans Soul. And as me thinketh, the Law of Lepre is nothing to the purpoſe of ſhriving: for Prieſts in the old Law hadden certain points and tokens to know whether a man were Leprous or not: and gif they were Leprous, they hadden power to putten them away from other clean men, for to that they weren clean; and then they hadden power to receiven him among his Brethren, and offeren for him a Sacrifice to God.

Objection of the Prieſts to maintain ſhrift. Anſwer to the Objection.

This is nothing to the purpoſe of ſhriving. For there is but one Prieſt, that is Chriſt, that may know in certain the Lepre of the Soul. Ne no Prieſt may make the Soul clean of her ſin, but Chriſt that is Prieſt after Melchiſedec's order: ne no Prieſt here beneath may ywis for certain whether a man be clean of his ſin, or clean aſſoiled, but gif God tell it him by Revelation. Ne God ordained not that his Prieſts ſhould ſet men a Penance for their ſin, after the quantity of the ſin, but this is mans ordinance, and it may well be that there commeth good thereof. But I wot well that God is much unworſhipped thereby. For men truſt more in his abſolutions, and in his years of grace, than in Chriſts abſolutions and thereby is the people much appaired. For now the ſorrow man ſhould make for his ſin, is put away by this ſhrift: and man is more bold to do ſin for truſt of this ſhrift, and of this bodilich Penance.

Penance for ſin, is man

Another miſchief is, That the people is ybrought into this belief, that one Prieſt hath a great power to aſſoylen a man of his ſin and clennere, than another Prieſt hath.

Miſchiefs that come by auricular confeſſion.

Another miſchief is this, That ſome Prieſt may aſſoylen them both of ſin and pain: and in this they taken them a power that Chriſt granted no man in Earth, ne he ne uſed it dought on Earth himſelf.

Poeiſh Prieſts charged with Simony.

*Aother miſchief is, that theſe Prieſts ſellen forgiveneſs of mens ſins and abſolutions for mony; and this is an Hereſie accurſed that is ycleped ſimony: and all thilk Prieſts that axeth price for granting of Spiritual Grace, * beth by holy Laws deprived of their Prieſthood, and thilke that aſſenteth to this Hereſie. And he they ware; for* Helyſe the Prophet took no mony of Naaman, when he was made clean of his Lepre; but Gieſi his ſervant; and therefore the Lepre of Naaman abode with him and with his Heirs evermore after.

* Beth, that is be.

Here is much matter of ſorrow, to ſee the people thus far ylad away from God and worſhupen a falſe God in Erth, that by might and by ſtrength hath ydone away the great Sacrifice of God out of his Temple: of which miſchief and diſcomfort, Daniel maketh mention, and Chriſt beareth thereof witneſs in the Goſpel. Who that readeth it, underſtand it. Thus we have ytold apertly, how he that ſaith he ſitteth in Chriſts ſtede † bynemeth Chriſt his Worſhip, and his Sacrifice of his people, and maketh the people worſhupen him as a God on Earth.

† Bynemeth, that is taketh away.

" Cry we to God, and knowledge we our ſins everich " one to other, as St. James teacheth, and pray we heartich to God everichone one for other, and then we ſhu" len hopen forgiveneſs of our ſins. For God that is " endleſs in mercy ſaith, That he ne will not a ſinful " mans death, but that he be turned from his ſin and li" ven. And therefore, when he came down to ſave man" kind, he gave us a Law of love and of mercy; and " bade

" bade, gif a man do a treſpaſs, amend him privilich, and " gif he leve not his ſin, amend him before witneſs, and " gif he amendeth not, men ſhould tell to the Church; " and gif he ne amendeth not then, men ſhould ſhone his " company as a Publican, or a man that is misbeleeved: " and this Law was yfigured in the Law of Lepre; who " that reads it, he may ſee the ſooth.

" But Lord God, he that ſitteth in thy ſtede hath undo " thy Law of mercy and love; Lord, thou biddeſt loven " Enemies as our ſelf; and ſheweſt in the Goſpel there as " the Samaritan had mercy on the Jew. And thou " biddeſt us alſo prayen for them that curſen us, and that " defamen us, and purſuen us to death. And ſo Lord thou " diddeſt, and thine Apoſtles alſo. But he that clepeth " himſelf thy Vicar on Earth, and head of thy Church, he " he hath undone thy Law of love and mercy. For gif we " ſpeaken of loving our Enemies, he teacheth us to fight " with our Enemies, that Chriſt hath forboden. He curſeth " and deſireth vengeance to them that ſo doth to him. Gif " any man purſueth him, he curſeth him, that it is a ſorrow " a Chriſten man to hearen the curſings that they maken, " and Blaſphemies in ſuch curſing. Of what thing that " I know, I may bear true witneſs.

The Pope breaketh the Law of love and mercy.

" But gif we ſpeak of loving of our Brethren, this is " undone by him that ſaith he is Gods Vicar in Earth. " For Chriſt in the Goſpel biddeth us, that we ſhoulder " clepen us no Father upon Earth: but clepen God our " Father, to maken us love perfitlich together. And he " clepeth himſelf Father of fathers, and maketh many Re- " ligions, and to everich a Father. But whether is Love " and Charity encreaſed by theſe Fathers and by their Re- " ligions, or elſe ymade leſs? For a Frier ne loveth not a " Monk, ne a Secular man neither, nor yet one Frier " another that is not of the Order, and it is againward,

The Pope would be a Father, but he beareth no Son.

" A Lord, me thinketh that there is little perfection in " theſe Religions: For Lord, what Charity haven ſuch " men of Religion, that known how they mown again- " ſtand ſin, and fleen away from their Brethren that ben " more uncunning than they ben, and ſufferen them to tra- " vellen in the World withouten their counſel as Beaſts? " Trulich Lord, me thinketh that there is but but little " Charity, and then is there little Perfection. Lord God, " when thou were on Earth, thou were among ſinful men to " drawen them from ſin and thy Diſciples alſo. And Lord, " I trow thou ne granteſt not one man more cunning than " another all for himſelf: and I wote well that lewd men " that ben labourers, ne travel not alonich for himſelf. " Lord our belief is, that thou ne were not of the World, " ne thy teaching, neither thy ſervants that livden after thy " teaching. But all they forſaken the World, and ſo every " Chriſten man muſt. But Lord, whether thou taughteſt " men to forſake their Brethrens company and travel of the " World, to liven in eaſe and in reſt, and out of trouble " and anger of the World, by their Brethrens travel, and " ſo forſaken the World?

To forſake the World, is not to live in eaſe from company.

" A Lord, thou ne taughteſt not a man to forſaken a " poor eſtate and travel, to ben afterward a Lord of his " Brethren, or been a Lords fellow, and dwelling with " Lords, as doth men of theſe new Religions. Lord thou " ne taughteſt not men of thy Religion thus to forſake the " World, to liven in perfection by themſelf in eaſe, and " by other mens travel. But Lord they ſayen they ben " ybound to thy ſervice, and ſerven thee both night and " day in ſinging their Prayers, both for themſelf and for " the other men, that done them good both quick and " dead, and ſome of them gone about to teach thy peo- " ple when they haven leiſure.

" A Lord, gif they be thy ſervants; whoſe ſervants ben " we that cannot preien as they done? And when thou " were here on Earth for our nede, thou taughteſt thy ſer- " vants to preien thy Father privilich and ſhortlich: and gif " there had been a better manner of preying, I trow thou " wouldeſt have taught it in help of thy people. And Lord " thou reproveſt Hypocrites that preyen in long prayer, and " in open places, to ben yholden holy men. And thou " ſeyſt in the Goſpel; Wo to you Phariſes hypocrites. And " Lord thou ne chargedſt not thy ſervants with ſuch man- " ner ſervice: but thou ſeyſt in the Goſpel, that the Pha- " riſies worſhopen thee with their lips, and their heart is " far from thee. For they * chargen more mens traditions " than thy Commandment.

* Chargen, that is, they cate for.

" And Lord, we lewd men han a belief, that thy good- " neſs is endleſs: and gif we keepen thine heſtes, then ben " we thy true ſervants: and though we preyen thee but a " little and ſhortlich, thou wilt thinken on us, and granten " us that us nedeth, for ſo thou † behited us ſometime. " And Lord I trow, that pray a man never ſo many quaint " prayers, gif he ne keep not thine heſts, he is not thy " good ſervant. But gif he keep thine heſts, then he is " thy good ſervant. And ſo me thinketh, Lord, that " praying of long prayers ne is not the ſervice that thou " deſireſt, but keeping of thine heſts: and then a lewd " man may ſerve God as well as a man of Religion, " though that the Ploughman ne may not have ſo much " Silver for his prayer as men of Religion. For they " * kunnen not ſo well preiſen their praiers as theſe other " chapmen: but Lord, our hope is, that our prayers be " never the worſe, though it be not ſo well ſold as other " mens prayers.

" But Lord, now he that clepeth himſelf thy Vicar " upon Earth, and ſucceſſor to Peter, hath ybroke thy " commandment of Charity, for he is become a Lord. " And he hath alſo broken thy commandment of mercy, " and alſo of patience. Thus Lord we be fallen into miſ- " chief and thraldom, for our Chieftaine hath forſaken " War and Arms, and hath treated to have peace with our " Enemies.

Pope breaketh the rule of charity, of mercy, and of patience.

" A Lord, gif it be thy will, draw thy ſword out of his " ſheath, that thy Servants may fight therewith againſt " their Enemies, and put cowardiſe out of our hearts: and " comfort us in battaile, or than thou come with thy ſword " in thy mouth, or take vengeance on thine Enemies. " For gif we ben accorded with our Enemies till that time " come, it is dread leſt thou take vengeance both of them " and of us together. A Lord, there is no help now in " this great miſchiefe but only in thee.

Or than, before that

" Lord, thou geveſt us a commandment of truth, in " bidding us ſay yea, yea, nay, nay, and ſwear for no- " thing. Thou geve us alſo a maundment of meekneſs, " and another of pooreneſs: but Lord, he that clepeth " himſelf thy Vicar on Earth, hath both ybroken theſe " commandments; for he maketh a Law to compel men " to ſwear, and by his Laws he teacheth that a man, to " ſave his life, may forſwear and lie. And ſo Lord, " through comfort of him and his laws, the people ne " dreadeth not to ſwear and to lie, ne oft times to for- " ſwearen them. Lord here is little truth.

The Pope breaketh the Law of ſwearing.

" O Lord, thou haſt ybrought us to a living of Souls " that ſtands in beleeving in thee, and keeping thy " Heſts, and when we breaken thy Heſts; then we ſlen " our ſouls: and leſs harm it were to ſuffer bodilich " death.

" Lord, King Saul brake thine Heſts, and thou took " his Kingdom from his Heires evermore after him, and " give it to David thy Servant, that kept thine Heſts. " And thou ſaidſt by Samuel thy Prophet to Saul the King, " that it is a manner of worſhipping of falſe Gods to break " thy Heſts. For who that loveth thee over all things, " and dreadeth thee alſo, he nole for nothing breake thine " Heſts.

Nole, that is would not.

" O Lord, gif breaking of thine Heſts be herrying of " falſe Gods, I trow that he that maketh the people break " thine Heſts, and commandeth that his Heſts ben kept " of the people, maketh himſelf a falſe God on Earth; " as Nebugodonoſor did ſometime that was King of " Babylon.

" But Lord, we forſaken ſuch falſe Gods, and beleven " that there ne ben no mo Gods than thou: and though " thou ſuffer us a while to ben in diſeaſe for knowledging " of thee; we thanken thee with our heart, for it is a " token that thou loveſt us, to given us in this world ſome " penance for our treſpaſs.

" Lord, in the old Law, thy true ſervants took the death,
" for they would not eaten Swines fleſh that thou haddeſt
" forbidde them to eat. O Lord, what truth is in us to " eaten unclean mete of the ſoule, that thou haſt forbid?
" Lord thou ſaidſt, he that doth ſin is ſervant of ſin, and " then he that lieth in forſwearing himſelf, is ſervant of
" leſing, and then he is ſervant to the Divel, that is a lier
" and Father of leſings. And Lord, thou ſayeſt, no man
" may ſerve two Lords at once. O Lord then, every lier
" for the time that he lieth, other forſweareth himſelf,
" and forſaketh thy ſervice for dread of his bodily death,
" becometh the Divels ſervant.

Servant of ſervants, the Popes ſtile abuſed.

" O Lord, what truth is in him that clepeth himſelf
" ſervant of thy ſervants, and in his doing he maketh him
" a Lord of thy ſervants. Lord thou were both Lord and
" Maſter, and ſo thou ſaid thy ſelf; but yet in thy warks

" and a great meekneſs: but Lord, bid thou thy ſervants
" that they ſhould not have Lordſhip over their brethren.
" Lord thou ſaydſt Kings of the Heathen men han Lordſhip " over their ſubjects, and they that uſe their power be
" cleped well doers.

" But Lord, thou ſaidſt it ſhould not be ſo amongſt
" thy ſervant. But he that were moſt, ſhould be as a
" ſervant. Thou Lord, thou taughteſt thy Diſciples to be
" meek. Lord in the old Law thy ſervants durſt have no
" Lordſhip of their brethren, but if that thou bid them:

Thralles, that is to ſay, bond men.

" and yet they ſhould not do to their brethren as they did
" to thralles that ſerved them. But they ſhould do to their " brethren that were their ſervants, as to their own bre" thren: for all they were Abrahams Children: and at a " certain time, they ſhould let their brethren paſs from " them in all freedom, but if they would wilfullich abide
" ſtill in ſervice.

" O Lord, thou gave us in thy coming a Law of perfect
" love, and in token of love thou clepedſt thy ſelf our " brother. And to make us perfect in love, thou bid that " we ſhould clepe to us no Father upon Earth, but thy " Father of Heaven we ſhould clepe our Father. Alas,
" Lord, how violently our brethren, and thy children ben
" now put in bodily Thraldom, and in deſpite as beaſts
" evermore in grievous travel to find proud men in eaſe.

KING Edw. 3.

" Lord, whether it be any need that maſters bearen
" witneſs to thy teaching, that it is true and good? O
" Lord, whether may any maſter now by his eſtate of " maſtry, that thou haſt forboden, draw any man from " his ſin, rather then another man that is not a maſter, ne

" of the law hylden thy teaching folly, and ſaiden that
" thou wouldeſt deſtroy thy people with thy teaching.
" Trulich Lord, ſo theſe maſters leggeth now; for they " have written many Books againſt thy teaching, that is " truth; and ſo the Prophecy of Jeremy is fulfilled when Maſterſhip and Lordſhip in preachers.

" he ſaith; Trulich the falſe points of the maſters of " the law hath wrought leaſing. And now is the time
" come that S. Paul ſpeaketh of, where he ſaith;
" Time ſhall come when men ſhall not ſuſtain whole-

" with hatching ears, and from truth they ſhullen turnen
" away their hearing, and turn them to tales, that ma-
" ſters have maked to ſhown their maiſtry and their " wiſdom.

" And Lord, a man ſhall believe more a mans works
" than his words, and the deed ſheweth well of theſe
" maſters, that they deſiren more maiſtery for their own
" worſhip, than for profit of the people. For when " they be maſters, they ne preachen not ſo oft as they did

KING Edw. 3.

* Home. * Lich, that is, as his Hea-thold.

Wilful Poverty abhorred.

The poverty of good Shepherds.

The Pope a Chapman in Gods Temple.

* Behoteth, that is, promiſeth.

Note good Reader, if Chriſt be where two or three be gathered in his Name, what need is there of a Lieutenant?

The place of giving to Peter the Keys, expounded.

KING Edw.3

"Goſpel openlich telleth. In this place men ſeggen that "thou granted to Peters Succeſſors the ſelve Power that "thou gave to Peter. And therefore the Biſhop of Rome, "that ſaith he is Peters Succeſſors, taketh this Power to "him to binden and unbinden in Earth what him "liketh. But Lord, ych have much wonder how he "may for ſhame clepen himſelf Peters Succeſſor: for Peter "knowledged that thou were Chriſt and God, and kept "the Heſts of thy Law: but theſe han forſaken the Heſts "of thy Law, and hath ymaken a Law contrary to thine "Heſts of thy Law. And ſo he maketh himſelf a falſe "Chriſt, and a falſe god in Earth. And I trow thou gave "him no Power to undo thy Law. And ſo in taking "this Power upon him, maketh him a falſe Chriſt and "Antichriſt.

The Pope proved a falſe Anti-chriſt in Earth.

"For who may be more agens Chriſt, than he that "in his words maketh himſelf Chriſts Vicar in Earth; "and in his werkes undoth the Ordinance of Chriſt, and "maketh, men believen that it is needful to the heal of "mens Souls, to believen that he is Chriſts Vicar in Earth? "for ever he bindeth in Earth, is ybounden "in Heaven, and under this colour he undoth Chriſts "Law, and maketh men always to keepen his Law and "Heſts.

The Popes abomination deſcribed.

"And thus may yſeen that he is againſt Chriſt, "and therefore he is Antichriſt that maketh men wor-"thippen him as a god on Earth, as the proud King "Nabugodonoſor did ſometime, that was King of Ba-"bylon. And therefore we lewde men that knowen "not God but thee Jeſus Chriſt, believen in thee that "art our God, and our King, and our Chriſt, and thy "Laws; and forſaken Antichriſt, and Nabugodonoſor that "is a falſe god, and a falſe Chriſt, and his Laws hen con-"trary to thy preaching.

"And Lord ſtrength thou us againſt our enemies. For "they ben about to maken us forſaken thee and thy Law, "other elle to putten us to death.

"O Lord, onlich in thee is our truſt to help us in this "miſchief, for thy great goodneſs that is withouten "end.

"Lord thou ne taughteſt not thy Diſciples to aſſoilen "men of their ſin, and ſetten them a Penance for their "ſin, in Faſting, ne in Praying, ne other Almous Deed; "ne thy ſelf, ne thy Diſciples, uſeden no ſuch Power "here on Earth. For Lord, thou forgive men her ſins, "and bede him ſin no more. And thy Diſciples * ful-"leden men in thy Name, in forgiveneſs of her "ſins. Nor they took no ſuch Power upon them as "our Prieſts dare now. And Lord, thou ne aſſoiledſt no "man both of his ſin and of his pain, that was due for "his ſin, ne thou grantedſt no man ſuch power here on "Earth.

* Fulleden, that is, baptized.

Purgatory.

"And Lord, me thinketh that gif there were a Purga-"tory, and any Earthlich man had power to deliver ſin-"ful men from the peines of Purgatory, he ſhould, "and he were in Charity, ſaven everich man that "were in way of Salvation from thilke peines, ſith they "make them greater than any bodilich peines of this "World. Alſo gif the Biſhop of Rome had ſuch a "Power, he himſelf ſhuld never comen in Purgatory, "one in Hell. And ſith we ſee well that he ne hath no "Power to keepen himſelf, ne other men nother out of "theſe bodilich peines of the World, and he may go to "Hell for his ſin as another man may: I ne believe not, "that he hath ſo great Power to aſſoylen men of "their ſin as he taketh upon him aboven all other "men. And I trow that in this he higheth himſelf above "God.

Selling of Biſhopricks and Benefices.

"As touching the ſelling of Biſhopricks, and Parſo-"nages, I trow it be a point of Falſehed. For againſt "Gods Ordinance he robbeth poor men of a portion "of their ſuſtenance, and ſelleth it, other giveth it, to find "proud men in idleneſs that don the lewd puple little "profit, but much harme, as we told before. Thus ben "thy commandments of truth, of meekneſs, and of poor-"neſs undone by him, that clepeth himſelf thy Vicar here "upon Earth.

"A Lord, thou gave us a Commandment of chaſtice, "that is, a forſaking of fleſhlich luſt. For thou broughteſt "us to a living of Soul, that is, ygoverned by the word. "For Lord, thou ordeineditſt women more frele than "man to ben ygoverned by mans rule, and his help, to "pleaſe thee and keep thine Heſts. Ne thou ne ordeineditſt "that a man ſhould deſire the company of a woman, and "maken her his wife, to liven with her in his luſtis, as "a Swine doth or a Horſe. And his wife ne like him "not to his luſtes, Lord ne gave not a man leave to "departen him from his wife, and taken him ano-"ther.

Marriage.

"But Lord, thy Marriage is a common accord be-"tween man and woman, to liven together to their "lives end, and in thy Service either the better for others "help, and thilke that thus ben ycome together, ben "joyned by thee, and thilke that God joyneth, may "no man depart. But Lord, thou ſaieſt, That gif a "man ſee a woman to coveten her, then he doth with "the woman lechery in his heart. And ſo Lord, gif a "man deſire his wife in covetiſe of ſuch luſts, and not to "fly from Whoredome, his Weddins is lechery, ne thou "ne joyneſt them not together. Thus was Raquels "Daughter ywedded to ſeven Husbands that the Devil "inſtrangled. But Toby took her to live with her in "cleanneſs, and bringing up of her Children in thy "Worſhip, and on him the Devil ne had no power. For "the wedding was I maked in God, for God, and through "God.

A Leſſon how to marry.

"A Lord, the people is far ygo from this manner "of Wedding. For now men wedden their wives for "Fairneſs, other for Riches, or ſome ſuch other fleſh-"lich luſts. And Lord, ſo it preveth by them for the "moſt part. For a man ſhall not find two wedded in "a Land, where the Husband loves the Wife, and the "Wife is buxum to the man, as they ſhoulden after the "law of Marriage. But other the man loves not his "wife, or the wife if not buxum to her man. And thus "Lord is the rule of prefe, that never faileth no preve "whether it be done by thee or no. And Lord, all this "miſchief is common among thy people, for that they "know not thy Word, but their Shepherds and hired "men fedden them with their * ſwevens and leaſings. "And Lord, where they ſhoulden gon before us in "the field, they ſeggen their Order is too holy for thy "Marriage. And Lord, he that calleth himſelf thy Vi-"car upon Earth will not ſuffren Prieſts to taken them "wives, for that is againſt his Law: But Lord, he will "diſpenſen with them to kepen horen for a certain ſum "of money. And Lord, all Whoredom is forfended in "thy Law. And Lord, thou never forfendedſt Prieſts "their wives, ner thy Apoſtles neither. And well I "wote in our Land, Prieſts hadden wives until An-"ſelmus days in the year of our Lord God, 1129. as "Huntingdone writes. And Lord, this makes people for "the moſt part believen, that Lechery is no ſin. There-"fore we lewd men prayen thee that thou wolt ſend "us Shepherds of thine own, that wolen feeden thy "Flock in thy leſew, and gon before themſelf, and ſo "written thy Law in our hearts, that from the leaſt to "the moſt all they mayen knowen thee. And Lord, "geve our King and his Lords heart to defenden thy "true Shepherds and thy Sheep from out of the Wolves "mouths, and Grace to know thee that art the true "Chriſt, the Son of thy heavenly Father, from the "Antichriſt; that is, the Son of Pride. And Lord, "geve us thy poor Sheep patience and ſtrength to "ſuffer for thy Law, the cruelneſs of the miſchievous "Wolves. And Lord, as thou haſt promiſed, ſhorten theſe "days. Lord we axen this now, for more need was there "never.

* Swevens, that is, dreams.

Prieſts had wives till the time of Anſelmus.

I doubt not, gentle Reader, but in reading this godly Treatiſe above prefixed, the matter is manifeſt and plain of it ſelf without any further Explication, what is to be thought and judged of this Vicar of Chriſt, and Succeſſor of Peter, whom we call the Biſhop of Rome: whoſe life here thou ſeeſt not only to be diſordered in all Points, ſwarving from the ſteps and example of Chriſt the Prince and Biſhop of our Souls, but alſo whoſe Laws and Doctrines are ſo repugnant and contrary to the Precepts and Rule of the Goſpel, that almoſt there is no convenience between them: as in the peruſing of this complaining Prayer, thou maiſt notoriouſly underſtand. Wherefore having no need to ſtand in any further expreſſing expreſſing of this matter, but leaving it to thine own conſideration and diſcretion, I will ſpeed my ſelf (Chriſt willing) to proceed toward the time of John Wickliffe and his Fellows, taking by order of years as I go, ſuch things by the way, as both happened before the ſaid time of Wickliffe, and alſo may the better prepare the mind of the Reader, to the entring of that ſtory. Where firſt I think it not inconvenient to infer a Prophetical Parable, written about this time, or not much before, which the Author morally applieth unto the Biſhop of Rome. To what Author this Prophecy or Moral is to be aſcribed, I have not certainly to affirm. Some ſay, that Rupeſciſſanus (of whom mention is made before) was the Author thereof, and alledge it out of Froyſard; but in Froyſard as yet I have not found it. In the mean ſeaſon, as I have found it in Latin expreſſed, becauſe it painteth out the Pope ſo rightly in his feathers and colours; as I thought the thing was not to be omitted, ſo I took this preſent place, as moſt fit (although peradventure miſſing the order of years a little) to inſert the ſame. The effect of which Parable followeth here underwritten.

In the time of Pope Innocent the Sixth above ſpecified, this Joannes de Rupeſciſſa, a Fryer, among other his Propheſies marvelouſly foreſpake (as alledgeth Froyſard, who both heard and ſaw him) of the taking of John the French King Priſoner, and brought forth many other notable Collections concerning the perils, mutations and changings in the Church to come. And at what time the Pope kept him at Avinion in priſon (where Froyſard is ſaid to ſee him, and to ſpeak with him) the ſaid Froyſard heard in the Popes Court this example and parable recited by the foreſaid Fryer Rupeſciſſanus, to the two Cardinals, to wit, Cardinal Hoſtienſis, and Cardinal Auxercenſis, which followeth theſe words:

A parable propheſying the deſtruction of the Pope.

When on a certain time a Bird was brought into the world all bare and without feathers, the other Birds bearing thereof, came to viſit her: and for that they ſaw her to be a marvelous fair and beautiful Bird, they counſelled together how they might beſt do her good, ſith by no means without feathers ſhe might either fly, or live commodiouſly. They all wiſhed her to live for her excellent form and beauties ſake, inſomuch that among them all there was not one, that would not grant ſome part of her own feathers to deck this Bird withall: yea, and the more trim they ſaw her to be, the more feathers ſtill they gave unto her, ſo that by this means ſhe was paſſing well penned and feathered, and began to fly. The other Birds that thus had adorned her with goodly feathers, beholding her to fly abroad, were marvelouſly delighted therewith. In the end this Bird ſeeing her ſelf ſo gorgeouſly feathered, and of all the reſt to be had in honour, began to wax proud and haughty. Inſomuch that ſhe had no regard at all unto them, by whom ſhe was advanced: yea, ſhe punged them with her beak, plucked them by the skin and feathers, and in all places hurted them. Whereupon the Birds ſitting in Council again, called the matter in queſtion, demanding one of another what was beſt to be done touching this unkind Bird, whom they lovingly with their own feathers had decked and adorned: affirming that they gave not their feathers, to the intend that ſhe, thereby puft up with pride, ſhould contemptuouſly deſpiſe them all. The Peacock therefore anſwereth firſt, Truly, ſaith he, for that ſhe is bravely ſet forth with my painted feathers, I will again take them from her. Then ſaith the Faulcon, And I alſo will have mine again. This ſentence at length took place among them all, ſo that every one plucked from her thoſe feathers which before they had given, challenging to them their own again. Now this proud Bird, ſeeing her ſelf thus to be dealt withall, began forthwith to abate her haughty ſtomach, and humbly to ſubmit her ſelf openly, confeſſing and acknowledging, that of her ſelf ſhe had nothing; but that her feathers, her honour and other Ornaments was their gift: ſhe came into the world all naked and bare, they clad her with comely feathers, and therefore of right may they receive them again. Wherefore in moſt humble wiſe ſhe deſireth pardon, promiſing to amend all that is paſt, neither would ſhe at any time hereafter commit, whereby through pride ſhe might leeſe her feathers again. The gentle Birds, that before had given their feathers, ſeeing her ſo humble and lowly, being moved with pity, reſtored again the feathers which lately they had taken away, adding withall this admonition, We will gladly, ſay they, behold thy flying among us, ſo long as thou wilt uſe thine Office with humbleneſs of mind, which is the chiefeſt comelineſs of all the reſt: But this have thou for certainty, that if at any time hereafter thou extol thy ſelf in pride, we will ſtraight-ways deprive thee of thy feathers, and reduce thee into thy former ſtate wherein we found thee. Even ſo, Oh you Cardinals (ſaith Joannes Rupiſciſſanus*) ſhall it happen unto you: for the Emperors of the* Romans and Almains, and other Chriſtian Kings, Potentates, and Princes of the Earth, have beſtowed upon you Goods, Lands and Riches, that ſhould ſerve God, but you have poured it out, and conſumed it upon Pride, all kind of Wickedneſs, Riot and Wantonneſs.

Armachanus.

The life and ſtory of Armachanus, Archbiſhop and Primate of Ireland.

IN the Catalogue of theſe learned and zealous Founders of Chriſt againſt Antichriſt above rehearſed, [illegible] the Lord about this time began to raiſe up for the Reformation of his Church, being then far out of frame; I cannot forget nor omit ſomething to write of the reverend Prelate, and famous Clerk, Richard Armachanus, Primate and Archbiſhop of Ireland: a man for his Life and Learning ſo memorable, as the condition of thoſe days then ſerved; that the ſame days then as they had but few good, ſo had they none almoſt his better. His name was Richard Fizraf, made Primate and Archbiſhop, as is ſaid of Ireland. Firſt brought up in the Univerſity of Oxford in the ſtudy of all liberal Knowledge, wherein he did exceedingly profit under John Bakenthorpe his Tutor and Inſtructor. In this time the begging-Fryers began greatly to multiply and ſpread, unto whom this Bakenthorpe was ever a great enemy: whoſe ſteps the Scholars alſo following, began to do the like. Such was the capacity and dexterity of this Fizraf, that he, being commended to King Edward the Third, was promoted by him, firſt, to be Archdeacon of Lichfield, then to be the Commiſſary of the Univerſity of Oxford; at length to be Archbiſhop of Armach in Ireland. He being Archbiſhop, upon a time had a Cauſe to come up to London: at what time here in the ſaid City of London was contention between the Fryers and the Clergy about preaching and hearing Confeſſions, &c. Whereupon, this Armachanus, being requeſted to preach, made ſeven or eight Sermons; Wherein he propounded nine Concluſions againſt the Fryers, for the which he was cited up by the Fryers before this Pope Innocent the Sixth to appear; and ſo he did: who before the face of the Pope valiantly defended, both in preaching and in writing, the ſame Concluſions, and therein ſtood conſtantly unto the death, as the words of John Wickliffe in this Trialogo do well teſtifie in this wiſe, Ab Anglorum Epiſcopis conductus Armachanus novem in Avione Concluſiones coram Innocentio 6. & ſuorum Cardinalium cœtu, contra fratrum mendicitatem, audacter publicavit, verboque ac ſcriptis ad mortem uſque defendit. The like alſo teſtifieth of him Waldenus in faſciculo zizaniorum. Alſo Volateranus reporteth the ſame. Gulielmus Botonerus teſtifying of him in like manner, ſaith, That Armachanus firſt reproved begging-Fryers for hearing the confeſſions of profeſſed Nuns, without licence of their Superiors, and alſo of married women without knowledge of their Husbands. What dangers and troubles he ſuſtained by his Perſecutors, and how miraculouſly the Lord delivered him from their hands; inſomuch, that they meeting him in the open ſtreets, and in clear day-light, yet had no power to ſee him, nor to apprehend him. In what peril of Thieves and Searchers he was, and yet the Lord delivered him; yea, and cauſed his money, being taken from him, to be reſtored again to him by portions in time of his neceſſity and famine: And in what dangers he was of the Kings Officers, which coming with the Kings Letters, laid all the Havens for him; and how the Lord Jeſus delivered him, ſhewing him by what ways, and how to eſcape them, to the number of ſixteen, and yet how the Lord gave him to triumph over all his enemies: how the Lord alſo taught him, and brought him out of the profound vanities of Ariſtotles ſubtilty, to the ſtudy of the Scriptures of God. All this, with much more, he himſelf expreſſeth in a certain prayer or confeſſion made to Chriſt

KING Edw. 3

Christ Jesus our Lord, in which he describeth almost the whole history of his own life, Which prayer I have to shew in old written-hand, and hereafter (Christ willing) intend, as time serveth, to publish the same. The beginning of the prayer in Latin is this:

The prayer of Armachanus.

Tibi laus, tibi gloria, tibi gratiarum actio, Jesu piissime, Jesu potentissime, Jesu dulcissime; qui dixisti, Ego sum via, veritas & vita. Via sine devio; veritas sine nubilo; & vita sine termino. Quod tute viam mihi ostendisti; Tute veritatem me docuisti; Et tute vitam mihi promisisti. Via eras mihi in exilio; Veritas eras in consilio; Et vita eris mihi in præmio. With the rest that followeth in the foresaid prayer.

Thus what were the troubles of this good man, and how he was cited up by the Fryers to the Pope, you have partly heard. Now what were his Reasons and Arguments wherewith he defended his Cause in the Popes presence, followeth to be declared. For the tractation whereof, first, I must put the Reader in remembrance of the Controversie mentioned before in the story of Gulielmus de sancto Amore, pag. 357. Also in the story of the University of Oxford contending against the Fryers, pag. 446. For so long did this Controverlie continue in the Church, from the year, 1240. when the Oxford-men began first to stand against the Fryers, to the time of this Armachanus; that is, to the year, 1360. and after this time yet more increased. So it pleased the secret Providence of God (for what cause he best knoweth) to suffer his Church to be entangled and exercised sometimes with matters and controversies of no great importance; either to keep the vanity of mens wits thus occupied from idleness; or else to prepare their minds by these smaller matters, to the consideration and searching out of other things more grave and weighty. Like as now in these our Queens days we see what Tragedies be raised up in England about forms and fashions of Ministers wearings, what troubles grow, what placing and displacing there is about the same. Even so at this time happened the like stir about the Liberties and Priviledges of the Fryers, which not a little troubled and occupied all the Churches and Divines almost thorow Christendom. The which controverlie, to the intent it may better be understood (all the circumstances thereof being explained) we will first begin from the original and foundation of the matter, to declare by order and course of years, upon what occasion this variance first rising, in continuance of time increased and multiplied in gathering more matter, and brast out at length to this tumultuous contention among learned men.

Concerning therefore this present matter; first, it is to be understood, that in the year of our Lord, 1215. under Pope Innocent the Third, was called a General-Council at Laterane, mentioned before, pag. 288. in the days of King John. In the which Council among many other things, was constituted a certain Law or Canon, beginning Omnis utriusque sexus, &c. the tenor of which Canon in English is thus:

Can. omnis utriusque sexus, Sext. de Pœnit.

Be it decreed, That every faithful Christian, both man and woman coming to the years of discretion, shall confess himself alone of all his sins to the Priest of his own proper Parish, once in the year at least: and that he shall endeavour by his own self to fulfil the pennance, whensoever he receiveth the Sacrament of Eucharist, at least at the time of Easter. Unless by the assent of his Minister, upon some reasonable cause, he abstain for the time. Otherwise doing, let him both lack the communion of the Church being alive, and Christian-burial when he is dead. Wherefore be it decreed, That this wholsome Constitution shall be published accustomably in Churches, to the end that no man of ignorance or blindness make to himself a Cloke of Excuse. And if any shall confess himself to any other Priest than of his own Parish upon any just cause, let him ask and obtain first licence of his own Priest: otherwise, the Priest shall have no power to bind him or to loose him, &c.

Note here, be calleth it not the Sacrament of the Altar.

In the time of this Innocentius, and of this Lateran Council, was Dominick, the first Author and Founder of the preaching-Fryers; who laboured to the said Pope Innocent for the confirmation of his Order, but did not obtain in his life time.

The next year after this Lateran Council died Pope Innocent, An. 1216. after whom came Honorius the Third. Who in the first year of his Popedom confirmed the Order of the Fryer Dominick, and gave to him and his Fryers Authority to preach, and to hear confessions, with divers other priviledges more. And under this Pope, which governed ten years, lived Dominick five years after the confirmation of his Order, and died, Anno 1221. About which year the Order of the Franciscan-Fryers began also to breed, and to spread in the world, through preaching and hearing confessions.

Fryer-Dominick in the time of Pope Innocent the Third, obtained not the confirmation of his Order.

The Order of Fryer-Dominick first confirmed by Pope Honorius the Third.

The Order of Franciscans confirmed shortly after the Dominicks.

After this Honorius, next followed Pope Gregory the Ninth, about the year of our Lord, 1228. who for the promoting of the foresaid Order of Dominicks, gave out this Bull, in tenour as followeth:

The Bull of Pope Gregory in the behalf of the Dominick-Fryers.

Gregorius Bishop, Servant of Gods Servants, to his reverend Brethren, Archbishops, Bishops, and to his welbeloved Children, Abbots Priors, and to all Prelates of Churches, to whomsoever these Presents shall come, greeting, and Apostolical blessing. Because * Iniquity hath abounded, and the Charity of many hath waxt cold; Behold, the Lord hath raised up the Order of our welbeloved Children the preaching-Fryers, who not seeing things of their own, but pertaining to Jesus Christ, to the extirping aswell of Heresies, as to the rooting out also of other pernicious pestilences, have dedicated themselves to the preaching of the † Word of God. We therefore minding to advance their sacred purpose, &c. And followeth, commanding you to see the said persons, gently to be received among you; and that your Flocks committed to your Charge do receive devoutly the seed of Gods Word out of their mouth, and do confess their sins unto them, all such as list, whom we have authorised to the same, to hear Confessions, and to enjoyn Penance, &c. Dat. Perusii. An. Pont. nostri 8.

* Iniquity hath abounded at Rome.

† Nay, to the preaching rather of mens traditions against the Word of God.

The Fryers authorised to hear confessions, and to enjoyn penance.

This Pope Gregory died about the year of our Lord, 1241. after whom came Celestinus the Fourth, and sate but 18 days: then came Innocentius the Fourth, and sate 11 years and six months. Who, although he began first to favour the Fryers; yet afterward being altered by certain Divines of Universities, Prelates of Churches, and Curates, he debarred them of their Liberties and Priviledges, and gave out again Precepts and Excommunications, as well against Fryers, as all other religious persons. And not long after the same he was dispatched and made away.

Pope Innocent the Fourth against the Fryers.

Innocentius being thus removed out of the way, about the year of our Lord, 1353. then succeeded Pope Alexander the Fourth, a great Maintainer of the Fryers, and sate seven years. He revoked and repealed the Acts and Writings of Pope Innocent his Predecessor, given forth against the Fryers; wherewith the Divines and Students of Paris being not well contented, stirred up four principal Doctors: The first and chief Captain was Guliel. de Sancto Amore, mentioned before, pag. 357. against whom wrote Albertus Magnus, and Tho. Aquine. And at last he was condemned by this foresaid Pope Alexander the Fourth, in the Extrav. Non sine multa: The second was Simon Tornalensis: The third Godfridus de fontibus: The fourth Henricus de Gandavo. These four with other their Complices, compiled a certain Book against the begging Order of Fryers, both Dominicans and Franciscans, intituled, De periculis Ecclesiæ, containing fourteen Chapters, whereof the fourteenth, which is the last, with thirty nine Articles against the Fryers, we have already translated and expressed, pag. 362. Besides these thirty nine Articles, be other seven Articles moreover to the said Book annexed, under the name of the Students of Paris against the Fryers, proving why the said Fryers ought not to be admitted into their Society. Which seven Articles, because they are but short, I thought here better to place, than to omit them.

Pope Alexander the Fourth undoeth the acts of Pope Innocent the Fourth, his Predecessor.

Extra. non sine multa. Gul. de sancto Amore. Simon Tornalensis, Godfridus de fontibus, Hen. de Gandavo, four Champions against the Fryers.

Certain Articles given out by the Students of Paris, against the Fryers, why they should not be admitted to their Society.

Articles of the Students of Paris against the Fryers.

First we say, they are not to be admitted to the Society of our School, but upon will and licence. For our Company or Fellowship ought not to be coactive, but voluntary, and free.

Secondly,

Secondly, We ſay they are not be admitted, forſomuch as we oft proved their Community manifold ways to be hurtful and incommodious.

Thirdly, Seeing they be of a diverſe Profeſſion from us (for they are called Regular, and not Scholaſtical) we therefore ought not to be joyned and aſſociate together in one Scholaſtical Office; foraſmuch as the Council of Spain doth ſay, Thou ſhalt not plough with an Ox, and with an Aſs together. Which is to ſay, Men of divers profeſſions ought not together to be matched in one kind of calling, or ſtanding, for their ſtudies and conditions be diſagreeing and diſſevered from ours, and cannot frame or couple together in one Communion.

Concilium Hiſpan.

Fourthly, We affirm by the Apoſtle that they are not to be admitted, becauſe they work diſſentions and offences; for ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. ult. We deſire you Brethren, that ye obſerve and take heed of ſuch as make diſſentions and offendicles about the Doctrine which you have learned by the Apoſtles, and avoid them: for ſuch ſerve not the Lord, but their own belly, Gloſſ. Some they flatter, ſome they backbite, whereby they might feed their bellies. That through their ſweet and pleaſant words, and by their Benedictions, they may deceive the hearts of the ſimple, Gloſſ. That is, with their fine ſugered and trim couched words they ſet forth their own Traditions, wherewith they beguile the hearts of the ſimple Innocents.

The Fryers make diſſentions.

Fifthly, We ſay they are not to be admitted, for that we fear leſt they be in the number of them, which go about and devour mens houſes: for they thruſt in themſelves into every mans houſe, ſearching and ſacking the conſcience and ſtates of all perſons: and whom they find eaſie to be ſeduced, and women, ſuch they do circumvent, and lead them away from the counſels of their Prelates, binding them either in act or oath: from ſuch we are warned by the Apoſtle to avoid.

Fryers devoure mens houſes Penetrantes domos.

Sixthly, We ſay they are to be avoided, becauſe we fear they are falſe Prophets. Which being neither Biſhops, nor Pariſh-Prieſts, nor yet their Vicars, nor ſent by them, yet they preach (not ſent) againſt the mind of the Apoſtle, Rom. 10. ſaying, How ſhall they preach except they be ſent? for elſe there appeareth in them no ſuch great vertue, for the which they ought to be admitted to preach uncalled. Seeing therefore that ſuch are ſo dangerous to the Church, they ought to be avoided.

Fryers preach uncalled.

Seventhly, We ſay they are not to be admitted, becauſe they be a people ſo curious in ſearching and inquiring of other mens doings and ſpiritual demeanor. And they yet be neither Apoſtles, nor yet Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, as Biſhops, nor of the number of the ſeventy two Diſciples of the Lord; nor their Succeſſors, that is, Pariſh-Prieſts, nor their Helpers, nor yet Vicars. Wherefore, ſeeing they live ſo in no Order, by the Sentence of the Apoſtle we are commanded to avoid them, 2 Theſſ. ult. where he ſaith, We admoniſh and denounce unto you (O Brethren) in the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; that is, as the Gloſs ſaith, (We Command you by the Authority of Chriſt) that you withdraw your ſelves from every Brother that walketh inordinately, and not after the tradition which you have received of us, &c. Look upon the common gloſs of this place, and you ſhall find, that ſuch are to be avoided till time they amend from ſo doing, &c.

Fryers have no order of any calling in the Church.

Beſides theſe Articles above rehearſed, certain Propoſitions or Concluſions were alſo propounded in the Schools of Paris the ſame time, ſolemnly to be diſputed and defended againſt the Fryers: which, in a brief ſum of words to collect them, were theſe:

Certain concluſions in the Univerſity of Paris to be diſputed of againſt the Fryers.

Firſt, That the begging-Fryers were not in the ſtate of Salvation.

Secondly, That they were bound to labour with their hands that could, and not to beg.

Thirdly, That they ought not to exerciſe the Office of Preaching, or to hear the Confeſſions of them that will come unto them, although being licenſed thereunto by the Biſhop of Rome, or by the Dioceſan: forſomuch as the ſame is prejudicial to the Miniſters and Prieſts of the Pariſhes.

All theſe aforeſaid Articles and Concluſions, with the Book ſet forth by theſe Paris-men, this Pope Alexander the Fourth condemned to be aboliſhed and burned, writing his Precepts to the French King, and alſo the Univerſity of Paris, in the favour of the Fryers; willing and commanding the ſaid Fryers to be reſtored to all their Priviledges and Liberties in as ample manner, as in Pope Gregories time before.

{KING Edw. 3}

Pope Alexander the Fourth a great favourer of the Fryers.

Not long after Pope Alexander the Fourth, followed Clement the Fourth, Anno 1263. and ſate three years: who alſo gave the priviledge to the Fryers, beginning, Quidam temere, &c. In which priviledge he condemneth them that ſay, that no man without licence of his Curate or Miniſter, ought to confeſs him to the Fryers, or that a Subject ought to ask licence of their Miniſters ſo to do, which was againſt the Canon Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c. made by Pope Innocent the Third, before recited.

Another Priviledge given to the Fryers by Pope Clement the 4th. Ex Clement. Quidam temere.

After this Clement again came Pope Martin the Fourth, Anno 1281. who renewed again the Canon, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, in the behalf of the Curates againſt the Fryers.

Pope Martin the fourth holdeth with Curates againſt the Fryers.

This Pope Boniface the Eighth began to ſit Anno [illegible] and ſate eight years and nine months. Who taking part with the Fryers gave to them another Priviledge, beginning, Supra Cathedram, &c. In the which priviledge he licenſed the Fryers, that without licence of Vicars of Churches they ſhall firſt preſent themſelves to the Prelates to be admitted; by whom if they be refuſed the ſecond time, then they, upon ſpecial authority of this Pope, ſhall be priviledged, without either Biſhop or Curate, to preach, to bury, and to hear confeſſions, whoſoever will come to them revoking all that was decreed by his Predeceſſors before to the contrary.

Pope Boniface holdeth with the Fryers again Clement. confiſ. Bonif. Super Cathedram.

By this Pope Boniface, a certain Dominick-Fryer was made Cardinal, named Nicolaus de Tervisio, and after the death of Boniface he was alſo made Pope, Anno 1303. ſurnamed Pope Benedictus 11. who, ſeeing the conſtitution of Boniface his Predeceſſor to gender diſſention between the Prieſts and Fryers, made another conſtitution, beginning, Inter cunctas, &c. revoking the conſtitution of Boniface his Predeceſſor. Upon which conſtitution of Pope Benedict, Joannes Monachus making a gloſs, revoked alſo his other made upon the conſtitution of Pope Boniface before.

Ex Clement. Inter cunctas Joan. Monach revoketh his Gloſs.

Again, after this Benedictus the Eleventh, followed Pope Clement the Fifth, Anno 1305. and ſate nine years. Who, in his General-Council holden at Vienna, revoked the conſtitution of Benedictus his Predeceſſor, and renewed again the former Decree of Boniface, by a new conſtitution of his, beginning Dudum a Bonifacio 8. &c. Which conſtitution moreover was confirmed afterward by Pope John the 22*th*, Anno 1316. Which Pope alſo cauſed Joannes de Poliaco to recant.

Pope Clement the Fifth holdeth with the Fryers, and repealeth the Conſtitution of Benedictus. Ex Clement. cap. Dudum.

Upon this variable diverſity of the Popes (one diſſenting and repugning from another) roſe among the Divines and School-men in Univerſities great matter of contention, as well in the Univerſity of Paris, as the Univerſity of Oxford about the begging-Fryers, ſome holding one way, ſome another way. But eſpecially five principal Opinions be noted of learned men, who, then diſputing againſt the Fryers, were condemned for Hereticks, and their Aſſertions reproved.

The firſt was the Opinion of them which defended, that the Fryers might not by the Licence of the Biſhop of Rome and of the Prelates preach in Pariſhes, and hear confeſſions. And of this opinion was Guliel. de ſancto Amore, with his Fellows, who, as it is ſaid, were condemned.

Five diverſe opinions of learned men in this age holding againſt the Fryers.

The ſecond Opinion was this, that Fryers, although not by their own authority, yet by the priviledge of the Pope, and of the Biſhop, might preach and hear confeſſions in Pariſhes, but yet not without licence of the Pariſh-Prieſts. Of this opinion was Bernardus, gloſſing upon the Canon, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, afore mentioned.

The ſecond opinion. Bernardus ſuper cap. Omnis utriuſque.

The third Opinion was, that Fryers might preach and hear confeſſions without licence of the Pariſh-Prieſts; but yet the ſaid Pariſhioners notwithſtanding were bound, by the Canon Omnis utriuſque ſexus to repeat the ſame ſins again, if they had no other, to their own proper Curate; and of this opinion were many, as Godf.

The third opinion.

Joan. de Poliaco.

de fontibus, Henr. de Gandavo, Joannes Monachus cardi: Joannes de Poliaco, which Joannes de Poliaco Pope John the 22*th* cauſed openly in Paris to recant and retract.

Ex libro fratris Egelberti.

This Joannes de Poliaco Doctor of Divinity in Paris, being complained of by the Fryers for certain Articles or Aſſertions, was ſent for to the Pope: where time and place being to him aſſigned, he, in the audience of the Pope and of frierly Cardinals and other Doctors, was ſtraitly examined of his Articles. To make the ſtory ſhort, he, at length ſubmitting himſelf to the authority of the terrible See of Rome, was cauſed to recant his Aſſertions openly at Paris: his Aſſertions which he did hold were theſe.

The three Aſſertions of Joannes de Poliaco, which he was cauſed by the Pope to recant at Paris.

John de Poliaco cauſed to recant by Pope John 22.

Whereof the firſt was, they which were confeſſed to Fryers, although having a general Licence to hear Confeſſions, were bound to confeſs again their ſins to their own Pariſh-Prieſt, by the Conſtitution Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c.

The ſecond was, that the ſaid Conſtitution Omnis utriuſque ſexus ſtanding in his force, the Pope could not make, but Pariſhioners were bound once a year to confeſs their ſins to their Prieſt. For the doing otherwiſe importeth a contradiction in it ſelf.

His three Aſſertions.

The three Aſſertions of John de Poliaco, againſt the Fryers.

The third was, that the Pope could not give general Licence to hear Confeſſions ſo, but that the Pariſhioner ſo confeſſed was bound to reiterate the ſame confeſſion made, unto his own Curate. Which he proved by theſe places of the Canon Law, 25. queſt. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Thoſe things which be generally ordained for publick utility, ought not to be altered by any change, &c. Item, the Decrees of the ſacred Canons, none ought to keep more than the Biſhop Apoſtolical, &c. Ibidem. Item, to alter or to ordain any thing againſt the Decrees of the Fathers, is not in the authority or power, no not of the Apoſtolical See, Ibidem.

25. q. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Contra ſtatuta patrum condere vel omittere aliquid non hujus quidem ſedis poteſt auctoritas.

The fourth Opinion.

The fourth Opinion was, that the Fryers by the Licence of the Pope and of the Biſhops might lawfully hear Confeſſions, and the people might be of them confeſſed and abſolved. But yet notwithſtanding, it was reaſon, convenient, honeſt, and profitable, that once in the year they ſhould be confeſſed to their Curates (although being confeſſed before to the Fryers) becauſe of the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, eſpecially at Eaſter. Of which opinion was Gulielmus de monte Landuno. Henricus de Gaudano alſo held it not only to be convenient, but alſo that they were bound ſo to do.

Gulielmus de monte Landuno, Henricus de Gaudano.

The fifth Opinion.

The fifth Opinion was, that albeit the Fryers might at all times, and at Eaſter alſo, hear Confeſſions as the Curates did; yet it was better and more ſafe, at the time of Eaſter, to confeſs to the Curates, than to the Fryers. And of this opinion was this our Armachanus, of whom we preſently now intreat.

And thus have ye, as in a brief ſum, opened unto you, what was the matter of contention between the Fryers and the Church-men. What Popes made with the Fryers, and what Popes made againſt them. Moreover, what learned men diſputed againſt them in Paris, and other places, and what were their Opinions.

The matter of contention about the Fryers ſtood in four Points: Firſt, preaching without Licence of Curates. Secondly, in hearing Confeſſion. Thirdly, in burying. Fourthly, in begging and taking of the people.

The learned men that diſputed againſt the Fryers.

Were Gulielmus de S. Amore., Bernardus ſuper capitulum, Omnis utriuſque ſexus., Godfridus de Fontibus., Henricus de Gandavo., Gulielmus de Landuno., Joannes Monachus Cardin., Joannes de Poliaco., Armachanus. — All theſe were condemned by the Popes, or elſe cauſed to recant.

Theſe conſiderations and circumſtances hitherto premiſed, for the more opening of this preſent cauſe of Armachanus ſuſtained againſt the idle beggerly Sects of Fryers, in whom the Reader may well perceive Antichriſt plainly reigning and fighting againſt the Church: it now remaineth, that as I have before declared the travels and troubles of divers godly learned men in the Church ſtriving againſt the ſaid Fryers, continually from the time of Gulielmus de Amore, hitherto; ſo now foraſmuch as this our Armachanus laboured, and in the ſame Cauſe ſuſtained the like Conflict with the ſame Antichriſt, we likewiſe collect and open his Reaſons and Arguments uttered in the Conſiſtory, and in the Audience of the Pope himſelf, wherewith he maintaineth the true Doctrine and Cauſe of the Church againſt the peſtiferous canker creeping in by theſe Fryers after ſubtil ways of hypocriſie, to corrupt the ſincere ſimplicity of Chriſts holy Faith and perfect Teſtament. The which Reaſons and Arguments of his, with the whole proceſs of his doings, I thought good and expedient for the utility of the Church more amply and largely to diſcourſe and proſecute, for that I note in the Sects, Inſtitutions, and Doctrine of theſe Fryers, ſubtil poyſon to lurk, more pernicious and hurtful to the Religion of Chriſt and Souls of Chriſtians, than all men peradventure do conſider.

Ex libro cui titulus, Defenſorium curatorum.

Thus Armachanus, joyning with the Clergy of England, diſputed and contended with the Fryers here of England, Anno 1358. about a double matter. Whereof the one was concerning confeſſion and other excheats which the Fryers incroached in Pariſh-Churches againſt the Curates, and publick Paſtors of Churches. The other was concerning wilful beggery and poverty, which the Fryers then took upon them, not upon any neceſſity, being otherwiſe ſtrong enough to work for their living, but only upon a wilful and affected profeſſion. For the which cauſe the Fryers appealed him up to the Court of Rome. The occaſion whereof thus did riſe.

It befel that Armachanus, upon certain buſineſs coming up to London, found there certain Doctors diſputing and contending about the begging of Chriſt our Saviour. Whereupon he, being greatly urged and requeſted oft times thereunto, at requeſt made ſeven or eight Sermons unto the people at London, wherein he uttered nine concluſions: whereof the firſt and principal concluſion was, touching the matter of the Fryers Priviledges in hearing confeſſions. His concluſion was this:

Firſt, That if a doubt or queſtion be moved for hearing confeſſions, which of two places is rather to be choſen; The Pariſh-Church is to be preferred before the Church of the Fryers.

Secondly, being demanded, Whether is to be taken (to hear the confeſſion of the Pariſhioners, the Parſon or Curate, or the Fryer) it is to be ſaid, rather the Parſon or the Curate.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in his humane converſation was always poor, but that he loved not poverty, or did covet to be poor.

Fourthly, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt did never beg, wilfully profeſſing to be poor.

Fifthly, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt did never teach wilfully to beg, or to profeſs wilful beggery.

The ſixth concluſion was, That Chriſt our Lord held the contrary, that men ought not wilfully or purpoſely, without meer neceſſity, to beg.

Seventhly, That it is neither wiſdom nor holineſs, for any man to take upon him wilful beggery perpetually to be obſerved.

The eighth, That it is not agreeing to the rule of the Obſervants, or Fryers minorites, to obſerve wilful poverty.

The laſt concluſion was, touching the Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, which condemned the Libel of the Maſters of Paris: that the ſame Bull touched none of theſe ſeven laſt Concluſions.

Armachanus cited up to the Pope by the Fryers. Upon theſe nine Concluſions premiſed, Armachanus being appealed, cited, and brought up to the preſence of the Pope, began to prove the ſame his foreſaid concluſions or aſſertions under proteſtation made, that his intention was The proteſtation of Armachanus. not to affirm any thing contrary to the Chriſtian Faith, or to the Catholick Doctrine, or that ſhould be prejudicial or deſtructive to the Orders of the begging-Fryers, ſuch as were approved by holy Church, or confirmed by the high Biſhops; but only his intention was, to have the ſaid Orders reduced to the purity of their firſt Inſtitution. Concerning which matter, he deſired his Reaſons to be heard; which if they ſhould be found weaker than the Reaſons of the Fryers, the puniſhment ſhould be his. If otherwiſe, that then the Fryers might juſtly be rewarded for their ſlanderous Obtrectation and publick Contumelies, and injurious dealings both privately and publickly wrought and ſought againſt him: and ſo taking for his theme, Nolite His Theme. judicare ſecundum faciem, ſed juſtum judicium judicate, &c. That is, Judge not after the outward face, but judge John 7. true Judgment, &c. John the ſeventh; he entreth to the The firſt concluſion proponed. probation of his concluſion; firſt, beginning with the former concluſion; that the Pariſh-Church was a place more fit and convenient for the confeſſions or burials of the Pariſhioners to be uſed, than any other exempt Church or Probation. place of the Fryers. Which he proved by three Cauſes; Firſt, for the more ſureneſs or certainty to the conſcience of Certainty. the Pariſhioners confeſſed. Secondly, for the more utility Utility. and profit of him. Thirdly, for the leſs incommodity in- Commodity ſuing by confeſſions taken in Pariſh-Churches, than in Fryers Churches.

The firſt part of the firſt concluſion confirmed. As touching the firſt, for the more aſſuredneſs and certainty, thus he argued upon the place of Deut. 12. Unto Deut. 12. that place which the Lord your God ſhall aſſign of all your Tribes, to place his Name and dwell therein; thither ſhall you reſort, to offer up your Oblations, Tythes, &c. And in the ſame place God ſaith, See thou offer not thy Sacrifice in every place that liketh thee, but in that place alone which the Lord hath elect in one of the Tribes; and thou ſhalt do in all things as I command thee. Alſo Levit. 4. 5. upon the words of Levit. 4. & 5. which be theſe, Who- ſoever ſinneth of ignorance ſhall offer to the Prieſt, and he ſhall pray for him, and he ſhall be forgiven, &c. Upon theſe places thus he argued; that foraſmuch as the Sacraments of the Church are to be frequented and uſed in no other place, but only in that, which by God himſelf peculiarly is aſſigned and commanded for the ſame; and ſeeing that elect place in the Law repreſenteth the Pariſh-Churches; neither can it be proved that the Fryers Church is the place preſcribed of God, but only permitted by Biſhops of Rome; he concluded therefore, that Pariſh-Churches for confeſſions and burials were more ſure and certain to the conſcience of Pariſhioners, than the exempt places of the Fryers.

The firſt part of the firſt concluſion confirmed by another reaſon. By another reaſon alſo he confirmed the ſame, for that the Pariſh-Church ſtandeth free from the Popes Interdict, ſo do not the Churches of the Fryers as which ſtand not ſo clear, but that they are under ſuſpition and doubt of the Popes Interdict; by the Decretal, De ſepulturis in ſexto cap. Animarum periculis. In which Decretal, all ſuch conventual Churches and Church-yards of Fryers be interdicted, which do induce any perſon or perſons, either by Oath or Promiſe made, to chooſe their burying places in their Churches, as commonly the Fryers are reported to do: for elſe what Pariſhioner would forſake his own Church and Pariſh where his Anceſtors do lie, to be buried among the Fryers, if the Fryers did not induce them ſo to do? { KING } { 1. Edw. 3 }

The ſecond part of the firſt concluſion confirmed. Moreover, for the ſecond part, concerning the utility of the place, that he confirmed doublewiſe; firſt, for that confeſſion, made within the Pariſh-Church, hath a double merit of Obedience, both for obeying the Commandment of God in opening his confeſſion (thus he ſpeaketh according to the blindneſs of that time, for that auricular confeſſion hath any Commandment of God cannot be proved) and alſo in obeying the Commandment of God in obſerving the place by him appointed, the which ſecond merit of Obedience lacketh in the Fryers part. Secondly, he proved it to be greater utility for a Pariſhioner to confeſs him in his Pariſh-Church, than with the Fryers; becauſe commonly the number of Chriſtian-people praying is ten times more in Pariſh-Churches. Whereby it is to be thought, that each ſingular perſon may better be helped through more prayers, than in the Oratories of Fryers, &c. Another confirmation of the ſecond part of the firſt Article.

The third part of the firſt concluſion proved. Further, as touching the third part of the firſt concluſion or Article he proved, that it had fewer incommodities every man to reſort to his Pariſh-Church than to the Fryers; for that both great utility, and more certainty (as hath been proved) did inſue thereof: which two being taken away, (as muſt needs, in reſorting to the Fryers Church) then two ſpecial commodities ſhould be hindred, and ſo great incommodities thereof ſhould follow. And thus much for the place of the Fryers.

The ſecond Concluſion or Article. Now to the ſecond concluſion or Article, touching the perſon of the Fryer, and of the ordinary Curate. If the queſtion be, which of theſe two is to be preferred in the Office of Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtration; the opinion of Armachanus was, that the ordinary Curate was better, than the extraordinary Fryer, and that for the three foreſaid reſpects, to wit, for certainty or aſſurance, for utility, and for incommodity to be avoided. Three reſpects or cauſes to be proved.

Firſt, that it is more ſafe and ſure for the Pariſhioners, to reſort to their Ordinary or Pariſh-Prieſt: he argued by three Reaſons, Firſt, becauſe the perſon of the lawful Ordinary or Prieſt, is expreſly of God commanded, where the perſon of the Fryer is not, and therefore is forbid. Secondly, becauſe the Pariſhioner may more truſt to his ordinary Curate; as who is more bound and obliged to provide, and to be careful for him, than any other extraordinary perſon. Thirdly, becauſe in the perſon of the ordinary Curate, commonly there is no doubt of any Interdict to bind him; whereas contrary in the Fryers behalf there is good matter to doubt, whether he ſtand bound under the Popes Cenſure of Excommunication or not, and that for divers Cauſes, as by the cap. Religioſi, in Clementinis de decimis. Ca. Religioſi Clement. de decim. Where it is decreed, That all ſuch religious men which having no Benefices or Cure of Souls, preſume to impropriate unto them Glebe-land, or other Tythes due unto Churches, and not appertaining to them (by any manner of colour or fraudulent circumvention) do incur the Sentence of Excommunication, ipſo facto. Alſo by another Cap. Religioſi, De privilegiis, in Clement. Where Inſtrument. ne do privilegiis, cap. Religioſi. it is ſaid, That all ſuch religious men are excommunicated De facto, whoſoever do abſolve any, againſt whom The Fryers proved to be excommunicated by the Popes Law. the Sentence of Excommunication hath been denounced by the Statute Provincial, or Synodal; as it is commonly ſaid, that the Fryers hearing mens confeſſions are accuſtomed to do, in looſing them whom the Cenſure of Prelates or their Officials have bound. Whereof the ſaid Armachanus bringeth forth example of his own Dioceſs: For I (ſaid he) in mine own Dioceſs of Armach have as good as two thouſand under me, who by the Cenſure of Excommunication every year denounced againſt wilful Murtherers, common Thieves, burners of mens Houſes, and ſuch like Malefactors, ſtand accurſed: of all which number notwithſtanding, ſcarcely fourteen there be which come to me, or to any about me for their Abſolution. And yet all they receive the Sacraments as others do, and all becauſe they be abſolved, or becauſe they fain themſelves to be abſolved by none other than by Fryers; who in ſo doing are proved to be under the danger of Excommunication, both the Fryers, and alſo the Pariſhioners, if they knowing thereof do conſent to their error.

Alſo

{KING Edw. 3}

Alſo out of the ſaid Clementines by three other places in one Chapter, he proved the Friers to be Excommunicate, to wit, in the Chapter Cupientes, De pœnis in Clement. In the which Chapter, Firſt, all ſuch Religious men are Excommunicate, which in their Sermons preſume to withdraw their hearers from their Tythes-paying, due unto Churches. Secondly, In the ſaid Chapter all ſuch Friers are ſuſpended from Preaching, and ſo are Excommunicate, which within a certain time did not make a Concion to ſuch as come to their Confeſſions, they paying their Tythes truly and duly to the Church. Thirdly, In the foreſaid Chapter alſo, all ſuch Religious perſons be bound in Excommunication, which induce men by any manner of means, either by vow, oath, or promiſe, to chuſe their burials within their Churches, or not to change the ſame, if they have made any ſuch promiſe before. In all which three points he proved the Friers to be culpable and Excommunicate.

Cap. Cupientes de pœnis Clement.

The Friers proved to be Excommunicated by the Popes Law.

Moreover, that it is the more ſure way for the Pariſhioners to reſort to their appointed Curates, than to the Friers, he argued thus: For that the Pariſh-Prieſt or Curate, being better acquainted with his own Pariſhioner than is a ſtranger, can better judg of the nature and diſpoſition of his diſeaſe, and miniſter to him due Phyſick of penance for the ſame, and alſo will be more careful in curing him.

Another proof that the Pariſhioner more ſafely go to his Curate, than to the Friers.

Thus the firſt part of the ſecond concluſion or article being proved and argued, Armachanus proceedeth further to prove the ſecond part; that it is better for the Pariſhioners to leave the Friers, and to reſort to their own Paſtors. Which he proved by eight or nine Reaſons.

The ſecond part of the ſecond concluſion proved.

Firſt, For that the ordinary Paſtor is properly appointed of God unto that Miniſtry; whereas the Frier is but only permitted of man thereunto.

Secondly, For that in reſorting to the Ordinary of the Pariſh is a double reward of merit, whereas in coming to the Friers there is but one.

Thirdly, Becauſe the Ordinary is more bound to his own flock, and is to be thought to be more tender and careful over them than a ſtranger.

Fourthly, Becauſe in reſorting to the perſon of his own Ordinary there is more aſſurance and certainty (as is above declared) than to another.

Innocen. cap. Si animarum.

Fifthly, Becauſe (as Innocentius, Cap. Si Animarum, ſaith) the coming to the Curate or Paſtor Ordinary is more eaſie and light, both in the night, and in neceſſity.

Sixthly, Forſomuch as the Pariſhioner muſt needs come to his Curate at ſome time, and eſpecially being in neceſſity, it is expedient and profitable that his former life before were known to him, rather than to the other.

Seventhly, For that (as the ſaid Innocentius affirmeth) it ſtriketh more ſhame of his ſin to the Pariſhioner to be confeſſed to his Curate whom he ſeeth every day, than to a Frier unknown.

Eighthly, Becauſe it is more profitable, eſpecially for them that live in Matrimony, that he which heareth the confeſſion of the one, ſhould hear alſo the confeſſion of the other. So that hearing the confeſſion of them both, as a ſpiritual Phyſician taking two Cures in one body, may better know what ſpiritual counſel is to be miniſtred to the one after he hath cured the other, &c.

The third part of the ſecond concluſion argued.

Theſe things thus proved before, then Armachanus conſequently proceedeth to the third part; arguing how that greater detriments and inconveniences do enſue by Confeſſions, Burials, and other Eccleſiaſtical functions exerciſed by the Friers, than by Paſtors and Secular Curates, ſerving in Pariſhes. About the which matter the ſaid Armachanus learnedly and worthily inferreth a long diſcourſe, proving and inferring how pernicious theſe Orders of Friers are to the whole ſtate of the Church, and what miſchief cometh by the priviledges of certain Popes, which have priviledged them to intermeddle in the office and function of Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters, to preach and to take alms and tythes of the people, and Impropriations from the Church. All which his reaſons and arguments to proſecute in order as he hath left them in writing, would make a matter of a large Book. Notwithſtanding becauſe it ſhall not be unfruitful both for the time preſent, and the poſterity, to know the manifold detriments and diſcommodities received by theſe Friers, and to know what great benefit God hath done for us in unburdening the Church of this monſtrous generation; and eſpecially becauſe the Book of Armachanus is rare otherwiſe to be found, intituled, Defenſorium Curatorum; I have briefly therefore contracted out of the ſame certain of his reaſons, ſuch as ſeemed moſt appertaining and moſt worthy of noting.

Defenſorium Curatorum. Armachanum.

And firſt, alledging the authority of Innocent the 4*th*; he importeth four inconveniences riſing by the Friers, which be theſe; Contempt of the people againſt their Ordinaries; decreaſing of Devotion; taking away of ſhame from the people by confeſſing to the Friers; detaining of Oblations, ſuch as the people are wont to give at their Confeſſions and Burials, and which by right belong to the Pariſh Churches.

Item, By the ſaid priviledges of the Popes, granted to the Friers, many other great enormities do riſe. As firſt, becauſe thereby the true ſhepherds do not know the faces of their flock.

Cap. Ddum

Item, By the occaſion of theſe priviledges given to the Friers, great contention, and ſometimes blows riſe between the Friers and ſecular Curates, about Titles, Impropriations, and other avails.

The harms that come to the world by the Friers, declar'd.

Item, By the occaſion of the foreſaid priviledges, divers young men as well in Univerſities as in their Fathers houſes, are allured craftily by the Friers their Confeſſors to enter their Orders; from whence afterward they cannot get out though they would, to the great grief of their Parents, and no leſs repentance to the young men themſelves. The example whereof Armachanus in the ſaid his Treatiſe inferreth of a certain ſubſtantial Engliſhman being with him at his Inn in Rome; who having a Son at the Univerſity of Oxford, which was enticed by the Friers to enter into their Order, could by no means after releaſe him out. But when his Father and his Mother would come unto him, they could not be ſuffered to ſpeak with him, but under the Friers cuſtody. Whereas the Scripture commandeth plainly, that whoſo ſtealeth any man and ſelleth him (being thereof convicted) ſhall be put to death, Exod. 21. And for the ſame cauſe the Father was compelled to come up to Rome to ſeek remedy for his Son. And thus, ſaith Armachanus, it may appear what damage and detriments come by theſe Friers unto the common people.

Example of the Friers theft in Oxford.

And no leſs inconvenience and danger alſo by the ſaid Friers riſeth to the Clergy; forſomuch as Lay-men, ſeeing their Children thus to be ſtollen from them in the Univerſities by the Friers, do refuſe therefore to ſend them to their ſtudies; rather willing to keep them at home to their occupation, or to follow the Plow, than ſo to be circumvented and defeated of their Sons at the Univerſity, as by daily experience (ſaith he) doth manifeſtly appear. For whereas in my time (ſaith Armachanus) there were in the Univerſity of Oxford thirty thouſand Students; now are there not to be found ſix thouſand. The occaſion of which ſo great decay is to be aſcribed to no other cauſe but to this circumvention only of the Friers above mentioned.

Friers Hinderers of Univerſities

30000 Students in Oxford, in the time of Armachanum.

Over and beſides this, another inconvenience as great or greater the ſaid Armachanus inferred to proceed by the Friers through the decay of Doctrine, and knowledg in all manner of Faculties, and Liberal Sciences, which thus he declared: For that theſe begging Friers through their priviledges obtained of the Popes to preach, to hear Confeſſions, and to Bury; and through their Charters of Impropriations, did grow thereby to ſuch great riches and poſſeſſions by their begging, craving, catching, and intermedling with Church-matters, that no Book could ſtir of any Science, either of Divinity, Law, or Phyſick, but they were both able and ready to buy it up. So that every Covent having a great Library full ſtuffed and furniſhed with all ſorts of Books, and being ſo many Covents within the Realm, and in every Covent ſo many Friers increaſing daily more and more; by reaſon thereof it came to paſs that very few Books or none at all remain for other Students. Which by his own experience he thus teſtifieth, ſaying, That he himſelf ſent forth to the Univerſity four of his own Prieſts or Chaplains, who ſending him word again, that they could neither find the Bible, nor any other good profitable Book of Divinity meet for their ſtudy, therefore were minded to return home to their Country; and one of them, he was ſure, was returned by this time again.

The Friers a great cauſe of decay of learning.

Books not to be gotten for the Friers.

Example what lack of Books cometh by the Friers.

The Friers guilty in three faults: 1. Diſobedience. 2. Avarice. 3. Pride. Armachanus chargeth the Friers with diſobedience.

Furthermore, as he hath proved hitherto the Friers to be hurtful both to the Laity, and to the Clergy; ſo proceeding farther, he proveth them to be hurtful alſo to themſelves: And that in three points, as incurring the vice of diſobedience againſt God, and againſt their own rule; the vice of avarice, and the vice of pride. The probation of all which points he proſecuted in a long diſcourſe.

Firſt (ſaith he) they are diſobedient to the Law of God, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours houſe, ox, nor aſs, nor any thing that is his: In that they procure the Popes Letters to preach in Churches, and to take Burials from Churches, with licence annexed withal to receive the avails which riſe of the ſame, which properly belongeth to the right of Pariſh-Prieſts.

Friers diſobedient to the rule of Scripture.

Item, They are diſobedient to this rule of the Goſpel: So do to other, as thou wouldeſt have done to thee.

Item, They be diſobedient againſt their own rule, which being founded upon ſtrait poverty and beggery, this licenſe obtained for them to require neceſſaries of the people for their labours, is repugning againſt the ſame foundation.

Item, They be diſobedient to the rule of the Scripture, which ſaith, Let no man take honour unto him, except he be called, as Aaron. Alſo St. Paul ſaith, How ſhall they preach, unleſs they be ſent? And how obſerve they this rule of obedience, who profeſſing to keep the perfection of the Goſpel, yet contrary to the Goſpel procure to themſelves privileges to run before they be ſent?

Item, To their own rule they are diſobedient; for where their Chapter ſaith, that if any will take upon them this Order, and will come to our Brethren; let our Brethren firſt ſend them to the Provincials to be examined of the Catholick Faith and Sacraments of the Church, &c. Contrary whereunto the Friers have procured a priviledg, that not only the Provincials, but other inferiors alſo may take unto them indifferently, whom they can catch; ſo far without all examination, that almoſt at this day there is no notable houſe of Friers, wherein is not either a whole, or half a Covent of Lads and Boys under ten years old, being circumvented, which neither can skill of the Creed nor Sacraments.

Friers diſobedient to their own profeſſion.

Again, the rule of Francis ſaith, that his Brethren Obſervants muſt obſerve not to preach in the Dioceſs of any Biſhop, without the conſent of the Biſhop. And moreover, the ſaid Francis in his Teſtament ſaith, That if he had as much wiſdom as Solomon, and found poor Secular Prieſts in the Pariſhes where they dwell, yet he would not preſume to preach without their will, and alſo would fear, love and honour them, and all other as his Maſters, and ſo they be. Hæc ille. Againſt which rule how the Friers do diſobey, how little they reverence Biſhops or Secular Prieſts, what privileges, exemptions, and immunities they procure againſt them, the world may ſee and judg.

Item, When none may be admitted to preach, or to hear Confeſſions, unleſs they be entred into Orders; and ſeeing by the common Law of the Church, none muſt be admitted into holy Orders, except he have ſufficient title of living and clothing; the Friers therefore having no ſuch title (being wilful beggers) do diſobey in both reſpects, that is, both in entring into ſuch Orders without convenient title, and in exerciſing the office of Preaching without ſuch lawful Orders.

Moreover, the foreſaid Francis to his Teſtament commandeth thus: I command (ſaith he) firmly by vertue of obedience, to all and ſingular my Brethren whereſoever they be, that none of them preſume to obtain in the Court of Rome any Letter or writing, either by himſelf, or by any other means, neither for the Church, nor for any other place, nor under any colour of preaching, nor yet for the perſecuting of their own bodies, &c. Againſt which Teſtament of Francis, the Franciſcans, in procuring their priviledges from the Biſhop of Rome, have incurred manifeſt diſobedience as all the world may ſee. Neither will this objection ſerve them, becauſe the Pope hath diſpenſed with Francis rule. For if the Teſtament of Francis, as he ſaith, came from God (and ſo ſhould God have three Teſtaments) how then can the Pope repeal his precept, or diſpenſe with his rule, when by the rule of the Law, Par in parem non habet imperium?

Secondly, Concerning the vice of avarice, manifeſtly it may be proved upon them (ſaith Armachanus) for elſe ſeeing ſo many charges belong to the office of a Secular Pariſh Prieſt, as to miniſter the Sacrament at Eaſter, to viſit the ſick with extream unction, to baptize Children, to wed, with ſuch other, wherein ſtandeth as great devotion; how then happeneth it that theſe Friers, making no labour for theſe, only procure to themſelves priviledges to preach in Churches, to hear Confeſſions, and to receive licenſe to bury from Pariſh-Churches, but becauſe there is lucre and gain in theſe to be looked for, in the other is none?

Armachanus chargeth the Friers with avarice.

Another proof.

Which alſo may appear by this, for otherwiſe if it were for meer devotion only, that they procure licenſe to bury from Pariſh-Churches, and to preach; why then have they procured with all licenſe to take offerings, oblations and legacies for their Funerals? And for their preaching, why have they annexed alſo licenſe to require and take of the people neceſſaries for their labour, but only avarice is the cauſe thereof?

Another proof.

Likewiſe for hearing of Confeſſions, when all good Chriſtians have enough to know their own faults, and nothing luſt to hear the faults of other; it is probably to be ſuppoſed by this their priviledg of hearing all mens confeſſions, that they would never have been ſo deſirous of procuring that priviledg, were it not that theſe Friers did feel ſome ſweetneſs and gain to hang upon the ſame.

Another proof.

Item, where the rule of Frier Francis forbiddeth them to company with any woman, to enter into Monaſteries, to be God-fathers and Goſſips to men and women; how cometh it that they contrary to their rule enter into the ſecret Chambers of Queens, and other women, and are made to know the moſt ſecret counſels of their doings, but that avarice and commodity have ſo blinded their eyes, and ſtirred their hearts.

Armachanus chargeth the Friers with pride.

Thirdly, That the Friers fall into the vice of pride and ambition, the ſaid Armachanus proved thus:

To ſeek or to procure any high place in the Church, is a point of pride and ambition. Chryſoſt. in opere perfectio: Nunquam ſine ambitione deſideratur primatus in Eccleſia.

The Friers ſeek and procure a high place in the Church.

Ergo, The Friers are proud and ambitious.

The Minor he proveth, To have the ſtate of preaching and hearing confeſſions is in the Church a ſtate of honour.

The Friers ſeek and have procured the ſtate of preaching and hearing Confeſſions.

Ergo, The Friers ſeek and procure an high place in the Church, &c.

The third Concluſion or Article.

His third Concluſion was, that the Lord Chriſt in his humane converſation was always poor, not for that he loved or deſired poverty for it ſelf, &c. Wherein this is to be noted, that Armachanus differed not from the Friers in this, that Chriſt was poor, and that he loved poverty; but herein ſtood the difference, in manner of loving, that is, whether he loved poverty for it ſelf, or not. Wherein the foreſaid Armachanus uſed four probations.

Firſt, forſomuch as to be poor is nothing elſe but to be miſerable, and ſeeing no man coveteth to be in miſery for it ſelf; therefore he concluded that Chriſt deſired not poverty for it ſelf.

His ſecond reaſon was derived out of Ariſtotle: Nothing (ſaith he) is to be loved for it ſelf, but that which (all commodities being ſecluded which follow thereupon) is voluntarily ſought and deſired. But take from poverty all reſpect of commodities following the ſame, it would be ſought neither of God nor man. Ergo, he concluded, Chriſt loved no poverty for it ſelf.

Thirdly again, No effect of ſin, ſaid he, is to be loved for it ſelf. But poverty is the effect of ſin. Ergo, poverty was not loved of Chriſt for it ſelf.

Fourthly, No privation of the thing that is good, is to be loved for it ſelf. Poverty is the privation of the thing that is good, that is, of riches (for God himſelf is principally rich): Ergo, Poverty for it ſelf was not loved of Chriſt.

The fourth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The fourth Concluſion was, that Chriſt our Lord and Saviour did never beg wilfully. Which he proveth by ſundry reaſons.

Firſt, For that Chriſt in ſo doing ſhould break the Law, which ſaith, Thou ſhalt not covet thy Neighbours houſe, his wife, his ſervant, his maid, his ox, his aſs, or any KING Ed. 3. any thing that is his, Exod. 20. Into the danger of which Commandment he that beggeth voluntarily muſt needs incur.

2. Item, If Chriſt had begged voluntarily, he ſhould have committed ſin againſt another Commandment, which ſaith, There ſhall be no beggar, nor needy perſon among you, &c. Deut. 6.

3. Item, Chriſt in ſo doing ſhould have tranſgreſſed the Emperors Law, under which he would himſelf be ſubject (as appeareth by giving, and bidding tribute to be given to Ceſar) foraſmuch as the ſame Emperors Law ſaith, There ſhall no valiant beggar be ſuffered in the City.

4. Item, If Chriſt had been a wilful beggar, he had broke the Law of loving his neighbour; whom he had vexed, having no need. For whoſo without need asketh or craveth of his neighbour, doth but vex him, in ſuch ſort he would not be vexed himſelf. Which Chriſt would never do.

5. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, he had moved ſlander thereby to his own Goſpel, which he with Miracles [illegible]; for then they that ſaw his Miracle in feeding 5000 in the wilderneſs, would have thought much with themſelves how that miracle had been wrought, if he which fed other, either could not, or would not feed himſelf.

6. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, then he had done that which himſelf condemneth by Paul, for ſo we read, 1 Tim. 6. that Paul condemneth them, which eſteem piety to be gain and lucre. Which all they do, that under the colour of piety, hunt or ſeek for gain, when otherwiſe they need not.

7. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, he had offended in declaring an untruth in ſo doing; for he that knoweth in his mind that he needeth not indeed that thing which in word he asketh of other, declareth in himſelf an untruth, as who in word pretendeth to be otherwiſe than he is in very deed; which Chriſt without doubt never did, nor would ever do.

8. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, that is, having no true need thereunto, than had he appeared either to be an hypocrite, ſeeming to be that he was not, and to lack when he did not; or elſe to be a true beggar in very deed, not able to ſuffice his neceſſity. For he is a true beggar indeed, which being conſtrained by meer neceſſity is forced to ask of other, that which he is not able to give to himſelf. But neither of theſe two agreeth to Chriſt.

Ex vita S. Clementis. 9. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, then why did Peter rebuke the Mother of St. Clement his Diſciple, finding her to ſtand among the beggers, whom he thought to be ſtrong enough to labour with her hands for her living, if ſhe in ſo doing had followed the example of Chriſt?

Clements Example contrary to the Friers. 10. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully: And if the Friers do rightly define perfection of the Goſpel by wilful poverty, then was Clement St. Peters Succeſſor to blame, which laboured ſo much to remove away beggery and poverty from among all them that were converted to the faith of Chriſt, and is ſpecially for the ſame commended of the Church.

15 Queſt. Cap. 1. 11. Again, why did the ſaid Clement, writing to James Biſhop of Jeruſalem, command ſo much to obey the Doctrine and Examples of the Apoſtles; who as he ſheweth in that Epiſtle, had no begger nor needy perſon amongſt them, if Chriſtian perfection (by the Friers Philoſophy) ſtandeth in wilful beggery?

12. Item, If Chriſt the High Prieſt had begged wilfully, then did the holy Church err wittingly, which ordained that none without ſufficient title of living and clothing, ſhould be admitted to holy Orders. And moreover, when it is ſaid in the Canonical Decrees, that the Biſhop or Clerk that beggeth bringeth ſhame upon the whole Order of the Clergy.

13. Item, If Chriſt had wilfully begged, then the examples of wilful poverty had pertained to the perfection of Chriſtian life, which is contrary to the old Law, which commandeth the Prieſts (which lived then after the perfection of the Law) to have poſſeſſions and tythes to keep them from beggery.

14. Item, If Chriſt did wilfully beg, then beggery were a point of Chriſtian perfection. And ſo the Church of God ſhould err, in admitting ſuch Patrimonies and Donations given to the Church, and ſo in taking from the Prelates their perfection.

15. Again, what will theſe Friers which put their perfection in begging, ſay to Melchiſedech, who without begging or wilful poverty, was the High Prieſt of God, and King of Salem, and prefigured the Order and Prieſthood of Chriſt?

16. And if beggery be ſuch a perfection of the Goſpel (as the Friers ſay) how cometh it, that the Holy Ghoſt given to the Apoſtles, which ſhould lead them into all truth, told them no word of this beggarly perfection, neither is there any word mentioned thereof throughout the whole Teſtament of God?

17. Moreover, where the Prophet ſaith, I never did ſee the juſt man forſaken, nor his ſeed go begging their bread: how ſtandeth this with the juſtice of Chriſt, which was moſt perfectly juſt, if he ſhould be forſaken, or his ſeed go beg their bread? And then how agreeth this with the abominable Doctrines of Friers Franciſcan, which put their perfection in wilful begging?

18. Finally, do we not read that Chriſt ſent his Diſciples to preach without ſcrip or wallet, and bid them ſalute no man by the way? Meaning that they ſhould beg nothing of any man: Did not the ſame Chriſt alſo labour with his hands under Joſeph? St. Paul likewiſe did he not labour with his hands, rather than he would burden the Church of the Corinthians? And where now is the Doctrine of the Friers, which putteth the ſtate of perfection in wilful begging?

The fifth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The fifth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers, was this, That Chriſt never taught any man wilfully to beg, which he proved thus: It is written, Act. 1. Chriſt began to do and to teach. If Chriſt therefore, which did never wilfully beg himſelf, as hath been proved, had taught men otherwiſe to do; then his doing and teaching had not agreed together.

Item, If Chriſt which never begged himſelf wilfully, had taught men this Doctrine of wilful begging contrary to his own doing; he had given ſuſpition of his Doctrine, and miniſtred ſlander of the ſame, as hath been proved in the fourth Concluſion before.

Moreover, in ſo teaching, he had taught contrary to the Emperors juſt Law, which expreſly forbiddeth the ſame.

The ſixth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The ſixth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers was, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt teacheth us, that we ſhould not beg wilfully, which he proveth by ſeven or eight Reaſons.

Firſt, Where it is written, Luk. 14. When thou makeſt a Feaſt call the poor, weak, lame, and blind; and thou ſhalt be bleſſed: for they have not wherewith to reward thee again.

To this alſo pertaineth the Decree of the Apoſtle, 2 Theſ. 3. He that will not work, let him not eat. Furthermore, the ſame Apoſtle addeth in the ſame place: For you have us for example, how we were burdenous to no man, neither did we eat our bread freely, but with labour and wearineſs, toiling both day and night, and all becauſe we would not burthen you, &c.

4. Item, where we read in the Scripture the ſlothful man reprehended, Prov. 6. Why ſleepeſt thou, O ſluggard? thy poverty and beggery is coming upon thee like an armed man, &c. And again in the ſame Book of Proverbs, The ſlothful man (ſaith the Scripture) for cold would not go to the Plow, therefore he ſhall beg in ſummer, and no man ſhall give him, &c. Alſo in the ſaid Book of Proverbs, the laſt Chapter, The diligent labouring woman is commended, whoſe fingers are exerciſed about the rock and ſpindle. And all theſe places make againſt the wilful begging of ſturdy Friers.

The Rule of Frier Francis.

5. Item, Frier Francis their own founder in his own Teſtament ſaith, And I have laboured with mine own hands, and will labour, and will that all my Frierlings ſhall labour and live of their labour, whereby they may ſupport themſelves in an honeſt mean. And they that cannot work, let them learn to work, not for any coveteouſneſs to receive for their labour, but for example of good works, and to avoid idleneſs. And when the price of their labour is not given them, let them reſort to the Lords Table, and ask their alms from door to door, &c. Thus much in his Teſtament. And in his rule he ſaith, Such brethren to whom the Lord hath given the gift to labour, let them labour faithfully and devoutly, &c. Wherefore it is to be marvelled how thoſe Friers with their wilful begging, dare tranſgreſs the rule and obedience of Frier Francis their great Grandfathers Teſtament.

6. Item, If Chriſt at any time did beg, or did lack, it was more becauſe he would uſe a miracle in his own perſon, than becauſe he would beg wilfully; as when he ſent Peter to the Sea to find a Groat in the fiſhes mouth. Which thing yet he thought rather to do, than to beg the Groat of the people, which he might ſoon have obtained.

7. Item, By divers other his examples he ſeemeth to teach the ſame, as where he ſaith, The workman is worthy of his hire. Alſo, The workman is worthy of his meat, Mat. 10. Luk. 10. And when he ſpake to Zache, that he would turn into his houſe. And ſo likewiſe in Bethany and all other places he ever uſed rather to burden his friends than to beg of other unacquainted.

8. Item, With plain precept thus he ſendeth forth his Diſciples, willing them not to go from houſe to houſe, Luk. 10. ſo as Friers uſe now to go. Many other Scriptures there be which reprove begging, as where it is ſaid, The foot of a fool is ſwift to the houſe of his neighbour, Eccleſ. 29. And in another place, My child (ſaith he) ſee thou want not in the time of thy life, for better it is to die than to lack, Eccleſ. 21.

9. Item, Where Chriſt counſelling the young man, bad him go and ſell that he had, and give to the poor, and follow him if he would be perfect; he doth not there call him to wilful begging, but calleth him to follow him, which did not beg wilfully.

The ſeventh Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The ſeventh Concluſion of Armachanus is, That no wiſe nor true holy man can take upon him wilful poverty to be obſerved always, which he proveth by four reaſons.

Firſt, That wilful beggery was reproved both by the Doctrine of Chriſt and of the Apoſtles, as in the Concluſion before hath been declared.

2. Item, A man in taking upon him wilful beggery, in ſo doing ſhould lead himſelf into temptation, which were againſt the Lords-prayer. Foraſmuch as Solomon, Prov. 30. ſaith, O Lord, beggery and great riches give me not, but only ſufficiency to live upon, leſt if I have too much, I be driven to deny thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? Again, if I have too little, I be forced thereby to ſteal, and perjure the name of my God. Wherefore ſaith Eccleſ. 27. For need many have offended. And therefore they that chuſe wilful poverty, take to them great occaſion of temptation.

Wilful beggery not to be permitted.

3. Item, They that take wilful poverty upon them, when they need not, induce themſelves voluntarily to break the Commandment of God, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours houſe, &c. Again, where it is commanded, There ſhall be no beggar among you, &c.

4. Item, He that taketh upon him needleſly and wilfully to beg, maketh himſelf unapt to receive holy Orders, having (as is ſaid) no ſufficient title thereunto, according to the Laws of the Church.

The eighth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The eighth Concluſion of this matter, That it is not agreeing to the rule of the Friers obſervant, to obſerve wilful beggery. Which (ſaith he) may be proved, for that Frier Francis, both in his Rule and in his Teſtament being left to his Franciſcans, doth plainly prefer labour before begging.

The ninth Concluſion of Armachanus. Touching this Book of the Maſters of Paris condemned, look p. 405. Ex Clement. Quia quorundam. Pope Nicholas the third revoketh the Bull of Pope Alexander the fourth.

The ninth and laſt Concluſion of this matter is, That the Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, which condemneth the Book of the Maſters of Paris, impugneth none of theſe Concluſions premiſed. For the proof thereof he thus inferred.

1. Firſt, That Pope John the 24*th*, in his Conſtitution, beginning thus, Quia quorundam, affirmeth expreſly, how Pope Nicholas the Third revoked and called back the ſaid Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, and all other writings of his, touching all ſuch Articles, which in the ſame foreſaid Conſtitution of this Pope John be contained and declared. Wherein alſo is declared how ſtrait the poverty of the Friers ought to be, which they call wilful poverty.

2. Item, It is manifeſt and notorious to all men, how the ſaid Pope Nicholas the Third, in his Declaration ſheweth how the Friers both ought to labour with their hands, and how moreover the ſaid Friers ought not to preach within the Dioceſs of any Biſhop, whereſoever they be reſiſted. Which being ſo, the concluſion appeareth that the Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, as touching theſe Articles, is void and of none effect. Beſides the which Articles, there is nothing elſe in the ſaid Bull of Alexander (that I remember) which impugneth any of theſe Concluſions premiſed.

{KING Edw. 3.}

Many things mo (ſaid he) I had beſides theſe, both to object and to anſwer again to the ſame, and ſo confirm more ſurely and firmly theſe my reaſons and affections premiſed. But I have already too much wearied your Holineſs, and your reverend Lordſhips here preſent. Wherefore I conclude and humbly and devoutly beſeech you according to my former petition premiſed in the beginning of this matter, that you judg not after the outward face, but judg ye true judgment, Joh. 7. Ex libro Armachani, cui titulus Defenſorium Curatorum.

The end and concluſion of the Oration of Armachanus before the Pope. Ex defenſorio Curatorum.

Notes to be obſerved in this former Oration of Armachanus.

Notes to be obſerved.

BY this Oration of Armachanus the Learned Prelate, thus made before Pope Innocent and his Cardinals, divers and ſundry things there be for the utility of the Church worthy to be obſerved. Firſt, what troubles and vexations came to the Church of Chriſt by theſe Friers. Alſo what perſecution followeth after by the means of them againſt ſo many Learned men and true ſervants of Chriſt. Furthermore, what repugnance and contrarietie was among the Popes, and how they could not agree among themſelves about the Friers. Fourthly, what peſtiferous Doctrine ſubverting well near the Teſtament of Jeſus Chriſt. Fifthly, what decay of Miniſters in Chriſts Church, as appeareth, pag. 469. Sixthly, what robbing and circumventing of mens children, as appeareth, pag. 469. Seventhly, what decay of Univerſities, as appeareth by Oxford, p. 469. Eighthly, that damage to Learning and lack of Books to Students came by theſe Friers, as appeareth, p. 469. Ninthly, to what pride, under colour of fained humility, to what riches, under diſſimuled poverty they grew, here is to be ſeen. Inſomuch that at length through their ſubtil and moſt dangerous hypocriſie they crept up to be Lords, Archbiſhops, Cardinals, and at laſt alſo Chancellors of Realms, yea and of moſt ſecret Counſel with Kings and Queens, as appeareth, pag. 470.

Contrariety among the Popes.

All theſe things well conſidered, now remaineth in the Church to be marked, that forſomuch as theſe Friers (with their new found Teſtament of Frier Francis) not being contented with the Teſtament of God in his Son Chriſt, began to ſpring the ſame time when as Satan was propheſied to be let looſe by order of the Scripture, whether therefore it is to be doubted that theſe Friers make up the body of Antichriſt, which is propheſied to come in the Church or not; which is much leſs to be doubted, becauſe whoſo liſt to try ſhall find, that of all other enemies of Chriſt, of whom ſome be manifeſt, ſome be privy, all be together cruel, yet is there no ſuch ſort of enemies which more ſleightly deceiveth the ſimple Chriſtian, or more deeply drowneth him in damnation, than doth this Doctrine of the Friers.

Whether the Friers make up the body of Antichriſt or no.

But of this Oration of Armachanus enough. Which Oration what ſucceſs it had with the Pope, by Story it is not certain. By his own life declared it appeareth that the Lord ſo wrought that his enemies did not triumph over him. Notwithſtanding, this by Story appeareth, that he was ſeven or eight years in baniſhment for the ſame matter, and there died in the ſame at Avinion, of whom a certain Cardinal hearing of his death, openly proteſted that the ſame day a mighty pillar of Chriſts Church was fallen.

After the death of Armachanus, the Friers had contention likewiſe with the Monks of Benedicts Order about the ſame year 1360, and ſo removed their cauſe, both againſt the Monks, and againſt the Univerſity of Oxford, unto the Court of Rome; wherein, ſaith the Author, they lacked another Richard. Ex Botonero. By this that appeareth to be true, which is teſtified in the firſt Tome of Wald. that long debate continued between the Friers and the Univerſity of Oxford: Againſt whom firſt ſtood Robert Groſted Biſhop of Lincoln, above mentioned, then Sevallus of York, *Johan. Pope Urban the Fifth. Anno 1360.

After the death of this Innocent, next was Poped in the See of Rome Pope Urban the fifth, who by the Fathers ſide was an Engliſhman. This Urban had been a long waiter in the Court of Rome; and when he ſaw no promotion would light upon him, complaining to a certain friend of his, he made to him his mone, ſaying, That he thought verily, if all the Churches of the world ſhould fall, yet none would fall in his mouth. The which friend after ſeeing him to be Pope and Inthronized in his threefold Crown, cometh to him, and putting him in remembrance of his words to him before, ſaith, That where his Holineſs had moned his fortune to him, That if all the Churches in the world would fall, none would fall upon his head: Now (ſaith he) God hath otherwiſe ſo diſpoſed that all the Churches in the world are fallen upon your head, &c.

Urban complaineth that no promotion would fall upon him.

An anſwer again to Urban being made Pope.

This Pope maintained and kindled great wars in Italy, ſending Egidius his Cardinal and Legate, and after him Arduinus a Burgundian his Legate and Abbot with great puiſſance and much money againſt ſundry Cities in Italy: By whoſe means the Towns and Cities which before had broken from the Biſhop of Rome were oppreſſed; alſo Barnabes and Galeaceus Princes of Millain vanquiſhed. By whoſe example other being ſore feared, ſubmitted themſelves to the Church of Rome. And thus came up that wicked Church to her great Poſſeſſions, which her Patrons would needs father upon Conſtantine the godly Emperour.

Ex Sabel. Ænead. 9. lib. 8.

How the Church of Rome came by their Royal poſſeſſions.

In the time of this Pope Urban the Fifth, and in the ſecond year of his raign, about the beginning of the year of our Lord 1364, I find a certain Sermon of one Nicholas Orem, made before the Pope and his Cardinals on Chriſtmas-Even. In the which Sermon the learned man doth worthily rebuke the Prelates and Prieſts of his time, declaring their deſtruction not to be far off, by certain ſigns taken of their wicked and corrupt life. All the ſayings of the Prophets, ſpoken againſt the wicked Prieſts of the Jews, he doth aptly apply againſt the Clergy of his time, comparing the Church then preſent to the Spiritual ſtrumpet ſpoken of in the ſixteenth Chapter of the Prophet Ezechiel. And proveth in concluſion the Clergy of the Church then to be ſo much worſe than the old Synagogue of the Jews, by how much it is worſe to ſell the Church and Sacraments, than to ſuffer Doves to be ſold in the Church. With no leſs judgment alſo and learning he anſwereth to the old and falſe objections of the Papiſts, who albeit they be never ſo wicked, yet think themſelves to be the Church which the Lord cannot forſake. All which things to the intent they may the better appear in his own words, I have thought good here to tranſlate and exhibit the Sermon as it was ſpoken before the Pope.

A Copy of a Sermon made before Pope Urban the Fifth, the fourth Sunday in Advent 1364, by Nicholas Orem.

A Sermon made before the Pope. Iſa. 56.

JUxta eſt ſalus mea, ut veniat, & juſtitia, &c. That is, My ſaving health is near at hand to come, and my righteouſneſs to be revealed, &c. Iſa. 56. After the ſentence of St. Paul, Rom. 2. and in divers other places before the Nativity of Chriſt, the whole world was divided into two ſorts of men, the Jews and Gentiles. The Jews who waited for the opening of the door of Paradiſe by the blood of the Saviour to come. The Gentiles, who yet ſitting in darkneſs were to be called to light, and to be juſtified by faith, as it is written, Rom. 5.

The world divided into two ſorts of men before the Incarnation of Chriſt.

This Salvation pertaining both to the Jew and Gentile, God promiſed before time to the Fathers by the Prophets, to ſtir up the deſire thereof in their hearts the more, and to increaſe their firm hope and faith in the ſame. As firſt in Mich. 6. the voice of the Lord crieth, Health and ſalvation ſhall be to all men which fear my name. And Iſa. 46. I will give in Sion ſalvation, and in Jeruſalem my glory, &c. with divers ſuch other places like. And forſomuch as hope which is deferred many times, doth afflict the ſoul, and conceiveth wearineſs of long deferring; he therefore propheſying of the neerneſs of the coming thereof, ſaith moreover, Iſa. 14. His time is neer at hand to come. Alſo Abacuc. 2. He will come and will not tarry. With many ſuch other places more. So then the holy Fathers being in Limbo, looked and hoped that he ſhould bring out them that ſat bound, and which in the houſe of priſon ſat in darkneſs, as is read, Iſa. 41. Then the time drew on in which came the fulneſs of the Gentiles, and in which the Lord would declare the riches of this myſtery being hidden from the world, and from generations, Col. 1. Wherefore the Lord in this Text doth both certifie our Fathers of the coming of our Saviour, and doth comfort them touching the neerneſs thereof, and alſo teacheth the juſtification of the Gentiles by faith approaching now near at hand, according to the words of my Text, Juxta eſt ſalus mea, &c. Which words were fulfilled then, what time the Lord did manifeſt his ſalvation, and did reveal his righteouſneſs in the ſight of all the Gentiles. And it is divided into three parts: Of which the firſt ſpeaketh of the neerneſs of his coming, where it is ſaid, Juxta eſt ſalus, &c. The ſecond concerneth the myſtery of the Advent of Chriſt and his Incarnation, where he ſaith, Ut veniat, &c. Thirdly, is conſidered the ſeverity of God, his terrible revenging judgment to be revealed, where he ſaith, Ut reveletur, &c. which is to be expounded of his primitive juſtice, whereof ſpeaketh Amos the fifth Chapter, ſaying, And judgment ſhall be revealed like a flood, and righteouſneſs like a ſtrong ſtream. Wherefore for our contemplation let us receive with joy the ſolemnity of his holy Vigil, the Word I ſay of God the Father, that is, Chriſt. To whom it is ſaid, Iſa. 49. I have given thee to be a light to the Gentiles, and to be my ſalvation through the ends of the world. Again, Iſa. 46. My ſalvation ſhall not ſlack, &c.

Diviſion. 1. Juxta eſt. 2. Ut veniat. 3. Ut reveletur

Amos 5.

As touching the neerneſs thereof, it is in theſe days opened to us by the Goſpel, where we read in St. Matthew, When the Virgin Mary was eſpouſed unto Joſeph, before they did come together, ſhe was found with child by the Holy Ghoſt. By this it was evident to underſtand, that our Saviour ought ſhortly to proceed out of the chaſt womb of the Virgin, according as the Prophet did foretell, ſaying, Behold a Virgin ſhall conceive and bring forth a Son, &c. For like as the Grape when it waxeth great and full, is near to the making of Wine; and the flower when it ſhooteth abroad, it haſteth to the fruit; ſo the ſalvation of the world, in the ſwelling and growing of the Virgins womb, began to draw nigh to mankind. For then appeared the grace and benignity of our Saviour, when his Mother was found to have in her womb by the Holy Ghoſt, as is declared, in that which followeth by the Angel, ſaying, For that which is born of her is of the Holy Ghoſt.

Touching the ſecond part of that which is ſaid, Ut veniat: this may be applied to the contemplation of the myſtery of Chriſt coming in the fleſh. Whereof ſpeaketh Aggeus the Prophet, Chap. 2. He ſhall come who is deſired and looked for of all Nations, &c. Albeit the ſame alſo may be applied to the ſecond Advent, ſpoken of the third of Eſay, The Lord ſhall come to judgment, &c. In memorial whereof the fourth Sunday was dedicate in the old time of the Fathers. And of this day of judgment it is written in the Prophet Sophon. Cap. 2. The day of the Lord is near, great and mighty, it is approaching at hand, and wondrous ſhort, &c. And albeit not it ſelf, yet it may be expounded in tribulations that go before, as preambles unto the ſame; as Gregory ſaith, The laſt tribulation is prevented with many and ſundry tribulations going before, although the end of all be not yet.

The ſecond part of his Theme. Aggeus 2.

The third part of his Sermon.

'Wherefore now coming to the third part of my Sermon or Theme, let us ſee of thoſe tribulations that go 'before the laſt coming of Chriſt, if there be any ſuch 'tribulation approaching nigh at hand, whereof this laſt 'part of my Theme may be verified, where is ſaid, Ut re- 'veletur, that my righteouſneſs ſhall be revealed, to wit, 'the righteouſneſs primitive, that righteouſneſs may be 'brought, and the Prophecy of Daniel fulfilled, Dan. 9. 'Concerning which matter four things here come in order 'to be declared.

1. Ut reveletur.

'Firſt, Concerning the revealing of tribulation, accor- 'ding to that part of my Theme, Ut reveletur, &c.

2. Ut juxta eſt.

'Secondly, Concerning the nearneſs of the tribulation 'coming, according to that part of my Theme, Quia 'juxta eſt, &c.

3. Ut veniat.

'Thirdly, Of the falſe opinions of ſome upon this part 'of my Theme, Ut veniat, &c.

4. Salus.

Fourthly, What means and conſultation we ought to 'take, Ut juxta eſt ſalus.

The firſt part of the ſubdiviſion.

'As for the firſt, it is ſo notorious and ſo common in the 'Scriptures that the Church ſhould ſuffer and abide tribu- 'lation, that I need not here to ſtand in alledging any 'thing touching either the cauſes to be weighed, or the 'term to be conjectured thereof. As concerning the which

Two rules to be noted.

'cauſes I will give two rules to be noted before, for the 'better opening of that which is to follow: The firſt rule

The Kingdom of Iſrael ſignifying the falſe Church.

'is, that by the two Kingdoms of the Nation of the He- 'brews, which were in the old time, to wit, by the King- 'dom of Iſrael, whoſe head was Samaria, is ſignified in 'the Prophets the erroneous Synagogue: And by the King-

The Kingdom of Juda ſignifieth the right Church.

'dom of Juda, of whoſe ſtock came Chriſt, whoſe head me- 'tropolitan was Jeruſalem, is ſignified the true Church. 'And this rule is not mine, but is an authentick gloſs of 'St. Jerome, and alſo is the rule of Origen in the laſt Ho- 'miſly upon the Old Teſtament, and is approved by the 'Church.

The ſecond rule.

'The ſecond rule is, that by the Brodel-houſe and forni- 'cation mentioned in the Prophets, is ſignified Simony, and 'abuſed Diſpenſations, and Promotions of perſons unwor- 'thy, for lucres ſake, or elſe for any other partial favour, 'which be unlawful ways, by all laws of the world, to come 'to office and honour. Merx dicitur namque a merendo; 'that is, for gain or price is derived of gaining; for the 'which gain or price that is ſold, which by nature ought 'not to be ſold. Therefore to give any thing for reſpect of 'gain or hire, which ought to be given freely for vertues 'ſake, is a kind of ſpiritual corruption, and as a man would Eſay 1.

'ſay, an whoriſh thing; whereof the Prophet Eſay com- 'plaineth, ſpeaking of Jeruſalem, and ſaying, The city

Oſee 9.

'which once was faithful and full of judgment, how is it 'now become an whoriſh city? And in like manner Oſee 'alſo the Prophet, Cap. 9. Jeruſalem thou haſt fornicated 'and gone an whoring from thy God. Thou haſt loved like 'an harlot to get gain in every barn of corn. And in many 'other places of Scripture, where fornication cannot be 'otherwiſe expounded.

'Theſe two rules thus premiſed, now let us mark the 'Scriptures, and according to the ſame judg of the whole 'ſtate of the Church, both that is paſt, and that is to come: 'Firſt, intreating of the cauſes of tribulation to come: Se- 'condly, of the vicinity of time of the ſaid tribulation to 'come.

Five ſtates of the Church deſcribed.

'And firſt, concerning the ſtate of the Church, and of 'cauſes of tribulation, thus ſaith the Lord in the Prophet, 'Ez. 16. ſpeaks to the Church under the name of Jeruſa- 'lem, In the day of thy birth I came by thee, and ſaw thee 'trodden down in thine own blood, &c. Here he ſpeaketh 'of the time of the Martyrdom of the Church. Then it fol- 'loweth, After this thou waſt cleanſed from thy blood, thou 'waſt grown up, and waxen great; then waſhed I thee 'with water, I purged thy blood from thee (ſpeaking of 'ceaſing of perſecution) I anointed thee with oyl, I gave 'thee change of raiments, I girded thee with white ſilk, I 'decked thee with coſtly apparel, I put rings upon thy fin- 'gers, a chain about thy neck, ſpangles upon thy forehead, 'and ear-rings upon thine ears. Thus waſt thou deckt with 'ſilver and gold, and a beautiful crown ſet upon thine head. 'Marvellous goodly waſt thou and beautiful, even a very 'Queen waſt thou: For thou waſt excellent in my beauty, 'which I put upon thee, ſaith the Lord God, &c. This Pro- 'phecy, or rather Hiſtory ſpeaketh of and declareth the proſ- 'perity of the Church.

1. The Martyrdom of the Church. 2. The proſperity of the Church.

'And now hear the corruption and tranſgreſſion of the 'Church, for ſo it followeth, But thou haſt put confidence 'in thine own beauty, and played the harlot, when thou hadſt 'gotten thee a name. Thou haſt committed whoredom with 'all that went by thee, and haſt fulfilled their deſires; yea, 'thou haſt taken thy garments of divers colours and deck- 'ed thine altars therewith, whereupon thou mighteſt fulfill 'thy whoredom of ſuch a faſhion as never was done, nor 'ſhall be. Which whoredom can in no wiſe be expounded 'for carnal, but ſpiritual whoredom. And therefore ſee how 'lively he hath painted out the corruption and falling of 'the Church.

{KING Edw. 3.} 3. The corruption of the Church.

'And therefore followeth now the correction and pu- 'niſhment of the Church. It followeth, Behold I ſtretch 'out my hand over thee, and will diminiſh thy ſtore of 'food, and deliver thee over into the wills of the Philiſtines, 'and of ſuch as hate thee: And they ſhall break down thy 'ſtues, and deſtroy thy Brodel-houſes, (that is, the place 'wherein thou didſt exerciſe this wickedneſs) they ſhall ſtrip 'thee out of thy clothes: All thy fair beautiful jewels ſhall 'they take from thee, and ſo let thee ſit naked and bare, &c.

4. The correction of the Church.

Ezek. 16.

'Here is plainly to beſeen what ſhall happen to the Church, 'and more followeth in the ſaid Chapter. Thine elder ſiſ- 'ter is Samaria, ſhe and her daughters upon thy left hand: 'But the youngeſt ſiſter that dwelleth on thy right hand is 'Sodom with her daughters, whoſe ſins were theſe, Pride, 'fulneſs of meat, abundance and idleneſs, neither reached 'they their hand to the poor. And yet neither Sodom thy 'ſiſter, with her daughters, hath done ſo evil as thou and 'thy daughters: Neither hath Samaria (that is, the Syna- 'gogue) done half of thy ſins; yea thou haſt exceeded them 'in wickedneſs. Take therefore and bear thine own confuſi- 'on, &c. Again in Ezek. 23. after the Prophet had deſcri- 'bed at large the wickedneſs, corruption, and puniſhment 'of the Synagogue, turning to the Church, he ſaith, And 'when her ſiſter ſaw this, ſhe raged and was mad with 'luſt, love of riches, and following voluptuouſneſs. Her for- 'nication and whoredom ſhe committed with Princes and 'great Lords, clothed with all manner of gorgebus appa- 'rel; ſo that her paps were bruiſed, and her breſts were 'marred. And then ſpeaking of her puniſhment, he ſaith, 'Then my heart forſook her, like as my heart was gone 'from her ſiſter alſo. And moreover, repeating again the 'cauſe thereof, he addeth, Thy wickedneſs and thy forni- 'cation hath wrought thee all this, &c.

Ezek. 23.

'The like we find alſo in Eſay, Jeremy, Ezekiel, and in 'all the other Prophets, who propheſying all together in 'one meaning, and almoſt in one manner of words; do 'conclude with a full agreement and propheſie to come, 'that the Church ſhall fall, and then be puniſhed for her 'great exceſſes, and be utterly ſpoiled, except ſhe repent of 'all her abominations. Whereof ſpeaketh Oſeas, Ch. 2. Let Oſee 2.

'her put away her whoredom out of her ſight, and her ad- 'voutry from her breſts, leſt I ſtrip her naked, and ſet her 'even as ſhe came naked into the world, (that is, in her 'primitive poverty.) So if ſhe do it not, it ſhall follow of 'her as in the Prophet Nahum, Ch. 3. For the multitude of Nahum 3.

'the fornication of the fair and beautiful harlot, which is 'a miſtris of witchcraft, yea and ſelleth the people through 'her whoredom, and the Nations through her witchcraft. 'And it followeth upon the ſame, Behold I come upon thee, 'ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, and will pull thy clothes over thy 'head, that thy nakedneſs ſhall appear among the heathen, 'and thy ſhame amongſt the Kingdoms, &c.

The reformation of the Church.

'Wherefore by theſe it is to be underſtood that upon this 'Church the primitive juſtice of God is to be revealed here- 'after. And thus much of the firſt of the four members 'above touched.

Certain notes and ſigns, that the tribulation of the Church draweth near.

'Now to the ſecond member of my Theme, Juxta eſt; 'concerning the nearneſs of time. Although it is not for us 'to know the moments and articles of time; yet by certain 'notes and ſigns peradventure it may be collected and ga- 'thered, that which I have here to ſay. For the tradition 'whereof, firſt I ground my ſelf upon the ſaying of the A- 'poſtle Paul, 2 Theſ. 2. where he writeth, That unleſs there 2 Theſ. 2. 'come a defection firſt, &c. By the which defection, Jerome Except there come a defection firſt: how it is to be underſtood. 'ultima quæſt. ad inquiſitiones Januarii, gathereth and ex- 'poundeth allegorically, the deſolation of the Monarchy of 'Rome: Between the which deſolation, and the perſecution of 'the Church by Antichriſt, he putteth no mean ſpace. And 'now what is the ſtate of that Commonwealth, if it be

KING Ed. 3.

'compared to the majeſty of that it hath been, judge your 'ſelves. Another gloſs there is that ſaith, how by that de- 'fection is meant; that from the Church of Rome ſhall 'come a departing of ſome other Churches.

2d. Note or token.

'The ſecond note and mark is this, when the Church 'ſhall be worſe in manners than was the Synagogue; as ap- 'peareth by the ordinary gloſs upon the third of Jeremy, 'where it is written, The backſlider Iſrael may ſeem juſt 'and righteous in compariſon of ſinful Judah. That is, the 'Synagogue in compariſon of the Church of God. Where- 'fore writeth Origen ſaying, Think that to be ſpoken of us 'what the Lord ſaith in Ezek. 16. Thou haſt exceeded thy 'ſiſters in thine iniquities. Wherefore now (to compare the 'one with the other) Firſt, ye know how Chriſt rebuked 'the Phariſes, who, as Jerome witneſſeth, were then the Cler- 'gy of the Jews, of covetouſneſs, for that they ſuffered Doves 'to be ſold in the Temple of God. Secondly, for that they 'feigned honour God with their lips, and not with their heart, 'and becauſe they ſaid, but did not. Thirdly, he rebuked them, 'for that they were hypocrites. To the firſt then, let us ſee 'whether it be worſe to ſell both Church and Sacraments 'than to ſuffer Doves to be ſold in the Temple or not. The '2d. whereas the Phariſes were rebuked for honouring God 'with their lips, and not with their heart; there be ſome 'which neither honour God with heart, nor yet with lips; 'and which neither do well, nor yet ſay well, neither do 'they preach any word at all, but be dumb dogs, not able to 'bark, impudent and ſhameleſs dogs, that neither have e- 'nough, ſuch Paſtors as have no underſtanding, declining and 'ſtraying all in their own way, every one given to covetouſ- 'neſs from the higheſt to the loweſt. And 3dly, As for hy- 'pocriſie there be alſo ſome, whoſe intolerable pride and 'malice is ſo manifeſt and notorious, kindled up like a fire, 'that no cloak or ſhadow of hypocriſie can cover it, but are 'ſo paſt all ſhame, that it may be well verified of them, 'which the Prophet ſpeaks, Thou haſt gotten thee the face 'of an Harlot, thou wouldſt not bluſh, &c.

The Synagogue and Church compared together in manners.

3d. Note or token.

'The third ſign and token of tribulation approaching 'near to the Church, may well be taken of the too much 'unequal proportion ſeen this day in the Church. Where 'one is hungry and ſtarveth, another is drunk. By reaſon 'of which ſo great inequality, it cannot be that the ſtate of 'the Church, as it is now, can long indure. For like as in 'good harmony, to make the Muſick perfect, is required a 'moderate and proportionate equality of voices, which if it 'do much exceed, it taketh away all the ſweet melody; ſo 'according to the ſentence of the Philoſopher, by too much 'immoderate inequality or diſparity of Citizens, the Com- 'monwealth falleth to ruine. Contrary, where mediocrity, 'that is, where a mean inequality with ſome proportion is 'kept, that policy ſtandeth firm and more ſure to continue. 'Now, among all the politick regiments of the Gentiles, I 'think none is to be found in Hiſtories, wherein is to be 'ſeen ſo great and exceeding odds, as in the policy of 'Prieſts; of whom ſome be ſo high, that they exceed all 'Princes of the earth; ſome again be ſo baſe, that they are 'under all Raſcals, ſo that ſuch a Policy or Commonwealth 'may well be called Oligarchia.

Oligarchia, is where a few bear all the ſway, and all the reſt be nothing worth.

'This may we plainly ſee and learn in the body of Man, 'to the which Plutarchus (writing to Thracinius) doth 'ſemblably compare the Commonwealth. In the which bo- 'dy if the ſuſtenance received ſhould all run to one mem- 'ber, ſo that that member ſhould be too much exceedingly 'pampered, and all the other parts too much pined, that 'body could not long continue; ſo in the body of the wealth 'Eccleſiaſtical, if ſome who be the heads be ſo enormly over- 'grown in riches and dignity, that the weaker members of 'the body be ſcant able to bear them up, there is a great to- 'ken of diſſolution and ruine ſhortly. Whereupon cometh 'well in place the ſaying of the Prophet Eſay; Every head 'is ſick, every heart is full of ſorrow; of the which head 'it is alſo ſpoken in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. Wo be to 'the ſecure, proud and wealthy in Sion, and to ſuch as think 'themſelves ſo ſecure upon the Mount of Samaria, taking 'themſelves as heads and rulers over other, &c. And more- 'over in the ſaid Prophet Eſay it followeth, From the top of 'the head to the ſole of the foot there is no whole part in all 'the body, to wit, in the inferiours, becauſe they are not able 'to live for poverty; in the ſuperior, becauſe for their ex- 'ceſſive riches, they are left from doing good. And it fol- 'loweth in the ſame place, but all are wounds, and botches, 'and ſtripes. Behold here the danger coming, the wounds of 'diſcord and diviſion, the botch or ſore of rancour and en- 'vy, the ſwelling ſtripe of rebellion and miſchief.

Eſay 1.

Amos 6.

'The fourth ſign is the pride of Prelates. Some there 4th. Sign. 'have been which fondly have diſputed of the poverty of 'Chriſt, and have inveighed againſt the Prelates, becauſe they 'live not in poverty of the Saints. But this fancy cometh 'of the ignorance of moral Philoſophy and Divinity, and of 'the defect of natural prudence; for that in all Nations, 'and by common Laws, Prieſts have had, and ought to 'have wherewith to ſuſtain themſelves more honeſtly than 'the vulgar ſort, and Prelates more honeſtly than the Sub- 'jects. But yet hereby is not permitted to them their great 'Horſes, their Troops of Horſemen, their ſuperfluous pomp 'of their waiting-men and great Families, which ſcarcely 'can be maintained without pride, neither can be ſuſtained 'with ſafe juſtice, and many not without fighting and in- 'juries inconvenient; not much unlike to that as Juſtine 'the Hiſtorian writeth of the Carthaginenſes, The family '(ſaith he) of ſo great Emperors, was intolerable to ſuch a 'free City. In ſemblable wiſe, this great pride in the Church 'of God (eſpecially in theſe days) doth move not ſo few to 'due reverence, as many to indignation; and yet more to 'thoſe things aforeſaid, which think no leſs but to do Sacri- 'fice to God, if they may rob and ſpoil certain fat Prieſts 'and perſons, namely, ſuch as neither have Nobility of 'bloud, and leſs learning to bear themſelves upon, but are li- 'ers, ſervile and fraudulent, to whom the Lord ſpeaketh by 'his Prophet Amos 4. Hear you fatted kine of Samaria, ye 'that do poor men wrong, and oppreſs the needy, the day ſhall 'come upon you, &c.

Pride of Prelates noted.

Amos 4.

The fifth ſign is, the tyranny of the Prelates and Preſi- 5th. Sign. 'dents, which as it is a violent thing, ſo it cannot be long 'laſting. For as Solomon ſaith, Cap. 16. For it was requi- 'ſite that (without any excuſe) deſtruction ſhould come upon 'thoſe which exerciſed tyranny. The property of a Tyrant 'is not to ſeek the commodity of his Subjects, but only his 'will and profit. Such were the Paſtors that fed not the 'Lords flock, but fed themſelves; of whom and to whom 'ſpeaketh the Prophet Ezek. 34. Wo be unto thoſe paſtors 'of Iſrael that feed themſelves. Should not the ſhepherds feed 'the flocks? With many other threatnings againſt them in 'the ſaid Chapter. Wo be unto them which rejoice at the 'tranſgreſſions of ſuch whom it lieth in their power to 'condemn, neither do they ſeek what he is able to pay, to 'whom crieth Michas the Prophet, Cap. 3. Ye hate the good 'and love the evil, ye pluck off mens ſkins, and the fleſh 'from the bones, ye eat the fleſh of my people, and flay off 'their ſkin, ye break their bones, ye chop them in pieces as it 'were into a caldron, and as fleſh into the pot, &c. And 'therefore the foreſaid Ezekiel pronounceth, Behold, I will 'my ſelf come upon the Shepherds and require my Sheep 'from their hands, and make them ceaſe from feeding my 'Sheep, yea the Shepherds ſhall feed themſelves no more, for 'I will deliver my Sheep out of their mouths, ſo that they 'ſhall not devour them any more.

Ezek. 34.

'The 6th. ſign is in promoting of the unworthy, and of 6th. Sign. 'neglecting them that be worthy. This, as Ariſtotle ſaith, Promoting of unworthy Miniſters. 'is a great cauſe many times of the diſſolution of common- 'weals. And oftentimes it ſo happeneth in the Wars of 'Princes, that the contempt and ſmall regarding of the va- 'liant, and the exalting of others that be leſs worthy, in- 'gendreth divers kinds and kindlings of ſedition. For by 'the reaſon partly of the ſame, partly of the other cauſe a- 'bove recited, we have read not only in Books, but have 'ſeen with our eies, divers flouriſhing Cities well near ſub- 'verted; whereas good men be not made of, but are vexed 'with ſorrow and grief by the evil; the contention at length 'braſteth out upon the Prince, as Haymo reciteth out of Ori- 'gen. This always hath been the perverſe incredulity of 'mans hard heart, and that not only in hearing, but alſo in 'ſeeing; yet will they not believe that other have periſhed, 'unleſs they alſo periſh themſelves.

Haymo.

'The ſeventh ſign is, the tribulation of outward policy 7th. Sign. 'and commotions of the people, which in a great part is 'now happened already. And therefore foraſmuch as Se- 'neca ſaith, Men do complain commonly that evils only 'come ſo faſt; It is to be feared leſt alſo the Eccleſiaſtical 'policy be afflicted not only outwardly, but alſo in it ſelf; 'and ſo that be fulfilled in us, that in Jeremy is prophelied, 'Chap. 4. Murther is cried upon of murther, and the whole 'land

Jerem. 4.

'land shall perish, and suddenly my tabernacles were destroyed, and my tents very quickly. And Ezek.7.Wherefore I will bring cruel tyrants from among the Heathen, to take their Houses in possession; I will make the pomp of the proud to cease, and their Sanctuaries shall be taken. One mischief and sorrow shall follow another, and one rumour shall come after another; then shall they seek Visions in vain at their Prophets, the Law shall be gone from their Priests, and wisdom from their Elders,&c.

Ezek.7.

8. Sign.

'The eighth sign is, the refusing of correction, neither will they hear their faults told them, so that it happened to the Princes and Rulers of the Church, as it is written in the Prophet Zech. ca.7. They stopped their ears that they would not hear, yea they made their hearts as an Adamant stone, lest they should hear the law and words which the Lord of Hosts sent in his holy Spirit by the Prophets aforetime. Also Esay witnessing after the same effect, chap. 30. saith, For it is an obstinate people, lying children, and unfaithful children that will not hear the law of the Lord, which say to the Prophets, meddle with nothing, and tell us nothing, that is true and right, but speak friendly words to us, &c. All this shall be verified when the Prelates begin to hate them that tell them truth, and have knowledge; like unto such of whom Amos speaketh, *Chap.*5. They bear him evil will that reproveth them openly, and whoso telleth them the plain truth, they abhor him. And therefore saith the Lord to the Church of Jerusalem, Ose 4. Seeing thou hast refused understanding, I have refused thee also, that thou shalt no more be my Priest. And forsomuch as thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children, and change their honour into shame. And so shall it be like Priest, like people,&c. And many other sayings there be in the Prophets, speaking of the dejecting and casting down of the Priestly honour.

Zech.7. Refusing of correction in the Clergy. Esa. 30. Truth shent. Amos 5. Ose 4.

Lack of learned Priests.

'Besides these foresaid signs and tokens hitherto recited, there be also divers others; as the backsliding from righteousness, the lack of discreet and learned Priests, promoting of children into the Church, with such other like. But these being already well noted and marked, you may easily judge and understand, whether these times now present of ours be safe and clear from tribulation to be looked for, and whether the Word of the Lord be true according to my Theme, Juxta est justitia mea ut reveletur, My righteousness is near at hand to be revealed,&c. And thus much of the second part.

The third part or member of the subdivision.

'Now to the third part or member of my subdivision, which is concerning the false and perilous opinions of some, upon this word of my Theme, ut veniat, &c. Which opinions principally be four, repugning all against the truth of the Canonical Scripture.

The first opinion.

'The first opinion is of such men, who having too much confidence in themselves, do think and perswade with themselves, that the Prelates be the Church which the Lord will always keep and never forsake, as he hath promised in the persons of the Apostles, *Matth.*28. saying, And I will be with you to the end of the World, &c. But this is to be understood of faith, whereof Christ speaketh, Luke 21. I have prayed for thee, that thy faith shall not fail. Whereof we read *Eccles.*40. Faith shall stand for ever,&c. And albeit charity wax never so cold, yet faith notwithstanding, shall remain in few, and in all distresses of the world; of the which distresses, our Saviour doth prophesie in many places to come. And lest peradventure some should think themselves to be safe from tribulation, because they be of the Church; this opinion the Lord himself doth contrary in Jerem.7. Trust not (saith he) in false lying words, saying, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord. And a little after, but you trust in words and lying counsels which deceive you, and do you no good.

The Church where it is, and in whom it consisteth. Eccl. 40. Jerem.7.

The second opinion.

'The second opinion is of them, which defer time; for this they will grant, that the Church shall abide trouble, but not so shortly; thinking thus with themselves, that these causes and tokens afore recited, have been before at other times as well in the Church. For both by Gregory and Bernard, holy Doctors, in time past, the Prelates have been in like sort reprehended, both for their bribings, for their pomp and pride, for the promoting of persons and children unfit unto Ecclesiastical functions, and other vices more, which have reigned before this in the Church of God more than now, and yet by God his grace the Church hath prospered and stood. Do ye not see, that if an house have stood and continued ruinous a long season, it is never the more near the fall thereby, but rather to be trusted the better? Moreover, many times it cometh so to pass, in Realms and Kingdoms, that the posterity is punished for the sins of the predecessors. Whereof speaketh the book of *Lamentations,Chap.*5. Our fathers have sinned, and are now gone, and we must bear their wickedness,&c. Against this cogitation or opinion, well doth the Lord answer by the Prophet *Ezekiel,Chap.*12. saying, Behold thou son of Man, the house of Israel saith in this manner; Tush, as for the Vision that he hath seen, it will be many a day ere it come to pass; it is far off yet, the thing that he prophesieth. Therefore say unto them, thus saith the Lord God, The words that I have spoken shall be deferred no longer, look what I have said shall come to pass, saith the Lord, &c. We have seen in our days things to happen, which seemed before incredible. And the like hath been seen in other times also, as we read written in the book of *Lament. ch.*4. The Kings of the earth, nor all the inhabitants of the world would not have believed, that the enemy and adversary should have come in at the gates of the City, for the sins of her Priests, and for the wickedness of her elders, that have shed innocents bloud within her,&c. By Jerusalem, as is said is meant the Church.

KING Edw.3. Thren.5. Ezek.12. Thren.4

The third opinion or error.

'The third opinion or error is very perilous and perverse, of all such as say veniat, let come that will come; let us conform our selves to this world, and take our time with those temporizers which say in the Book of *Wisdom,Sap.*2. Come let us enjoy our goods and pleasures that be present, and let us use the creature as in youth quickly, &c. Such as these be are in dangerous case, and be greatly prejudicial to good men in the Church. And if the Heads and Rulers of the Church were so vile to have any such detestable cogitation in them, there were no place in Hell too deep for them. This Church founded by the Apostles in Christ, consecrated with the blood of so many Martyrs, inlarged and increased with the vertues and merits of so many Saints, and indued so richly with the devotion of so many secular Princes, and so long prospered hitherto; if it now should come into the hands of such persons, it should fall in great danger of ruine, and they for their negligence and wickedness well deserved of God to be cursed; yea here also in this present world to incur temporal tribulation and destruction, which they fear more; by the sentence of the Lord, saying to them in the Book of the *Proverbs,Chap.*1. All my counsels ye have despised, and set my correction at nought; therefore shall I also laugh in your destruction, when tribulation and anguish shall fall upon you.

Sap. 2. Prov. 1.

The fourth opinion or error.

'Fourthly, another opinion or error is of such as being unfaithful believe not that any such thing will come. And this error seemeth to have no remedy, but that as other things and other Kingdoms have their ends and limits set unto them, which they cannot overpass; so it must needs be, that such a domination and government of the Chuch have an end, by reason of the demerits and obstinacies of the Governours provoking and requiring the same; like as we read in the Prophet *Jeremy, Chap.*8. There is no man that taketh repentance for his sin, that will so much as say, wherefore have I done this? But every man runneth forth still like a wild horse in battel. And the Prophet Jeremy in the 13th.Chap. of his Prophesie, Like as the man of Inde may change his skin, and the Cat of mountain her spots, so may ye, that be exercised in evil, do good. Whereunto also accordeth that which is written of the same Prophet, *Chap.*17. speaking of Juda, signifying the Church, The sin of Judah (saith he) is written in the table of your hearts, and graven so upon the edges of your altars with a pen of iron, and with an adamant claw; which is as much to say, as indeleble, or which cannot be rased out; as also Ezekiel speaking of the punishment, *chap.*21. saith, I the Lord have drawn my sword out of the sheath, and it cannot be revoked. Notwithstanding, all these signifie no impossibility, but difficulty, because that wicked men are hardly converted; for otherwise the Scripture importeth no such inflexibility with God, but if conversion come, he will forgive. So we read in the Prophet *Jonas, Chap.*3. Who can tell? God may turn and repent, and cease from his fierce wrath that we perish not. And to the like effect saith the same Lord in *Jeremy,Chap.*26. Look thou keep not one word back, if peradventure they will hearken and turn every man from his wicked way,

that

{KING Edw.3} 'that also may repent of the plague which I have determine 'to bring upon them, becauſe of their wicked inventions, &c. For the further proof whereof, Ninive we 'ſee converted, and remained undeſtroyed, &c. Likewiſe 'the Lord alſo had revealed deſtruction unto Conſtantinople 'by ſundry ſigns and tokens, as Auguſtine in a certain Ser- 'mon doth declare. And thus for the third part or mem- 'ber of my diviſion.

The fourth part or member of the diviſion.

'Fourthly and laſtly, It remaineth that I declare ſome 'wholeſome concluding now upon the cauſes preceeding; 'That is, if by theſe cauſes and ſigns (heretofore declared) 'tribulation be prepared to fall upon the Church, then let 'us humble our minds mildly and wiſely. And if we ſo 'return with heart and in deed unto God, verily he ſhall 'reſcue and help after an ineſtimable wiſe, and will ſurceaſe 'from ſcourging us, as he promiſeth by his Prophet Jer. 18.

Jer. 18. If that people againſt whom I have thus deviſed, convert from their wickedneſs, immediately I will repent 'of the plague that I deviſed to bring upon them, ſpeaking 'here after the manner of Men, &c. Now therefore, for- 'aſmuch as tribulation and affliction is ſo near coming to- 'ward us, yea lieth already upon us, let us be the more di- 'ligent to call upon God for mercy. For I think verily 'theſe many years, there have not been ſo many and ſo deſ- 'piteful hearts and evil willers, ſtout, and of ſuch a rebelli- 'ous heart againſt the Church of God, as be now adays: 'neither be they lacking that would work all that they can

Eſay 5. 'againſt it, and lovers of new-fangleneſs; whoſe hearts the 'Lord happily will turn, that they ſhall not hate his people, 'and work deceit againſt his ſervants, I mean againſt Prieſts, 'whom they have now in little or no reputation at all, al- 'beit many yet there be, through Gods grace, good and 'godly; But yet the fury of the Lord is not turned away, 'but ſtill his hand is ſtretched out. And unleſs ye be con- 'verted, he ſhaketh his Sword, he hath bent his Bow, and Eſay. 30. 'prepared it ready. Yet the Lord ſtandeth waiting, that 'he may have mercy upon you, Eſay 30. And therefore, 'as the greatneſs of fear ought to incite us, ſo hope of ſal- 'vation may allure us to pray and call upon the Lord, eſ- 'pecially now toward this holy and ſacred time and ſolem- 'nity of Chriſts Nativity: For that holy and continual 'prayer without intermiſſion is profitable, and the inſtant 'devotion and vigilant deprecation of the juſt man is of 'great force. And if terrene Kings, in the day of celebration 'of their Nativity, be wont to ſhew themſelves more liberal 'and bountiful, how much more ought we to hope well, 'that the heavenly King, of nature moſt benign, now at his 'Natal and Birth-day, will not deny pardon and remiſſion 'to ſuch as rightly call unto him.

Joſhua 7. 'And now therefore, as it is written in Joſhua. Chap. 7.

1 Kin. 25. 'Be ye ſanctified againſt to morrow, &c. And ſay unto 'him as it is written in the firſt Book of Kings, Chap. 25. 'Now let thy ſervants I pray thee find favour in thy ſight, 'for we come to thee in a good ſeaſon. Moreover, ye may 'find that ye ask, if that ye ask that which he brought in 'the day of his Nativity; that is, the peace of the Church, 'not ſpiritual only, but alſo temporal; which the Angelical 'noiſe did ſound, and experience the ſame did prove, teſti- 'fied by T. Livius, Plinius, and other Heathen ſtory-wri- 'ters, which all marvelled thereat, ſaying, that ſuch an uni- 'verſal peace as that could not come on earth, but by the 'gift of God. For ſo God did forepromiſe in the Prophet

Eſay 66. 'Eſay, Chap. 66. Behold, I will let peace into Jeruſalem like

Pſal. 71. 'a water flood, &c. And in the Pſal. 71. In his time righte- 'ouſneſs ſhall flouriſh, ye and abundance of peace, &c.

'Therefore now (O reverend fathers in the Lord) and 'you here in this preſent Aſſembly, behold, I ſay, the day 'of life and ſalvation; now is the opportune time to pray 'unto God, that the ſame thing, which he brought into 'the world at his birth, he will grant in theſe days to his 'Church, that is, his peace. And like as Niniveh was 'ſubverted, and over-turned, not in members but in man- 'ners, ſo the ſame words of my Theam, Juxta eſt juſti- 'tia mea ut reveletur, may be verified in us, not of the pri- 'mitive juſtice, but of our ſanctification by grace; ſo that, as 'to morrow is celebrated the Nativity of our Saviour, our 'righteouſneſs may riſe together with him, and his bleſſing 'may be upon us, which God hath promiſed ſaying, My 'ſaving health is near at hand to come, &c. Whereof ſpeak-

This Sermon was made by Maſter Nicholas Orem before Pope Urban and his Cardinals, upon the Even of the Nativity of the Lord, being the fourth Sunday of Advent, in the year of our Lord 1364. and the ſecond of his Popedom.

In the 5*th.* year of this forenamed Pope Urban, began firſt the Order of the Jeſuites. And unto this time, which was about the year of our Lord 1367. the Offices here in England, as the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treaſurer, and of the Privy Seal, were wont to be in the hands of the Clergy. But about this year, through the motion of the Lords in the Parliament, and partly (as witneſſeth mine Author) for hatred of the Clergy, all the ſaid Offices were removed from the Clergy to the Lords Temporal.

The Order of Jeſuites. {Anno 1367} The chief offices of the Realm tranſlated from the Clergy to the Lords Temporal.

After the death of Pope Urban, next ſucceeded Pope Gregory the 11*th.* who, among his other acts, firſt reduced again the Papacy out of France unto Rome, which had from thence been abſent the ſpace now of 70 years, being thereto moved (as Sabellicus recorderth) by the anſwer of a certain Biſhop, whom as the Pope ſaw ſtanding by him, he asked, why he was ſo long from his charge and Church at home, ſaying that, it was not the part of a good Paſtor, to keep him from his flock ſo long. Whereunto the Biſhop anſwering again, ſaid, And you your ſelf, being the chief Biſhop, who may and ought to be a ſpectacle to us all, why are you from the place ſo long where your Church doth ly? By the occaſion whereof the Pope ſought all means after that to remove and to rid his Court out of France again to Rome, and ſo he did.

Pope Gregory the 11th. {Anno 1370.} The Papacy reduced again from France to Rome.

This Gregory 11*th.* in a certain Bull of his ſent to the Archbiſhop of Prague, maketh mention of one named Militzius a Bohemian, and ſaith in the ſame Bull, that this Militzius ſhould hold opinion and teach Anno 1366, that Antichriſt was already come. Alſo that the ſaid Militzius had certain Congregations following him; and that in the ſame Congregations were certain Harlots, who being converted from their wickedneſs, were brought to a godly life. Which Harlots being ſo converted, he uſed to ſay, were to be preferred before all the holy religious Virgins. And therefore he commanded the Archbiſhop to excommunicate and perſecute the ſaid Militzius, which in foretime had bin a religious Man of Prague, and after forſook his Order, and gave himſelf to preaching, and at length was by the foreſaid Archbiſhop impriſoned.

Militzius a Bohemian, for the truth perſecuted by the Pope. Ex Bulla Gregorii 11.

Jacobus Miſnenſis, a learned Man and a Writer in the time of John Hus, maketh mention of this Militzius, and calleth him a worthy and a famous Preacher. Alſo he citeth many things out of his Writings, in the which Writings this good Militzius thus declareth of himſelf, how he was moved and urged by the Holy Ghoſt to ſearch out by the ſacred Scriptures, concerning the coming of Antichriſt. And that he was compelled by the ſame holy Spirit publickly to preach at Rome, and alſo before the Inquilitor there to proteſt plainly, that the ſame great Antichriſt, which is propheſied of in the holy Scriptures, was already come. Moreover his ſaying was, 'That the Church through negligence of the Paſtors was deſolate, did abound in temporal riches, but in ſpiritual riches was empty. Alſo, That in the Church of Chriſt were certain Idols which deſtroyed Jeruſalem, and defaced the Temple, but hypocriſie cauſed that thoſe Idols could not be ſeen. Alſo, That many there were which denied Chriſt, becauſe that knowing the truth, yet for fear of men they durſt not confeſs their conſcience, &c. And thus much of good Militzius, living in the time of Gregory 11*i* and King Edward the third, An. 1370.

The coming of Antichriſt propheſied.

The which King of England, holding a Parliament in the third year of this Pope, ſent his Embaſſadors to him, deſiring him, that he from henceforth would abſtain from his Reſervations of Benefices uſed in the Court of England; And that ſpiritual Men, within this Realm promoted unto Biſhopricks, might freely enjoy their Elections within the Realm, and be confirmed by their Metropolitans, according to the ancient cuſtom of the Realm. Wherefore upon theſe, and ſuch other like, wherein the King and the Realm thought themſelves much grieved, he deſired of the Pope ſome remedy to be provided, &c. Whereunto the Pope returned a certain anſwer again unto the King, requiring by his meſſengers to be certified again of the Kings mind concerning the ſame. But what anſwer it was, it is not in the ſtory expreſſed, ſave that the year following, which was 1374, there was a tractation at Burges upon certain of the ſaid

K. Edward complaineth of the Popes reſervation of Benefices

ſaid Articles between the King and the Pope, which did hang two years in ſuſpence; and ſo at length it was thus agreed between them, that the Pope ſhould no more uſe his reſervations of Benefices in England, and likewiſe the King ſhould no more conſer and give Benefices upon the Writ, Quare impedit, &c. But as touching the freedom of Elections to be confirmed by the Metropolitan, mentioned in the year before, thereof was nothing touched.

As touching theſe Reſervations, Proviſions and Collations, with the Elections of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Beneficed Men, and other, wherewith the Pope vexed this Realm of England, as before you have heard; the King by the conſent of the Lords and Commons, in the 25*th.* year of his Reign enacted; that according to a Statute made in the 30*th.* year of his Grandfather Edward the firſt, wherein was made an Act againſt the ravenous pillage of the Pope, through the ſame Proviſions, Reſervations and Collations, &c. but not put in execution: By the which Proviſions, the ſtate of the Realm decreaſed more and more, the Kings Royalty and Prerogative was greatly obſcured and diminiſhed, innumerable treaſure of the Realm tranſported, aliens and ſtrangers placed in the beſt and fatteſt Biſhopricks, Abbeys and Benefices within the Realm; and ſuch, as either for their Offices in Rome, as Cardinalſhips, and ſuch like, could not be here reſident, or if reſident, yet better away for cauſes infinite, as partly have been touched before; he not only revived the ſaid Statute made by Edward the firſt his Grandfather, but alſo inlarged the ſame. Adding thereunto very ſtrait and ſharp penalties againſt the offendors, therein, or in any part thereof, as exemption out of the Kings protection, loſs of all their Lands, Goods and other poſſeſſions, and their bodies to be impriſoned at the Kings pleaſure; and further, whoſoever was lawfully convict, or otherwiſe, for want of appearance by Proceſs directed forth, were within the lapſe of this Statute or Præmunire (for ſo bare the name thereof) ſhould ſuffer all and every ſuch moleſtations and injuries, as men exempted from the protection of the King. Inſomuch, that whoſoever had killed ſuch Men, had been in no more danger of law therefore, than for the killing of any Outlaw, or one not worthy to live in a Commonweal. Like unprofitable members were they then, yea, in that time of ignorance, eſteemed in this Commonweal of England which would offer themſelves to the wilful ſlavery and ſervile obedience of the Pope; which thing in theſe days, yea and that amongſt no ſmall fools, is counted more than Evangelical holineſs. He that liſt to peruſe the Statute, and would ſee every branch and Article thereof at large diſcuſſed and handled, with the Penalties therefore due; let him read the Statute of Proviſion and Præmunire made in the 25*th.* year of this Kings days. And let him read in the Statutes made in the Parliaments holden the 27*th.* year, and 38*th.* year of his Reign; And under the ſame Title of Proviſion and Præmunire he ſhall find the Popes Primacy and Juriſdiction within this Realm more nearly touched, and much of his Papal power reſtrained: Inſomuch that, whoſoever for any cauſe or controverſie in law, either ſpiritual or temporal, the ſame being determinable in any of the Kings Courts (as all matters were) whether they were perſonal or real citations, or other, ſhould either appeal or conſent to any appellation to be made out of the Realm to the Pope or See of Rome; ſhould incur the ſaid penalty and danger of Præmunire. Divers other matters wherein the Pope is reſtrained of his uſurped power, authority and juriſdiction within this realm of England, are in the ſaid Titles and Statutes expreſſed, and at large ſet forth, who ever liſt to peruſe the ſame, which for brevities ſake I omit, haſting to other matters.

The law of Præmunire, with the penalty thereof.

The Popes Primacy here in England bridled

About this time, being the year of our Lord 1370. lived holy Bridget, whom the Church of Rome hath canonized not only for a Saint, but alſo for a Propheteſs; who notwithſtanding, in her Book of Revelations, which hath bin oftentimes imprinted, was a great rebuker of the Pope, and of the filth of his Clergy, calling him a murtherer of ſouls, a ſpiller and a piller of the flock of Chriſt, more abominable than the Jews, more cruel than Judas, more unjuſt than Pilate, worſe than Lucifer himſelf. The See of the Pope ſhe prophelieth ſhall be thrown down into the deep like a Millſtone; and that his aſſiſter ſhall burn with brimſtone; Affirming, that the Prelates, Biſhops and Prieſts are the cauſe why the Doctrine of Chriſt is neglected, and almoſt extinguiſhed. And that the Clergy have turned the Ten Commandments of God into two words, to wit, Da pecuniam, that is Give mony. It were long and tedious to declare all that ſhe againſt them writeth. Among the reſt which I omit, let this ſuffice for all, whereas the ſaid Bridget affirmeth in her Revelations, that when the holy Virgin ſhould ſay to her Son, how Rome was a fruitful and fertil field; yea, ſaid he, but of Weeds only and Cockle, &c.

To this Bridget I will joyn alſo Catharina Senenſis, an holy Virgin, which lived much about the ſame time. An. 1379. Of whom writeth Antoninus part. 3. This Katharine, having the ſpirit of Prophecy, was wont much to complain of the corrupt ſtate of the Church, namely of the Prelates of the Court of Rome, and of the Pope; prophecying before of the great Schiſm which then followed in the Church of Rome, and dured to the Council of Conſtance, the ſpace of thirty nine years; alſo of the great Wars and Tribulation, which inſued upon the ſame. And moreover, declared before, and foretold of this ſo excellent Reformation of Religion in the Church now preſent. The words of Antoninus be theſe: After the Virgin in her going to Rome had told her Brother of the Wars and Tumults that ſhould riſe in the Countries about Rome, after the ſchiſm of the two Popes; I then curious to know of things to come, and knowing that ſhe underſtood by Revelation what ſhould happen, demanded of her I pray you (good Mother) ſaid I, and what ſhall befal after theſe troubles in the Church of God? And ſhe ſaid:

The reformation of Religion prophecied of before.

By theſe Tribulations and Afflictions, after a ſecret manner unknown unto Man, God ſhall purge his holy Church, and ſtir up the ſpirit of his elect. And after theſe things; ſhall follow ſuch a reformation of the holy Church of God, and ſuch a renovation of holy Paſtors, that the only cogitation and remembrance thereof, maketh my Spirit to rejoyce in the Lord. And as I have oftentimes told you heretofore, the Spouſe, which now is all deformed and ragged, ſhall be adorned and deckt with moſt rich and precious ouches and brouches. And all the faithful ſhall be glad and rejoyce to ſee themſelves ſo beautified with ſo holy Shepherds. Yea, and alſo the Infidels then, allured by the ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, ſhall return to the Catholick fold, and be converted to the true Biſhop and Shepherd of their Souls. Give thanks therefore to God; for after this ſtorm he will give to his a great calm. And after ſhe had thus ſpoken, ſhe ſtaid, and ſaid no more.

The Prophecy of Katherine.

Note.

Beſides theſe aforenamed, the Lord, which never ceaſeth to work in his Church, ſtirred up againſt the malignant Church of Rome, the ſpirits of divers good and godly Teachers, as Matthias Pariſienſis, a Bohemian born, who about the year of our Lord 1370. wrote a large Book of Antichriſt, and proveth him to be already come, and noteth the Pope to be the ſame. Which Book one Illiricus a Writer in theſe our days hath, and promiſeth to put it in Print. In this Book he doth greatly inveigh againſt the wickedneſs and filthineſs of the Clergy, and againſt the neglecting of their duty in governing the Church. The Locuſt mentioned in the Apocalyps he ſaith, be the hypocrites reigning in the Church. The works of Antichriſt, he ſaith, be theſe, the fables and inventions of Men reigning in the Church, the Images and feigned Reliques that are worſhipped every where. Item, That men do worſhip every one his proper Saint and Saviour beſide Chriſt, ſo that every Man and City almoſt hath his divers and peculiar Chriſt. He taught and affirmed moreover, that godlineſs and true worſhip of God are not bound to place, perſons or times, to be heard more in this place than in another, at this time more than at another, &c. He argueth alſo againſt the Cloiſterers, which leaving the only and true Saviour, ſet up to themſelves their Franciſcans, their Dominicks, and ſuch other, and have them for their Saviours, glorying and triumphing in them, and feigning many forged lies upon them. He was greatly and much offended with Monks and Friers for neglecting or rather burying the Word of Chriſt, and inſtead of him, for celebrating and ſetting up their own rules and Canons; affirming it to be much hurtful to true godlineſs, for that Prieſts, Monks and Nuns do account themſelves only ſpiritual, and all other to be Lay and Secular, attributing only to themſelves the opinion of holineſs, and condemning other Men, with all their politick adminiſtration, and the office as prophane in compariſon of their own. He further writeth that Antichriſt hath ſeduced all Univerſities and Colledges of Learned Men, ſo that they teach no ſincere Doctrine, neither give any light to the Chriſtians with their teaching. Finally, he forewarneth that it will come to paſs, that God yet once again will raiſe up godly teachers, who being fervent in the Spirit and zeal of Helias, ſhall diſcloſe and refute the errors of Antichriſt, and Antichriſt himſelf, openly to the whole World. This Matthias in the ſaid Book of Antichriſt, alledgeth the Sayings and Writings of the Univerſity of Paris, alſo the Writings of Gulielmus de ſancto Amore, and of Militzius afore noted.

Anno 1384.

About the ſame time, or ſhortly after, An. 1384. we read alſo of Joannes of Mountziger, Rector of the Univerſity of Ulme, who openly in the Schools in his Oration propounded that the body of Chriſt was not God, and therefore not to be worſhipped as God with that kind of worſhip called Latreia, as the Sophiſter termeth it, meaning thereby the Sacrament not to be adored, which afterward he alſo defended by writing; affirming alſo, that Chriſt in his Reſurrection took to him again all his blood which in his Paſſion he had ſhed. Meaning thereby to infer, that the blood of Chriſt, which in many places is worſhipped, neither can be called the blood of Chriſt, neither ought to be worſhipped. But by and by he was reſiſted and withſtood by the Monks and Friers; who by this kind of idolatry were greatly inriched, till at length the Senate and Council of the City was feign to take up the matter between them.

Nilus the Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica.

Nilus was Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, and lived much about this time. He wrote a long work againſt the Latines, that is, againſt ſuch as took part and held with the Church of Rome. His firſt Book being written in Greek was afterward tranſlated into Latine, and lately now into Engliſh, in this our time. In the firſt Chapter of this Book, he layeth all the blame and fault of the diſſention and ſchiſm between the Eaſt and the Weſt Church, upon the Pope. He affirmed that the Pope only would command what him liſted, were it never ſo contrary to all the old and ancient Canons; that he would hear and follow no mans advice; that he would not permit any free Councils to be aſſembled, &c. And that therefore it was not poſſible, that the controverſies between the Greek Church and Latine Church ſhould be decided and determined.

In the ſecond Chapter of his Book, he purpoſely maketh a very learned diſputation. For firſt, he declareth that he, no whit at all by Gods Commandment, but only by humane law, hath any dignity, more than hath other Biſhops; which dignity, the Councils, the Fathers, the Emperors have granted unto him. Neither did they grant the ſame for any other conſideration more, or greater ordinance, than for that the ſame City then had the Empire of all the whole world, and not at all for that Peter ever was there, or not there.

Secondarily he declareth, That the ſame primacy or prerogative is not ſuch and ſo great, as he and his Sycophants do uſurp unto themſelves. Alſo he refuteth the chiefeſt propoſitions of the Papiſts one after another. He declareth, That the Pope hath no dominion more than other Patriarchs have, and that he himſelf may err as well as other mortal Men; and that he is ſubject both to Laws and Councils, as well as other Biſhops. That it belonged not to him, but to the Emperor, to call general Councils; and that in Eccleſiaſtical cauſes he could eſtabliſh and ordain no more than all other Biſhops might. And laſtly, that he getteth no more by Peter's ſucceſſion, than that he is a Biſhop, as all other Biſhops after the Apoſtles be, &c.

Jacobus Miſuenſis and Militzius.

I cannot among other, following here the occaſion of this matter offered, leave out the memory of Jacobus Miſuenſis, who alſo wrote of the coming of Antichriſt. In the ſame he maketh mention of a certain learned Man, whoſe name was Militzius, which Militzius (ſaith he) was a famous and worthy Preacher in Praga. He lived about the year 1366. long before Huſs, and before Wickliff alſo. In the ſame his writings he declareth, how the ſame good Man Militzius was by the holy Spirit of God incited, and vehemently moved to ſearch out of the holy Scriptures the manner and coming of Antichriſt: and found that now in his time he was already come. And the ſame Jacobus ſaith, That the ſaid Militzius was conſtrained by the Spirit of God to go up to Rome, and there publickly to preach. And that afterward before the Inquiſitor he affirmed the ſame. That the ſame mighty and great Antichriſt, the which the Scriptures made mention of, was already come.

He affirmed alſo, that the Church, by the negligence of the Paſtors ſhould become deſolate; and that iniquity ſhould abound, that is, by reaſon of Mammon, maſter of iniquity. Alſo, he ſaid that there were in the Church of Chriſt Idols, which ſhould deſtroy Jeruſalem, and make the Temple deſolate, but were cloked by hypocriſie. Further, that there be many which deny Chriſt, for that they keep ſilence; neither do they hear Chriſt, whom all the world ſhould know, and confeſs his verity before Men, which alſo wittingly do detain the verity and juſtice of God.

Militzius perſecuted by the Pope.

There is alſo a certain Bull of Pope Gregory the 11*th.* to the Archbiſhop of Praga; wherein he is commanded to excommunicate and perſecute Militzius and his auditors. The ſame Bull declareth, that he was once a Canon of Praga, but afterward he renounced his Canonſhip, and began to preach; who alſo, for that he ſo manifeſtly preached of Antichriſt to be already come, was of John Archbiſhop of Praga put in Priſon, declaring what his error was: To wit, how he had his company or congregation to whom he preached, and that amongſt the ſame were certain converted Harlots, which had forſaken their evil life, and did live godly and well, which Harlots he accuſtomed in his Sermons to prefer before all the bleſſed Virgins that never offended. He taught alſo openly, that in the Pope, Cardinals, Biſhops, Prelates, Prieſts, and other religious Men was no truth, neither that they taught the way of truth, but that only he, and ſuch as held with him, taught the true way of Salvation. His Poſtil in ſome places is yet to be ſeen. They alledge unto him certain other inconvenient Articles, which notwithſtanding, I think the adverſaries, to deprave him withal, have ſlanderouſly invented againſt him. He had, as appeared by the foreſaid Bull, very many of every ſtate and condition, as well rich as poor, that cleaved unto him.

Henricus de Haſſia.

About the year of our Lord 1371. lived Henricus de Jota, whom Gerſon doth much commend, and alſo his companion Henricus de Haſſia, an excellent learned and famous Man. An Epiſtle of this Henricus de Haſſia, which he wrote to the Biſhop of Normacia, Jacobus Cartſienſis inſerted in his Book De erroribus Chriſtianorum. In the ſame Epiſtle the Author doth greatly accuſe the ſpiritual Men of every Order, yea and the moſt holy of all other, the Pope himſelf, of many and great vices. He ſaid, that the Eccleſiaſtical Governours in the Primitive Church were compared to the Sun ſhining in the day time; and the Political Governours, to the Moon ſhining in the night. But the ſpiritual Men, he ſaid that now are, do neither ſhine in the day time, nor yet in the night time, but rather with their darkneſs do obſcure both the day and the night, that is, with their filthy living, ignorance and impiety. He citeth alſo out of the Prophecy of Hildegardis theſe words: Therefore doth the Devil in himſelf ſpeak of you Prieſts; Dainty Banquets and Feaſts, wherein is all voluptuouſneſs, do I find amongſt theſe men; Inſomuch that mine eies, mine ears, my belly, and my veins be even filled with the froth of them, and my breaſts ſtand aſtrut with the riches of them, &c. Laſtly, ſaith he, they every day more and more, as Lucifer did, ſeek to climb higher and higher; till that every day with him more and more, they fall deeper and deeper.

The Citizens of Moguntine.

About the year of our Lord 1390. there were burned at Bringa 36 Citizens of Moguntina, for the Doctrine of Waldenſis, as Bruſſius affirmeth; which opinion was nothing contrary to that they held before, wherein they affirmed the Pope to be that great Antichriſt, which ſhould come; Unleſs peradventure the Pope ſeemed then to be more evidently convicted of Antichriſtianity, than at any other time before he was revealed to be.

A brief rehearſal of ſuch as were put to death for holding againſt the Biſhop of Rome, before the time of Wickliffe.

For the like cauſe, many other beſide theſe are to be found in ſtories, which ſuſtained the like perſecutions by the Pope, if leiſure would ſerve to peruſe all that might be ſearched. As where Maſſeus recordeth of divers to the number of an hundred and forty; which in the Province of Narbone choſe rather to ſuffer whatſoever grievous puniſhment by fire, than to receive the Decretals of the Romiſh Church, contrary to the upright truth of the Scripture.

What

What ſhould I here ſpeak of the 24 which ſuffered at Paris An. 1210? Alſo in the ſame Author is teſtified that *An.*1211. there were 400 under the name of Hereticks burned, 80 beheaded, Prince Americus hanged, and the Lady of the Caſtle ſtoned to death.

Moreover, in the Chronicles of Hoveden, and of other Writers, be recited a marvellous number, which in the Countries of France were burned for Hereticks. Of whom, ſome were called Publicans, ſome Catharites, ſome Paterines, and other by other names. What their aſſertions were, I find no certain report worthy of credit.

Eckhardus a friar burned

In Trithemius it is ſignified of one Eckhardus a Dominican Frier, who, not long before Wickliff's time, was condemned and ſuffered for Hereſie at Heidelburgh, *An.*1330. who as he differeth not much in name, ſo may he be ſuppoſed to be the ſame, whom other do name Beghardus, and is ſaid to be burned at Erphord.

Of Albingenſes becauſe ſufficient mention is made before, of whom great number were burned about the time of King John, I paſs them over.

An Hermit diſputing againſt the Popes Sacraments. Ranulphus.

Likewiſe, I let paſs the Hermite, of whom John Bacon maketh relation, in his 2. Diſt. Quæſt. 1. Who, diſputing in Pauls Church, affirmed That thoſe Sacraments which were then uſed in the Church, were not inſtituted by Chriſt, An. 1306. Peradventure it was the ſame Ranulphus, mentioned in the Flower of Hiſtories, and is ſaid to die in Priſon; for the time of them doth not much differ.

In Boetius, why the Pope ſhould ſo much commend a certain King, becauſe for one man he had ſlain 400, cutting away the Generals from the reſt, I cannot judge, except the cauſe were that, which the Pope calleth Hereſie.

But to let theſe things overpaſs that be uncertain, becauſe neither is it poſſible to comprehend all them which have withſtood the corruption of the Popes See, neither have we any ſuch firm teſtimony left of their doings, credibly to ſtay upon: We will now (Chriſt willing) convert our ſtory to things more certain and undoubted; grounding upon no light reports of feeble credit, nor upon any fabulous Legends without authority; but upon the true and ſubſtantial Copies of the publick Records of the Realm, remaining yet to be ſeen under the Kings moſt ſure and faithful cuſtody. Out of the which Records ſuch matter appeareth againſt the Popiſh Church of Rome, and againſt his uſurped authority, ſuch open ſtanding and crying againſt the ſaid See, and that not privily, but alſo in open Parliament, in the days of this King Edward the third; that neither will the Romiſh people of this our age eaſily think it to be true when they ſee it, neither yet ſhall they be able to deny the ſame, ſo near ſtandeth the force of thoſe Records.

Ex Archivis Regiæ Majeſtatis.

Partial diſſimulation in our Hiſtories of the Church of England.

Ye heard a little before, p. 433. how John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being ſent for, and required by the King to come unto him, refuſed ſo to do. What the cauſe was why he denied to come at the Kings ſending, is neither touched of Polydore Virgil, nor of any other Monkiſh Chronicler, writing of thoſe acts and times. Whoſe part had bin, faithfully to have diſpenced the ſimple truth of things done to their poſterity. But that which they diſſemblingly and colourably have concealed, contrary to the true law of ſtory, the true cauſe thereof we have found out by the true Parliament Rolls, declaring the ſtory thus.

Ex anno 6. Reg. Ed. 3. tit. 1.

King Edward the 3*d*. in the 6*th*. year of his Reign, hearing that Edward Bailiol had proclaimed himſelf King of Scotland, required counſel of the whole ſtate, to wit, whether it were better for him to aſſail Scotland, and to claim the demeſne or demains of the ſame; or elſe by making him party to take his advantage, and thereby to enjoy the ſervice, as other his anceſtors before him had done. For this cauſe he ſummoned a Parliament of all eſtates to meet at York, about the beginning of December. Where the King was already come, waiting for the coming of ſuch as were warned thereunto. For the want of whoſe coming the Parliament was rejourned till Monday, and from thence to Tueſday next enſuing. But forſomuch as moſt of the States were abſent, the Aſſembly required the continuance of the Parliament, until the Utas of Saint Hilary then enſuing at York, which was granted. And ſo a new Summons was eſpecially awarded to every perſon with ſpecial charge to attend, ſo that the affairs of the King and the Realm might not be hindred, becauſe of the debate between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Archbiſhop of York, for the ſuperior bearing of their croſs.

In concluſion, for all the Kings ſummoning, none other of all the Clergy came, but only the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhop of Lincoln, and of Carlile, and Abbots of York and Selby. So that hereunto came not the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor any other of his Province, and all for bearing the Croſs. Whereby the ſame was not only a loſs to the opportunity to Scotland; but alſo an importable charge to the whole eſtate by a new aſſembly. And thus much out of the Records, whereby thou mayſt eaſily judge (prudent Reader) what is to be thought of theſe Pope-holy Catholick Church-men, being of the Popes brood and ſetting up; whom ſuch frivolous cauſes of contention ſtir up both to ſuch diſquietneſs among themſelves, and alſo to ſuch diſobedience againſt their Prince; excuſe them who can. Ex An. 6. Regis Edwardi 3.

{KING} {Edw. 3}

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury came not to the Parliament at York, and all for bearing the Croſs.

It followeth moreover, in the ſame Records, concerning the abandoning of the Popes proviſions; how that the Commons find great default at Proviſions coming from Rome, whereby ſtrangers were enabled within this Realm to enjoy Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, and ſhew divers inconveniences inſuing thereby, namely, the decay of daily Alms, the tranſporting of the Treaſure to nouriſh the Kings enemies, the diſcovering of the ſecrets of the Realm, and the diſabling and impoveriſhing of the Clerks within this Realm.

Ex an. 17. Reg. Ed. 3. tit. 39.

The Popes proviſions reſtrained, tit. 39.

They alſo ſhew how the Pope had in moſt covertwiſe granted to two new Cardinals within this Realm (and namely to Cardinal Peragotz) above ten thouſand Marks of yearly Taxes. They therefore required the King and Nobles to find ſome remedy, for that they never could ne would any longer bear thoſe ſtrange oppreſſions, or elſe to help them to expel out of this Realm the Popes power by force.

The Church of England ſpoiled by the Pope and his forreiners.

Hereupon the King, Lords and Commons, ſent for the Act made at Carlile, in the 35*th*. year of King Edward the firſt, upon the like complaint; thereby forbidding that any thing ſhould be attempted or brought into the Realm, which ſhould tend to the blemiſhing of the Kings prerogative, or to the prejudice of his Lords or Commons. And ſo at this time the Statute called the Act of Proviſion, was made by common conſent, which generally forbiddeth the bringing in of any Bulls, or ſuch Trinkets from the Court of Rome, or the uſing, enjoying, or allowing of any ſuch Bill, Proceſs, Inſtruments, or ſuch Ware, as thereby at large doth appear. Whereof ſufficiently is touched before *Pag.*400.

The Act of K. Edward the firſt revived for præmunire. tit.60.

The penalty of which Statute afterward followed in the next Parliament, *An. Reg. Ed.*18. *tit.*32. the which penalty was this: the tranſgreſſors thereof were to lie in perpetual priſon, or to be forejured the Land; And that all Juſtices of Aſſiſe, Goal-delivery, and Oyer and Determiner may determine the ſame. Required withal, that the ſame Act of proviſion ſhould continue for ever.

An. Reg. Ed. 3. 18. tit. 32.

Item, In the ſaid 18*th*. year of the Reign of King Edward, *tit.*34. it was moreover propounded; that if any Archbiſhop, or any perſon religious, or other, do not preſent within 4 Months ſome able Clerk to any Dignity, where any perſon hath obtained from Rome, any Proviſion, Bull, &c. but forceaſe the ſame; that then the King may preſent ſome able Clerk.

Preſentation within 4 months, an. reg. 18. tit. 34.

Item, It was propounded in the ſaid Parliament, *An.*18. *Reg. Ed.*3. That if any Biſhop elect ſhall refuſe to take any ſuch Biſhopricks, otherwiſe than by ſuch Bull; that then ſuch elect ſhall not enter ne enjoy his Temporalties without his ſpecial liſence.

No election to be taken by the Pope but only by the King, An. reg. 18. tit. 35.

Alſo that the King ſhall diſpoſe all ſuch Benefices and Dignities of ſuch aliens his enemies, as remain in the Country of his enemies, and imploy the profits thereof to the defence of the Realm.

Diſpoſitions of Benefices only in the Kings hand, an. 18. Ed. 3. tit. 36.

Moreover, it was propounded, that Commiſſioners be ſent to all the Kings Ports, to apprehend all ſuch perſons as ſhall bring in any ſuch inſtrument from Rome, and to bring them forthwith before the Council to anſwer thereto.

Bulls from Rome forbidden, an. 18 reg. Ed. 3. tit. 37.

Propounded furthermore, that the Deanry of York, which is to be recovered by judgment in the Kings Court, may be beſtowed upon ſome able Man within the Realm, who will maintain the ſame againſt him (meaning the Cardinal, who holdeth the ſame by proviſion from Rome, being the enemy to the King, and to the Realm) and that the profits may be imployed to the defence of the Realm.

The Deanry of York taken from the Cardinal, an. 18. Reg. Ed 3. tit. 38.

The

KING Edw. 3. The Kings anſwer and agreement to the foreſaid Petitions.

The Kings anſwer. To all which petitions anſwer was made in form following, It is agreed by the King, Earls, Barons, Juſtices, and otherwiſe Men of the Realm, that the petitions aforeſaid be made in ſufficient form of Law, according to the petitions aforeſaid.

Note that the Biſhops do not here named, and yet the Parliament ſtandeth in force.

¶ Note in this anſwer of the King (good Reader) that at the grant hereof the conſent of the Biſhops is neither named, nor expreſſed, with the other Lords of the Parliament: and yet the Parliament ſtandeth in his full force, notwithſtanding.

Notes of the Parliament holden in the Twentieth year of King Edward the Third.

Alien Monks to avoid, &c. 20. Ed. 3. tit. 10.

TO paſs further, in the twentieth year of the Kings Reign in the Parliament holden the ſame year, it was propounded; That all alien Monks ſhould avoid the Realm by the day of S. Michael, and that their livings ſhould be diſpoſed, to young Engliſh Scholars. The livings of theſe the King took to his hands.

The Livings of ſtrangers graſped taken into the Kings hand, tit. 21.

Item, That the King may take the profits of all other ſtrangers livings, as Cardinals and others, during their lives. The profits of whom were alſo in the Kings hands.

The Livings of Romiſh ſtrangers diſpoſed to Engliſh men tit. 32, 33.

That ſuch Aliens enemies, as be advanced to Livings here in England (being in their own Countries, Shoemakers, Taylers, or Chamberlains to Cardinals) ſhould depart before Michaelmas, and their Livings be diſpoſed to poor Engliſh Scholars. The Livings alſo of theſe remained in the Kings hands.

The Commons denyed to pay any payment to any Cardinals, lying in France to entreat of War or Peace, which alſo was granted of the Kings part as reaſonable.

Cardinals deprived of their Livings in England, tit. 34.

Item, propounded and fully agreed, That the yearly advancement of two thouſand marks (granted by the Pope to two Cardinals, out of the Provinces of Canterbury and York) ſhould be reſtrained, and ſuch as ſhall purſue therefore to be out of the Law.

Likewiſe enacted and agreed, That no Engliſh Man ſhould take any thing in farm of any Alien Religious, ne buy any of their goods, nor be of their counſel, on pain of perpetual impriſonment.

Enacted further, That no perſon ſhould bring into the Realm, to any Biſhop or other, any Bull, or any other Letters from Rome, or from any Alien; unleſs he ſhew the ſame to the Chancellor or Warden of the Cinque Ports, upon loſs of all he hath.

Finally, in the end of the ſaid Parliament the Biſhops were commanded, before the next Convocation, to certifie unto the Chancery the names of ſuch Aliens, of their Benefices, and the values of the ſame.

Notes of the five and twentieth year of King Edward the Third.

Ex Archiis. An. Reg. Ed. 3.

THE Parliament of the 25. year, was begun the ſixth day of February, the 25*th.* year of King Edward the Third. In the which Parliament beſide other matters moe, was propounded; that remedy might be had againſt the Popes reſervations by which brocage and means the Pope received the firſt fruits of all Eccleſiaſtical Dignities: A more Conſumption to the Realm, than all the Kings Wars.

The Popes firſt fruits and reſervations more hurtful to the Realm than all the Kings wars, tit. 14.

To break off all Appeals to Rome, tit. 14.

Alſo that the like remedy might be had againſt ſuch as in the Court of Rome preſume to undo any judgment given in the Kings Court, as if they enforced to undo the Laws of the Realm.

Whereunto it was anſwered, That there was ſufficient remedy provided by Law.

Notes of the eight and thirtieth year of King Edward the Third.

The requeſt of the King for cauſes not to be determined at Rome, tit. 7.

IN the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, the 38*th.* year of Edward the Third, in the Utaves of Hilary (Simon Biſhop of Ely being Lord Chancellor) it was required by the Kings own mouth, and declared to the whole Eſtates; How daily citation and falſe ſuggeſtions were made to the Pope, for matters determinable in his Courts within the Realm, and for procuring proviſions to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, to the great defacing of the ancient Laws, to the ſpoiling of his Crown, to the daily conveying away of the Treaſure, to the waſting of Eccleſiaſtical Livings, to the withdrawing of Divine Service, Alms, Hoſpitality, and other acceptable works, and to the daily increaſe of all miſchiefs: Wherefore, in perſon by his own mouth the King required the whole Eſtate to provide hereof due remedy.

What miſchiefs come by tranſporting cauſes to Rome, tit. eodem.

It is to be noted finally in this Parliament of the 38*th.* year, that the Act of Proviſors, brought in this Parliament, although in the Printed Copy, Chap. 1, 2, 3, 4. it doth agree with the Record, in manner; yet in the ſaid Records unprinted are moe biting words againſt the Pope: a myſtery not to be known of all Men.

The printed Statute of proviſion not agreeing in all terms againſt the Pope with the Record, tit. 9.

Notes of the fortieth year of King Edward the Third.

IT followeth moreover in the ſaid Acts of King Edward the Third, and in the 40*th.* year of his Reign, another Parliament was called at Weſtminſter the 3*d.* of May, An. 1366. the Biſhop of Ely being Lord Chancellor and Speaker. Who in the ſecond day of the ſaid Aſſembly in the preſence of the King, Lords and Commons, declared; how the day before generally they underſtood the cauſe of this their Aſſembly, and now more particularly ſhould underſtand the ſame; ſpecially how that the King underſtood, that the Pope (for the homage which King John made to the See of Rome for the Realms of England and Ireland, and for the tribute by him granted) meant by Proceſs to cite the King to Rome, to anſwer thereto. Wherein the King required their advices, what were beſt for him to do, if any ſuch thing were attempted. The Biſhops by their ſelves required a reſpite of anſwer, until the next day. So did the Lords and Commons every of them by their ſelves.

Ex An. Reg. Ed. 40. tit. videlicet. 7.

The Pope mindeth to ſend for the King up by Proceſs.

The ſame next day the whole Eſtates re-aſſembled together, and by common conſent enacted in effect following, viz. Foraſmuch as neither King John, nor any other King, could bring his Realm and people in ſuch thraldom and ſubjection, but by common aſſent of Parliament, the which was not done; and therefore was done againſt his Oath at his Coronation (beſide many other cauſes:) If therefore the Pope ſhould attempt any thing againſt the King, by Proceſs or other matter indeed; That the King with all his Subjects ſhould with all their force and power reſiſt the ſame.

King John could not without conſent of Parliament become tributary to the Pope, tit. 8.

Agreed by parliament, that the King by force ſhould reſiſt the Pope.

Here moreover is not to be omitted, how in the ſaid preſent Parliament the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge on the one ſide, and the Friers of the four Orders Mendicants in the ſaid Univerſities on the other ſide, made long complaints the one againſt the other to the King in Parliament, and in the end ſubmitted themſelves to the Kings Order.

Braul between the four orders of Friers and the two Univerſities Ex tit. 10.

After which, the King upon full digeſting of the whole matter (by aſſent of Parliament) took order; that as well the Chancellor and Scholars, as the Friers of thoſe Orders in the ſaid Univerſities, ſhould in all Graces and other School Exerciſes uſe each other in friendly wiſe, without any rumor as before. That none of thoſe Orders ſhould receive any Scholars into their ſaid Orders, being under the age of eighteen years.

That the ſaid Friers ſhall take no advantage, ne procure Bulls, or other Proceſs from Rome, againſt the ſaid Univerſities, or proceed therein.

The Friers ſubject to the Kings Order only in all their controverſies, Parliament, tit. 12.

And that the King have power to redreſs all controverſies between them from thenceforth; and the offenders to be puniſhed at the pleaſure of the King, and of the Council.

Notes of the fiftieth year of King Edward the Third.

IN proceſs of the foreſaid Acts and Rolls, it followeth more, that in the 50*th.* year of the Reign of King Edward the Third, the year of our Lord 1376. another great Parliament was Aſſembled at Weſtminſter the 24*th.* of April: where, Sir John Knyvet being Lord Chancellor of England, a certain long Bill was put up againſt the uſurpations of the Pope, as being the cauſe of all the plagues, murrions, famine, and poverty of the Realm, ſo as thereby was not left the third perſon, or other commodity within the Realm that lately was.

2. That the Taxes paid to the Pope of Rome for Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, do amount to five-fold as much, as the Tax of all profits which appertain to the King, by the year, of his whole Realm; And that for ſome one Biſhoprick or other Dignity, the Pope, by way of tranſlation and death, hath three, four, or five ſeveral Taxes.

That the brokers of that ſinful City for money promote many Caitiffs (being altogether unlearned and unworthy) to a thouſand Marks Living by year, where the the learned and worthy can hardly obtain twenty Marks, whereby learning decayeth.

4. That Aliens (enemies to this Land) who never ſaw ne care not to ſee their Pariſhioners, have thoſe Livings, whereby they deſpiſe Gods ſervice, and convey away the Treaſure, and are worſe than Jews or Saracens.

5. Alſo it was put up in the ſaid Bill to be conſidered, That the Laws of the Church would have ſuch Livings to be beſtowed for Charity only, without praying or paying.

6. That reaſon would that Livings given of Devotion ſhould be beſtowed in Hoſpitality.

7. That God had committed his ſheep to the Pope, to be paſtured, and not ſhorn or ſhaven.

The Pope giveth example to ſell Benefices, tit. 99.

8. That Lay Patrons, perceiving the Covetouſneſs and Simony of the Pope, do thereby learn to ſell their Benefices unto Beaſts, none otherwiſe than Chriſt was ſold to the Jews.

Ineſtimable that the Pope hath here out of England, tit. 100.

9. That there is none ſo rich a Prince in Chriſtendom, that hath the fourth part of ſo much treaſure, as the Pope hath out of this Realm for Churches, moſt ſinfully.

10. Over and beſides in the ſaid Bill, repeating again the tender zeal for the honour of the Church; were declared and particularly named, all the plagues which have juſtly fallen upon this Realm, for ſuffering the ſame Church to be ſo defaced, with declaration that it will daily increaſe without redreſs.

Reformation of the Church of England deſired in the Parliament, tit. 101.

11. Whereupon with much perſwaſion this was deſired, to help to re-edifie the ſame: and the rather for that this was the year of Jubile, the 50*th.* year of the Kings Reign, the year of joy and gladneſs, than the which there could be no greater.

12. The means how to begin this was to write two Letters to the Pope; the one in Latine under the Kings Seal, the other in French under the Seals of the Nobles, importing their particularities, and requiring redreſs; of the which Letter of the Lords the effect may be ſeen in a like Letter mentioned before, pag. 436.

Acts made for no money to be tranſported, tit. 103.

13. And for a further accompliſhment hereof, to enact, that no money were carried forth of the Realm by Letter of Lumbardy or otherwiſe, on pain of forfeiture and impriſonment, and to Enact the Articles hereafter enſuing.

14. The King hath heretofore by Statute provided ſufficient remedy, and otherwiſe purſueth the ſame with the Holy Father the Pope, and ſo mindeth to do from time to time, until he hath obtained as well for the matters before, as for the Articles enſuing, being in a manner all one.

Againſt the Popes Lieger ſpies and Collectors, tit. 104.

15. That the Popes Collector and other ſtrangers the Kings enemies, and only Lieger ſpies for Engliſh Dignities, and diſcloſing of the ſecrets of the Realm may be touched.

The Popes Collection, what it cometh to, tit. 105.

16. That the ſame Collector being alſo receiver of the Popes pence, keepeth a Houſe in London, with Clerks and Officers thereto, as it were one of the Kings ſolemn Courts, tranſporting yearly to the Pope twenty thouſand Marks and moſt commonly more.

The beſt dignities in England in the Cardinals, tit. 106.

17. That Cardinals and other Aliens remaining at Rome, whereof one Cardinal is Dean of York, another of Salisbury, another of Lincoln, another Archdeacon of Canterbury, another Archdeacon of Dureſm, another Archdeacon of Suffolk, another Archdeacon of York, another Prebendary of Thame and Naſſington, another Prebendary of Bucks in the Church of York, have divers of the beſt Dignities of England and have ſent over to them yearly twenty thouſand Marks, over and above that which Engliſh Brokers lying here have.

The Pope maintaineth the Kings enemies with the Kings money, tit. 107.

18. That the Pope (to ranſom the French-men the Kings Enemies, who defend Lumbardy from him) doth always at his pleaſure Levy a Subſidy of the whole Clergy of England.

{KING Edw. 3} The Popes Practice in England to make mony, tit. 108.

19. That the Pope for more gain maketh ſundry tranſlations of all the Biſhopricks and other Dignities within the Realm.

20. That the Popes Collector hath this year taken to his uſe the firſt fruits of all Benefices, by collation or proviſion.

The Law of Premunire to be renewed.

21. To renew all the Statutes againſt Proviſors from Rome; ſith that the Pope reſerveth all the Benefices of the world for his own proper gifts, and hath this year created twelve new Cardinals; ſo as now there are thirty, where was wont to be but twelve, and all thoſe Cardinals, except two or three, are the Kings enemies.

Againſt the Popes uſurpation, tit. 12.

22. That the Pope in time will give the Temporal Manors of thoſe Dignities to the Kings Enemies, ſith he ſo dayly uſurpeth upon the Realm, and the Kings Regalities.

23. That all Houſes and Corporations of Religion, who unto the Kings Reign now had free Election of heads, the Pope hath incroached the ſame to himſelf.

Engliſh Treaſury ſpent with the Popes Legates, tit. 13.

24. That in all Legacies from the Pope, whatſoever the Engliſh Clergy beareth the charge of the Legacie and all for the goodneſs of our money.

No good money in the Realm for the Pope and Card. tit. 14.

25. And ſo it appeareth, that if the money of the Realm were as plentiful as ever it was; the Collectors aforeſaid, with the Proctors of Cardinals, would ſoon convey the ſame.

The Popes Collector or Proctor driven out of the Realm, tit. 15.

26. For remedy hereof it may be provided, That no ſuch Collector or Proctor do remain in England, on pain of life and member. And that no Engliſh-man, on the like pain, become any ſuch Collector or Proctor, or remain at Rome.

The Popes Collector to be examined.

27. For better information hereof, and namely touching the Popes Collector, for that the whole Clergy being obedient unto him, dare not diſpleaſe him: It were good, that Sir John Strenſale, Parſon of Saint Botolphs in Holborn, may be ſent to come before the Lords and Commons of this Parliament. Who being ſtraitly charged, can declare much more; for that he ſerved the ſame Collector in Houſe five years.

Engliſh-men good Aſſes.

¶ And thus much of this Bill touching the Popes matters: whereby it may appear, not to be for nought that hath been upon us reported by the Italians and other ſtrangers, which uſed to call Engliſh-men good Aſſes: for they bare all burthens that be laid upon them.

Order taken in London againſt uſury, tit. 158.

Item, in the ſaid Parliament it was provided alſo, That ſuch order as is made in London againſt the horrible vice of uſury, may be obſerved throughout the whole Realm.

Complaint againſt the Biſhop of York and his Officers for their exceſſive taking for their admiſſions, tit. 171. Ex Archivis Reg. Edw. 3. Reg. 5. tit. 36.

The Commons of the Dioceſs of York complain of the outragious taking of the Biſhop and his Clerks, for admiſſions of Prieſts to their Benefices.

Againſt the Popes proviſions from Rome, Anno. Reg. 51.

To theſe Records of the Parliament above prefixed, of the fiftieth year of this King Edward, we will adjoyn alſo other Notes collected out of the Parliament in the year next following, which was 51. and the laſt year of this Kings life and Reign, An. 1377. the 27*th.* of January: Although in the printed Book, theſe Statutes are ſaid to be made at the Parliament holden, as above, in the fiftieth year: which is much miſtaken, and ought to be referred to the one and fiftieth year, as by the Records of the ſaid year manifeſtly doth appear.

The effect of the Chancellor Oration.

In which Parliament, the Biſhop of Saint Davids, being Lord Chancellor, making a long Oration, taking his Theam out of S. Paul, Libenter ſuffertis incipientes, &c. Declaring in the ſaid Oration many things; as firſt, in ſhewing the joyful news of the old Kings recovery; then declaring the love of God toward the King and Realm, in chaſtiſing him with ſickneſs: Afterward ſhewing the bleſſing of God upon the King in ſeeing his Childrens Children; Then by a ſimilitude of the head and members, exhorting the people as the members of one body to conform themſelves unto the goodneſs of the head; Laſtly, he turned his matter to the Lords and the reſt, declaring the cauſe of that Aſſembly: That foraſmuch as the French King had Allied himſelf with the Spaniards and Scots, the Kings enemies, which had prepared great powers, conſpiring to blot out the Engliſh Tongue and name, the King therefore was willing to have therein their faithful counſel.

This

KING Edw. 3. The cauſe of this Parliament chiefly for the Popes uſurpation againſt the King.

This being declared by the Biſhop; Sir Robert Aſhton the Kings Chamberlain, declaring that he was to move them from the King, for the profit of the Realm (the which words percaſe lay not in the Biſhops mouth, for that it touched the Pope) viz. By proteſting firſt, That the King was ready to do all that ought to be done for the Pope. But for that divers uſurpations were done by the Pope to the King his Crown, and Realm, as by particular Bills in this Parliament ſhould be ſhewed, he required of them to ſeek redreſs.

Againſt the Pope his proviſions from Rome An. Reg. 51. tit. 35.

In this preſent Parliament petition was made by the Commons, that all Proviſors of things from Rome, and their Miniſters, ſhould be out of the Kings protection.

The Kings Anſwer.

Whereunto the King Anſwered, That the Pope had promiſed redreſs, which if he did not, the Laws then ſhould ſtand.

Againſt the Pope his diſpenſations. An.

It was alſo in that Parliament required, That every perſon of what ſex ſoever, being profeſſed of any Religion, continuing the habit of fifteen years, may upon the tryal of the ſame in any of the Kings Courts, be in Law utterly fore-barred of all inheritance, albeit he have diſpenſation from the Pope. Againſt which diſpenſation, is the chief grudge. Whereunto the King and the Lords anſwered, ſaying, That they would provide.

Item, In the ſaid Parliament was propounded, That the Statute of Proviſors made at any time may be executed, and that remedy may be had againſt ſuch Cardinals, as have within the Provinces of Canterbury and York, purchaſed reſervations, with the clauſe of Anteferri to the value of twenty or thirty thouſand Scutes of Gold againſt the Popes Collector: who was wont to be an Engliſh-man, and now is a meer French, reſiding at London, and conveyeth yearly to the Pope twenty thouſand Marks, or twenty thouſand Pounds, who this year gathereth the firſt fruits whatſoever. Alledging the means to meet with theſe reſervations and novelties, as to command all ſtrangers to depart the Realm during the Wars; that no Engliſh-man become their Farmor, or ſend to them any money without a ſpecial licence, on pain to be out of the Kings protection. Whereunto was anſwered by the King, that the Statutes and Ordinances, therefore made, ſhould be obſerved.

By this Anteferri, that is, premunire, is meant the preheminence above the King. The Popes Law of preeminere, which now we corruptly call premunire, debarred by the King, tit. 71.

Ex actis Parliamenti in An. Reg. Ed. Tertii 15. tit. 24.

In theſe Rolls and Records of ſuch Parliament as were in this Kings time continued, divers other things are to be noted much worthy to be marked, and not to be ſuppreſſed in ſilence. Wherein the Reader may learn and underſtand the ſtate of the Kings juriſdiction here within this Realm, not to be ſtraitned in thoſe days (although the Pope then ſeemed to be in his chief ruff) as afterward ſince in other Kings days was ſeen. As may appear in the Parliament of the fifteenth year of this King Edward the Third, and in the Twenty fourth Article of the ſaid Parliament: where it is to be read, That the Kings Officers and Temporal Juſtices did then both puniſh Uſurers, and impeached the Officers of the Church for bribery, and for taking money for temporal pain, probate of Wills, ſolemnity of Marriage, &c. all the pretenſed liberties of the Popiſh Church to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Puniſhment of the Clergy in the temporal mens hands.

Clerks ſubject to temporal Law.

Furthermore, in the Parliament of the 25*th.* year it appeareth, That the liberties of the Clergy, and their exemptions in claiming the deliverance of Men by their Book under the name of Clerks, ſtood then in little force, as appeared by one Hauktine Homby Knight: who, for impriſoning one of the Kings Subjects till he made fine of twenty pound, was therefore executed, notwithſtanding the liberty of the Clergy, which by his Book would have ſaved him, but could not.

The like alſo appeared by judgment given againſt a Prieſt at Nottingham, for killing of his Maſter.

And likewiſe by hanging certain Monks of Combe. Ex Parliam. An. 23. Ed. 3.

The arraignment of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury An. 13. Ed. 3. tit. 49.

Item, In the Parliament of the 15*th.* year by apprehending of John Stratford, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his Arraignment: concerning which his Arraignment all things were committed to Sir William of Kildisby.

Beſides theſe truths and notes of the Kings Parliaments, wherein may appear the toward proceedings of this King and all his Commons againſt the pretenſed Church of Rome; this is moreover to be added to the commendation of the King, how in the Volumes of the Acts and Rolls of the King it appeareth; That the ſaid King Edward the Third ſent alſo John Wickliff, Reader then of Divinity Lecture in Oxford, with certain other Lords and Ambaſſadors over into the parts of Italy, to treat with the Popes Legates concerning affairs betwixt the King and the Pope with full commiſſion: the tenor whereof here followeth expreſſed.

John Wickliff ſent with the Kings Ambaſſadors by the King.

REX Univerſis, ad quorum notitiam præſentes literæ pervenerint, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The King to all and ſingular to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, Greeting. Know ye, that we repoſing aſſured confidence in the fidelity and wiſdom of the Reverend Father John Biſhop of Bangor, and other our loving and faithful ſubjects, M. John Wickliff, Reader of the Divinity Lecture, M. John Guntur Dean of Segobyen, and M. Simon Moulton Doctor of Law, Sir William Burton Knight, M. John Belknap, and M. John Honnington, have directed them as our Ambaſſadors and ſpecial Commiſſioners to the parts beyond the Seas. Giving to the ſaid our Ambaſſadors and Commiſſioners, to fix or five of them, of whom I will that the ſaid Biſhop ſhall be one, full power and authority, with commandment ſpecial, to treat and conſult mildly and charitably with the Legates and Ambaſſadors of the Lord Pope touching certain affairs. Whereupon of late we ſent heretofore the ſaid Biſhop, and William Ughtred Monk of Dureſme, and M. John Shepy to the See Apoſtolical: And hereof to make full relation of all things done and paſt in the ſaid Aſſembly, that all ſuch things which may tend to the honour of Holy Church and the advancement of our Crown and this our Realm, may by the aſſiſtance of God and wiſdom of the See Apoſtolical be brought to good effect, and accompliſhed accordingly. Witneſs our ſelves, &c. at London, dated the 26*th.* day of July in the forty eighth year of our Reign.

By the which it is to be noted, what good will the King then bare to the ſaid Wickliff, and what ſmall regard he had to the ſinful See of Rome.

Of the which John Wickliff, becauſe we are now approached to his time, it remaineth conſequently for our Story to entreat of, ſo as we have heretofore done of other like valiant Souldiers of Chriſts Church before him.

John Wickliff.

Here begin-neth the ſtory of John Wickliff.

AFter all theſe heretofore recited, by whom (as ye have heard) it pleaſed the Lord ſomething to work againſt the Biſhop of Rome, and to weaken the pernitious ſuperſtition of the Friers: it now remaineth conſequently, following the courſe of years, orderly to enter into the ſtory and tractation of John Wickliff our Country-man, and other moe of his time, and ſame Country, whom the Lord (with the like zeal and power of ſpirit) raiſed up here in England, to detect more fully and amply the poyſon of the Popes Doctrine, and falſe Religion ſet up by the Friers. In whoſe opinions and aſſertions, albeit ſome blemiſhes perhaps may be noted; yet ſuch blemiſhes they be, which rather declare him to be a Man that might err, than which directly did fight againſt Chriſt our Saviour, as the Popes proceedings and Friers did. And what Doctor or learned Man hath been from the prime age of the Church ſo perfect, ſo abſolutely ſure, in whom no opinion hath ſometime ſwarved awry? And yet be the ſaid Articles of his neither in number ſo many, nor yet ſo groſs in themſelves and ſo Cardinal, as thoſe Cardinal enemies of Chriſt perchance do give them out to be; if his Books which they aboliſhed, were remaining to be conferred with thoſe blemiſhes, which they have traſted to the worſt, as evil-will never ſaid the beſt.

The blemiſhes of Wickliff made worſe than they be.

This is certain and cannot be denied, but that he, being the publick Reader of Divinity in the Univerſity of Oxford, was for the rude time wherein he lived, famouſly reputed for a great Clerk, a deep School-man, and no leſs expert in all kind of Philoſophy. The which doth not only appear by his own moſt famous and learned Writings and Monuments, but alſo by the confeſſion of Walden his moſt cruel and bitter Enemy. Who in a certain Epiſtle written unto Pope Martin the fifth, ſaith, That he was wonderfully aſtoniſhed at his moſt ſtrong Arguments, with the places of authority which he had gathered, with the vehemency and force of his reaſons, &c. And thus much out of Walden. It appeareth by ſuch as have obſerved the order and courſe of times, that this Wickliff flouriſhed about the year of our Lord 1371, Edward the Third Reigning in England: for thus we do find in the Chronicles of Caxton: In the year of our Lord 1371. (ſaith he) Edward the Third, King of England in his Parliament was againſt the Popes Clergy: He willingly hearkned and gave ear to the voyces and tales of Hereticks with certain of his council: conceiving and following ſiniſter opinions againſt the Clergy. Wherefore (afterward) he taſted and ſuffered much adverſity and trouble. And not long after in the year of our Lord (ſaith he) 1372, he wrote unto the Biſhop of Rome, that he ſhould not by any means intermeddle any more within his Kingdom, as touching the reſervation or diſtribution of Benefices, and that all ſuch Biſhops as were under his dominion, ſhould injoy their former and antient liberty, and be confirmed of their Metropolitans, as hath been accuſtomed in times paſt, &c. Thus much writeth Caxton. But as touching the juſt number of the year and time, we will not be very curious or carful about it at this preſent. This is out of all doubt, that at what time all the world was in moſt deſperate and vile eſtate, and that the lamentable ignorance and darkneſs of God his Truth had over-ſhadowed the whole Earth, this Man ſtepped out like a valiant Champion, unto whom it may juſtly be applyed that is ſpoken in the Book called Eccleſiaſticus, of one Simon the Son of Onias: Even as the morning Star being in the midſt of a Cloud, and as the Moon being full in her courſe, and as the bright beams of the Sun; ſo doth he ſhine and gliſter in the Temple and Church of God.

The teſtimony of Walden an enemy in commendation of Wickliff.

The time of John Wickliff.

Ex Caxtone.

Thus doth Almighty God continually ſuccor and help, when all things are in deſpair: being always (according to the Prophecy of the Pſalm) a helper in time of need. The which thing never more plainly appeared, than in theſe later days and extream age of the Church; when as the whole ſtate and condition, not only of worldly things, but alſo of Religion, was depraved and corrupted. That like as the diſeaſe named Lethargus amongſt the Philitians, even ſo the ſtate of Religion amongſt the Divines, was paſt all Mans help and remedy. The only name of Chriſt remained amongſt the Chriſtians, but his true and lively Doctrine was as far unknown unto the moſt part, as his name was common unto all Men. As touching Faith, Conſolation, the end and uſe of the Law, the Office of Chriſt, of our impotency and weakneſs, of the Holy Ghoſt, of the greatneſs and ſtrength of Sin, of true Works, Grace and free juſtification by Faith, of liberty of a Chriſtian Man, wherein conſiſteth and reſteth the ſum and matter of our profeſſion, there was no mention, nor any word almoſt ſpoken of. Scripture, Learning, and Divinity, was known but unto a few, and that in the Schools only, and there alſo turned and converted almoſt all into Sophiſtry. Inſtead of Peter and Paul, Men occupied their time in ſtudying Aquinas and Scotus, and the Maſter of Sentences. The world leaving and forſaking the lively power of Gods ſpiritual Word and Doctrine, was altogether led and blinded with outward Ceremonies and humane Traditions, wherein the whole ſcope, in a manner, of all Chriſtian perfection did conſiſt and depend. In theſe was all the hope of obtaining ſalvation fully fixed: hereunto all things were attributed. Inſomuch that ſcarcely any other thing was ſeen in the Temples or Churches taught or ſpoken of in Sermons, or finally intended or gone about in their whole life, but only heaping up of certain ſhadowed Ceremonies upon Ceremonies, neither was there any end of there heaping.

A deſcription of Wickliff's time.

The people were taught to worſhip no other thing but that which they did ſee; and did ſee almoſt nothing which they did not worſhip.

The Church being degenerated from the true Apoſtolick inſtitution above all meaſure (reſerving only the name of the Apoſtolick Church, but far from the truth thereof in very deed) did fall into all kind of extreme tyranny; whereas the poverty and ſimplicity of Chriſt was changed into cruelty and abomination of life. Inſtead of the Apoſtolick gifts and continual labors and travels, ſloath, idleneſs and ambition was crept in amongſt the Prieſts. Beſide all this, there aroſe and ſprung up a thouſand ſorts and faſhions of ſtrange Religions, being the only root and Well-head of all ſuperſtition. How great abuſes and depravations were crept into the Sacraments, at what time they were compelled to worſhip ſimilitudes and ſigns of things for the very things themſelves: and to adore ſuch things as were inſtituted and ordained only for memorials? Finally, what thing was there in the whole ſtate of Chriſtian Religion ſo ſincere, ſo ſound and pure, which was not defiled and ſpotted with ſome kind of ſuperſtition? Beſides this, with how many bonds and ſnares of daily new fangled Ceremonies were the ſilly Conſciences of Men, redeemed by Chriſt to liberty, ſnared and ſnarled? Inſomuch that there could be no great difference almoſt perceived between Chriſtianity and Jewiſhneſs, ſave only the name of Chriſt: ſo that the ſtate and condition of the Jews might ſeem ſomewhat more tolerable than ours. There was nothing ſought for out of the true Fountains, but out of the durty puddels of the Philiſtines; The Chriſtian people were wholly carried away as it were by the Noſes, with meer decrees and conſtitutions of Men, even whither as pleaſed the Biſhops to lead them, and not as Chriſts Will did direct them. All the whole world was filled and over-whelmed with error and darkneſs. And no great marvel; for why, the ſimple and unlearned people, being far from all knowledge of the Holy Scripture, thought it ſufficient enough for them, to know only theſe things which were delivered them by their Paſtors and Sheepherds, and they on the other part taught in a manner nothing elſe, but ſuch things as came forth of the Court of Rome; whereof the moſt part tended to the profit of their Order, more than to the glory of Chriſt.

All good things defiled and ſpotted with ſuperſtition.

The Chriſtian Faith was eſteemed or counted none other thing then, but that every Man ſhould know that Chriſt once ſuffered, that is to ſay, That all Men ſhould know and underſtand that thing which the Divels themſelves alſo knew. Hypocriſie was counted for wonderful Holineſs. All Men were ſo addict unto outward ſhews, that even they themſelves, which profeſſed the moſt abſolute and ſingular knowledge of the Scriptures, ſcarcely did underſtand or know any other thing. And this did evidently appear, not only in the common ſort of Doctors and Teachers, but alſo in the very heads and Captains of the Church; whoſe whole Religion and Holineſs, conſiſted in a manner in the obſerving of days, meats, and garments, and ſuch like Rhetorical circumſtances, as of place, time, perſon, &c. Hereof ſprang ſo many ſorts and faſhions of Veſtures and Garments; ſo many differences of colours and meats, with ſo many Pilgrimages to ſeveral places, as though S. James at Compoſtella could do that, which Chriſt could not do at Canterbury: or elſe that God were not of like power and ſtrength in every place, or could not be found, but being ſought for by running gadding hither and thither. Thus the Holineſs of the whole year was tranſported and put off unto the Lent ſeaſon. No Country or Land was counted Holy, but only Paleſtina, where Chriſt had walked himſelf with his corporal feet. Such was the blindneſs of that time, that Men did ſtrive and fight for the Croſs at Hieruſalem, as it had been for the chief and only force and ſtrength of our Faith. It is a wonder to read the Monuments of the former times, to ſee and underſtand what great troubles and calamities this Croſs had cauſed almoſt in every Chriſtian Commonwealth. For the Romiſh Champions never ceaſed, by writing, admoniſhing, and counſelling, yea and by quarrelling, to move and ſtir up Princes to mind War and Battel, even as though the Faith and belief of the Goſpel were of ſmall force, or little effect without that wooden Croſs. This was the cauſe of the expedition of the moſt noble Prince King Richard unto Hieruſalem. Who being taken in the ſame journey, and delivered unto the Emperor, could ſcarcely be ranſomed home again for 30 Marks, pag. 280. In the ſame enterpriſe or journey, Frederick the Emperor of Rome, a Man of moſt excellent vertue, was much endammaged, Anno. 1179. And alſo Philip the King of France ſcarcely returned home again in ſafety,

The Captains of the Church ſeduced as well as the inferior ſort.

Paleſtina deemed holy for Chriſts walking there.

Richard King of England.

Frederick the Emperor of Rome.

Philip King of France.

{KING Edw. 3} ſafety, and not without great loſſes: ſo much did they eſteem the recovery of the Holy City and Croſs.

Upon this alone all Mens eyes, minds, and devotions were ſo ſet and bent, as though either there were no other Croſs but that, or that the Croſs of Chriſt were in no other place but only at Jeruſalem. Such was the blindneſs and ſuperſtition of thoſe days, which underſtood or knew nothing but ſuch as were outwardly ſeen: whereas the profeſſion of our Religion ſtandeth in much other higher matters and greater myſteries. What is the cauſe why that Urbanus did ſo vex and torment himſelf, becauſe that Antioch, with the the Holy Croſs, was loſt out of the hands of the Chriſtians. For ſo we do find it in the Chronicles, at what time as Jeruſalem with King Guido and the Croſs of our Lord was taken, and under the power of the Sultan, Urbanus took the matter ſo grievouſly, that for very ſorrow he died. In whoſe place ſucceeded Lambertus, which was called Gregory the eighth, by whoſe motion it was decreed by the Cardinals, that (ſetting apart all riches and voluptuouſneſs) they ſhould Preach the Croſs of Chriſt, and by their Poverty and Humility firſt of all ſhould take the Croſs upon them, and go before others into the Land of Jeruſalem. Theſe are the words of the Hiſtory; whereby it is evident unto the vigilant Reader, unto what groſſneſs the true knowledg of the ſpiritual Doctrine of the Goſpel was degenerate and grown in thoſe days; how great blindneſs and darkneſs was in thoſe days, even in the firſt primacy, and ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome: as though the outward ſucceſſion of Peter and the Apoſtles had been of greater force and effect to the matter. What doth it force in what place Peter did rule or not rule? It is much more to be regarded that every Man ſhould labour and ſtudy with all their endeavour to follow the life and confeſſion of Peter: And that Man ſeemeth unto me to be true ſucceſſor of Peter againſt whom the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail. For if that Peter in the Goſpel do bear the type and figure of the Chriſtian Church (as all Men in a manner do affirm) what more fooliſh or vain thing can there be; than through private uſurpation to reſtrain and to bind that unto one Man, which by the appointment of the Lord, is of it ſelf free and open to ſo many?

The riſing up of Wickliff in troublous time.

Thus in theſe ſo great and troublous times and horrible darkneſs of ignorance, what time there ſeemed in a manner to be no one ſo little a ſpark of pure Doctrine left or remaining; this aforeſaid Wickliff by Gods providence ſprang and roſe up: through whom the Lord would firſt waken and raiſe up again the world, which was overmuch drowned and whelmed in the deep ſtreams of humane Traditions. Thus you have here the time of Wickliff's original.

Wickliff a Divine of Oxford.

Which Wickliff, after he had now a long time profeſſed Divinity in the Univerſity of Oxford, and perceiving the true Doctrine of Chriſts Goſpel to be adulterate and defiled with ſo many filthy inventions of Biſhops, ſects of Monks, and dark errors: And that he after long debating and deliberating with himſelf (with many ſecret ſighs, and bewailing in his mind the general ignorance of the whole world) could no longer ſuffer or abide the ſame; he at the laſt determined with himſelf to help and to remedy ſuch things as he ſaw to be wide and out of the way. But foraſmuch as he ſaw that this dangerous medling could not be attempted or ſtirred without great trouble, neither that theſe things, which had been ſo long time with uſe and cuſtom rooted and grafted in Mens minds, could be ſuddenly plucked up or taken away, he thought with himſelf that this matter ſhould be done by little and little. Wherefore he taking his original at ſmall occaſions, thereby opened himſelf a way or mean to greater matters. And firſt he aſſailed his adverſaries in Logical and Metaphyſical queſtions, diſputing with them of the firſt form and faſhion of things, of the increaſe of time, and of the intelligible ſubſtance of a creature, with other ſuch like Sophems of no great effect: but yet notwithſtanding, it did not a little help and furniſh him, which minded to diſpute of greater matters. So in theſe matters firſt began Keningham (a Carmelite) to diſpute and argue againſt John Wickliff.

By theſe originals, the way was made unto greater points, ſo that at the length he came to touch the matters of the Sacraments, and other abuſes of the Church. Touching which things this holy Man took great pains, proteſting (as they ſaid) openly in the Schools, That it was his chief and principal purpoſe and intent, to revoke and call back the Church from her Idolatry to ſome better amendment; eſpecially in the matter of the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt. But this Bile or ſore could not be touched without the great grief and pain of the whole world. For firſt of all, the whole glut of Monks and begging Friers were ſet on a rage and madneſs, which (even as Hornets with their ſharp ſtings) did aſſail this good Man on every ſide; fighting (as is ſaid) for their Altars, Paunches and Bellies. After them the Prieſts, and then after them the Archbiſhop took the matter in hand, being then Simon Sudbury; who for the ſame cauſe deprived him of his Benefice, which then he had in Oxford. Notwithſtanding, he being ſomewhat friended and ſupported by the King, as appeareth, continued and bare out the malice of the Friers, and of the Archbiſhop all this while of his firſt beginning, till about the year of our Lord, 1377. After which time, now to proſecute likewiſe of his troubles and conflict, firſt I muſt fetch about a little compaſs, as requiſite is, to infer ſome mention of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter the Kings Son, Lord Henry Percy, which were his ſpecial maintainers.

As years and time grew on, King Edward the Thrid which had Reigned now about 51 years, after the deceaſe of Prince Edward his Son, who departed the year before, was ſtricken in great age, and in ſuch feebleneſs withal, that he was unwildy through lack of ſtrength to govern the affairs of the Realm. Wherefore a Parliament being called the year before his death, it was there put by the Knights and other the Burgeſſes of the Parliament becauſe of the miſgovernment of the Realm (by certain greedy perſons about the King, raking all to themſelves, without ſeeing any juſtice done) that twelve ſage and diſcreet Lords, and Peers, ſuch as were free from note of all avarice, ſhould be placed as Tutors about the King, to have the doing and diſpoſing under him (ſix at one time, and in their abſence, ſix at another) of matters pertaining to the publick Regiment. Here by the way, I omit to ſpeak of Alice Perris the wicked Harlot, which as the ſtory reporteth) had bewitched the Kings heart, and governed all, and ſate upon cauſes her ſelf through the diveliſh help of a Frier Dominck: who by the Duke of Lancaſter was cauſed to be taken, and was convicted, and ſhould have ſuffered for the ſame, had not the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Friers (more regarding the liberty of their Church, than the puniſhment of vice) reclaimed him for their own priſoner. This Alice Perris, notwithſtanding ſhe was baniſhed by this Parliament from the King, yet afterward ſhe came again, and left him not, till at his death ſhe took all his Rings upon his fingers and other jewels from him, and ſo fled away like an Harlot. But this of her by the way.

Alice Perris the Kings Concubine. The King bewitched by a woman through the help of a Frier.

The property of an Whore.

Theſe twelve Governors by Parliament aforeſaid being appointed to have the tuition of the King, and to attend the publick affairs of the Realm, remained for a certain ſpace about him; till afterward it ſo fell out, that they being again removed, all the Regiment of the Realm, next under the King, was committed to the Duke of Lancaſter the Kings Son. For as yet Richard, the Son of Prince Edward, lately departed, was very young and under age.

Twelve Governors aſſigned about the King.

This Duke of Lancaſter had in his heart of long time conceived a certain diſpleaſure, againſt the Popiſh Clergy; whether for corrupt and impure Doctrine ioyned with like abominable exceſs of life, or for what other cauſe, it is not preciſely expreſſed. Only by ſtory the cauſe thereof may be gueſſed to riſe by William Wickam Biſhop of Wincheſter. The matter is this.

Ex Chron. Monaſterii Albani.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter (as the ſaying went then) was reported to affirm, That the foreſaid John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter, was not the Son of King Edward, nor of the Queen. Who, being in Travail at Gaunt, had no Son (as he ſaid) but a Daughter: which the ſame time by lying upon of the Mother in the Bed, was there ſmothered. Whereupon, the Queen, fearing the Kings diſpleaſure, cauſed a certain Man Child of a Woman of Flanders (born the very ſame time) to be conveyed, and brought unto her inſtead of her Daughter aforeſaid. And ſo ſhe brought up the Child whom ſhe bare not, who now is called Duke of Lancaſter. And this (ſaid the Biſhop) did the Queen tell him, lying in extreams on her death-bed under ſeal of Confeſſion; charging him if the ſaid Duke ſhould ever aſpire to get the Crown, or if the Kingdom by any means ſhould fall unto him, he then ſhould manifeſt the ſame, and declare it to the world, that the ſaid Duke of Lancaſter was no part of the Kings blood, but a falſe heir of the King. This ſlanderous report of the wicked Biſhop, as it favoureth of a contumelious lye, ſo ſeemeth it to proceed of a ſubtile zeal toward the Popes Religion, meaning falſhood. For the foreſaid Duke, by favouring of Wickliff, declared himſelf to be a profeſſed enemy againſt the Popes profeſſion: Which thing was then not unknown, neither unmarked of the Prelates and Biſhops then in England. But the ſequel of the Story thus followed:

W. Wickham B. of Wint. deprived.

This ſlanderous villany of the Biſhops report being blazed abroad, and coming to the Dukes ear: he therewith being not a little diſcontented (as no marvel was) ſought again, by what means he could, to be revenged of this forenamed Biſhop. In concluſion, the Duke having now all the government of the Realm under the King his Father, in his own hands, ſo purſued the Biſhop of Wincheſter, that by Act of Parliament he was condemned and deprived of all his Temporal Goods; which Goods were aſſigned to Prince Richard of Burdeaux, the next inheritor of the Crown after the King; and furthermore he inhibited the ſaid Biſhop not to approach near to the Court by twenty miles. Further as touching this Biſhop, the ſtory thus proceedeth: Not long after in the year of our Lord, 1377, a Parliament was called by the means of the Duke of Lancaſter, upon certain cauſes and reſpects: in which Parliament great requeſt and ſute was made by the Clergy for the deliverance of the Biſhop of Wincheſter. At length when a Subſidy was asked in the Kings name of the Clergy, and requeſt alſo made in the Kings behalf for ſpeedy expedition to be made for the diſſolving of the Parliament, the Archbiſhop therefore accordingly convented the Biſhops for the tractation thereof. To whom the Biſhops with great lamentation complaining for lack of their fellow and Brother the Biſhop of Wincheſter: Whoſe injury, ſaid they, did derogate from the liberties of the whole Church; And therefore denied to joyn themſelves in tractation of any ſuch matters, before all the members together were united with the head. And (ſeeing the matter touched them all together in common, as well him as them) they would not otherwiſe do. And ſeemed moreover to be moved againſt the Archbiſhop for that he was not more ſtout in the cauſe, but ſuffered himſelf ſo to be cited of the Duke.

B. of Wint. ſent for to the convocation.

The Archbiſhop although having ſufficient cauſe to excuſe himſelf, wherefore not to ſend for him (as alſo he did) becauſe of the perils which might enſue thereof: yet being inforced and perſwaded thereunto, by the importunity of the Biſhops, directed down his Letters to the foreſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, willing him to reſort unto the Convocation of the Clergy. Who being glad to obey the ſame, was received with great joy of the other Biſhops. And at length by the means of Alice Perris, the Kings Paramour above mentioned, (giving to her a good quantity of money) the ſaid Wincheſter was reſtored to his own Temporalties again.

John Wickliff ſent for by the Duke of Lancaſter.

As the Biſhops had thus ſent for Wincheſter, the Duke in the mean time had ſent for John Wickliff who, as is ſaid, was then the Divinity Reader in Oxford, and had commenced in ſundry acts and diſputations contrary to the form and teaching of the Popes Church in many things: who alſo for the ſame had been deprived of his Benefice, as hath been afore touched. The opinions which he began in Oxford, firſt in his Lectures and Sermons to intreat of, and wherefore he was deprived, were theſe: That the Pope had no more power to Excommunicate any man than hath another. That if it be given by any perſon to the Pope to Excommunicate, yet to abſolve the ſame is as much in the power of another Prieſt as in his. He affirmed moreover, That neither the King nor any Temporal Lord could give any perpetuity to the Church, or to any Eccleſiaſtical perſon: for that when ſuch Eccleſiaſtical perſons do offend, habitualiter, continuing in the ſame ſtill, the Temporal powers ought and may meritoriouſly take away from them, that before hath been beſtowed upon them. And that he proved to have been practiſed before here in England by William Rufus. Which thing (ſaid he) if he did lawfully, why may not the ſame alſo be practiſed now? If he did it unlawfully, then doth the Church err (ſaith he) and doth unlawfully in praying for him. But of his aſſertions more ſhall follow (Chriſt willing) hereafter. The ſtory which aſcribed to him theſe aſſertions being taken out (as I take it) of the Monaſtery of S. Albans, addeth withal: That in his teaching and preaching he was very eloquent, but a diſſembler (ſaith he) and an hypocrite. Why he ſurmiſeth him to be an hypocrite, the cauſe was this:

Example of W. Rufus.

Ex hiſto. Monaſterii D. Albani.

Firſt, Becauſe he reſorted much to the Orders of the begging Friers, frequenting and extolling the perfection of their poverty.

Secondly, Becauſe he and his fellows uſually accuſtomed in their preaching to go barefoot, and in ſimple ruſſet Gowns.

By this I ſuppoſe, may ſufficiently appear to the indifferent, the nature and condition of Wickliff, how far it was from the ambition and pride, which in the ſlanderous Pen of Polydore Virgil reporting in his 19th. Book of him, that becauſe he was not preferred to higher honors and dignities of the Church (conceiving therefore indignation againſt the Clergy) he became their mortal enemy. How true was this, he only knoweth beſt, that rightly ſhall judge both the one and the other.

The ſlanderous Pen of Polydore.

In the mean time, by other circumſtances and parts of his life, we may alſo partly conjecture what is to be thought of the Man. But howſoever it was in him either true or falſe; yet it had been Polydores part either not ſo intemperately to have abuſed his Pen, or at leaſt to have ſhewed ſome greater authority and ground of that his report. For to follow nothing elſe but flying fame, ſo raſhly to defame a Man whoſe life he knoweth not, is not the part of a faithful Story-writer.

Wickliff falſely charged with ambition by Polydore.

But to return from whence we digreſſed. Beſide theſe his opinions and aſſertions above recited, with other moe, which are hereafter to be brought in order; he began alſo then ſomething nearly to touch the matter of the Sacrament, proving that in the ſaid Sacrament, the accidents of Bread remained not without the ſubject of ſubſtance; both by the Holy Scriptures, and alſo by the authority of the Doctors, but ſpecially by ſuch as were moſt ancient. As for the later Writers, that is to ſay, ſuch as have written upon that argument under the thouſand years ſince Chriſts time, he uterly refuſed; ſaying, That after theſe years Satan was looſed and ſet at liberty. And that ſince that time the life of Man hath been moſt ſubject and in danger of errors: and that the ſimple and plain truth doth appear and conſiſt in the Scriptures, whereunto all humane Traditions whatſoever they be, muſt be referred, and ſpecially ſuch as are ſet forth and publiſhed now of late years. This was the cauſe why he refuſed the later Writers of Decretals, leaning only to the Scriptures and ancient Doctors: moſt ſtoutly affirming out of them, That in the Sacrament of the body which is celebrate, with bread, the accidents not to be preſent without the ſubſtance. That is to ſay, That the body of Chriſt is not preſent without the bread, as the common ſort of Prieſts in thoſe days did dream. As for his Arguments what they were, we will ſhortly at more opportunity by Gods Grace, declare them in another place. But herein the truth (as the Poet ſpeaketh very truly) had gotten John Wickliff great diſpleaſure and hatred at many Mens hands; and eſpecially of the Monks and richeſt ſort of Prieſts.

The later writers of the Church to be miſdoubted. The accidents not to be in the Sacrament without the ſubſtance.

Albeit through the favour and ſupportation of the Duke of Lancaſter, and Lord Henry Percy, he perſiſted hitherto in ſome mean quiet againſt the Wolviſh violence and cruelty: Till at laſt about the year of our Lord, 1376, the Biſhops ſtill urging and inciting their Archbiſhop Simon Sudbury, who before had deprived him, and afterward prohibited him alſo not to ſtir any more in thoſe ſorts of matters, had obtained by Proceſs and order of Citation to have him brought before them. Whereunto both place and time for him to appear, after their uſual form, was to him aſſigned.

The

KING Edw.3

The Duke having intelligence that Wickliff his client should come before the Bishops, fearing that he being but one, was too weak against such a multitude, calleth to him, out of the orders of Friers, four Bachelors of Divinity, out of every order one to join them with Wickliff also for more suretie. When the day was come assigned to the said Wickliff to appear, which day was Thursday, the nineteenth of February: John Wickliff went accompanied with the four Friers aforesaid, and with them also the Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henry Percy, Lord Marshal of England; the said Lord Percy also going before them to make room and way where Wickliff should come.

Ex Hist. Monachi D. Albani ex accommodato D. Matth. Archiep. Cant.

Thus Wickliff (through the Providence of God) being sufficiently guarded, was coming to the place where the Bishops sate; whom by the way they animated and exhorted not to fear nor shrink awhit at the company of the Bishops there present, who were all unlearned (said they) in respect of him. For so proceed the words of my foresaid Author, whom I follow in this Narration: neither that he should dread the concourse of the people, whom they would themselves assist and defend, in such sort as he should take no harm. With these words, and with the assistance of the Nobles, Wickliff, in heart incouraged, approached to the Church of St. Paul in London, where a main press of people was gathered to hear what should be said and done. Such was there the frequency and throng of the multitude, that the Lords (for all the puissance of the high Marshal) unneth with great difficulty could get way through: Insomuch that the Bishop of London (whose name was William Courtney) seeing the stir that the Lord Marshal kept in the Church among the people, speaking to the Lord Percy, said, That if he had known before what Mastries he would have kept in the Church, he would have stopped him out from coming there. At which words of the Bishop the Duke disdaining not a little, answered to the Bishop again, and said, That he would keep such mastry there, though he said nay.

Striving for the Lords to pass by the people.

W. Courtney Bishop of London.

The words of the Bishop of London to the Lord Percy.

At last, after much wrastling they pierced through and came to our Ladies Chappel; where the Dukes and Barons were sitting together with the Archbishops and other Bishops. Before whom the foresaid John Wickliff, according to the manner, stood to know what should be laid unto him. To whom first spake the Lord Percy, bidding him to sit down, saying, That he had many things to answer to, and therefore had need of some softer seat. But the Bishop of London, cast eftsoons into a furnish chase with those words, said, He should not sit there. Neither was it, said he, according to Law or Reason, that he, which was cited there to appear to answer before his Ordinary, should sit down during the time of his answer, but should stand. Upon these words a fire began to heat and kindle between them: Insomuch that they began so to rate and revile one the other, that the whole multitude, therewith disquieted, began to be set on a hurry.

Wickliff bid to sit down before the Bishops.

Wickliff denied by the Bishop of London to sit down.

Strife between the Lord Marshal and Bishop of London.

The people set in a stir.

Then the Duke, taking the Lord Percies part, with hasty words began also to take up the Bishop. To whom the Bishop again nothing inferior to reproachful checks and rebukes, did render and requite not only to him as good as he brought; but also did so far excel him in this railing art of scoulding, that to use the words of mine Author, Erubuit Dux quod non potuit prævalere litigio. i. that the Duke blushed and was ashamed, because he could not overpass the Bishop in bawling and railing, and therefore fell to plain threatning, meanacing the Bishop, that he would bring down the pride not only of him, but also of all the Prelacy of England. And speaking moreover unto him: Thou (said he) beareſt thy self so brag upon thy Parents, which shall not be able to help thee; they shall have enough to do to help themselves. For his Parents were the Earl and Countess of Devonshire. To whom the Bishop again answered, That to be bold to tell truth, his confidence was not in his Parents, nor in any man else, but only in God in whom he trusted. Then the Duke softly whispering in the Ear of him next by him, said, That he would rather pluck the Bishop by the Hair of his Head out of the Church, than he would take this at his Hand. This was not spoken so secretly, but that the Londoners overheard him. Whereupon being set in rage, they cried out, saying, That they would not suffer their Bishop so contemptuously to be abused. But rather they would lose their lives, than that he should so be drawn out by the hair. Thus that Council, being broken with scolding and brawling for that day, was dissolved before nine of the Clock. And the Duke with the Lord Percy went to the Parliament; where the same day before dinner, a Bill was put up in the name of the King by the Lord Thomas Woſtock, and Lord Henry Percy, that the City of London should no more be governed by a Mayor, but by a Captain, as in times before. And that the Marshal of England should have all the ado in taking the Arrests within the said City, as in other Cities besides, with other Petitions more, tending to the like derogation of the Liberties of London. Which Bill being read, John Philpot, Burgess then for the City, standeth up, saying to them which read the Bill, That that was never seen so before; and adding moreover, That the Mayor would never suffer any such things, or other Arrest to be brought into the City, with more such words like stoutness.

This Bishop of London was W. Courtney son to the Earl of Devonshire.

The Duke threatneth to draw their Bishop by the hair out of the Church.

Londoners take part with their Bishop.

Petitions put up in the Parliament against the City of London.

The next day following the Londoners assembled themselves in a Council, to consider among them upon the Bill for changing the Mayor, and about the Office of the Marshal, also concerning the injuries done the day before of to their Bishop.

Hasty counsel of the Londoners.

In which mean time they being busie in long Consultation of this matter, suddainly and unawares entred in the place two certain Lords, whether to come to spy, or for what other cause the Author leaveth it uncertain, the one called Lord Fitz-Walter, the other Lord Guy Brian. At the first coming in of them the vulgar sort was ready forthwith to fly upon them as spies, had not they made their protestation with an Oath, declaring that their coming in was for no harm toward them. And so they were compelled by the Citizens to Swear to the City their truth and fidelity, contrary to the which Oath if they should rebel, they would be contented to forfeit whatsoever Goods and Possessions they had within the City.

This done, then began the Lord Fitz-Walter in this wise to perswade and exhort the Citizens; first declaring how he was bound and obliged to them and to their City, not for the Oath only now newly received, but of old and ancient good will from his great Grand-fathers time. Besides other divers duties, for the which he was chiefly bound to be one of their principal tautors; forasmuch as whatsoever tendeth to their damage and detriment, redounded also no less unto his own; for which cause he could not otherwise chuse, but that what he did understand to be attempted against the publick Profit and Liberties of the City, he must needs communicate the same to them. Who unless they with speedy circumspection do occur and prevent perils that may and are like to ensue, it would turn in the end to their no small incommodity. And as there were many other things, which required their vigilant care and diligence, so one thing there was, which he could in no wise but admonish them of; which was this, necessary to be considered of them all, how the Lord Marshal Henry Percy in his place within himself had one in Ward and Custody, whether with the knowledge, or without the knowledge of them, he could not tell: this he could tell, that the said Lord Marshal was not allowed any such Ward or Prison in his House, within the Liberties of the City. Which thing if it be not seen to in time, the example thereof being suffered, would in fine breed to such a prejudice unto their Customs and Liberties, as they should not hereafter, when they would, reform the injury thereof.

The Oration of the Lord Fitz-Walter to the Londoners.

These words of the Lord Fitz-Walter were not so soon spoken, but they were as soon taken of the rash Citizens; who in all hasty fury running to their Armor and Weapons, went incontinently to the House of the Lrod Percy, where, breaking up the Gates, by violence they took out the Prisoner, and burned the Stocks wherein he sate, in the midst of London. Then was the Lord Percy sought for; whom (saith the Story) they would doubtless have slain if they might have found him. With their Bills, and Javelins all corners and privy Chambers were searched, Beds and Hangings torn asunder. But the Lord Percy (as God would) was then with the Duke, whom one John Ryer the same day with great instance had desired to Dinner.

The Londoners not finding him at home, and supposing that he was with the Duke at Savoy, in all hasty heat turned their power thither, running as fast as they could to to the Dukes Houſe; where alſo in like manner they were diſappointed of their cruel purpoſe. In the mean while as this was doing, cometh one of the Dukes men running in poſt haſte to the Duke and to the Lord Percy, declaring what was done. The Duke being then at his Oyſters, without any further tarrying, and alſo breaking both his ſhins at the Form for haſte, took Boat with the Lord Percy, and by Water went to Kingſtone, where then the Princeſs with Richard the young Prince did lie. Who there declared unto the Princeſs all the whole matter, concerning the outrage of the Londoners as it was. To whom ſhe promiſed again, that ſuch an order ſhould be taken in the matter, as ſhould be to his contentation. At what time the Commons of London thus as is ſaid, were about the Dukes Houſe at Savoy, there meeteth with them a certain Prieſt, who marvelling at the ſuddain rage and concourſe, asked what they ſought. To whom anſwer was given again of ſome, that they ſought for the Duke and the Lord Marſhal, to have of them the Lord Peter de la Mare, whom they wrongfully had detained in Priſon. To this the Prieſt anſwered again more boldly than opportunely: That Peter (ſaid he) is a falſe Traitor, to the King, and worthy long ſince to be hanged. At the hearing of theſe words the furious people with a terrible ſhout cried out upon him, that he was a Traitor and one that took the Dukes part, and ſo falling upon him with their Weapons, ſtrived who might firſt ſtrike him. Who after they had wounded him very ſore, ſo being wounded they had him into Priſon, where within few days upon the ſoreneſs of his wounds he died.

The Duke and Lord Percy fly to the Prince.

A Prieſt in the Duke of Lancaſter's Houſe cruelly killed.

Neither would the rage of the people thus have ceaſed, had not the Biſhop of London, leaving his Dinner, come to them at Savoy, and putting them in remembrance of the bleſſed time (as they term it) of Lent, had perſwaded them to ceaſe and to be quiet.

The villany of the Londoners againſt the Duke.

The Londoners ſeeing that they could get no vantage againſt the Duke, who was without their reach; to wreak their anger they took his Arms, which in moſt deſpiteful ways they hanged up, in the open places of the City in ſign of reproach, as for a Traitor. Inſomuch that when one of his Gentlemen came through the City, with a Plate containing the Dukes Arms, hanging by a Lace about his Neck, the Citizens not abiding the ſight thereof, caſt him from his Horſe, and pluckt his Eſcutcheon from him, and were about to work the extremity againſt him, had not the Mayor reſcued him out of their hands, and ſent him home ſafe unto the Duke his Maſter. In ſuch hatred was then the Duke among the vulgar people of London.

The meſſage of the Princeſs to the Londoners.

After this the Princeſs, underſtanding the hearts and broil of the Londoners ſet againſt the foreſaid Duke, ſent unto London three Knights, Sir Albred Lewer, Sir Simon Burle, and Sir Lewes Cliffort, to entreat the Citizens to be reconciled with the Duke. The Londoners anſwered, That they, for the honour of the Princeſs, would obey and do with all reverence what ſhe would require. But this they required and enjoyned the Meſſengers to ſay to the Duke by word of mouth: that he ſhould ſuffer the Biſhop of Wincheſter afore-mentioned, and alſo the Lord Peter de la Mare, to come to their anſwer, and to be judged by their Peers. Whereby either they might be quit if they were guiltleſs; or otherwiſe if they be found culpable, they might receive according to their deſerts after the Laws of the Realm. What grief and diſpleaſure the Duke conceived and retained in his mind thereof: Again, what means and ſuit the Londoners for their part made to the old King for their Liberties: What Rimes and Songs in London were made againſt the Duke: How the Biſhops at the Dukes requeſt were moved to Excommunicate thoſe malicious ſlanderers: And moreover how the Duke at laſt was revenged of thoſe contumelies and injuries: How he cauſed them to be brought before the King: How ſharply they were rebuked for their miſdemeanour by the worthy Oration of the Lord Chamberlain, Robert Aſton, in the preſence of the King, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, with divers other States the Kings Children, and other Nobilities of the Realm: In concluſion, how the Londoners were compelled to this at length, by the common aſſent and publick charges of the City, to make a great Taper of Wax, which, with the Dukes Arms ſet upon it, ſhould be brought with Solemn Proceſſion to the Church of St. Paul, there to burn continually before the Image of our Lady: And at laſt, how both the ſaid Duke and the Londoners were reconciled together, in the beginning of the new King: with the kiſs of peace, and the ſame reconcilement publickly denounced in the Church of Weſtminſter, and what joy was in the whole City thereof: Theſe, becauſe they are impertinent and make too long a digreſſion from the matter of Wickliff, I cut off with brevity, referring the Reader to other Hiſtories namely of St. Albans, where they are to be found at large.

KING Edw. 3 The Londoners cauſed to bear a Taper of Wax in proceſſion in honour of the Duke.

As theſe foreſaid for brevity ſake I paſs over, ſo will not be long, and yet cannot omit that, which happened the ſame time and year to the Biſhop of Norwich, to the intent that this Poſterity now may ſee, to what pride the Clergy of the Popes Church was then grown. The ſame time as this broil was at London, the Biſhop of Norwich a little after the time of Eaſter coming to the Town of Lennam, belonging to his Lordſhip: being not contented with the old accuſtomed honour due unto him, and uſed of his predeceſſors before in the ſame Town, required moreover with a new and unuſed kind of magnificence to be exalted: Inſomuch that when he ſaw the chief Magiſtrate or Mayor of that Town to go in the ſtreets with his Officer going before him, holding a certain Wand in his hand tipped at both ends with black Horn, as the manner was; he reputing himſelf to be Lord of that Town (as he was) and thinking to be higher than the higheſt, commanded the honour of that Staff due to the Mayor, to be yielded and born before his Lordly perſonage. The Mayor or Bailiff, with other the Townſmen, courteouſly anſwered to him again, That they were right willing and contented with all their hearts to exhibit that reverence unto him, and would ſo do, if he firſt of the King and Council could obtain that Cuſtom, and if the ſame might be induced after any peaceable way with the good wills of the Commons and Body of the Town: Otherwiſe ſaid they, as the matter was dangerous, ſo they durſt not take in hand any ſuch new alteration of ancient Cuſtoms and Liberties, leſt the people (which is always inclinable and prone to evil) do fall upon them with ſtones, and drive them out of the Town. Wherefore kneeling on their knees before him, there humbly they beſought him that he would require no ſuch thing of them: that he would ſave his own honour and their lives, who otherwiſe if he intended that way, were in great danger. But the Biſhop, youthful and haughty, taking occaſion by their humbleneſs, to ſwell the more in himſelf, anſwered, That he would not be taught by their counſel, but that he would have it done, though all the Commons (whom he named Ribals) ſaid nay. Alſo he rebuked the Mayor and his Brethren for Mecocks and daſtards, for ſo fearing the vulgar ſort of people.

A ſtory of the Biſhop of Norwich.

Example of Pride in the Clergy.

The concourſe of the Townſmen toward the Biſhop.

The ſtout anſwer of the Biſhop to the Townſhip.

The Citizens perceiving the wilful ſtoutneſs of the Biſhop, meekly anſwering again, ſaid, They minded not to reſiſt him, but to let him do therein what he thought good: only they deſired him that he would Licenſe them to depart, and hold them excuſed for not waiting upon him, and conducting him out of the Town with that reverence which he required. For if they ſhould be ſeen in his company, all the ſuſpition thereof would be upon them, and ſo ſhould they be all in danger, ſo much as their lives were worth. The Biſhop not regarding their advice and counſel, commanded one of his men to take the Rod born before the Mayor, and to carry the ſame before him. Which being done, and perceived of the Commons, the Biſhop after that manner went not far, but the rude people running to ſhut the Gates, came out with their Bows, ſome with Clubs and Staves, ſome with other inſtruments, ſome with Stones, and let drive at the Biſhop and his men, as faſt as they might; in ſuch ſort, that both the Biſhop and his Horſe under him with moſt part of his men were hurt and wounded. And thus the glorious pride of this jolly Prelate, ruffling in his new Scepter, was received and welcomed there. That is, he was ſo pelted with Bats and ſtones, ſo wounded with Arrows, and other inſtruments fit for ſuch a skirmiſh, that the moſt part of his men, with his Mace-bearer, all running away from him, the poor wounded Biſhop was there left alone, not able to keep his old power, which went about to uſurp a new power more than to him belonged. Thus as it is commonly true in all, ſo is it well exemplified here, which is commonly ſaid, and as it is commonly ſeen, that Pride will have a fall, and Power uſurped will never ſtand. In like manner, if the Citizens of {KING Edw. 3} Rome, following the example of theſe Lennam-men, as they have the like cauſe, and greater, to do by the uſurped power of their Biſhop, would after the ſame ſawce handle the Pope, and unſcepter him of his Mace and regality, which nothing pertaineth to him; they in ſo doing both ſhould recover their own liberties, with more honor at home, and alſo win much more commendation abroad. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

Rome,

The uſurped power of the Pope would have a bridle.

This Tragedy with all the parts thereof, being thus ended at Lennam, which was a little after Eaſter, (as is ſaid) about the month of April, An. 1377. the ſame year upon the 12*th.* day of the month of June next after, died the worthy and victorious Prince King Edward the Third, after he had Reigned 51 years. A Prince no more aged in years than renowned for many ſingular and Heroical vertues, but principally noted and lauded for his ſingular meekneſs and clemency towards his ſubjects and inferiors, ruling them by gentleneſs and mercy without all rigor or auſtere ſeverity. Among other Noble and Royal Ornaments of his nature, worthily and copiouſly ſet forth of many, thus he is deſcribed by ſome, which may briefly ſuffice for the comprehenſion of all the reſt: Orphanis erat quaſi pater, afflictis compatiens, miſeris condolens, oppreſſos defendens, & cunctis indigentibus impendens auxilia opportuna. That is, To the Orphans he was as a Father, compaſſent to the afflicted, mourning with the miſerable, relieving the oppreſſed, and to all them that wanted an helper in time of need, &c. But chiefly above all other things in this Prince, in my mind, to be commemorate is this, that he above all other Kings of this Realm, unto the time of King Henry the eighth, was the greateſt briller of the Popes uſurped power, and outragious oppreſſions: during all the time of which King, neither the Pope could greatly prevail in this Realm, and alſo John Wickliff was maintained with favour and aid ſufficient.

{Anno 1377} The death of King Edward.

But before we cloſe up the ſtory of this King, there cometh to hand that which I thought good not to omit, the noble purpoſe of the King in requiring a view to be taken in all his Dominions of all Benefices and Dignities Eccleſiaſtical remaining in the hands of Italians and Aliens, with the true valuation of the ſame, directed down by Commiſſion; whereof the like alſo is to be found in the time of King Richard the Second, the tenor of which Commiſſion of King Edward I thought here under to ſet down for worthy memory.

The King directed Writs unto all the Biſhops of England in this form.

{Anno 48 Edwardi Tertii.} EDward by the Grace of God, King, &c. To the Reverend Father in Chriſt N. by the ſame Grace Biſhop L. Greeting. Being willing upon certain cauſes to be certified what and how many Benefices as well Archdeaconries and other Dignities, as Vicarages, Parſonages, Prebends and Chappels, within your Dioceſs, be at this preſent in the hands of Italians and other ſtrangers, what they be, of what value, and how every of the ſaid Benefices be called by name; and how much every of the ſame is worth by the year, not as by way of Tax or extent, but according to the true value of the ſame; and likewiſe of the names of all and ſingular ſuch ſtrangers being now Incumbents or occupying the ſame and every of them; moreover the names of all them, whether Engliſh-men or ſtrangers, of what ſtate or condition ſoever they be, which have the occupation or diſpoſition of any ſuch Benefices with the fruits and profits of the ſame, in the behalf, or by the authority of any the foreſaid ſtrangers by way of farm, or title, or procuration, or by any other ways or means whatſoever, and how long they have occupied or diſpoſed the ſame; and withal if any the ſaid ſtrangers be now reſidents upon any Benefices; we command you, as heretofore commanded you, that you ſend us a true certificate of all and ſingular the premiſes, into our High Court of Chancery under your Seal diſtinctly and openly, on this ſide the Feaſt of the Aſcenſion of our Lord next coming, without further delay: returning unto us this our Writ withal. Witneſs our ſelf at Weſtminſter the 16*th.* day of April in the 48*th.* year of our Reign of England, and over France the 35*th.* year.

By vertue hereof, Certificate was ſent up to the King into his Chancery, out of every Dioceſs of England, of all ſuch Spiritual Livings as were then in the occupation either of Priors Aliens, or of other ſtrangers; whereof the number was ſo great, as being all ſet down, it would fill almoſt half a Quier of Paper. Whereby may appear that it was high time for the King to ſeek remedy herein, either by treaty with the Pope or otherwiſe; conſider ſo great a portion of the revenues of his Realm was by this means conveyed away and employed either to the relief of his Enemies, or maintenance of the Foreigners: amongſt which number the Cardinals of the Court of Rome lacked not their ſhare; as may appear by this which followeth.

The Lord Francis of the title of S. Sabine, Prieſt and Cardinal of the Holy Church of Rome, doth hold and enjoy the Deanry of the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, in the juriſdiction of Lichfield, which is worth five hundred Marks by the year; and the Prebend of Brewood, and the Parſonage of Adbaſton to the ſame Deanry annexed, which Prebend is worth by the year fourſcore Marks, and the Parſonage twenty pounds; which Deanry with the Prebends and Parſonage aforeſaid, he hath holden and occupied by the ſpace of three years. And one Maſter De Ingris a ſtranger, as Proctor to the ſaid Cardinal, doth hold and occupy the ſame Deanry with other the premiſes with the appurtenances, by name of Proctor during the years aforeſaid, and hath taken up the fruits and profits, for the ſaid Cardinal, dwelling not in the Realm. Coventry and Lichfield.

Lord William Cardinal of S. Angelo, a ſtranger, doth hold the Archdeaconry of Suffolk, by vertue of proviſion Apoſtolical, from the Feaſt of Saint Nicholas laſt paſt; he is not reſident upon his ſaid Archdeaconry. And the ſaid Archdeaconry, together with the Procurations due by reaſon of the Viſitation, is worth by year, 66 l. 13 s. 4 d. And Maſter John of Helimington, &c. doth occupy the Seal of the Official of the ſaid Archdeaconry, &c. Norwich.

The Lord Anglicus of the Holy Church of Rome Prieſt and Cardinal, a ſtranger, was Incumbent, and did hold in poſſeſſion the Deanry of the Cathedral Church of York, from the 11*th.* day of November, Anno. 1366. and is yearly worth according to the true value thereof, four hundred pounds; and M. John of Stoke, Canon of the ſaid Church, doth occupy the ſaid Deanry and the profits of the ſame, in the name or by the authority of the ſaid Lord Dean, &c. But the ſaid Dean was never reſident upon the ſaid Deanry ſince he was admitted thereunto. Ebor.

Item, Lord Hugh of our Lady in Deacon and Cardinal, a ſtranger, doth poſſeſs the Prebend of Driffild in the ſaid Church of York from the ſeventh day of June, An. Dom. 1363. from which day, &c. John of Gisbourne, and George Conpemanthorp, &c. do occupy the ſaid Prebend, worth by year one hundred pounds; the ſaid Lord Hugh is not reſident upon the ſaid Prebend.

Item, Lord Simon of the title of S. Sixt Prieſt and Cardinal, &c. doth poſſeſs the Prebend of Wiſtow in the ſaid Church of York, worth by year 100 l. And the foreſaid Maſter John of Stoke doth occupy the foreſaid Prebend and the profits thereof, &c. But the ſaid Lord Simon is not reſident upon the ſaid Prebend. Saribus

Item, Lord Francis of the title of S. Sabine, Prieſt and Cardinal, a ſtranger, doth poſſeſs the Prebend of Stranſal in the ſaid Church of York, worth by year 100 Marks. And Maſter William of Merfield, &c. doth occupy the ſaid Prebend, &c. but the ſaid Lord Francis is not reſident upon the ſaid Prebend.

Lord Peter of the title of S. Praxed, Prieſt and Cardinal, a ſtranger, doth hold the Archdeaconry of York, worth by year 100 l. and M. William of Merfield, &c. for farmers.

The Deanry of the Cathedral Church of Sar. with Churches and Chappels underwritten to the ſame Deanry annexed, doth remain in the hands of Lord Reginald of the title of S. Adrian Deacon and Cardinal, and ſo hath remained theſe 2 years, who is never reſident; his Proctor is one Lawrence de Ingris, a ſtranger, and is worth by year 254 l. 12 s. 4 d.

Richard

Richard Biſhop doth hold the Vicarage of Meere to the Deanry annexed, and hath holden the ſame for nineteen years, worth by year 40 l.

Robert Codfor, farmer of the Church of Heightredbury, to the ſame annexed, worth by year 50 l.

The Deanry of Sarisbury.

The Church of Stoning and the Chapel of Reſcomp to the ſame Deanry annexed, worth by year 70 Marks.

The Chappel of Herſt to the ſame Deanry annexed, worth by year 40 l.

The Chappel of Wokenbame to the ſame Deanry annexed, worth by year 36 l.

The Chappel of Sanhurſt, worth by year 40 s.

The Church of Godalining, to the ſame Deanry annexed, in the Dioceſs of Wincheſter, worth by year 40 l.

Treaſurer of the Church of Sar.

The dignity of Treaſurer in the Church of Sarum, with Church and Chappels underwritten to the ſame annexed is in the hands of Lord John of the title of S. Mark Prieſt and Cardinal, and hath ſo continued twelve years, who was never reſident in the ſame, worth by year 136 l. 13 s. 4 d.

The Church of Fighelden to the ſame annexed, worth by year, 26 l. 13 s. 4 d.

The Church of Alwardbury with the Chappel of Putton, worth by year 10 l.

The Prebend of Calve to the ſame Treaſurer annexed, worth by year 100 l.

The Archdeaconry of Berck, in the Cathedral Church of Sarisbury, with the Church of Mordon to the ſame annexed, is in the hands of the Lord William of the title of S. Stephen, who was never reſident in the ſame, worth by year eight ſcore Marks.

The Archdeaconry of Dorſet in the Church of Sariſbury, with the Church of Giſſiche to the ſame annexed, in the hands of Lord Robert, of the title of the Twelve Apoſtles, Prieſt and Cardinal, and is worth by year 103 Marks.

The Prebend of Woodford and Wyvelford in the Church of Sarisbury, is in the hands of Robert the Cardinal aforeſaid, and is worth 40 Marks.

The Prebend of Heiworth in the Church of Sarisbury is in the hands of the Lord Cardinal of Agrifolio who is never reſident, and is worth by year 80 l.

The Prebend of Netherbarnby and Beminſter, in the Church of Sarisbury, one Hugh Pelgrini a ſtranger did hold twenty years and more, and was never reſident in the ſame, worth by the year eight ſcore Marks.

The Church Prebendary of Gillinham in the Nunnery of Salisbury lately holden of Lord Richard now Biſhop of Ely, is in the hands of the Lord Peter of the title of Saint Praxed, Prieſt and Cardinal, &c. worth by the year 80 l.

Canterbury.

Lord William of the Holy Church of Rome Cardinal, a ſtranger, doth hold the Archdeaconry of Canterbury, and is not reſident; the true value of all the yearly fruits, rents and profits, is worth ſeven hundred Florens.

Bath and Wells.

The Lord Cardinal of Canterbury is Archdeacon of Wells, and hath annexed to his Archdeaconry the Churches of Hewiſh, Berwes, and Southbrent which are worth by year, with their procuration of viſitations of the ſaid Archdeaconry, 160 l.

Item, The Lord Cardinal is Treaſurer of the Church of Wells, and hath the moity of the Church of Mertock annexed thereunto, worth by year 60 l.

Item, The Lord Cardinal of Agrifolio is Archdeacon of Tawnton in the Church of Wells, and is worth by year with the procurations and the Prebend of Mylmerton to the ſame annexed, 80 l.

Like matter is alſo found in the time of King Richard the Second, upon what occaſion it is uncertain: but as it ſeemeth by record that of time; A new Pope being come in place, he would take no knowledge of any matter done by his Predeceſſors, that might any way abridge his commodity. And therefore this King was forced to begin anew, as may appear by this following.

An. 2. Rich. 2. The Archdeaconry of Stow.

Lord Cardinal of Agrifolio is Prebendary of the Prebend of Soringham, together with a portion of S. Mary of Stow to the ſame annexed; the fruits whereof by common eſtimate be worth by year, 165 l. Maſter John Vicar of Coringham, and Maſter Robert Parſon of Kettelthorp, and *W. ## King RICHARD the Second.

King Richard II.

AFTER King Edward the Third ſucceeded his Son, Richard the Second, being yet but young, of the age of eleven years: who in the ſame year of his Fathers deceaſe with great pomp and ſolemnity was Crowned at Weſtminſter, An. 1377. who, following his Fathers ſteps was no great diſfavourer of the way and Doctrine of Wickliff: albeit at the firſt beginning, partly through the iniquity of time, partly through the Popes Letters, he could not do that he would. Notwithſtanding ſomething he did in that behalf, more perhaps than in the end he had thank for of the Papiſts, as more (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhall appear. But as times do change, ſo changeth {KING Ric. 2} changeth commonly the ſtate and ſtate of Man. The Biſhops now ſeeing the aged King to be taken away, during the time of whoſe old age all the government of the Realm depended upon the Duke of Lancaſter; And now the ſaid Biſhops again ſeeing the ſaid Duke, with the Lord Percy, the Lord Marſhal, to give other Offices, and to remain in their private houſes without intermedling, thought now the time to ſerve them, to have ſome vantage againſt John Wickliff; who hitherto, under the protection of the foreſaid Duke and Lord Marſhal, had ſome reſt and quiet. Concerning the ſtory of which Wickliff, I truſt, (gentle Reader) it is not out of thy memory what went before, pag. 487. how he being brought before the Biſhops, by the means of the Duke and Lord Henry Percy, the Council was interrupted, and brake before nine of the Clock. By reaſon whereof Wickliff at that time eſcaped without any further trouble. Who notwithſtanding, being by the Biſhops forbid to deal in that Doctrine any more, continued yet with his fellows going barefoot, and in long Friſe Gowns, preaching diligently unto the people. Out of whoſe Sermons theſe Articles moſt chiefly at that time were collected.

The Biſhops take vantage of time.

The firſt Articles collected out of Wickliffs Sermons.

That the Holy Euchariſt, after the Conſecration, is not the very body of Chriſt, but figuratively.

That the Church of Rome is not the head of all Churches more than any other Church is: Nor that Peter hath any more power given of Chriſt, than any other Apoſtle hath.

Item, That the Pope of Rome hath no more in the Keys of the Church, than hath any other within the Order of Prieſthood.

Item, If God be, the Lords Temporal may lawfully and meritoriouſly take away their Temporalties from the Church-men offending habitualiter.

Item, If any Temporal Lord do know the Church ſo offending, he is bound, under pain of damnation, to take the Temporalties from the ſame.

Item, That all the Goſpel is a rule ſufficient of it ſelf to rule the life of every Chriſtian Man here, without any other rule.

Item, That all other rules, under whoſe obſervances divers Religious perſons be governed, do add no more perfection to the Goſpel, than doth the white colour to the Wall.

Item, That neither the Pope, nor any other Prelate of the Church, ought to have priſons wherein to puniſh tranſgreſſors.

The Articles of John Wickliff ſent to the Pope.

Beſides theſe Articles, divers other concluſions afterward were gathered out of his writings and preachings by Biſhops at England, which they ſent diligently to Pope Gregory at Rome: Where the ſaid Articles being read and peruſed, were condemned for Heretical and erroneous by three and twenty Cardinals.

Pope Gregory the 11th.

Wickliff called before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

In the mean time the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſending forth his citations, as is aforeſaid, called before him the ſaid John Wickliff in the preſence of the Duke of Lancaſter, and Lord Percy; who, upon the declaration of the Popes Letters made, bound him to ſilence, forbidding him not to intreat any more of thoſe matters. But then through the diſturbance of the Biſhop of London and the Duke, and Lord Percy, that matter was ſoon diſpatched, as hath been above recorded, pag. 487. And all this was done in the days and laſt year of King Edward the Third, and Pope Gregory the Eleventh.

{Anno 1378} The next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1378. being the firſt year of King Richard the Second, the ſaid Pope Gregory taking his time, after the death of King Edward, ſendeth his Bull by the hands and means (peradventure) of one Maſter Edmund Stafford, directed unto the Univerſity of Oxford, rebuking them ſharply, impertinently, and like a Pope, for ſuffering ſo long the Doctrine of John Wickliff to take root, and not plucking it up with the crooked ſickle of their Catholick Doctrine. Which Bull when it came to be exhibited unto their hands, by the Popes Meſſenger aforeſaid; the Proctors and Maſters of the Univerſity, joyning together in conſultation, ſtood long in doubt, deliberating with themſelves whether to receive the Popes Bull with honor, or to refuſe and reject it with ſhame.

Edmund Stafford bringer of the Popes Bull.

The Maſters of Oxford doubt whether to receive or reject the Popes Bull.

I cannot here but laugh in my mind to behold the Authors of this ſtory whom I follow; what exclamations, what wondrings and marvels they make at theſe Oxford Men, for ſo doubting at a matter ſo plain, ſo manifeſt of it ſelf, (as they ſay) whether the Popes Bull ſent to them from Rome was to be received or contrary. Which thing to our Monkiſh writers ſeemed then ſuch a prodigious wonder, that they with bluſhing cheeks are fain to clit off the matter in the midſt with ſilence.

The Copy of this wild Bull, ſent to them from the Pope, was this:

Gregory the Biſhop, the ſervant of Gods ſervants, to his well-beloved Sons, the Chancellor and Univerſity of Oxford, in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, Greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction.

The Popes mad Bull ſent to Oxford.

WE are compelled not only to marvel, but alſo to lament, that you, conſidering the Apoſtolical Seat hath given unto your Univerſity of Oxford ſo great favour and priviledge, and alſo for that you flow as in a large Sea in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and ought to be champions and defenders of the ancient and Catholick Faith (without the which there is no ſalvation) by your great negligence and ſloth will ſuffer wild Cockle, not only to grow up among the pure Wheat of the flouriſhing field of your Univerſity, but alſo to wax ſtrong and choke the Corn. Neither have ye any care (as we are informed) to extirp and pluck the ſame up by the roots, to the great blemiſhing of your renowned name, the peril of your ſouls, the contempt of the Church of Rome, and to the great decay of the antient Faith. And further (which grieveth us) the increaſe of that filthy weed was more ſharply rebuked and judged of in Rome, than in England where it ſprang. Wherefore let there be means ſought by the help of the faithful, to root out the ſame. Grievouſly it is come to our ears, that one John Wickliff, Parſon of Lutterworth in Lincoln Dioceſs, a profeſſor of Divinity (would God he were not rather a Maſter of Errors) is run into a kind of deteſtable wickedneſs, not only and openly publiſhing, but alſo vomiting out of the filthy dungeon of his breaſt, diverſe profeſſions, falſe and erroneous concluſions, and moſt wicked and damnable Hereſies. Whereby he might defile the faithful ſort, and bring them from the right path headlong into the way of perdition, overthrow the ſtate of the Church, and utterly ſubvert the ſecular policy. Of which his miſchievous Hereſies ſome ſeem to agree (only certain names and terms changed) with the perverſe opinions, and unlearned Doctrine of Marſilius of Padua, and of John Gandune, of unworthy memory, whoſe Books were utterly aboliſhed in the Realm of England, by our predeceſſor of happy memory John the 22th. which Kingdom doth not only flouriſh in power, and abundance of faculties, but is much more glorious and ſhining in pureneſs of Faith; accuſtomed always to bring forth Men excellently learned in the true knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, ripe in gravity of manners, Men notable in devotion, and defenders of the Catholick Faith. Wherefore we will and command you by our writing Apoſtolical in the name of your obedience, and upon pain of privation of our favour, indulgences and priviledges granted unto you and your Univerſity from the ſaid See Apoſtolical; that hereafter ye ſuffer not thoſe peſtilent Hereſies, and thoſe ſubtil and falſe concluſions and propoſitions, miſconſtruing the right ſenſe of faith and good works (howſoever they term it, or what curious implication of words ſoever they uſe) any longer to be diſputed of, or brought in queſtion; Leſt if it be not withſtood at the firſt, and plucked up by the roots, it might perhaps be too late hereafter to prepare Medicines when a greater number is infected with the contagion. And further, that ye apprehend immediately, or cauſe to be apprehended the ſaid John Wickliff, and deliver him to be detained in the ſafe cuſtody of our well-beloved brethren, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London, or either of them. And if you ſhall find any gainſayers, corrupted with the ſaid Doctrine (which God forbid) in your ſaid Univerſity within your juriſdiction, that ſhall obſtinately ſtand in the ſaid errors; that then in like manner ye apprehend them, and commit them to ſafe cuſtody, and otherwiſe to do in this caſe as it ſhall appertain

The Pope complaineth of John Wickliff.

Marſilius Paduanus, Joan de Gandune noted.

Here the wild Bull ſtriketh.

pertain unto you: So as by your careful proceedings herein, your negligence paſt concerning the premiſes may now fully be ſupplied and recompenced with preſent diligence. Whereby you ſhall not only purchaſe unto you the favour and benevolence of the ſeat Apoſtolical, but alſo great reward and merit of Almighty God.

Yeven at Rome at S. Maries the greater, xi. Kalend. of June, and in the 7*th.* year of our Conſecration.

Beſide this Bull ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, the ſaid Pope Gregory directed moreover his Letters the ſame time to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Simon Sudbury, to the Biſhop of London named William Courtney, with the concluſions of John Wickliff therein incloſed, commanding them, by vertue of thoſe his Letters Apoſtolical, and ſtraitly enjoyning them to cauſe the ſaid John Wickliff to be apprehended, and caſt into priſon; and that the King and the Nobles of England ſhould be admoniſhed by them, not to give any credit to the ſaid John Wickliff, or to his Doctrine in any wiſe.

Simon Sudbury Archbiſhop of Canterbury. W. Courtney Biſhop of London.

Beſide this Bill or Bull of the Pope, ſent unto the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and to the Biſhop of London, bearing date, 11. Kalend. Jun. and the ſeventh year of the Reign of the Pope; I find moreover in the ſaid ſtory two other Letters of the Pope concerning the ſame matter, but differing in form, ſent unto the ſame Biſhops and all bearing the ſame date, both of the day, year, and month of the Reign of the ſaid Pope Gregory. Whereby it is to be ſuppoſed, that the ſaid Pope either was very exquiſite and ſolicitous about the matter, to have Wickliff to be apprehended, which wrote three divers Letters to one perſon, and all in one day, about one buſineſs; or elſe that he did ſuſpect the bearers thereof; the ſcruple whereof I leave to the judgment of the Reader.

Three ſundry Letters of the Pope to one perſon, about one matter.

Furthermore, beſide theſe Letters written to the Univerſity, and to the Biſhops, he directeth alſo another Epiſtle bearing the ſame date unto King Edward; as one of my ſtories ſaith, but as another ſaith, to King Richard, which ſoundeth more near to the truth, foraſmuch as in the ſeventh year of Pope Gregory the 11*th.* which was the year of our Lord, 1378. King Edward was not alive. The Copy of his Letters to the King here followeth.

The Copy of the Epiſtle ſent by the Biſhop of Rome to Richard King of England, to perſecute John Wickliff.

The Popes Letter to K. Richard againſt John Wickliff.

UNTO his Welbeloved Son in Chriſt, Richard, the moſt noble King of England, health, &c.

The Kingdom of England, which the moſt hihgeſt hath put under your power and governance, being ſo famous and renowned in valiancy and ſtrength, ſo abundant and flowing in all kind of wealth and riches, but much more glorious, reſplendent and ſhining through the brightneſs and clearneſs of all godlineſs and faith, hath accuſtomed always to bring forth Men indued with the true knowledge and underſtanding of the Holy Scriptures, grave in years, fervent in devotion, and defenders of the Catholick Faith: The which have not only directed and inſtructed their own people through their wholeſome Doctrine and precepts into the true path of Gods Commandments; but alſo we have heard by the report and information of many credible perſons (to our great grief and heart ſorrow) that John Wickliff Parſon of Lutterworth, in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, profeſſor of Divinity (I would to God he were no author of Hereſie) to be fallen into ſuch a deteſtable and abominable madneſs, that he hath propounded and ſet forth diverſe and ſundry concluſions full of errors, and containing moſt manifeſt Hereſie, the which do tend utterly to ſubvert and overthrow the ſtate of the whole Church. Of the which, ſome of them (albeit under coloured phraſe and ſpeech) ſeem to ſmell and ſavour of perverſe opinions, the fooliſh doctrine of condemned memory of Marſilius of Padua, and John of Ganduno, whoſe Books were by Pope John the 22th. our predeceſſor, a Man of a moſt happy memory, reproved and condemned, &c.

Hitherto, gentle Reader, thou haſt heard how Wickliff was accuſed by the Biſhop. Now you ſhall alſo hear the Popes mighty reaſons and arguments, by the which he did confute him, to the King. It followeth.

KING Ric. 2

Therefore, forſomuch as our Reverend Brethren the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London have received a ſpecial commandment from us, by our authority to apprehend and commit the forenamed John Wickliff unto priſon, and to tranſport his confeſſion unto us: if they ſhall ſeem in the proſecution of this their buſineſs to lack your favour or help, we require and moſt earneſtly deſire your Majeſty, even as your moſt noble predeceſſors have always been moſt earneſt lovers of the Catholick Faith (whoſe caſe or quarrel in this matter is chiefly handled) that you would vouchſafe (even for the reverence of God, and the Faith aforeſaid, and alſo of the Apoſtolick Seat, and of our perſon) with your help and favour to aſſiſt the ſaid Archbiſhop and all other that ſhall go about to execute the ſaid buſineſs. Whereby beſides the praiſe of Men, you ſhall obtain an Heavenly reward and great favour and good will at our hand, and of the See aforeſaid. Dated at Rome at S. Mary the greater, the 11*th Kal.* of June in the 7*th.* year of our Biſhoprick, An. 1378.

Here is preſoning, but no teaching

The Articles included in the Popes Letters, which he ſent to the Biſhops, and to the King againſt Wickliff, were theſe which in order do follow.

The Concluſions of J. Wickliff, exhibited in the Convocation of certain Biſhops at Lambeth.

Certain Concluſions of John Wickliff.

ALL the whole race of Mankind here on Earth, beſides Chriſt, hath no power ſimply to ordain, That Peter and all his off-ſpring ſhould politickly rule over the world for ever.

2. God cannot give to any Man for him and his heirs any Civil Dominion for ever.

3. All writings invented by Men, as touching perpetual heritage, are impoſſible

4. Every Man, being in grace juſtifying, hath not only right unto the thing, but alſo for his time hath right indeed above all the good things of God.

5. A Man cannot only miniſtratoriouſly give any temporal or continual gift, either as well to his natural Son, as to his Son by imitation.

6. If God be, the temporal Lords may lawfully and metitoriouſly take away the riches from the Church when they do offend habitualiter.

7. We know that Chriſt's Vicar cannot, neither is able by his Bulls, neither by his own will and conſent, neither by the conſent of his College, either to make able or diſable any Man.

8. A Man cannot be Excommunicated to his hurt or undoing, except he be firſt and principally Excommunicate by himſelf.

9. No Man ought, but in Gods cauſe alone, to Excommunicate, ſuſpend, or forbid, or otherwiſe to proceed to revenge by any Eccleſiaſtical cenſure.

10. A Curſe or Excommunication doth not ſimply bind, but in caſe it be pronounced and given out againſt the adverſary of Gods Law.

11. There is no power given by any example, either by Chriſt or by his Apoſtles, to Excommunicate any ſubject, ſpecially for denying of any temporalties, but rather contrariwiſe.

12. The Diſciples of Chriſt have no power to exact, by any civil authority, temporalties by cenſures.

13. It is not poſſible by the abſolute power of God, that if the Pope, or any other Chriſtian do pretend by any means to bind or to looſe, that thereby he doth ſo bind and looſe.

14. We ought to believe that the Vicar of Chriſt doth at ſuch times only bind and looſe, when as he worketh conformably by the Law and Ordinance of Chriſt.

15. This ought univerſally to be believed, that every Prieſt rightly and duly ordered, according unto the Law of Grace, hath power according to his vocation, whereby he may miniſter the Sacraments, and conſequently Abſolve

Theſe Letters with the Articles incloſed being thus received from the Pope, the Biſhops took no little heart, thinking and fully determining with themſelves, and that in open profeſſion before their provincial Council, that all manner reſpects of fear or favour ſet apart, no perſon neither high nor low ſhould let them, neither would they be ſeduced by the intreaty of any Man, nor by any threatnings or rewards, but that in this cauſe they would execute moſt ſurely upright juſtice and equity: yea albeit preſent danger of life ſhould follow thereupon. But theſe ſo fierce braggs, and ſtout promiſes, with the ſubtil practices of theſe Biſhops, which thought them ſo ſure before, the Lord (againſt whom no determination of Mans counſel can prevail) by a ſmall occaſion did lightly confound and overthrow. For the day of the Examination being come; a certain perſonage of the princes Court, and yet of no great Noble birth, named Lewes Clifford, entring in among the Biſhops, commanded them that they ſhould not proceed with any definitive ſentence againſt John Wickliffe. With which words they all were ſo amazed, and their Combs ſo cut, that (as in the Story is mentioned) they became ſo mute and ſpeechleſs, as men having not one word in their mouths to anſwer. And thus by the wonderous work of God his providence, eſcaped John Wickliffe the ſecond time out of the Biſhops hands; and was by them clearly diſmiſſed upon his declaration made of his Articles, as anon ſhall follow.

The ſtout braggs of the Biſhops overthrown.

Wickliffe again called before the Biſhops. Lewes Clifford.

John Wickliffe again delivered from the Biſhops.

Moreover, here is not to be paſſed over, how at the ſame time, and in the ſaid Chappel of the Archbiſhop at Lambeth, where the Biſhops were ſitting upon John Wickliffe, the Story writing of the doing thereof, addeth theſe words, ſaying: Non dico cives tantum Londinenſes, ſed viles ipſius civitatis ſe impudenter ingerere præſumpſerunt in eandem capellam & verba facere pro eodem, & iſtud negotium impedire, conſiſi, ut reor, de ipſorum præmiſſa negligentia prælatorum, &c. That is, I ſay not only, that the Citizens of London, but alſo the vile abjects of the City preſumed to be ſo bold in the ſame Chappel at Lambeth, where the Biſhops were ſitting upon John Wickliffe, both to intreat for him, and alſo to let and ſtop the ſame matter; truſting, as I ſuppoſe, upon the negligence which they ſaw before in the Biſhops, &c.

Over and beſide, here is not to be forgotten, how the ſaid John Wickliffe, the ſame time of his Examination, offered and exhibited unto the Biſhops in writing a proteſtation, with a declaration or expoſition of his own mind, upon the ſaid his Articles, the effect hereof followeth.

The Proteſtation of John Wickliffe.

The Proteſtation of John Wickliffe.

FIrſt I proteſt (as I have often before done) that I do mind and intend with my whole Heart (by the grace of God) to be a true Chriſtian, and as long as breath ſhall remain in me, to profeſs and defend the Law of Chriſt. And if it ſhall happen that through ignorance or otherwiſe I ſhall fail therein: I deſire my Lord God of pardon and forgiveneſs. And now again as before alſo, I do revoke and make retractation; moſt humbly ſubmitting my ſelf under the correction of our Holy mother the Church. And forſomuch as the ſentence of my faith, which I have holden in the ſchools and elſewhere, is reported even by Children, and moreover is carried by children even unto Rome: therefore leſt my Dear beloved Brethren ſhould take any offence by me, I will ſet forth in writing the ſentence and articles, for the which I am now accuſed and impeached: the which alſo even unto the death I will defend, as I believe all Chriſtians ought to do, and ſpecially the Biſhop of Rome and all other Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church. For I do underſtand the concluſions after the ſenſe and manner of ſpeaking of the Scriptures and holy Doctors, the which I am ready to expound: And if they ſhall be found contrary to the faith, I am ready to revoke, and ſpeedily to call them back again.

An Expoſition upon the Concluſions of John Wickliffe, exhibited by him to the Biſhop.

Expoſition of John Wickliffe upon his concluſions.

1. ALL the race of mankind here in Earth, beſide Chriſt, hath no power ſimply to ordain, that Peter, &c. This concluſion of it ſelf is evident, foraſmuch as it is not in Mans power to ſtop the coming of Chriſt to his final Judgment, but he muſt needs come, according to the Article of our Creed, to judge both the quick and the dead. And then (as the Scripture teacheth) ſhall furceaſe all civil and politick rule here; I underſtand the temporal and ſecular Dominion pertaining to men here dwelling in this mortal life. For ſo do the Philoſophers ſpeak of civil Dominion. And although the thing which is terminable, and hath an end, is called ſometimes perpetual: yet becauſe in holy Scripture, and in uſe of the Church, and in the Books of Philoſophers moſt commonly that is taken to be perpetual, which hath no end of time hereafter to come: according to the which ſenſe the Church ſingeth Gloria patri, &c. Nunc, & in perpetuum; I alſo after the ſame ſignification do take here this word (perpetually) and ſo is this concluſion conſonant to the principles of the Scripture, that it is not in Mans power to ordain the courſe and voyage of the Church, here perpetually to laſt.

Expoſition of the ſecond concluſion.

2. God cannot give to any man, &c. To the Second concluſion I anſwer, underſtanding civil Dominion, as in the concluſion before. And ſo I hold, that God firſt by his ordinate power cannot give to any perſon civil Dominion here for ever. Secondly, by his abſolute power it is not probable that he will ſo do: Forſomuch as he cannot ever detain his ſpouſe in perpetual priſon of this life, nor always defer the final beatitude of his Church.

3. To the Third concluſion. Many writings or charts invented by men, as touching perpetual Heritage civil, be unpoſſible. The verity of this concluſion is incident. For we muſt not Canonize all manner of charts whatſoever, as Catholick, or Univeral: for then it were not lawful by any means to take away or ſequeſter things given by Chart or charter, when any doth unjuſtly occupy the ſame. And ſo if that ſtand confirmed and ratified by the Faith of the Church, great occaſion thereby ſhould be miniſtred to men ſo chartered, to truſt to their temporal Charts; and ſo might grow thereby much liberty and licence to ſin. For like as by ſome ſuppoſition every truth is neceſſary: So by the ſame ſuppoſition every falſe thing is poſſible, as it is plain by the Teſtimony of the Scripture, and of holy Doctors ſpeaking of neceſſity of things to come.

4. Every man being in grace juſtifying finally, hath not only right unto the thing, but alſo for his time hath right indeed over all the good things of God. In gratia gratificante finaliter.

The verity hereof is evident, by holy Scripture, Mat. 24. Where verity promiſeth to every man entring into his joy: verily (ſaith he) I tell you, he ſhall ſet and place him over all the goods he hath. For the right and title belonging to the Communion of Saints in their countrey (he meaneth in the Kingdom of Heaven) Fundatur objective ſupra univerſitatem bonorum Dei: That is, Hath his relation, as unto his object, to all the goods and poſſeſſion of God.

Note here he ſpeaketh only of the right of things in the countrey to come, and not in this exile.

5. A man can but only miniſtratorionſly give any temporal Dominion or gift perpetual, as well to his own natural ſon, as to his ſon by imitation. It is evident. For every man ought to recogniſe himſelf in all his works and doings, as an humble ſervant and miniſter of God. As the words of Scripture do teach us. Let a man ſo eſteem of us as the Miniſters of Chriſt.

Yea, ſo Chriſt himſelf did teach his chief Apoſtles to miniſter; but in their country the Saints ſhall give unto their fellow Brethren the Dominion of their goods, Ut patet de ſuis corporibus & bonis eis inferioribus in natura, according to the words of Luke 6. They ſhall give you, and put into your boſoms a good meaſure and perfect, well filled and heaped up, and running over.

6. If God be, temporal Lords may lawfully and meritoriouſly take away the goods of Fortune from the Church when they do offend habitualiter.

This concluſion is Correlative with the firſt Article of our Faith: I believe in God the Father Almighty, &c. Where I underſtand this word (may) in this concluſion after the manner of Authentick Scripture, which ſaith and granteth, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children to Abraham; for otherwiſe all Chriſtian Princes were Hereticks. For upon this concluſion thus ſtandeth the reaſon: If God be, he is Omnipotent, and if he be Almighty, he is able to command the Lords temporal ſo to do: and if he may ſo command, then may they lawfully ſo take away ſuch goods, &c. And ſo by the vertue of the ſame principle, Chriſtian Princes have practiſed the ſaid ſentence upon the Churchmen heretofore, as did William Rufus, &c. But God forbid that any ſhould believe hereby my intention to have been, that ſecular Lords may lawfully take away what goods ſoever, and by what means ſoever, by their own naked authority at their pleaſure: But only by the Authority of the Church they may ſo do, in caſes and form limited by the Law.

7. We know that it is not poſſible that the Vicar of Chriſt is able by his pure Bulls, &c.

℣ This is manifeſt by the Catholick Faith; foraſmuch as the Church doth fully believe that the enabling of any man ought firſt to proceed and come of God; wherefore no Man being Chriſt his Vicar, hath any power in this matter, but only as Vicar in the name of the Lord, ſo far forth as he is enabled of the Lord, to notifie unto the Church whom God hath enabled. Wherefore if any Man do any thing, not as Vicar in the name of the Lord, whom he ought to forethink to be his author and head; it is a preſumption of Lucifer, forſomuch as Chriſt by his Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 3. All our ability or ſufficiency cometh of God. And ſo conſequently, it cometh not purely by the Miniſtery of his Vicarſhip, that he is enabled; but the ableneſs or unableneſs of him, being the Vicar of Chriſt, cometh to him another way from above.

8. A Man cannot be Excommunicate to his hurt or undoing, except he be Excommunicate firſt and principally of himſelf.

It is evident, forſomuch as all ſuch Excommunication ought to proceed and begin originally of his own ſin which is damnified: whereupon Auguſtine ſaith, De verbis Domini Sermone 51. Do not thou conculcate thy ſelf, and Man overcometh thee not. And moreover the Faith of the Church doth teach, quod nulla ei nocebit adverſitas, ſi nulla dominetur iniquitas: That is to ſay, No adverſity ſhall hurt, if no inquity hath the upper hand. And yet notwithſtanding, every Excommunication for many cauſes is alſo to be feared, although that the Excommunication of the Church, to the humble Man being Excommunicated, be not damnable but wholſome.

9. No man ought but in Gods cauſe alone to Excommunicate, ſuſpend, &c.

It is clear, foraſmuch as every juſt cauſe is the cauſe of God, whoſe reſpect ought chiefly to be weighed and pondred. Yea, the love of the perſon excommunicate, ought to ſurmount the zeal of revengement, and the deſire of all temporal goods whatſoever; for otherwiſe he that doth excommunicate, doth damnifie himſelf. To this 9th concluſion notwithſtanding it is congruent, that a Prelate may excommunicate in the cauſe alſo of Man, ſo that his principal reſpect in ſo doing be had to the injury done to his God, as appeareth 13. quæſt. 4. Inter querelas.

10. No curſe or Excommunication can bind ſimply, but in caſe it be given out againſt the adverſary of Chriſts Law.

And it appeareth thus, becauſe that God doth bind ſimply every one that is bound, who cannot excommunicate but only for tranſgreſſion of his Law. Whereunto it is conſonant notwithſtanding, that the cenſure of the Church doth not bind ſimply, but ſecondarily in that caſe and reſpect, as it is denounced againſt the adverſary of the members of the Church. { KING Ric. 2. }

11. There is no example of Chriſt, which giveth power to his Diſciples to excommunicate any ſubject (eſpecially for denying of any temporalties) but contrary.

Which is thus declared by the faith, whereby we believe that God is to be beloved above all things, and our neighbour and enemy are to be beloved above all temporal goods of this world neceſſarily; for the Law of God cannot be contrary unto it ſelf.

12. The Diſciples of Chriſt have no power by any civil coaction to exact temporal things by their cenſures.

This appeareth by the faith of the Scripture, Luke 23. Where Chriſt did forbid his Apoſtles civilly to reign or to bear any Lordſhip. The Kings (ſaith he) of the Gentiles bear rule over them; but you not ſo. And after this ſenſe it is expounded of S. Bernard, of S. Chryſoſtome, and other holy Men: which concluſion notwithſtanding, yet may they exact temporal things by Eccleſiaſtical cenſures incidently, if caſe be that it appertain to the revengement of their God.

13. It is not poſſible by the abſolute power of God, that if the Pope or any other Chriſtian do pretend to bind or looſe at their pleaſure by what means ſoever, that thereby he doth ſo bind and looſe.

The contrary of this concluſion will deſtroy the whole Catholick Faith, importing no leſs but him to be a blaſphemer which ſo uſurpeth ſuch abſolute power of the Lord. And yet by this concluſion I intend not to derogate from the power of the Pope, or of any other Prelate of the Church, but that he may by the vertue of the head ſo bind and looſe: But do underſtand the conditional of this negative (to be impoſſible) after this ſenſe, that it cannot be that the Pope or any other Prelate of the Church can pretend by himſelf to bind or looſe (how and after what manner he liſt himſelf) except in ſuch ſort, that he do indeed ſo bind and looſe before God, as he doth pretend to do.

The power of all Prieſts toward God equal.

14. We ought to believe, that the Vicar of Chriſt doth at ſuch times only bind and looſe, when as he worketh conformably by the Law and ordinance of Chriſt, &c.

The reaſon thereof is this, becauſe otherwiſe it is unlawful for him ſo to do, except he ſhould do it in the vertue of that Law; and ſo conſequently, unleſs it be conformable to the Law and ordinance of Chriſt.

Ord. ſacerdotalis non ſuſcipit magis & minus. Poteſtas ordinis. Poteſtas regiminis.

15. To this concluſion, this ought univerſally to be believed, that every Prieſt rightly and duly ordered hath power according to his vocation, &c.

The reaſon hereof is this, becauſe that the order of Prieſthood in his own nature and ſubſtance receiveth no ſuch degrees, either of more or leſs. And yet notwithſtanding the power of inferior Prieſts in theſe days, is upon due conſideration reſtrained, and ſometimes again, in time of extream neceſſity, releaſed. And thus according to the Doctors, a Prelate hath a double power, to wit, the power of order, and the power of juriſdiction or regiment. And according to this ſecond power, the Prelates are in a higher majeſty and regiment.

16. It is lawful for Princes and Kings (in caſes by the Law limited) to withdraw temporal Commodities from Churchmen, abuſing the ſame habitualiter.

The reaſon thereof is plain, for that temporal Lords ought rather to lean to ſpiritual Alms, which bringeth with it great fruit, than to temporal Alms, the caſe ſo ſtanding, that ſometime it were a neceſſary work of ſpiritual Alms, to chaſtiſe ſuch Clerks by taking from them their temporal livings, which uſe to abuſe the ſame, to the damnifying both of their ſoul and body. The caſes which the Law doth limit in this matter were the defect of correcting his ſpiritual Head, or els for lack of correcting the Faith of the Clerk which ſo offendeth, as appeareth. 16. q. 7. filiis, Diſt. 40. cap. Si. Papa. 16. q. 7. filiis.

17. Whether they be temporal Lords, or any other men whatſoever, which have indued any Church with temporalties, &c.

The truth thereof is evidently ſeen, for that nothing ought to ſtop a Man from the principal works of Charity neceſſarily, becauſe in every action and work of Man is to be underſtood a privy condition neceſſary of God, his good will concurring withal, as it is in the civil Law de c. Conradi cap. 5. in fine collat. x. And yet, God forbid, that {KING Ric. 2.} that by these words occasion should be given to the Lords temporal to take away the goods of fortune from the Church.

18. An Ecclesiastical Minister, yea, the Bishop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his Subjects, and for the profit of the Church be accused, either of the Clergy, or of the Laity.

The proof of this is manifest hereby, because the said Bishop of Rome is subject to fall into the sin against the holy Ghost, as may be supposed, saving the Sanctitude, Humility and Reverence due to such a Father. For so long as our Brother is subject unto the infirmity of falling, he lieth under the Law of Brotherly correction. And when the whole College of Cardinals may be slothful in Ministring due correction for the necessary prosperity of the Church: it is apparent that the residue of the Body of the Church, which possibly may stand most of Lay men, may wholsomely correct the same, accuse and bring him to a better way. The possibility of this case is touched, Dist. 40. Si Papa. If the Pope do erre from the right Faith, &c. For like as such a great fall ought not to be supposed in the Lord Pope without manifest evidence: So again, such an obstinancy ought not to be supposed in him, possibly being fallen, but that he will humbly receive the wholsome Medicine of his superior, correcting him in the Lord. The practice of which conclusion also is testified in many Chronicles. Far be it from the Church of Christ, that verity should be condemned which soundeth evil to transgressors and other slothful persons, for then the whole Faith of the Scripture were in a damnable case.

Thus John Wickliffe in giving his exposition unto his foresaid propositions and conclusions, as is above prefixed, through the favour and diligence of the Londoners, either shifted off the Bishops, or else satisfied them so, that for that time he was dismissed and scaped clearly away, only being charged and commanded by the said Bishops, that he should not Teach or Preach any such Doctrine any more, for the offence of the Lay people.

Thus, this good Man, being escaped from the Bishops with this charge aforesaid, yet notwithstanding ceased not to proceed in his Godly purpose, labouring and profiting still in the Church as he had begun.

Unto whom also (as it happened by the providence of God) this was also a great help and stay, for that in the same year, or in the beginning of the next year following, the foresaid Pope Gregory the Eleventh which was the stirrer up of all this trouble against him, turned up his heels and died. After whom ensued such a Schism in Rome, between two Popes, and other succeeding after them, one striving against another; that the Schism thereof endured the space of 39. years, until the time of the Council of Constance.

The death of Pope Gregory the 11th. A Schism in Rome.

The occasioner of which Schism first was Pope Urban the Sixth, who in the first beginning of his Popedom was so proud and insolent to his Cardinals, and other, as to Dukes, Princes, and Queens, and so set to advance his Nephews and kindred, with injuries to other Princes, that the greatest number of his Cardinals and Coutiers by little and little shrunk from him, and set up another French Pope against him, named Clement, who Reigned 11. years. And after him Benedictus the Thirteenth who Reigned 26. years. Again of the contrary side after Urbanus the Sixth, succeeded Boniface the Ninth, Innocentius the Eighth, Gregory the Twelth, Alexander the Fifth, John the Thriteenth.

Urbanus 6th Pope.

| Papæ. | Years. | Months. | Antipapæ. | Years. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Urbanus 6. | 11. | 8. | Clement. | 11. |
| Bonifacius 9. | 14. | 9. | Benedictus, 13. | 26. |
| Innocentius 8. | 2. | 0. | | |
| Gregorius 12. | 2. | 7. | | |
| Alexander 5. | 0. | 11. | | |
| Johannes 13. | 5. | 10. | | |

As touching this Pestilent and most miserable Schism, it would require here another Iliad to comprehend in order all the circumstances and tragical parts thereof, what trouble in the whole Church, what parts taking in every Countrey, what apprehending and imprisoning of Priests and Prelates taken by Land and Sea, what shedding of blood did follow thereof. How Otho, Duke of Brunswick and Prince of Tarentum, was taken and murthered. How Joan his Wife, Queen of Jerusalem and Sicilia, who before had sent to Pope Urban, beside other gifts at his Coronation, 40000 Duckets in pure Gold, was after by the said Urban committed to prison, and in the same prison strangled. What Cardinals were racked, and miserably without all mercy tormented on Gibbets to death, what slaughter of men, what battels were fought between the two Popes, whereof 5000 on the one side were slain, beside the number of them which were taken prisoners. Of the beheading of five Cardinals together after long torments, and how the Bishop of Aquilonensis, being suspected of Pope Urban, for not Riding faster with the Pope, his Horse being not good, was there slain by the Popes commandment, sending his Souldiers unto him to slay him, and cut him in pieces. All which things, with divers other more Acts of horrible cruelty, hapning in the time of this abominable Schism, because they are abundantly discoursed at full by Theodorick Niem, who was near to the said Pope Urban, and present at all his doings, therefore as a thing needless I here pertermit; referring them who covet to be certified more amply herein, unto the three Books of the said Theodorick above mentioned.

Was not here a jolly agreement?

Theodoricus a Niem, de schismate.

About the same time also, about three years after, there fell a cruel Dissention in England, between the Common people and the Nobilty, the which did not a little disturb and trouble the Common-wealth. In this tumult Simon of Sudbury Archbishop of Canterbury, was taken by the rustical and rude people, and was beheaded. In whose place after succeeded William Courtney, which was no less diligent than his Predecessor had been before him, in doing his diligence to root out Hereticks. Notwithstanding in the mean season Wickliff's Sect increased privily, and daily drew to greater force, until the time that William Barton Vicechancellor of Oxford, about the year of our Lord 1380, had the whole Rule of that Universitty: who calling together eight Monastical Doctors, and four other, with the consent of the rest of his affinity, putting the common Seal of the Universitty unto certain writings, set forth an Edict, declaring unto every Man, and threatning them under a greivous penalty, that no Man should be so hardy, hereafter to associate themselves with any of Wickliff's fautors or favourers: and unto Wickliffe himself he threatned the greater excommunication, and further imprisonment, and to all his fautors, unless that they after three days Canonical admonition or warning, or as they call it, peremptory, did repent and amend. The which thing when Wickliffe understood, forsaking the Pope and all the Clergy, he thought to appeal unto the Kings Majesty: But the Duke of Lancaster coming between, forbade him, that he should not hereafter attempt or begin any such matters, but rather submit himself unto the censure and judgment of his Ordinary. Whereby Wickliffe being beset with troubles and vexations, as it were in the middest of the waves, he was forced once again to make confession of his Doctrine: in the which his confession, to avoid the rigor of things, he answered as is aforesaid, making his declaration, and qualifying his assertions after such a sort, that he did mitigate and asswage the rigor of his Enemies.

Simon the Archbishop beheaded. William Courtney Archbishop of Canterbury.

Barton Chancellor of Oxford. {Anno 1380}

An edict against the Wickliviists.

The next year after, which was 1382, by the commandment of William Archbishop of Canterbury, there was a Convocation holden at London, whereas John Wickliffe was also commanded to be present. But whether he there appeared personally or not, I find it not in story certainly affirmed. The mandate of the Archbishop William Courtney (sent abroad for the conventing together of his Council) here followeth under-written, truly copied out of his own Registers.

{Anno 1382.}

Memorandum, That where as well amongst the Nobles as Commons of this Realm of England, there hath a certain brute been spread of divers conclusions both erroneous, and also repugnant to the determination of the Church, which tend to the subversion of the whole Church, and to our province of Canterbury, and also to the subversion of the whole Realm, being Preached in divers and sundry places of our said province, generally, commonly, and publickly: We William by Gods permission Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England,

The mandate of the Archbishop.

Ex Registro Archbishop William Courtney.

and Legate of the See Apoſtolical, being minded to execute our office and duty herein; have convocated or called together certain of our fellow Brethren and others a great many, as well Doctors and Bachelors of Divinity, as Doctors of the Canon and civil Law, and thoſe whom we thought to be the moſt famous Men, skilfulleſt Men, and Men of ſoundeſt Judgment in Religion, that were in all the Realm, whoſe names hereunder enſue. And the ſame being (the 17*th* day of the Month of May) in the Year of our Lord 1382: in a certain Chamber within the Territories of the Priory of the Friers Preachers of London, before us and our foreſaid fellow Brethren aſſembled, then and there perſonally preſent: After that the ſaid concluſions (the Tenor whereof hereunder enſueth) were openly proponed, and diſtinctly and plainly read: We burthened our foreſaid fellow Brethren, Doctors and Bachelors, in the faith wherein they ſtood bound to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and as they would anſwer before the High Judge in the day of Judgment, that they ſhould ſpeak their opinions touching the ſaid concluſions, and what every of them thinketh therein.

And at length, after good deliberation had upon the premiſſes, the foreſaid our Brethren the Biſhops, Doctors and Bachelors reaſſembled before us the 21*ſt* day of the ſame Month in the foreſaid Chamber, the foreſaid Concluſions being again and again repeated and plainly read; by us and by the common conſents of us all it remaineth publiſhed and declared, that ſome of the ſaid concluſions are heretical, and otherſome erroneous and contrary to the determination of the Church, as hereafter moſt manifeſtly ſhall appear. And foraſmuch as by ſufficient information we find and perceive, that the ſaid concluſions in many places of our ſaid Province have been, as is ſaid, both taught and preached; and that divers other perſons do hold and maintain the ſame, and be of Hereſie vehemently and notoriouſly ſuſpected: we have thought good, as well generally as ſpecially, to ſend out this Proceſs underwritten.

The Articles of John Wickliffe here above ſpecified, whereof there were ten which were by theſe Friers condemned as Heretical, the reſt as Erroneous, here in order follow, and are theſe. Although it may be thought, that ſome of them were made worſe by their ſiniſter collecting, than he meant them in his own works and writings.

The Articles of John Wickliff, condemned as Heretical.

1. THe ſubſtance of material Bread and Wine, doth remain in the Sacrament of the Altar after the conſecration.

2. The accidents do not remain without the ſubject in the ſame Sacrament, after the conſecration.

3. That Chriſt is not in the Sacrament of the Altar truly and really, in his proper and corporal perſon.

4. That if a Biſhop or a Prieſt be in deadly ſin, he doth not Order, Conſecrate, nor Baptize.

5. That if a Man be duly and truly contrite and penitent, all exterior and outer confeſſion is but ſuperfluous and unprofitable unto him. KING Ric. 2. This Article either is ſlanderouſly reported, or elſe can hardly be defended.

6. That it is not found or ſtabliſhed by the Goſpel, that Chriſt did make or ordain Maſs.

7. If the Pope be a reprobate and evil Man, and conſequently a Member of the Devil; he hath no power by any manner of means given unto him over faithful Chriſtians, except peradventure it be given him from the Emperor.

8. That ſince the time of Urban the ſixth, there is none to be received for Pope, but every Man is to live after the manner of the Greeks, under his own Law. He meaneth Church goods not to be ſo peculiar to Miniſters, but that they may be taken away if they ſo deſerve.

9. That it is againſt the Scripture, that Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters ſhould have any temporal poſſeſſions.

The other Articles of John Wickliff, condemned as Erroneous.

10. THat no Prelate ought to Excommunicate any Man except he knew him firſt to be Excommunicate of God.

11. That he, which doth ſo Excommunicate any Man, is thereby himſelf either an Heretick or Excommunicated.

12. That a Prelate or Biſhop Excommunicating any of the Clergy, which hath appealed to the King or the Council, is thereby himſelf a Traitor to the King and Realm.

13. That all ſuch, which do leave off Preaching or hearing the Word of God or Preaching of the Goſpel for fear of Excommunication; they are already Excommunicated, and in the day of Judgment ſhall be counted as Traitors unto God.

14. That it is lawful for any Man, either Deacon or Prieſt, to Preach the Word of God without Authority or Licence of the Apoſtolick See or any other of his Catholicks.

15. † That ſo long as a Man is in deadly ſin, he is neither Biſhop nor Prelate in the Church of God. † This Article peradventure was not ſo ſtraightly meant of him as it was gathered of them as is aforeſaid.

16. * Alſo that the temporal Lords may, according to their own will and diſcretion take away the temporal goods from the Churchmen whenſoever they do offend.

17. That tenths are pure alms, and that the Pariſhioners may, for offence of their Curates, detain and keep them back, and beſtow them upon others, at their own will and pleaſures. * This Article expounded the ninth Article above.

18. Alſo, that all ſpecial Prayers applied to any private or particular perſon, by any Prelate or religious Man, do no more profit the ſame perſon, than general or univerſal Prayers do profit others, which be in like caſe or ſtate unto him.

19. Moreover, in that any Man doth enter into any private Religion, whatſoever it be, he is thereby made the more unapt and unable to obſerve and keep the Commandments of God.

20. That holy Men, which have inſtituted private religions, whatſoever they be (as well ſuch as are indued and poſſeſſed, as alſo the Order of begging Friers having no poſſeſſions) in ſo doing, have grievouſly offended.

21. That religious Men, being in their private Religions, are not of the Chriſtian Religion.

22. That Friers are bounden to get their living by the labour of their Hands, and not by begging.

23. That whoſoever doth give any Alms unto Friers, or to any begging obſervant, is accurſed, or in danger thereof.

the Wolves, being clothed in ſheeps apparel, fraudulently to go about to worry and ſcatter the ſheep. Truly by the continual cry and bruted fame (which it grieveth me to report) it is come to our knowledge that although by the Canonical Sanctions, no Man being forbidden or not admitted, ſhould either publickly or privately without the Authority of the Apoſtolical See or Biſhop of that place, uſurpe or take upon him the Office of a Preacher: Some notwithſtanding, ſuch as are the children of damnation, being under the vale of blind ignorance, are brought into ſuch a doting mind, that they take upon them to Preach, and are not affraid to affirm and teach diverſe and ſundry propoſitions and concluſions here under recited, both heretical, erroneous and falſe, condemned by the Church of God, and repugnant to the decree of holy Church, which tend to the ſubverting of the whole State of the ſame, of our Province of Canterbury, and to the deſtruction and weakning of the tranquility of the ſame; and that as well in the Churches, as in the Streets, as alſo in many other prophane places of our ſaid Province, generally, commonly, and publickly, do Preach the ſame, infecting very many good Chriſtians, cauſing them lamentably to wander out of the way, and from the Catholick Church, without which there is no ſalvation. We therefore, conſidering that ſo pernicious a miſchief, which may creep amongſt many, we ought not to ſuffer, and by diſſimulation to paſs over, which may with deadly contagion ſlay the ſouls of men, leſt their blood be required at our hands; are willing ſo much as God will permit us to do, to extripate the ſame. Wherefore, by the Counſel and conſent of many of our Brethren and Suffragans, we have convented divers and ſundry Doctors of Divinity, as alſo profeſſors and other Clerks of the Canon and civil Laws, the beſt learned within the Realm, and of the moſt ſoundeſt opinion and judgment in the Catholick Faith, to give their opinions and judgments concerning the foreſaid concluſions. But foraſmuch as the ſaid concluſions and aſſertions, being in the preſence of us, and our fellow Brethren and other convocates openly expounded, and diligently examined, were in the end found by the Common council and conſent as well of them as of us, and ſo declared that ſome of thoſe concluſions were heretical, and ſome of them erroneous, and repugnant to the determination of the Church, as hereunder are deſcribed. We will and command your brotherhood and by vertue of holy Obedience ſtraitly injoyn all and ſingular our Brethren, and Suffragans of our body and Church of Canterbury, that with all ſpeedy diligence you poſſibly can, you likewiſe enjoyn them (as we have enjoyned you) and every of them. And that every one of them in their Churches and other places of their City and Dioceſs do admoniſh and warn, and that you, in your Church and other Churches of your City and Dioceſs do admoniſh and warn as we by the Tenor of theſe preſents do admoniſh and warn the firſt time, the ſecond time, and the third time; and yet more ſtraitly do warn, aſſigning for the firſt admonition one day, for the ſecond admonition another day, and for the third admonition Canonical and peremptory, another day; That no Man from henceforth of what eſtate or condition ſoever, do hold, preach, or defend the foreſaid Hereſies and errors or any of them; nor that he admit to preach any one that is prohibited or not ſent to preach, nor that he hear or hearken to the Hereſies or errors of him or any of them, or that he favour or lean unto him either publickly or privately; but that immediately he ſhun him, as he would avoid a Serpent putting forth moſt peſtiferous poiſon, under pain of the greater Curſe, the which we command to be thundred againſt all and every one which ſhall be diſobedient in this behalf, and not regarding theſe our monitions, after that thoſe three days be paſt which are aſſigned for the Canonical monition, and that their delay, fault or offence committed require the ſame: And then according to the Tenor of theſe writings, we command both by every one of our fellow Brethren and our Suffragans in their Cities and Dioceſs, and by you in your City and Dioceſs, (ſo much as belongeth both to you and them) that to the uttermoſt both ye and they cauſe the ſame Excommunications to be pronounced. And Furthermore we will and command our foreſaid fellow Brethren, and all and ſingular of you apart by our ſelves, to be admoniſhed, and by the aſperſion of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt we likewiſe admoniſh you; that according to the inſtitution of the Sacred Canons, every one of them in their Cities and Dioceſs, be a diligent inquiſitor of this heretical pravity; and that every one of you alſo in your Cities and Dioceſs be the like inquiſitor of the foreſaid heretical pravity. And that of ſuch like preſumption they and you carefully and diligently inquire, and that both they and you (according to your duties and office in this behalf) with effect do proceed againſt the ſame, to the honour and praiſe of his name that was Crucified, and for the preſervation of the Chriſtian Faith and Religion.

Had ye tried them by the truth, you ſhould have found them otherwiſe.

He that kileth you ſhall think he doth God good ſervice.

Yea rather for the honour of your Pope and the deſtruction of Chriſtian Faith.

Here is not to be paſſed over the great miracle of Gods divine admonition or warning; for when as the Archbiſhop and Suffragans, with the other Doctors of Divinity and Lawyers, with a great company of babling Friers and religious perſons were gathered together to conſult as touching John Wickliffs Books, and that whole Sect; When as I ſay, they were gathered together at the Gray-Friers in London, to begin their buſineſs, upon S. Dunſtans day after Dinner, about two of the Clock, the very hour and inſtant that they ſhould go forward with their buſineſs, a wonderful and terrible Earthquake fell throughout all England: Whereupon diverſe of the Suffragans, being feared by the ſtrange and wonderful Demonſtration, doubting what it ſhould mean, thought it good to leave off from their determinate purpoſe. But the Archbiſhop (as chief Captain of that Army, more raſh and bold than wiſe) interpreting the chance which had happened clean contrary to another meaning or purpoſe, did confirm and ſtrengthen their hearts and minds, which were almoſt daunted with fear, ſtoutly to proceed and go forward in their attempted enterpriſe. Who then diſcourſing Wickliffs Articles, not according unto the Sacred Cantons of the holy Scripture, but unto their own private affections and traditions, pronounced and gave ſentence, that ſome of them were ſimply and plainly Heretical, other ſome half Erroneous, other Irreligious, ſome Seditious, and not conſonant to the Church of Rome.

An Earthquake what time Wickliffe was examined. Ex Chron. mon. Aban.

Item, The Twelth day of June, in the year aforeſaid, in the Chamber of the Friers Preachers, the foreſaid Maſter Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, and Thomas Brightwel profeſſors of Divinity (being appointed the ſame day and place, by the foreſaid Reverend Father in God Archbiſhop of Canterbury) appeared before him in the preſence of the Reverend Father in God, Lord William by the Grace of God Biſhop of Wincheſter, and divers other Doctors and Bachelors of Divinity, and of the Canon and civil Law, whoſe names are before recited. And firſt the ſaid Chancellor by the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being examined what his opinion was touching the foreſaid Articles, publickly affirmed and declared, that certain of thoſe concluſions were heretical, and certain erroneous, as the other Doctors and Clerks afore mentioned had declared. And then immediately next after him, the foreſaid Thomas Brightwel was examined, which upon ſome of the Concluſions at firſt ſomwhat ſtaggered, but in the end being by the ſaid Archbiſhop diligently examined upon the ſame, did affirm and repute the ſame to be heretical and erroneous, as the foreſaid Chancellor had done. Another Bachelor of Divinity alſo there was named N. ſtammering alſo at ſome of thoſe concluſions, but in the end affirmed that his opinion therein was, as was the judgment of the foreſaid Chancellor and Thomas as is above declared. Whereupon the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, willing to let and hinder the peril of ſuch hereſies and errors, delivered unto the foreſaid Chancellor, there being publickly read, his Letters Patents to be executed, the Tenor whereof in theſe words doth follow.

common fame and brute is come unto our ears, &c. Ut in mandato præcedenti. We will therefore and command, ſtraitly enjoyning you, that in the Church of our bleſſed Lady in Oxford, upon thoſe days in the which accuſtomably the Sermon is made, as alſo in the Schools of the ſaid Univerſity upon thoſe days the Lectures be read, ye publiſh and cauſe by others to be publiſhed to the Clergy and people, as well in their Vulgar-Tongue, as in the Latin-Tongue, manifeſtly and plainly without any curious implication, the ſame heretical and erroneous Concluſions, ſo repugnant to the determination of holy Church, as is aforeſaid; to have been and be condemned; which Concluſions we alſo declare by theſe our Letters to be utterly condemned. And that furthermore you forbid, and canonically admoniſh and cauſe to be admoniſhed, as we by the tenour of theſe preſents do forbid and admoniſh you, once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorily, that none hereafter hold, teach, and preach, or defend the Hereſies and Errors above ſaid, or any of them, either in School or out of School by any ſophiſtical Cavillation or otherwiſe: or that any admit to preach, hear or hearken unto John Wickliff, Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, Canon regular, or John Aſhton, or Lawrence Redman, which be vehemently and notoriouſly ſuſpected of Hereſie, or elſe any other whatſoever, ſo ſuſpected or defamed; or that either privately or publickly they either aid or favour them or any of them, but that incontinently they ſhun and avoid the ſame as a Serpent which putteth forth moſt peſtiferous poiſon. And furthermore we ſuſpend the ſaid ſuſpected perſons from all ſcholaſtical act, till ſuch time as they ſhall purge themſelves before us in that behalf: and that you denounce the ſame publickly by us to have been and be ſuſpended; and that ye diligently and faithfully enquire of all their Fautors and Favourers, and cauſe to be enquired throughout all the Halls of the ſaid Univerſity. And that when you ſhall have intelligence of their Names and Perſons, that ye compel all and every of them to abjure their Outrages by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures and other pains Canonical whatſoever, under pain of the greater Curſe, the which againſt all and ſingular the rebellious in this behalf, and diſobeying our monitions, we pronounce: ſo that their fault, deceit, and offence in this behalf deſerve the ſame (the ſaid monition of ours being firſt ſent) which in this behalf we eſteem and allow Canonical, that then and again according to the effect of theſe our Letters, &c. And further our will is, that whatſoever you ſhall do in the premiſſes, in manner and form of our Proceſs in this behalf it be had and done: and that you for your part, when you ſhall be required thereunto, plainly and diſtinctly do certifie us by your Letters Patents, having the tenour hereof.

The Concluſions and Articles here mentioned in this Letter are above prefixed. Of which ſome were condemned for heretical, ſome for erroneous.

After this, within few days the foreſaid Archbiſhop William Courtney directed down his Letters of Admonition to Robert Rigge Commiſſary of Oxford, for the repreſſing of this Doctrine: which yet notwithſtanding, both then, and yet to this day (God be praiſed) doth remain: the Copy of his monition to the Commiſſary here out of his own Regiſter followeth.

That the accidents do not remain without the ſubject, after conſecration of the Sacrament.

After the ſenſe contrary to that Decretal, Cum Marthe: we grant that it is Hereſie.

That Chriſt is not in the Sacrament of the Altar truly and really in his own corporal preſence.

Although this concluſion as the words ſtand, ſound to be probable and intelligible, yet in the ſenſe contrary to the Decretal in Ele. Si dudum, we grant that it is Hereſie. And briefly concerning this whole matter of the Sacrament of the Altar, as touching alſo all other things, we profeſs that we will both in word and ſenſe hold with the holy Scripture, with the determination of the holy Church, and ſayings of the holy Doctors.

Obſtinately to affirm that it hath no foundation in the Goſpel, that Chriſt ordained the Maſs;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

That God ought to obey the Devil.

In this ſenſe, that God in his own Perſon or Eſſence, ought to obey the Devil with the obedience of neceſſity;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

If a man be duly contrite, that all external confeſſion is to him ſuperfluous and unprofitable;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

If the Pope be a Reprobate, and an evil man, and conſequently a Member of the Devil, he hath no Power over the faithful of Chriſt given to him of any, unleſs it be of Cæſar;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

That after Pope Urban the Sixth none is to be received for Pope, but that we ought to live after the manner of the Grecians, under our own Laws;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

To ſay that it is againſt the holy Scripture for Eccleſiaſtical Perſons to have Temporal Poſſeſſions.

If obſtinacy be joyned withall, we grant that it is Hereſie.

That no Prelate ought to Excommunicate any man, unleſs he know him before to be excommunicated of God. We grant that it is an Error; Underſtanding this knowledge to ſignifie an experimental knowledge; ſo that herewith may ſtand the Decree of the Church. 11. q. 3. Nemo Epiſco.

That he which doth ſo Excommunicate, is thereby an Heretick or Excommunicate.

After the ſenſe, agreeing with the other before, we grant to be an Error.

That a Prelate Excommunicating a Clerk, which appealeth to the King or Council of the Realm, in ſo doing is a Traitor to God, the King, and the Realm;

We grant it is an error.

That they which leave off to preach, or to hear the Word of God and the Goſpel Preached, for the Excommunication of Men, are Excommunicate, and in the day of Judgment ſhall be counted for Traitors to God.

Underſtanding this concluſion univerſally, ſo as Scripture and Laws do underſtand ſuch indefinite propoſitions;

We grant it is an erorr.

To affirm that it is lawful for any Deacon or Prieſt to Preach the Word of God without the Authority of the See Apoſtolick, or Catholick Biſhop, or of any other whoſe Authority he knoweth ſufficient;

We grant it is an error.

To affirm that there is no civil Lord, no Biſhop nor Prelate, whileſt he is in Mortal ſin; We grant it is an error.

That temporal Lords may at their pleaſure take away the temporal Goods from the Churches, offending habitualiter; We grant it is an error, After this ſenſe, that they may ſo take away temporal Goods of the Churches, without the Caſes limited in the Laws of the Church and Kingdoms.

That the vulgar people may correct the Lord offending at their pleaſure: underſtanding by this word May, that they may do it by the Law, We grant it is an error, becauſe that ſubjects have no power over their Lords.

That Tithes be pure Alms, and that Pariſhioners may, for the offences of their Curates, detain the ſame, and beſtow them to others at their pleaſure: underſtanding by his word May, as before, to may by the Law, We grant it is an error.

That

That ſpecial prayers applied to any one perſon by Prelates or religious men, do no more profit than the general prayers, if there be no let by the way to make them unlike: underſtanding this Concluſion univerſally negatively, and underſtanding by ſpecial prayers, the prayers made upon ſpecial devotion, and general prayers of general devotion: then after this ſenſe, no ſuch ſpecial prayers, applied to any one perſon, by ſpecial Orators, do profit more ſpecially the ſaid perſon, than general prayers do, which are made of the ſame, and for the ſame perſons, we grant it is an Error.

He that giveth Alms to the Fryers, or to any Fryer that preacheth, is Excommunicate; both he that giveth, and he that taketh: underſtanding this Propoſition univerſally, or conditionally, as is aforeſaid; we grant to be an Error.

That who ſo entreth into any private Religion whatſoever is thereby made more unapt and unmeet to obey the Commandments of God; we grant it is an Error.

That ſuch holy men as did inſtitute any private Religions whatſoever, as well of ſecular having poſſeſſions, as of Fryers having none, in ſo inſtituting did ſin: underſtanding this reduplicatively or univerſally, we grant it an Error. After this ſenſe, that what Saint ſoever did inſtitute private Religion, inſtituting the ſaid Religion upon that conſideration as they did, did ſin.

That religious men living in private Religions, be not of the Religion of Chriſt: underſtanding the Propoſition univerſally, as is aforeſaid; we grant it is an Error.

That Fryers are bound to get their Livings by the labour of their hands, and not by begging: underſtanding this Propoſition univerſally, as before; we grant it is an Error.

Theſe things have we ſpoken reverend Father and Lord, in all humility, under your gracious ſupportation and benign correction, according to our abilities and ſlender capacities for this preſent (the honour of GOD, the verity of our Belief, and ſafe Conſcience in all points reſerved) more humbly yet beſeeching you, that if any other thing there be, that ſeemeth meet unto your Excellency and Diſcretion to be more or otherwiſe ſaid and ſpoken, that your gracious Fatherhood would vouchſafe to inform us as Children by the Sacred Scriptures, by the determination of the Church, or authorities of the holy Doctors. And doubtleſs with ready Wills, and obedient Minds, we will conſent and agree unto your wholſome Doctrine. May it therefore pleaſe your Fatherhood, right reverend in God, according to the accuſtomed manner of your benignity, favourably to accept theſe our words and ſayings, foraſmuch as the foreſaid Concluſions were never by us either in Schools affirmed, or elſe in Sermons publickly preached.

Further Examinations and Proceedings againſt the foreſaid Nicholas Herford, P. Reppington, and John Aſhton.

Further Examinations againſt the ſaid Nicholas, Philip, and John, Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, John Aſhton examined. 20. Junii, Anno 1382.

WHen all theſe Anſwers were made unto the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the ſaid Nicholas and Philip, for that they anſwered not unto the meaning and words of the firſt Concluſion expreſly, but contrary to the ſenſe of the decretal Firmiter credimus, were there judicially examined what their ſenſe and meaning was; but they would not expreſs the ſame. Then was it demanded of them, according to the ſenſe of the ſame Concluſion declared on the behalf of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, whether the ſame material bread in numero, which before the Conſecration is laid upon the Altar, remain in proper ſubſtance and nature, after the Conſecration in the Sacrament of the Altar; and likewiſe of the wine? To this the ſaid Nicholas and Philip anſwered, That for that time they could ſay no more therein, than that they already anſwered, as is before alledged in writing. And for that unto the ſenſe and words of the ſecond Concluſion they anſwered not fully and expreſly, but in a ſenſe contrary to the Decretal Cum Marthe: being asked what was their meaning, they would not expreſs the ſame: therefore it was demanded of them, according to the ſenſe of the ſame Concluſion, declared in the behalf of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, whether thoſe corporal accidents which formally were in the bread and wine before the conſecration of them, were in the ſame bread and wine after the conſecration, or elſe were ſubjected in any other ſubſtance? To this they anſwered, That better to anſwer, than before in their writings they already had, for that time they could not. To the meaning alſo and words of the third Concluſion for that they anſwered not plainly and expreſly, but in ſenſe contrary to the Decretal in the Clementines, Si dudum, being asked what was that ſenſe and meaning, would not declare the ſame. Wherefore it was then demanded of them, according to the ſenſe of the ſame Concluſion, declared on the behalf of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, Whether the ſame Body of Chriſt, which was aſſumed of the Virgin, be in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſecundum ſeipſum, even as he is really in carnal ſubſtance, proper eſſence and nature? To this they anſwered, That for that time they could ſay no more than that they had ſaid, as before is ſpecified in writing.

{KING} {Ric. 2.}

Furthermore, to the ſenſe and text of the ſixth Concluſion, for that they anſwered not fully and expreſly, being asked whether God ought any manner of obedience to the Devil or not: they ſaid, Yea, as the obedience of love, becauſe he loveth, and puniſhed him as he ought. And to prove that God ought ſo to obey the Devil, they offered themſelves to the fire.

To the 11*th* Concluſion, for that they anſwered not expreſly, being asked whether a Prelate might Excommunicate any man being in the ſtate of Grace: they ſaid, Yea.

Unto the 20*th* Concluſion, for that they anſwered not fully, ſimply, and expreſly; being demanded whether ſpecial or general prayers did moſt profit, and were of greater force; they would not ſay but that ſpecial.

Unto the laſt Concluſion, for that they anſwered neither ſimply, nor expreſly; and being demanded particularly, whether any Fryer were bound to get his living with his manual labour, ſo that it might not be lawful for them to live by begging; they would make no anſwer at all.

The judgments of the Doctors upon theſe Articles.

After that, the foreſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury demanded of all the foreſaid Doctors, what their judgment was touching the anſwers that were made upon all and ſingular ſuch Concluſions. All which Doctors and every of them ſeverally ſaid, That all the anſwers given unto the firſt, ſecond, third, and ſixth Concluſions (as is before recited) were inſufficient, heretical and ſubtil; and that all the anſwers made ſpecially to the ninth, tenth, and laſt Concluſions, as is above mentioned, were inſufficient, erroneous, and perverſe. Whereupon the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, conſidering the ſaid anſwers to be heretical, ſubtil, erroneous, and perverſe, accordingly as the ſaid Doctors (as is aforeſaid) had weighed and conſidered, admoniſhed the ſaid Nicholas and Philip ſufficiently under this form of words.

Admonition and citation of the Archbiſhop againſt the Examinants.

The name of Chriſt being called upon, we William by Gods permiſſion, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, and through all our Province of Canterbury, Inquiſitor of all heretical Pravity, do ſufficiently and lawfully admoniſh and cite you Nicholas Herford and Philip Reppington, Profeſſors of Divinity, having this day and place aſſigned you by your own conſent and our prefixion, peremptorily to anſwer and to ſay fully and plainly your Opinions touching theſe Concluſions, whereunto we do refer you (all ſubtil, ſophiſtical, and logical words ſet apart) being thereunto ſworn, cited, and commanded. Which thing to do, without cauſe reaſonable or any licence given thereunto, you neither have been willing, nor are willing, nay rather ye contemptuouſly refuſed to anſwer to ſome of thoſe Concluſions before us judicially, according to the effect of our monition, citation and commandment foreſaid. But for that ye have anſwered unto ſome of them heretically, and to other ſome erroneouſly, although not fully; we admoniſh and cite you once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorily, that plainly and fully (all ſubtil, ſophiſtical and logical words ſet apart) you and every of you anſwer unto the ſame Concluſions, and unto that ſenſe and meaning by us limited, under the pain that otherwiſe ſuch Concluſions by you confeſſed deſerve, and that for the ſame Concluſions you ought to have.

Which Admonition being made and done, for that the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip would make none other anſwer,

KING Ric. 2. answer, the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury concluded that buſineſs, prefixing and aſſigning unto the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip, eight days ſpace; that is to ſay, until the 27*th* day of the ſame month, and that then they ſhould appear before the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whereſoever within the ſame his Province of Canterbury he ſhould fortune to be, to hear his Decree that ſhould be made in that behalf. This done, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury moniſhed and cited lawfully and ſufficiently, John Aſhton under the tenour of theſe words following.

Another day aſſigned for the examinants to appear.

Proceſs made by the Archbiſhop againſt John Aſhton.

In the Name of God; We William by Gods permiſſion, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, Legate of the See Apoſtolical, and through all our Province of Canterbury, of all heretical pravity chief Inquiſitor, do moniſh and cite thee J. Aſhton, Maſter of Art, and Student in Divinity, appearing before us, judicially to ſay and ſpeak the plain verity touching theſe Concluſions, to the which we do refer thee; and to the which we have cauſed thee to ſwear, laying thy hand upon a Book; as being alſo otherwiſe by us admoniſhed and commanded to keep this day and place by us appointed, for the third time peremptorily, to propone ſuch reaſonable cauſe (if thou haſt any) wherefore thou oughteſt not to be pronounced an Heretick. And ſufficiently and lawfully we moniſh and cite thee, the firſt, ſecond, and third time, and that peremptorily, that thou fully and plainly (all ſubtil, ſophiſtical, and logical words ſet apart) do anſwer unto the ſame Concluſions under the pain that unto ſuch Concluſions belong, and on thy part confeſſed, and that thou for ſuch Concluſions oughteſt to ſuffer. Which monition being thus premiſed, the ſaid Archbiſhop read the firſt Concluſion; and of the ſaid John inquired what was his opinion and meaning therein? and hereupon he ſaid his mind concerning the foreſaid monition. Then the foreſaid John Aſhton, being often required by the Archbiſhop, that he would anſwer in the Latin-Tongue, to thoſe queſtions which were demanded of him, becauſe of the Lay-people that ſtood about him; he crying out in the Engliſh-Tongue, uttered frivolous and opprobrious Contumulies to move and excite the people againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop; as it ſhould ſeem. Neither did he unto the firſt Concluſion, nor unto any of theſe other Concluſions, effectually and pertinently ſeem to them to anſwer; but rather by ſubtilties and ſhifts, ſaying oftentimes, and as expreſly as Luke ſaid, it was ſufficient for him to believe as the holy Church believed. Then the ſaid Archbiſhop examined him upon the firſt Concluſion touching the Sacrament of the Altar; whether that after the words of Conſecration there remaineth material bread, particular bread, or univerſal bread? He ſaid the matter paſſed his underſtanding, and therefore ſaid, he would in that form and manner anſwer, and otherwiſe not: But amongſt other things, he ſpake in deriding-wiſe unto the ſaid Archbiſhop againſt this word Material, ſaying, You may put that in your purſe, if you have any. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop calling that an unwiſe and fooliſh anſwer, as the reſt of the Doctors did (of whom mention was made before) the rather for that he was a Graduate in the Schools, farther proceeded againſt the ſaid John Aſhton in this wiſe.

John Aſhton ſeverally examined.

The Archbiſhop and his Fryers do flee the Engliſh Tongue for the people.

Whether material bread remain in the Sacrament.

And thou John Aſhton moniſhed and commanded by us, as is aforeſaid, after thine Oath taken, without any reaſonable cauſe or any other licence, neither wouldſt thou, nor yet wilt, but refuſedſt, and yet doſt contemptuouſly, to anſwer unto ſuch Concluſions before us; judicially according to our monition and commandment aforeſaid; we do hold all ſuch Concluſions to be by thee confeſſed, and thee the foreſaid John, with all thy foreſaid Concluſions, convicted. And therefore we do pronounce, and declare by Sentence giving, that thou John Aſhton, concerning thoſe Concluſions, which by us with good deliberation of divers Prelates our Suffragans, and alſo divers and ſundry Profeſſors of Divinity, and other wiſe men and learned in the Law, according to the Canonical Sanctions, being condemned and declared for an Heretick, and heretical haſt been, and ſtill art an Heretick, and thy Concluſions heretical. And as touching thy other Concluſions, by us heretofore counted erroneous, and for erroneous condemned, we do pronounce and declare ſententially by theſe our Writings, that both thou haſt erred, and doſt err.

Upon the ſame 20*th* day of June, in the year and place above recited, the foreſaid Lord of Canterbury being deſirous, as he pretended, to be informed by Thomas Hilman, Bachelor of Divinity, there being preſent, and ſomewhat favouring the ſaid Maſter John Aſhton, what his Judgment and Opinion was touching the foreſaid Concluſions, prefixed and aſſigned unto the ſaid Thomas (for that time demanding the ſame deliberation and day) eight days after; that is to ſay, the 28*th* of the ſaid month, to appear before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whereſoever within his ſaid Province of Canterbury he ſhould then happen to be, to declare plainly and fully what his judgment and opinion was touching the foreſaid Concluſions. Ex Regiſt. W. Courtney.

Maſter Thomas Hilman ſuſpected to be a favourer of John Aſhton. The 20*th* day of June

Days given to Thomas Hilman to anſwer.

The Names of Fryers and Doctors aſſiſtant at the Examination aforeſaid.

FRyers Obſervants, Botleſham Biſhop of Navaton, Fryer John Langley, William Suard.

Fryers of Dominicks Order, John Kingham, John Lovey, Peter Stokes, Walter Diſh.

Fryers Carmelites, Thomas Aſhburn, Baukine, Robert Walbey.

The Fryday next following, that is to ſay, the 28*th* day of June, the foreſaid M. Nicholas, Philip, and Thomas Hilman, appeared before the ſaid Archbiſhop and Lord Inquiſitor of Canterbury, in the Chappel of his Mannor of Otford, in the Dioceſs of Canterbury there ſitting in his Tribunal-Seat. To whom the ſaid Biſhop of Canterbury ſaying, That becauſe at that time he had not the preſence and aſſiſtance of the Doctors in Divinity and of the Canon and Civil Law, he continued the ſaid buſineſs touching the ſaid Nicholas, Philip and Thomas, in the ſame ſtate wherein it was, till Tueſday next and immediately enſuing; that is to ſay, the firſt day of July, the year of our Lord aforeſaid: and prefixed unto the ſaid Nicholas Philip, and Thomas Hilman the ſame day to appear before him, whereſoever within his Province of Canterbury he ſhould then chance to be, to do that which upon the ſaid 28*th* day, they were purpoſed to do together or apart.

The 28*th* day of June, An. 1381.

The 1*ſt* day of July, An. 1382.

Which Tueſday being come, the foreſaid Archbiſhop in the chief houſe of his Church at Canterbury, before the hour of Nine with the Doctors, whoſe names are under contained, and other Clerks a great multitude; expected the foreſaid Nicholas, Philip, and Thomas long time, by the Beadle, calling them and looking after them; who nevertheleſs appeared not before two of the Clock after dinner the ſame day, continuing the foreſaid buſineſs in the priſtine ſtate till the ſame hour. At which hour the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, having Aſſiſtants the Doctors and Clerks under recited, examined the foreſaid Maſter Thomas Hilman, then and there judicially appearing, what his opinion was touching the foreſaid Concluſions; who at them and the meaning of them ſomewhat ſtammering, at laſt to all and ſingular the ſame Concluſions then to him read and expounded, thus anſwered, I ſuppoſe and judge all and ſingular thoſe Concluſions lately condemned by my Lord of Canterbury that now is, together with the council and conſent of his Clerks, to be heretical and erroneous, even as the ſame my Lord of Canterbury and other Doctors of Divinity, of the Canon and Civil Law, by common conſent and counſel have ſuppoſed and thought. And the ſame (being for Hereſies and Errors, as before is ſaid condemned) I do as much as in me is condemn; proteſting that I will hold and affirm the contrary of thoſe Concluſions, and in the ſame Faith live and die. Then the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then and there ſitting as Tribunal or Judge, pronouncing the ſaid Maſters, Nicholas and Philip, long in Court called before and tarried for, and yet not appearing, guilty of Contumacy and Diſobedience; excommunicated them for the penalty of this their Contumacy, in tenour of theſe words following:

The anſwer of Thomas Hilman.

Nic. Herford and Philip Reppington, for not appearing, excommunicated.

We William by the Grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of England, Legate of the Apoſtolical

See,

...nounced the Archbiſhop.

See, and through all our Province of Canterbury; of all Heretical pravity chief Inquiſitor; do pronounce Maſter Nicholas Herford and Maſter Philip Reppington, Profeſſors of Divinity, having this day and place by our prefixion appointed to hear and decree in this buſineſs of Heretical pravity (being in Court by our Bedle long called and tarried for, and yet not appearing) to be ſtubborn and diſobedient perſons; and, for the penalty of this their contumacy, we do Excommunicate them and either of them by theſe preſents.

The denouncing of the Excommunication againſt Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington.

The 12th day of July, An. 1382. Excommunication to be denounced at Pauls Croſs.

William by Gods permiſſion Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c. To our beloved Son in Chriſt, whoſoever he be, that this inſtant Sunday ſhall Preach at Pauls Croſs in London, ſalutation grace and bleſſing. Forſamuch as we prefixed a certain competent day and place to Maſter Nicholas Herford, and Maſter Philip Reppington, Canon Regular of the Monaſtery of our Lady of Leiceſter, being Doctors of Divinity, and of Heretical pravity vehemently ſuſpected (after certain anſwers not fully made, but impertinent and nothing to the purpoſe, as alſo Heretical and Erroneous) in divers places of our ſaid Province commonly, generally, and publickly taught and preached; and that therefore they ſhould judicially appear before us, to do and to receive peremptorily in that behalf, what thing ſoever the quality of that buſineſs ſhould move us unto: and that we have for their contumacy in not appearing before us at that day and place, judicially appointed, as right therein required: We by theſe preſents command and commit unto you, firmly injoyning you, that when all the multitude of People ſhall be gathered together to hear your Sermon, that in the day and place appointed you publickly and ſolemnly denounce the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip, holding up a Croſs, and lighting up a Candle, and then throwing down the ſame upon the ground, to have been ſo and in ſuch manner Excommunicated, and ſtill be.

Fare ye well. In our Mannor Houſe at Lambeth, the 13*th* day of July, the Year of our Lord, 1382. and firſt Year of our Tranſlation.

The Citation againſt the ſaid Nicholas and Philip.

William by the Grace of God, &c. To our Welbeloved Son M. Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, Salutation, &c. Foraſmuch as we have prefixed a competent day and place to M. Nicholas Herford, and M. Philip Reppington, &c. As before: We ſtraitly charge and command you, that you publickly and ſolemnly denounce in the Church of our Lady, and in the Schools of the Univerſity, the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip to have been by us Excommunicated, and ſtill be. And that you further cite, or cauſe to be cited peremptorily the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip, that they and every of them appear before us within 15. days after the date of this Citation, whereſoever it ſhall fortune us, within our ſaid Province of Canterbury, then to be: To hear and ſee how we mean to proceed againſt them, and every of them, concerning the foreſaid Heretical and Erroneous concluſions, according to the form of retroactions, and quality of the buſineſs in this behalf had and uſed. And that both of the day of the receit of this preſent Citation, of the manner and form thereof; or if that you ſhall apprehend by perſonal Citation the ſaid Nicholas and Philip, or either of them, or whether they ſhall be abſent and hide themſelves, as of every thing elſe, which in this behalf you ſhall think meet to be done; that between this and the Feaſt of S. Laurence, you clearly certifie us by your Letters Patents, containing the effect of theſe things.

Fare ye well. At our Mannor of Lambeth, the 13*th day of* July in the Year of our Lord 1382. and firſt Year of our Tranſlation.

The names of the Doctors and Friers aſſiſtants at this ſitting.

Againſt this blind Excommunication of the ſaid Archbiſhop the parties Excommunicate commenced and exhibited their appeal unto the Biſhop of Rome. Which appeal of theirs as inſufficient, or rather to him unpleaſant, the ſaid Archbiſhop utterly rejected (as might oftentimes overcometh right) proceeding in his preconceived Excommunication againſt them, and writing moreover his Letters to him that ſhould Preach next at Pauls Croſs, as is aforeſaid, to denounce and to publiſh openly the ſaid Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington to be Excommunicate, for not appearing at their tearm aſſigned. Which was in the 13*th* day of the Month of July.

The Excommunication of Herford and Reppington denounced at Pauls Croſs.

13th day of July, 1382.

Which Archbiſhop moreover the ſaid year, the month and day aforeſaid, ſent alſo another Letter to M. Rigge, Commiſſary of Oxford, ſtraightly injoyning and charging him, not only to denounce the ſaid ſentence of Excommunication, and to give out publick Citation againſt them, but alſo to make diligent ſearch and inquiſition through all Oxford for them, to have them apprehended and ſent up to him, perſonally before him to appear at a certain day preſcribed for the ſame. Whereby may appear how buſie this Biſhop was in diſquieting and perſecuting theſe poor Men, whom rather he ſhould have nouriſhed and Cheriſhed as his Brethren. But as his labor is paſt, ſo his reward will follow, at what day the great Archbiſhop of our ſouls ſhall judicially appear in his Tribunal Seat, to Judge both the quick and the dead.

Other Letters of the Archbiſhop ſent to the Chancellor of Oxford.

The Archbiſhop not yet contented with this, doth moreover by all means poſſible ſolicite the King to joyn withal the power of his temporal Sword, for that he well perceived, that hitherto as yet the Popiſh Clergy had not Authority ſufficient, by any publick Law or Statute of this Land, to proceed unto death againſt any perſon whatſoever, in caſe of Religion, but only by the uſurped Tyranny and example of the Court of Rome. Where note (Gentle Reader) for thy better underſtanding the practice of the Romiſh Prelates in ſeeking the Kings help to further their bloody purpoſe againſt the good Saints of God. Which King being but young, and under years of ripe Judgment, partly induced, or rather ſeduced by importune ſute of the foreſaid Archbiſhop, partly alſo either for fear of the Biſhops (for Kings cannot always do in their Realms what they will) or elſe perhaps inticed by ſome hope of ſubſidy to be gathered by the Clergy, was content to adjoyn his private aſſent (ſuch as it was) to the ſetting down of an ordinance, which was indeed the very firſt Law that is to be found made againſt Religion and the profeſſors thereof, bearing the name of an Act made in the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, An. 5. Rich. 2. Where among ſundry other Statutes then publiſhed, and yet remaining in the printed Books of Statutes, this ſuppoſed Statute is to be found, cap. 5. & ultimo.

a great part of the Clergy of the ſaid Realm, ſpecially aſſembled for this great cauſe; which perſons do alſo preach divers matters of ſlander, to ingender diſcord and diſſention betwixt divers Eſtates of the ſaid Realm, as well Spiritual as Temporal, in exciting of the people to the great peril of all the Realm: which Preachers being cited or ſummoned before the Ordinaries of the places, there to anſwer to that whereof they be impeached, they will not obey to their Summons and Commandments, nor care not for their Monitions nor Cenſures of the holy Church, but expreſly deſpiſe them; and moreover, by their ſubtil and ingenious words, do draw the people to hear their Sermons, and do maintain them in their Errors by ſtrong hand, and by great routs: It is ordained and aſſented in this preſent Parliament, That the Kings Commiſſions be made and directed to the Sheriffs, and other Miniſters of our Sovereign Lord the King, or other ſufficient perſons learned, and according to the Certifications of the Prelates thereof, to be made in the Chancery from time to time, to arreſt all ſuch Preachers, and alſo their Fautors, Maintainers and Abbetters, and to hold them in arreſt and ſtrong priſon, till they will juſtifie themſelves according to the law and reaſon of holy Church. And the King willeth and commandeth, that the Chancellor make ſuch Commiſſions at all times, that he by the Prelates, or any of them ſhall be certified and thereof required, as is aforeſaid.

Note that this Statute was repealed afterwards at the inſtance of the Commons.

An Examination of the foreſaid ſuppoſed Statute, and of the invalidity thereof.

WHich ſuppoſed Statute foraſmuch as it was the principal ground whereupon proceeded all the perſecution of that time; it is therefore not impertinent to examine the ſame more particularly, whereby it ſhall appear, that as the ſame was fraudulently and unduely deviſed by the Prelates only, ſo was it in like manner moſt injurioſly and unorderly executed by them. For immediately upon the publiſhing of this Law, without further warrant either from the King or his Council, Commiſſions under the Great Seal of England were made in this form, Richard by the Grace of God, &c. ut patet, act. pag. 541. Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter the 26th day of June, in the ſixth year of our Reign. Without more words of warrant underwritten, ſuch as in like caſes are both uſual and requiſite, viz. per ipſum Regem: per Regem & concilium: per breve de privato Sigillo. All or any which words being utterly wanting in this place, as may be ſeen in the Kings Records of that time; it muſt therefore be done either by warrant of this foreſaid Statute, or elſe without any warrant at all. Whereupon it is to be noted, that whereas the ſaid Statute appointed the Commiſſions to be directed to the Sheriff, or other Miniſters of the Kings, or to other ſufficient perſons learned for the arreſting of ſuch perſons; the ſaid Commiſſions are directed to the Archbiſhop and his Suffragans, being as it appeareth Parties in the caſe, authorizing them further without either the words, or reaſonable meaning of the ſaid Statute, to impriſon them in their own houſes, or where elſe pleaſed them.

No uſual words of warrant affixed to this Commiſſion

Beſides alſo, what manner of Law this was, by whom deviſed, and by what authority the ſame was firſt made and eſtabliſhed, Judge by that that followeth, viz.

In the Utas of Saint Michael next following, at a Parliament ſummoned and holden at Weſtminſter, the ſixth year of the ſaid King, among ſundry Petitions made to the King by his Commons, whereunto he aſſented, there is one in this form, Article 52.

The petition of the Commons for the repealing of the foreſaid Statute.

Item, prayen the Commons, That whereas an Eſtatute was made the laſt Parliament in theſe words, It is Ordained in this preſent Parliament, That Commiſſions from the King be directed to the Sheriffs, and other Miniſters of the King, or to other ſufficient perſons skilful, and according to the Certificates of the Prelates thereof, to be made unto the Chancery from time to time, to arreſt all ſuch Preachers, and their Fautors, Maintainers and Abbetters: And them to detain in ſtrong priſon, until they will juſtifie themſelves according to reaſon, and law of holy Church: And the King willeth and commandeth, that the Chancellor make ſuch Commiſſions at all times as he ſhall be by the Prelates or any of them certified, and thereof required, as is aforeſaid. The which was never agreed nor granted by the Commons: but whatſoever was moved therein, was without their aſſent. That the ſaid Statute be therefore diſannulled. For it is not in any wiſe their meaning, that either themſelves, or ſuch as ſhall ſucceed them, ſhall be further juſtified or bound by the Prelates, than were their Anceſtors in former times, whereunto is anſwered, il plaiſt al, Roy. I. the King is pleaſed.

The Statute repealed.

The King ratifieth the repeal.

Hereby notwithſtanding the former unjuſt Law of An. 5. was repealed, and the fraud of the Framers thereof ſufficiently diſcovered: yet ſuch means was there made by the Prelates, that this Act of repeal was never publiſhed, nor ever ſithence imprinted with the reſt of the Statutes of that Parliament. Inſomuch as the ſaid Repeal being concealed, like Commiſſions and other Proceſs were made from time to time, by vertue of the ſaid Baſtard-Statute, as well during all the Reign of this King, as ever ſithence againſt the Profeſſors of Religion; as ſhall hereafter by the Grace of God appear in the ſecond year of King Henry the Fourth, where the Clergy purſued the like practice. And now again to the ſtory of our Oxford Divines, and of the Archbiſhop, to whom the King writeth his Letters Patents, firſt to the Archbiſhop, then to the Vice-Chancellor in Oxford as followeth.

The Kings Letters Patents to the Archbiſhop.

The Kings Letters againſt the Favourers of Wickliff.

RIchard by the Grace of God King of England, and Lord of Ireland. To all thoſe to whom theſe preſent Letters ſhall come, greeting. By the Petition of the reverend Father in God, William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of England, exhibited unto us, we right well underſtand: That divers and ſundry Concluſions, very contrary to wholſome Doctrine, and redounding both to the ſubverſion of the Catholick Faith, the holy Church, and to his Province of Canterbury, in divers and ſundry places of the ſame his Province, have been openly and publickly preached, although damnably preached: Of the which Concluſions, ſome as Hereſies, otherſome as Errors have been condemned, but not before good and mature deliberation firſt therein had and uſed; and by common council of the ſaid Archbiſhop, his Suffragans, and many Doctors in Divinity, and other Clerks and learned men in the holy Scriptures, were ſententially and wholſomely declared. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop hath made his Supplication unto us; that both for the coertion and due caſtigation of ſuch as ſhall henceforth of an obſtinate mind, preach or maintain the foreſaid Concluſions, we would vouchſafe to put to the arm and helping hand of our Kingly Power. We therefore moved by the zeal of the Catholick Faith, whereof we be, and will be Defender, and unwilling that any ſuch Hereſies or Errors ſhould ſpring up within the Limits of our Dominion: Give and grant ſpecial Licence and Authority, by the tenour of theſe preſents, unto the foreſaid Archbiſhop, and to his Suffragans, to arreſt and impriſon either in their own priſons, or any other, all and every ſuch perſon and perſons, as ſhall either privily or apertly preach and maintain the foreſaid Concluſions, ſo condemned; and the ſame perſons ſo impriſoned there at their pleaſures to detain, till ſuch time as they ſhall repent them and amend them of ſuch heretical Pravities, or elſe it ſhall be of ſuch arreſts, by us and our Council otherwiſe determined and provided: Further charging and commanding all and ſingular our Liege-men, Miniſters and Subjects, of what ſtate and condition ſoever they be, upon their Fidelity and Allegiance, wherein they ſtand bound to us, that by no means they either favour, counſel, or help the Preachers, or elſe Maintainers of the ſaid Concluſions ſo condemned, or their Favourers, upon pain and forfeiture of all that ever they have; but that they obey and humbly attend upon the ſaid Archbiſhop, his Suffragans, and Miniſters, in the execution of theſe preſents; ſo that due and manifeſt publication againſt the foreſaid Concluſions and their Maintainers, without any perturbation, may be done and executed, as for the Defence of our Realm and Catholick Faith ſhall be thought moſt meet and requiſite. In witneſs whereof, we have cauſed theſe our Letters Patents to be made.

The Kings Letters Patents to the Vice-Chancellor.

Another Letter of the King to the Vice-Chancellor.

THe King to the Chancellor and the Procurators of the Univerſity of Oxford which now be, or for the time being ſhall be greeting. Moved by the zeal of Chriſtian Faith, whereof we be, and always will be Defenders, and for our Souls health induced thereunto, having a great deſire to repreſs, and by condign puniſhment to reſtrain the Impugners of the foreſaid Faith, which newly and wickedly go about and preſume to ſow their naughty and perverſe Doctrine within our Kingdom of England, and to preach and hold damnable Concluſions, ſo notoriouſly repugnant and contrary to the ſame Faith, to the perverting of our ſubjects and people, as we underſtand: Before they any further proceed in their malicious errors, or elſe infect others. We have by theſe Preſents appointed you to be Inquiſitor-General (all the chief Divines of the ſaid Univerſity being your Aſſiſtants) and the ſame likewiſe to be done of all and ſingular the Graduates, Divines and Lawyers of the ſame Univerſity. And if they ſhall know any which be of the Juriſdiction of the ſaid Univerſity of Oxford, which be probably of them ſuſpected to be in the favour, belief, or defence of any Hereſie or Error, and ſpecially of any of the Concluſions publickly condemned by the reverend Father, William, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by the Council of his Clergy, or elſe of any other Concluſion like unto any of them in meaning, or in words; and that if henceforth you ſhall find any that ſhall believe, favour, or defend any of the foreſaid Hereſies or Errors, or any other ſuch like, or elſe which ſhall be bold to receive into their Houſes and Inns, Maſter John Wickliffe, Maſter Nicholas Herford, Maſter Philip Reppington, or Maſter John Aſhton, or any other noted by probable ſuſpition of any the foreſaid Hereſies, or Errors, or any other like unto them in meaning, or in word: Or that ſhall preſume to communicate with any of them, or elſe to defend or favour any of ſuch Favourers, Receivers, Communicants, and Defenders, within ſeven days after the ſame ſhall appear and be manifeſt unto you, that you baniſh and expel them from the Univerſity and Town of Oxford, till ſuch time as they ſhall declare their Innocency before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for the time being, by manifeſt purgation. So notwithſtanding that ſuch as be compelled to purge themſelves, you certifie us and the ſaid Archbiſhop, under your Seals, from time to time within one month, that they be ſuch manner of men. Commanding furthermore, that through all the Halls of the ſaid Univerſity ye cauſe diligently to be ſearched and inquired out of hand; If any man have any Book or Tractation of the Edition, or compiling of the foreſaid M. John Wickliffe, or N. Herford: and that when and whereſoever ye ſhall chance to find any ſuch Book or Tractation, ye cauſe the ſame to be arreſted and taken, and unto the foreſaid Archbiſhop within one month (without correction, corruption, or mutation, whatſoever) word for word, and ſentence for ſentence, to be brought and preſented. And therefore we ſtraitly enjoyn and command you, upon your Fidelity and Allegiance wherein ye ſtand bound unto us, and upon pain of forfeiture of all and ſingular your Liberties and Privileges of your ſaid Univerſity, and of all that ever you have beſides; that you give your diligent attendance upon the premiſſes, and that well and faithfully you execute the ſame in manner and form aforeſaid. And that you obey the foreſaid Archbiſhop, and his lawful and honeſt Mandates, that he ſhall think good to direct unto you in this behalf, as it is meet ye ſhould. And we give in charge unto the Vice-Chancellor and Major of Oxford for the time being, and to all and ſingular our Sheriffs, and Under-Sheriffs, Bailiffs and Subjects by theſe preſents; that they aid, obey, and be attendant upon you in the execution of the premiſſes. In witneſs whereof, &c. Witneſs the King at Weſtminſter the thirteenth day of July, the ſixth year of his Reign.

The 13th day of July, Anno 1382.

Beſides theſe Letters Patents, the ſaid young King moved by the unquiet importunity of the Archbiſhop, ſendeth moreover another ſpecial Letter to the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors of the Univerſity of Oxford. Wherein, under a pretenſed zeal of Defence of Chriſtian Faith, he ſtraitly and ſharply enjoyneth and aſſigneth them (for the utter aboliſhing of thoſe Concluſions and Opinions) to make a general Inquiſition through the whole Univerſity, as well for the Parties aforeſaid, John Wickliffe, Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, John Aſhton, and ſuch others; as alſo for all other whom they know or judge to be ſuſpected of that Doctrine, or to be Maintainers, Receivers, and Defenders of the foreſaid Parties, or their Concluſions any manner of way; to the intent that they being ſo apprehended through their diligent ſearch may be within ſeven days of their Admonitions expulſed the Univerſity, and cited up to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, before him to appear and to ſtand to their Anſwers. Willing moreover and commanding the ſaid Vice-Chancellor and Proctors with other Regents their Aſſiſters, that if any perſon or perſons in any Houſe, Hall, or College, or in any other place ſhall be found to have any of their Books or Treatiſes compiled by the ſaid John Wickliffe, Nicholas Herford, &c. they will cauſe without delay the ſaid perſon or perſons with their Books, to be arreſted and attached, and preſented within one month, without correction, corruption, or mutation, to the foreſaid Archbiſhop, upon their Faith and Allegiance, as they will avoid the forfeiture of all and ſingular the Liberties and Priviledges of the Univerſity appertaining. And that they will be obedient to the Archbiſhop aforeſaid in the ordering hereof, and all other his Injunctions to be obeyed in all things lawful and honeſt. Giving moreover in theſe our Letters charge and commandment to the Major, Bailiffs, and other the Inhabitants of Oxford to be Aſſiſtant and Attendant unto the foreſaid Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, touching the execution of the Premiſſes, bearing the date of the 14th day of July, which was the year of our Lord, 1382.

KING Ric. 2.

Another ſharp Letter of King Richard ſent to Oxford againſt Wickliffe and his Fellows.

The effect of the Kings Letter briefly comprehended.

The perſons with their Books to be arreſted.

The 14th day of July, 1382.

Matters incident of Robert Rigges, Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington, with others.

THe Vice-Chancellor the ſame time in Oxford was M. Robert Rigge. The two Proctors were John Huntman and Walter Diſh; who then, as far as they durſt, favoured the Cauſe of John Wickliffe and that ſide. Inſomuch that the ſame time and year, which was Anno 1382. when certain publick Sermons ſhould be appointed cuſtomably at the Feaſt of the Aſcenſion, and of Corpus Chriſti, to be preached in the Cloyſter of Saint Frideſwide (now called Chriſts Church) before the people, by the Vice-Chancellor aforeſaid and the Proctors: the doings thereof the Vice-Chancellor aforeſaid and Proctors had committed to Philip Reppington and Nicholas Herford, ſo that Nicholas Herford ſhould preach on the Aſcenſion-day, and Reppington upon Corpus Chriſti day. Firſt, Herford beginning was noted to defend John Wickliffe openly to be a faithful, good, and innocent man; for the which no ſmall ado with Out-cries was amongſt the Fryers. This Herford, after he had long favoured and maintained Wickliffes part, grew firſt in ſuſpition amongſt the Enemies of the Truth. For aſſoon as he began ſomewhat liberally and freely to pronounce and utter any thing, which tended to the defence of Wickliffe; by and by the Carmelites, and all the Orders of Religion were on his top, and laid not a few Hereſies unto his Charge; the which they had ſtrained here and there out of his Sermons, and had compiled together in a certain forme, by the hands of certain Notaries (through the induſtry and diligence of one Peter Stokes a Carmelite, a kind of people prone and ready to all kind of miſchief, uproars, and debate, and diſſention,) After this the Feaſt of Corpus Chriſti drew near; upon which day it was looked for that Reppington ſhould preach. This man was a Canon of Leiceſter, and had before taken his firſt Degree unto Doctorſhip, who preaching the ſame time at Brodgates, for the ſame Sermon he became firſt ſuſpected, and hated of the Phariſaical brood of the Fryers: but through the great and notable dexterity of his wit, (which all men did behold and ſee in him) accompanied with like modeſty and honeſty, he did ſo overcome, or at the leaſt aſſwage this cruelty and perſecution which was towards him, that ſhortly after, by the conſent of the whole Fellowſhip, he was admitted Doctor.

Robert Rigge Vice-Chancellor of Oxford.

Nicholas Herford preaching on the Aſcenſion-day defended Wickliff.

Reppington firſt Canon of Leiceſter, after Biſhop of Lincoln.

Reppington commenced Doctor.

Who

Who aſſoon as he had taken it upon him, by and by he ſtepped forth in the Schools, and began immediately to ſhew forth and utter, that which he had long hidden and diſſembled. Proteſting openly, that in all moral matters he would defend Wickliff. But as touching the Sacrament he would as yet hold his peace, until ſuch time as the Lord ſhall otherwiſe illuminate the hearts and minds of the Clergy.

Now the day of Corpus Chriſti aforeſaid approaching near, when the Friers underſtood that this Man ſhould preach, fearing leſt that he would rub the galls of their Religion, they convented with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that the ſame day, a little before that Philip ſhould preach, Wickliff's Concluſions, which were privately condemned, ſhould be openly defamed in the preſence of the whole Univerſity. The doing of which matter was committed to Peter Stokes Frier, Standard-bearer, and chief Champion of that ſide againſt Wickliff.

Peter Stokes Standard-bearer to the Papiſts.

There were alſo Letters ſent unto the Commiſſary, that he ſhould help and aid him in publiſhing of the ſame Concluſions, as is before declared.

Theſe things thus done and finiſhed, Reppington at the hour appointed, proceeded to his Sermon. In the which Sermon, among many other things, he was reported to have uttered theſe ſayings, or to this effect:

Notes of the Sermon of Reppington.

That the Popes or Biſhops ought not to be recommended above Temporal Lords.

Alſo, That in moral matters he would defend Maſter Wickliff as a true Catholick Doctor.

Moreover, That the Duke of Lancaſter was very earneſtly affected and minded in this matter, and would that all ſuch ſhould be received under his protection; beſides many things more, which touched the praiſe and defence of Wickliff.

And finally, in concluding his Sermon, he diſmiſſed the People with this Sentence; I will (ſaid he) in the ſpeculative Doctrine, as appertaining to the matter of the Sacrament of the Altar, keep ſilence and hold my peace, until ſuch time as God otherwiſe ſhall inſtruct and illuminate the hearts of the Clergy.

When the Sermon was done, Reppington entred into S. Frideſwides Church, accompanied with many of his friends; who, as the enemies furniſhed, were privily weaponed under their garments, if need had been. Frier Stokes the Carmelite aforeſaid, ſuſpecting all this to be againſt him, and being afraid of hurt, kept him within the Sanctuary of the Church, not daring as then, to put out his head. The Vicechancellor and Reppington, friendly ſaluting one another in the Church-porch, ſent away the People, and ſo departed every man home to his own houſe. There was not a little joy through the whole Univerſity for that Sermon; but in the mean time, the unquiet and buſie Carmelite ſlipt not his matter. For firſt by his Letters he declared the whole order of the matter unto the Archbiſhop, exaggerating the perils and dangers that he was in, requiring and deſiring his help and aid, pretermitting nothing whereby to move and ſtir up the Archbiſhops mind, which of his own nature was as hot as a Toſt, as they ſay, and ready enough to proſecute the matter of his own accord, though no man had prickt him forward thereunto. Beſides all this (three days after) with a fierce and bold courage, the ſaid Frier, breathing out threatnings and Hereſies againſt them, took the way unto the Schools, minding there to prove, that the Pope and the Biſhops ought to be prayed for before the Lords Temporal. Whilſt this Frier was thus occupied in the Schools, he was mocked and derided of all Men, and ſhortly after he was ſent for by the Archbiſhop to London; whom immediately after the Vicechancellor and Brightwel followed up, to purge and clear themſelves and their adherents, from the accuſations of this Frier Peter. At the length, they being examined upon Wickliff's Concluſions that were condemned; they did all conſent, that they were worthily condemned. The Vicechancellor being afterward accuſed for the contempt of the Archbiſhops Letters, when as he perceived and ſaw that no excuſe would prevail to avoid that danger, humbling himſelf upon his knees, he deſired pardon. The which when he had now again (as is aforeſaid) albeit very hardly obtained; by the help of the Biſhop of Wincheſter he was ſent away again with certain commandments, and Suſpenſions of Hereticks. Then began the hatred on either part ſomewhat to appear and ſhew, and ſpecially all men were offended, and in the tops of theſe Friers and Religious Men; unto whom, whatſoever trouble or miſchief was raiſed up, they did impute it as to the authors and cauſers of the ſame. Amongſt whom there was one Henry Crompe, a Monk Ciſtercian, a well learned Divine, which afterward was accuſed by the Biſhops of Hereſie. He at that time was openly ſuſpected by the Commiſſary, becauſe in his Lectures he called the Hereticks Lollards in his Acts (as they term them) in the School. Then he, coming by and by up to London, made his complaint unto the Archbiſhop, and to the Kings Council.

The Univerſity re-byeceth.

Whether the Lords Temporal were to be prayed for before the Biſhops.

The Frier derided and mocked in the Schools.

Religious Men firſt cauſers of this trouble.

Hen. Crompe firſt an accuſer of other, after accuſed himſelf for Hereſie.

Whereupon he obtaining the Letters of the King, and of his Council, by the vertue thereof (returning again to the Univerſity) he was releaſed and reſtored again to his former ſtate, the words of which Letter here followeth under written.

The Copy of the King's Letter.

'THE King to the Vicechancellor and Procurators of 'the Univerſity of Oxford, greeting. Whereas we 'of late underſtanding by the grievous complaint of Hen- 'ry Crompe Monk, and Regent in Divinity within the ſaid 'Univerſity, how that he, being aſſiſted by the Reve- 'rend Father in God the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and 'by other Clerks and Divines in the City of London, to 'proceed in the condemnation of certain concluſions erro- 'neous and heretical, hath been therefore moleſted by 'you, and that you through ſiniſter ſuggeſtion of ſome ad- 'verſaries (pretending the peace of the ſaid Univerſity to 'have been broken by the ſaid Henry in his laſt Lecture) 'did therefore call him before you to appear and anſwer; 'and for his not appearing, did therefore pronounce him as 'obſtinate, and convict of peace breaking, and have alſo 'ſuſpended the ſaid Henry from his Lectures, and all ſcho- 'laſtical Acts. And whereas we by our Writ did call you 'up for the ſame, to appear and anſwer before our Coun- 'cil unto the premiſes; and, all things being well tried 'and examined by the ſaid Council, it was found and de- 'termined, that all your proceſs againſt the ſaid Henry, was 'void and of none effect, and commandment given, that 'the ſaid Henry ſhould be reſtored and admitted again to 'his former Lectures and ſcholaſtical Acts, and to his pri- 'ſtine ſtate as you know. To the intent therefore that this 'Decree aforeſaid ſhould be more duly executed of your 'part, we here by theſe Preſents ſtraitly charge and com- 'mand you, that you ſpeedily revoking again all your Pro- 'ceſs againſt the ſaid Henry in the Univerſity aforeſaid, 'with all other that followed thereof, do admit and cauſe 'to be reſtored again the ſaid Henry to his ſcholaſtical Acts, 'his accuſtomed Lectures, and priſtine eſtate, without all 'delay, according to the form of the decree and determi- 'nation aforeſaid. Enjoyning you moreover, and your 'Commiſſaries or Deputies, and your ſucceſſors, and all 'other maſters regent and not regent, and other Preſidents, 'Officers, Miniſters and Scholars of the Univerſity afore- 'ſaid, upon your faith and allegiance you ow to us, that 'you do not impeach, moleſt or grieve, or cauſe to be griev- 'ed (any manner of way, privy or apert) the ſaid Frier 'Henry for the cauſes premiſed, or Frier Peter Stokes Car- 'melite, for the occaſion of his abſence from the Univer- 'ſity, or Frier Stephen Packington Carmelite, or any other 'religious or ſecular perſon favouring them, upon occaſion of 'any, either word or deed whatſoever, concerning the Doc- 'rine of Mr. J. Wickliff, Nich. Herford, and Ph. Reppington, 'or the reproof and condemnation of their Hereſies and Er- 'rors, or the correction of their favourers; but that you do pro- 'cure the peace, unity and quiet within the ſaid Univerſity, 'and chiefly between the religious and ſecular perſons; and 'that you with all diligence, nouriſh, increaſe and preſerve 'the ſame to the uttermoſt of your ſtrength. And that you 'in no caſe omit to do it accordingly, upon the forfeitures 'of all and ſingular the liberties and priviledges of the Uni- 'verſity aforeſaid.

The Kings Letter to the Vicechancellor and Proctors of Oxf.

Hen. Crompe complaineth to the Kings Council of the moſt ſecular Maſters of Oxford.

Hen. Crompe, Peter Stokes, Carm. Stepe. Packington, Carm. reſtored by the King to their ſcholaſtical Acts.

'Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter the 'fourteenth day of July.

Mention was made, as you heard a little before, how Maſter Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford, coming up with Maſter Brightwel to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was there ſtraitly examined of the concluſions of Wickliff, where he notwithſtanding, through the help of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, obtained pardon, and was ſent away again with commandments and charges to ſeek out all the favourers of John Wickliff. This commandment being received, Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington (being privily warned by the ſaid Vicechancellor) in the mean ſeaſon conveyed themſelves out of ſight, and fled to the Duke of Lancaſter for ſuccour and help; but the Duke, whether for fear, or for what cauſe elſe I cannot ſay, in the end forſook his poor and miſerable Clients.

Herford and Reppington fled to the Duke of Lancaſter.

In the mean time, while they were fled thus to the Duke, great ſearch and inquiſition was made for them, to cite and to apprehend them whereſoever they might be found. Whereupon the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, William Courtney, directed out his Letters firſt to the Vicechancellor of Oxford, then to the Biſhop of London named Robert Braybroke; charging them not only to excommunicate the ſaid Nicholas and Philip within their juriſdiction, and the ſaid Excommunication to be denounced likewiſe throughout all the Dioceſs of his Suffragans: but alſo moreover, that diligent ſearch and watch ſhould be laid for them, both in Oxford and in London, that they might be apprehended; requiring moreover by them to be certified again, what they had done in the premiſes. And this was written the 14*th.* day of July, Anno 1382. Ex Regiſt.

Letters of the Archbiſhop to the Vicechancellor.
Letters of the Archbiſhop to the Biſhop of London.
Robert Braybroke Biſhop of London.
The 14th. day of July, Anno 1382.

Unto theſe Letters received from the Archbiſhop diligent Certificat was given accordingly, as well of the Biſhop of London his part, as alſo of the Vicechancellor, the tenor whereof was this:

The Letter Certificatory of the Vicechancellor to the Archbiſhop.

The Letter of R. Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford to the Archbiſhop.

TO the reverend father in Chriſt, Lord William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, Robert Rigges, Profeſſor of Divinity, and Vicechancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, greeting with due honour. Your Letters bearing the date of the fourteenth of July I have received; by the authority whereof I have denounced, and cauſed to be denounced effectually, the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip to have been, and to be excommunicate publickly and ſolemnly in the Church of S. Mary, and in the Schools, and to be cited alſo perſonally, if by any means they might be apprehended, according as you commanded. But after diligent ſearch laid for them of my part, to have them perſonally cited and apprehended, I could not find neither the ſaid Mr. Nicholas, nor Mr. Philip, who have hid or conveyed themſelves, unknown to me, as here is well known. Whereof I thought here to give ſignification to your Fatherhood. Sealed and teſtified with the Seal of mine office. From Oxford the 25th. of July.

The 25th. day of July, Anno 1382.

Herford and Reppington repulſed from the Duke of Lancaſter.

In the mean time Nicholas Herford and Reppington being repulſed of the Duke, and deſtitute (as was ſaid) of his ſupportation, whether they were ſent, or of their own accord went to the Archbiſhop, it was uncertain. This I find in a Letter of the foreſaid Archbiſhop, contained in his Regiſter; that Reppington the 23d. day of October, the ſame year 1382. was reconciled again to the Archbiſhop, and alſo by his general Letter was releaſed, and admitted to his ſcholaſtical Acts in the Univerſity. And ſo was alſo John Aſhton, of whom (Chriſt willing) more ſhall follow hereafter. Of Nicholas Herford all this while I find no ſpecial relation.

J. Aſhton reconciled by the Archbiſhop.

In the mean time, about the twenty third of the Month of September the ſaid year, the King ſent his Mandate to the Archbiſhop for collecting of a Subſidy, and to have a Convocation of the Clergy ſummoned againſt the next Parliament, which ſhould begin the 18*th.* day of November. The Archbiſhop likewiſe, on the 15*th.* day of October, directed his Letters Monitory (as the manner is) to Robert Braybroke Biſhop of London, to give the ſame admonition to all his Suffragans, and other of the Clergy within his Province, for the aſſembling of the Convocation aforeſaid.

A Parliament ſummoned the 15th. of Octob. 1382.

All which done and executed, the Parliament begun, being holden at Oxford the eighteenth day of November, where the Convocation was kept in the Monaſtery of Frideſwide in Oxford. In the which Convocation the Archbiſhop, with other Biſhops there ſitting in their Pontificalibus, declared two cauſes of that their preſent Aſſembly, the one (ſaith he) to repreſs Hereſies, which began newly in the Realm to ſpring, and for correcting other exceſſes in the Church. The other cauſe (ſaid he) was to aid and ſupport the King with ſome neceſſary Subſidy of Mony to be gathered, which thus declared, the Convocation was continued till the day following, which was the 19*th.* of November.

KING Ric. 2.
The Convocation of S. Frideſwide in Oxford the 18th. day of Nov.

At the ſaid day and place, the Archbiſhop with the other Prelates, aſſembling themſelves as before: the Archbiſhop after the uſed ſolemnity, willed the Procurators of the Clergy, appointed for every Dioceſs, to conſult within themſelves, in ſome convenient ſeveral place, what they thought for their parts touching the redreſs of things, to be notified and declared to him and to his brethren, &c.

The 19th. of November Anno 1382.

Furthermore, forſomuch (ſaith he) as it is ſo noiſed through all the Realm, that there were certain in the Univerſity of Oxford, which did hold and maintain concluſions (as he calleth them) Heretical and erroneous, condemned by him, and by other Lawyers and Doctors of Divinity; he therefore aſſigned the Biſhops of Sarum, Hereford, and Rocheſter, with William Rugge then Vicechancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford (for belike Robert Rigge was then diſplaced) as alſo William Berton, and John Middleton Doctors; giving them his full authority with curing and banning to compel them to ſearch, and to enquire with all diligence and ways poſſibly, over all, and ſingular whatſoever, either Doctors, Bachelors, or Scholars of the ſaid Univerſity, which did hold, teach, maintain and defend, in Schools, or out of Schools, the ſaid Concluſions Heretical (as he called them) or erroneous, and afterward to give Certificate truly and plainly touching the premiſes. And thus for that day the Aſſembly brake up to the next, and ſo to the next, and the third being Monday, the 24*th.* day of November; Ex Regiſt. W. Courtney.

Rob. Rigges diſplaced from the Vicechancelorſhip.
The 24th. day of Nov. Anno 1382.

On the which day, in the preſence of the Prelates and the Clergy in the Chapter houſe of St. Frideſwide, came in Philip Reppington (otherwiſe called of the Brethren afterward Rampington) who there abjured the Concluſions and Aſſertions aforeſaid, in this form of words as followeth.

In Dei nomine, Amen. I Philip Reppington, Canon of the Houſe of Leiceſter, acknowledging one Catholick and Apoſtolick Faith, do curſe and alſo abjure all Hereſy, namely theſe Hereſies and errors under written, condemned and reproved by the Decrees Canonical, and by you moſt reverend Father, touching which hitherto I have been defamed; condemning moreover, and reproving both them and the Authors of them, and do confeſs the ſame to be Catholically condemned. And I ſwear alſo by theſe holy Evangeliſts, which here I hold in my hand, and do promiſe, never by any perſwaſions of men, nor by any way hereafter, to defend or hold as true, any of the ſaid concluſions underwritten; but do and will ſtand and adhere in all things, to the determination of the holy Catholick Church, and to yours, in this behalf. Over and beſides, all ſuch as ſtand contrary to this faith, I do pronounce them with their Doctrine and Followers worthy of everlaſting curſe. And if I my ſelf ſhall preſume at any time to hold or preach any thing contrary to the premiſes, I ſhall be content to abide the ſeverity of the Canons. Subſcribed with mine own hand, and of mine own accord, Philip Reppington. And thus the ſaid Rampington was diſcharged, who afterward was made Biſhop of Lincoln, and became at length the moſt bitter and extream Perſecutor of this ſide, of all the other Biſhops within the Realm, as in proceſs hereafter may appear.

The Abjuration of Phil. Reppington.
Philip Reppington after his abjuration, became a terrible Perſecutor.

After the Abjuration of this Reppington, immediately was brought in John Aſhton Student of Divinity; who being examined of thoſe Concluſions, and willed to ſay his mind, anſwered, That he was too ſimple and ignorant, and therefore would not, and could not anſwer any thing clearly or diſtinctly to thoſe Concluſions. Whereupon the Archbiſhop aſſigned to him Doctor William Rugge the Vicechancellor and other Divines, ſuch as he required himſelf, himſelf, to be inſtructed in the myſtery of thoſe concluſions againſt the afternoon; who then, appearing again after Dinner before the Archbiſhop and the Prelates, did in like ſort and form of words abjure as did Reppington before.

A ſhort time my Lord, for a man in one forenoon to learn a faith againſt his Conſcience.
The Abjuration of J. Aſhton.

Of this John Aſhton we read, that afterward, by Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he was cited and condemned; but whether he died in Priſon, or was burned, we have yet no certainty to ſhew. This is certain, by the plain words of the Chronicle of S. Albans, that when the Archbiſhop with his Doctors and Friers ſate in examination upon this ſaid John Aſhton in London, the Londoners brake open the door of the Conclave, ipſumque Archiepiſcopum in civitate ſedentem impediverunt, cum proceſſum feciſſet contra Johannem Aſhton, &c. That is, And did lett the Archbiſhop himſelf ſitting in the City of London, when he would have made proceſs againſt John Aſhton, An. 1382. And thus much of John Aſhton.

Ex Chr. Mon. D. Alb. J. Aſhton. The Londoners open the door where the Archbiſhop ſate againſt J. Aſhton.

As touching Nicholas Herford, during the time of this Convocation he did not appear; and therefore had the ſentence of excommunication. Againſt which he put his appeal from the Archbiſhop to the King and his Council. The Archbiſhop would not admit it, but finding ſtays and ſtops, cauſed him to be apprehended and incloſed in Priſon. Notwithſtanding through the will of God and good means, he eſcaped out of the Priſon, returning again to his former exercise and preaching as he did before, albeit in as covert and ſecret manner as he could. Whereupon the Archbiſhop, thundring out his bolts of Excommunication againſt him, ſending to all Paſtors and Miniſters, willing them in all Churches, and on all Feſtival days, to divulge the ſaid Excommunication againſt him to all Men; he writeth moreover, and ſendeth ſpecial charge to all and ſingular of the Laity, to beware that their ſimplicity be not deceived by his Doctrine, but that they like Catholick children will avoid him, and cauſe him of all other to be avoided.

Nic. Herford would not appear.
Nic. Herford appealed from the Archbiſhop. N. Herford caſt into priſon.
Herford eſcapeth out of Priſon.

Furthermore, not contented with this, he addreſſeth alſo his Letter unto the King, requiring alſo the aid of his temporal ſword to chop off his Neck, whom he had already caſt down. See and note, Reader, the ſeraphical charity of theſe Prieſtly Prelates towards the poor redeemed flock of Chriſt. And yet theſe be they which, waſhing their hands with Pilate, ſay, and pretend, Nobis non licet interficere quenquam; it is not our parts to kill any man. The Copy of the Letter written to the King is this:

The Letter of the Archbiſhop to the King.

The cruel Letter of the Archbiſhop to the King againſt N. Herford.

TO the moſt excellent Prince in Chriſt, &c. William, &c. Greeting in him by whom Kings do reign, and Princes bear rule. Unto your Kingly celſitude by the tenor of theſe preſents we intimate, that one Maſter Nicholas Herford Doctor of Divinity, for his manifeſt contumacy and offence in not appearing before us being called at the day and place aſſigned, is therefore inwrapped in the ſentence of the greater curſe, publickly by our ordinary authority; and in the ſame ſentence hath continued now forty days, and yet ſtill continueth with obdurate heart, wickedly contemning the keis of the Church, both to the great peril of his ſoul, and to the pernicious example of other. Forſomuch therefore, as the holy Mother the Church hath not to do, or to proceed any further in this matter, we humbly deſire your Kingly Majeſty to direct out your Letters for the apprehending of the ſaid excommunicate, according to the cuſtom of this Realm of England, wholeſomely obſerved and kept hitherto; to the intent that ſuch, whom the fear of God doth not reſtrain from evil, the diſcipline of the Secular arm may bridle and pluck back from offending. Your Princely celſitude the Lord long continue. From Lambeth the 15*th. of* January.

This is not to ſeek again that which is loſt by the rule of Ezekiel.

To this Letter of the Archbiſhop might not the King (gentle Reader) thus anſwer again, and anſwer well?

Probatoria. Why the King might have anſwered again.

'YOur Letters with your complaint and requeſts in the 'ſame contained, we have received and well conſider-'ed: For the accompliſhing whereof ye ſhall underſtand, 'that as we are readily bent to gratifie and ſatisfie your mind 'in this behalf on the one ſide; ſo we muſt beware again 'on the other, that our authority be not abuſed, either to 'oppreſs before we know, or to judge before we have tried. 'Wherefore forſomuch as you in your Letters do excite 'and ſharpen the ſevere diſcipline of our ſecular ſword a-'gainſt one Nicholas Herford, for his not appearing before 'you; and yet ſhewing in the ſaid your Letters no certain 'cauſe to us what you have to charge him withal: we there-'fore following the example of Alexander Magnus, or ra-'ther the rule of equity in opening both our ears indiffe-'rently, to hear as well the one part as the other, doth aſſign 'both to him, when as he may be found, and to you, when 'ye ſhall be called, a term to appear before us. To the in-'tent that the controverſie between you and him, ſtanding 'upon points of religion, being tried by the true Touchſtone 'of Gods holy word, due correction indifferently may be 'miniſtred according as the offence ſhall be found. In the 'mean time, this we cannot but ſomething marvel at in your 'ſaid Letters: Firſt, to ſee you Men of the Church, and An-'gels of peace, to be ſo deſirous of blood. Secondly, to con-'ſider you again ſo fierce in proſecuting the breach of your 'law; and yet ſo cold in purſuing the breach of the expreſs 'law of God and his Commandments. Thirdly, to behold 'the unſtable doubleneſs in your proceedings, who pretend-'ing in your publick ſentence to become as intreaters for 'them to us in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, that we will 'withdraw from them the rigour of our ſeverity, yet in 'your Letters be they which moſt ſet us on. If not appear-'ing before you be ſuch a matter of contumacy in caſe of 'your law, that it is in no caſe to be ſpared; what ſhould 'then our Princely diſcipline have done to Men of your call-'ing? Henry Spencer Biſhop of Norwich, being at Canter-'bury, was ſent for by our ſpecial commandment, to come 'to our ſpeech, who denied to come, and yet we ſpared 'him. John Stratford Archbiſhop, your predeceſſor, being 'required of our Progenitor King Edward the 3d. to come 'to him at York, would not appear; by the occaſion where-'of Scotland the ſame time was loſt, and yet was he ſuffer-'ed. The like might be ſaid of Robert Winchelſey in the 'days of King Edward the firſt, and of Edmond Archbi-'ſhop of Canterbury, in the days of King Henry the third; 'Stephen Langton was ſent for by King John to come, he 'came not. The like contumacy was in Becket toward K. 'Henry the ſecond. Alſo in Anſelm toward K. Henry the 'firſt. All theſe for their not appearing before their Princes 'ye do excuſe, who notwithſtanding might have appeared 'without danger of life; this one man for not appearing 'before you, you think worthy of death, whoſe life you 'would have condemned notwithſtanding, if he had appear-'ed. If the Squiril climing to the Tree from the Lions claws 'would not appear, being ſent for to be devoured, it is no 'reaſon that the Eagle therefore ſhould ſeiſe upon him with-'out any juſt cauſe declared againſt the party. Wherefore, 'according to this and to that aforeſaid, when he ſhall ap-'pear, and you be called, and the cauſe juſtly weighed, due 'execution ſhall be miniſtred.

Biſhops of Canterbury appeared not before their Kings, and yet they were not perſecuted.

And thus far concerning Nicholas Herford, and the other aforeſaid: But all this mean while what became of John Wickliff it is not certainly known. Albeit, ſo far as may be gathered out of Walden, it appeareth that he was baniſhed and driven to exile. In the mean time it is not to be doubted, but he was alive during all this while, whereſoever he was, as by his Letter may appear, which he about this time wrote to Pope Urban the ſixth. In the which Letter he doth purge himſelf, that being commanded to appear before the Pope at Rome, he came not; declaring alſo in the ſame a brief confeſſion of his faith. The Copy of which Epiſtle here followeth.

The Epiſtle of John Wickliff ſent unto Pope Urban the ſixth, Anno 1382.

The Epiſtle of J. Wick. to Pope Urban.

VErily I do rejoice to open and declare unto every man the faith which I do hold, and ſpecially unto the Biſhop of Rome; the which forſomuch as I do ſuppoſe to be ſound and true, he will moſt willingly confirm my ſaid faith, or, if it be erroneous, amend the ſame.

Firſt, I ſuppoſe that the Goſpel of Chriſt is the whole body of Gods Law; and that Chriſt, which did give that ſame law himſelf, I believe to be a very Man, and in that point, to exceed the law of the Goſpel, and all other parts of the Scripture. Again, I do give and bid the Biſhop of Rome, forſomuch as he is the Vicar of Chriſt here in earth, to be bound moſt of all other Men unto that law of the Goſpel. For the greatneſs amongſt Chriſts Diſciples did not conſiſt in worldly dignity or honours, but in the near and exact following of Chriſt in his life and manners: whereupon I do gather out of the heart of the law of the Lord, that Chriſt for the time of his pilgrimage here was a moſt poor man, abjecting and caſting off all worldly rule and honour, as appeareth by the Goſpel of St. Matthew, the 8th. Chapter, and the 2d. of the Corinthians, the 8th. Chapter.

The true Diſciples of Chriſt ſeek no honour.

Hereby I do fully gather, that no faithful man ought to follow, either the Pope himſelf, or any of the holy men, but in ſuch points as he hath followed the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. For Peter and the Sons of Zebede, by deſiring worldly honour, contrary to the following of Chriſts ſteps, did offend, and therefore in thoſe errors they are not to be followed.

Hereof I do gather, as a counſel, that the Pope ought to leave unto the ſecular power all temporal dominion and rule, and thereunto effectually to move and exhort his whole Clergy; for ſo did Chriſt, and eſpecially by his Apoſtles. Wherefore if I have erred in any of theſe points, I will moſt humbly ſubmit my ſelf unto correction, even by death, if neceſſity ſo require; and if I could labour according to my will or deſire in mine own perſon, I would ſurely preſent my ſelf before the Biſhop of Rome; but the Lord hath otherwiſe viſited me to the contrary, and hath taught me rather to obey God than Men. Forſomuch then as God hath given unto our Pope juſt and true Evangelical Inſtinctions, we ought to pray that thoſe motions be not extinguiſhed by any ſubtile or crafty device.

And that the Pope and Cardinals be not moved to do any thing contrary unto the law of the Lord. Wherefore let us pray unto our God, that he will ſo ſtir up our Pope Urban the ſixth, as he began, that he with his Clergy may follow the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in life and manners; and that they may teach the people effectually, and that they likewiſe may faithfully follow them in the ſame. And let us ſpecially pray, that our Pope may be preſerved from all malign and evil counſel, which we do know that evil and envious men of his houſhold would give him. And ſeeing the Lord will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our power, much leſs then will he require of any creature to do that thing which they are not able; forſomuch as that is the plain condition and manner of Antichriſt.

The Pope occupied ſo in ſchiſmatical Wars, that he had no leiſure to other matters.

Thus much wrote John Wickliff unto Pope Urban. But this Pope Urban, otherwiſe termed Turbanus, was ſo hot in his Wars againſt Clement the French Pope his adverſary, that he had no leiſure, and leſs liſt, to attend unto Wickliff's matters. By the occaſion of which Schiſm, God ſo provided for poor Wickliff, that he was in ſome more reſt and quietneſs. Concerning which ſchiſmatical Wars of theſe Popes, foraſmuch as we have here entred into the mention thereof, it ſhall not be impertinent from the order of our ſtory, digreſſing a little from the matter of John Wickliff, to touch ſomething of the tragical doings of theſe two holy Popes, ſtriving for the Triple Crown; to the intent that the Chriſtian Reader (judging by their fruits and proceedings) may ſee and underſtand what difference is between theſe Popes, and Chriſt and his Apoſtles. For though in the ſtory of the Goſpel it is read, that certain of the Diſciples did ſtrive which ſhould be the greater; yet neither do we read that one of them took ever Weapon againſt the other; and moreover, in the ſaid ſtory of the Goſpel it doth appear, that they, for ſo ſtriving as they did, were therefore ſharply rebuked of our Saviour Chriſt, and were taught by him another leſſon.

Difference between the Apoſtles and the Popes in ſtriving for preheminence.

{Ann. 1383}

The Pope ſet to War.

About the beginning of the next year following, which was Anno 1383. Pope Urban ſetting all his ſtudy how to repreſs and conquer the contrary Pope his adverſary, being then at Avinion (ſeeing all his other means to fail, and that his Croſs-keies could do no good) took to him the Sword of Romulus, and ſet upon him with open War. And firſt deviſing with himſelf whom he might beſt chuſe for his chief Champion; he thought none meeter for ſuch affairs than Henry Spencer, being then Biſhop of Norwich, a young and ſtout Prelate, more fitting for the Campaning Cure, than for the peaceable Church of Chriſt, as partly alſo might appear before by his acts done at Lennam, in ſtriving for the Mayors Mace, mentioned before pag. 488. Unto this Biſhop of Norwich the Pope had ſent his Bulls about this time, to Croiſy whomſoever would go with him into France, to deſtroy the Antipope which named himſelf Clement, and to make War againſt all thoſe that took his part. Which Bulls, for that they gave unto him ſuch great authority, he cauſed to be publiſhed in the Parliament houſe, and cauſed the Copies of the ſame to be ſent all about, and to be ſet up and faſtned upon all the Church Doors and Monaſtery Gates, that all Men might read them. In the which Bulls theſe priviledges were granted, the Copy whereof here followeth:

{KING Ric. 2.}

1. Imprimis, That the ſaid Biſhop of Norwich may uſe his Sword againſt the Antipope, and all his adherents, favourers and counſellors, and with violence put them to death.

The very fruits of Antichriſt.

2. Item, That he hath full power to enquire of all and ſingular ſuch Schiſmaticks, and to put them in Priſon, and to confiſcate all their Goods, moveable and immoveable.

3. Item, That he hath power and authority to deprive all lay men that are ſuch Schiſmaticks of all manner of ſecular Offices whatſoever, and to give their offices to other fit and convenient perſons.

4. Item, That he may deprive all ſuch Clerks, and declare them to be ſchiſmaticks, and in this behalf to give and beſtow their Benefices either with Cure or without Cure, their dignities, perſonages or offices, to other perſons more meet for the ſame.

5. Item, He hath power and authority over lay perſons that are exempt, and Clerks both ſecular and regular, yea although they be Friers Mendicants, or Maſters and Profeſſors of other Houſes or Hoſpitals of St. John of Jeruſalem, or S. Mary of Flanders, or Profeſſors of what Order ſoever elſe.

6. Item, He hath power to diſpence with what ſecular Clerk ſoever, being beneficed either with Cure or without Cure, and alſo with ſuch as have dignities, perſonages, or offices, being regulars either exempt or not exempt, that every one of them may be abſent with him from their Dignities and Benefices, &c. under the ſtandard of the Croſs, without licence of any of their Prelates required, and yet to receive and take the entire commodities of their Benefices, as though they had been perſonally reſident upon the ſame.

7. Item, There is granted to all that paſs the Seas in this quarrel, either at their own expences, or at the expences of any other, full remiſſion of their ſins; and as large priviledges are granted to all thoſe that go over the Sea with him, as to any that pay their mony, or go to fight for the Holy Land.

8. Alſo all ſuch as with their proper goods and ſubſtance ſhall give ſufficient ſtipend to able Soldiers, at the diſcretion of the foreſaid Lord Biſhop muſtered, or by any other his Deputy, although he himſelf be not perſonally at this buſineſs aforeſaid; yet ſhall he have like remiſſion and indulgence, as they which have been perſonally with him in this expedition.

9. Item, All they are partakers of this remiſſion, which ſhall give any part of their goods to the ſaid Biſhop to fight againſt the ſaid Schiſmaticks.

10. Item, If any ſhall chance to die in the journey that are Soldiers under the ſaid ſtandard of the Croſs, or elſe before the quarrel by ſome means be finiſhed; they ſhall fully and wholly receive the ſaid grace, and ſhall be partakers of the foreſaid remiſſion and indulgence.

11. Item, He hath power to excommunicate, ſuſpend and interdict what perſons ſoever be rebellious or diſturbers of him in the execution of his power and authority committed unto him, of what dignity, ſtate, degree, preheminence, order, place or condition ſoever they ſhall be; whether they ſhall be either of Regal, Queenly or Imperial Dignity, or of what dignity elſe ſoever, either eccleſiaſtical or mundane.

12. Item, He hath power and authority to compel and inforce what religious perſon ſoever, and to appoint them, and ſend them over Sea, if it ſeem good to him; yea although they be profeſſors of the Friers Mendicants, for the execution of the premiſes.

The

KING Ric. 2.

The Popes Abſolution by the Biſhop pronounced.

Chriſts Paſſion hath here no place.

BY the authority Apoſtolical to me in this behalf committed, We Abſolve thee A. B. from all thy ſins confeſſed with thy mouth, and being contrite with thy heart, and whereof thou wouldeſt be confeſſed if they came into thy memory; and we grant unto thee plenary remiſſion of all manner of ſins, and we promiſe unto thee thy part of the reward of all juſt men, and of everlaſting Salvation. And as many priviledges as are granted to them that go to fight for the Holy Land, we grant unto thee; and of all the prayers and benefits of the Church, the univerſal Synod, as alſo of the holy Catholick Church, we make thee partaker.

This outragious or rather outragious Biſhop, armed thus with the Popes Authority, and prompt with his priviledges, in the year aforeſaid 1383. about the time of Lent came to the Parliament, where great conſultation and contention, and almoſt no leſs ſchiſm, was about the Voyage of this Popiſh Biſhop in the Parliament, than was between the Popes themſelves. In the which Parliament many there were, which thought it not ſafe to commit the Kings People and Subjects unto a rude and unskilful Prieſt. So great was the diverſity of judgments in that behalf, that the Voyage of the ſaid Biſhop was protracted unto the Saturday before Paſſion Sunday. In the which Sunday was ſung the ſolemn Anthem, Ecce Crucem Domini, fugite partes adverſæ; That is, Behold the Croſs of the Lord, Fly away all you adverſaries. After which Sunday the States ſo agreed amongſt themſelves by common Decree, that the Biſhop ſhould ſet forward in his Voyage, having to him given the Fifteenth which was granted to the King in the Parliament before. Which things thus concluded in the Parliament, this warlike Biſhop preparing before all things in a readineſs, ſet forward in this Pope-holy journey. Who about the Month of May being come to Canterbury, and there tarrying for a Wind in the Monaſtery of St. Auguſtine, received a Writ from the King that he ſhould return to the King, to know further of his pleaſure. The Biſhop fearing, that if he turned again to the King, his journey ſhould be ſtaid, and ſo all his labour and preparance loſt with great deriſion and ſhame unto him, thought better to commit himſelf to fortune with that little Army he had, than by tarrying to be made a laughing ſtock to his adverſaries. Wherefore he ſent word back again to the King, that he was now ready prepared, and well forward on his journey; and that it was not expedient now to protract the time for any kind of talk which perad-venture ſhould be to no manner of purpoſe; and that it was more convenient for him to haſten in his journey to Gods glory, and alſo to the honour of the King. And thus recalling his Men unto him, entred forthwith the Seas, and went to Calis, where he waiting a few days for the reſt of his Army, after the receipt of them, took his journey firſt to the Town of Gravenidge; which he beſieged ſo deſperately, without any preparance of Engines of War, or counſel, of politick Men, skilful in ſuch affairs, that he ſeemed rather to fly upon them, than to invade them. At length, through the ſuperſtition of our Men, truſting upon the Popes Abſolution, he ſo hariſhly approached the Walls, and invaded the enemies, that a great number of them were pitiouſly ſlain with Shot and Wild-fire; till at the end (the inhabiters being oppreſſed and vanquiſhed) our men entred the Town with their Biſhop, where they at his commandment deſtroying both Man, Woman and Child, left not one alive of all them, which remained in the whole Town. Sicque crucis beneficio factum, ut crucis hoſtes ita delerentur, quod unus ex eis non remanſit; that is, And ſo it came to paſs by the vertue of the Croſs, that our Men croyſed ſo prevailed againſt the enemies of the Croſs, that not one of them remained alive. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani

O bloudineſs of Antichriſt.

Ex Chron. Mon. D. Alb. in vita Ric. 2.

From Gravenidge this warlike Biſhop ſet forward to Dunkirk, where not long after the Frenchmen meeting with him, joyned with them in battel; in which battel (if the ſtory be true) twelve thouſand of the Frenchmen were ſlain in the Chaſe, and of our Men but ſeven only miſſing.

It would require a long tractation here to diſcourſe all things done in theſe Popiſh Wars. Alſo it would be no leſs ridiculous to view and behold the glorious temerity of this new upſtart Captain. But certes, lamentable it is to ſee the pitiful ſlaughter and murther of Chriſts people by the means of theſe pitileſs Popes, during theſe Wars in France. As when the Biſhop coming from Dunkirk to the Siege of Ypres, a great number of Engliſhmen there were loſt, and much Mony conſumed, and yet nothing done effectually, to the great ſhame and ignominy of the Biſhop. Again, after the Siege of Ypres, thus with ſhame broke up, the ſame Biſhop proceeding with a ſmall power to fight with the French Kings Camp, contrary to the counſel of his Captains, which counted him raſh and unskilful in his attempt, was faign to break company with them; whereby part of the Army went unto Burburgh, and the Biſhop with his part returned to Gravenidge; which both Towns ſhortly after were beſieged by the French Army, to the great loſs both of the Engliſh and French Men. In fine, when the Biſhop could keep Gravenidge no longer, the ſaid Biſhop with his Croyſies, croſſing the Seas, came home again as wiſe as he went. And thus making an end of this Pontifical War, we will return again from whence we digreſſed, to the ſtory and matter of John Wickliff.

Which John Wickliff returning again within ſhort ſpace, either from his Baniſhment, or from ſome other place where he was ſecretly kept, repaired to his Pariſh of Lutterworth, where he was Parſon; and there, quietly departing this mortal life, ſlept in peace in the Lord, in the beginning of the year 1384. upon Silveſters day.

Here is to be noted the great providence of the Lord in this Man, as in divers other, whom the Lord ſo long preſerved in ſuch rages of ſo many enemies from all their hands, even to his old age. For ſo it appeareth by Thomas Walden, writing againſt him in his Tomes entituled De Sacramentis contra Wiclevium, that he was well aged before he departed, by that which the foreſaid Walden writeth of him in his Epilogue, ſpeaking of Wickliff in theſe words; Ita ut cano placeret, quod juveni complacebat, &c. That is, ſo that the ſame thing pleaſed him in his old age, which did pleaſe him being young. Whereby it ſeemeth that Wickliff lived till he was an old Man by this report. Such a Lord is God, that whom he will have kept, nothing can hurt.

Waldenſis tomo de Sacramentis.

This Wickliff had written divers and ſundry Works, the which in the year of our Lord 1410. were burnt at Oxford, the Abbot of Shrewsbury being then Commiſſary, and ſent to overſee that matter. And not only in England, but in Boheme likewiſe, the Books of the ſaid Wickliff were ſet on fire by one Subincus Archbiſhop of Prague, who made diligent inquiſition for the ſame, and burned them; the number of the Volumes which he is ſaid to have burned, moſt excellently written, and richly adorned with boſſes of Gold, and rich Coverings (as Eneas Silvius writeth) were about the number of two hundred.

The number of Wickliffs Books came to 200 Volumes. Eneas Silvius.

Johannes Cocleus in his Book De hiſtoria Huſſitarum, ſpeaking of the Books of Wickliff, teſtifieth, that he wrote very many Books, Sermons and Tractations. Moreover, the ſaid Cocleus ſpeaking of himſelf, recordeth alſo, that there was a certain Biſhop in England, which wrote unto him, declaring, that he had yet remaining in his cuſtody two huge and mighty Volumes of John Wickliff's Works, which for the quantity thereof might ſeem to be equal with the Works of Saint Auguſtine. Hæc Cocleus.

The Books of Wickliff.

Among other of his Treatiſes, I my ſelf alſo have found out certain, as de ſenſu & veritate Scripturæ. Item, De Eccleſia. Item, De Euchariſtia confeſſio Wicklevi, which I intend hereafter, the Lord ſo granting, to publiſh abroad.

As concerning certain Anſwers of John Wickliff which he wrote to King Richard the ſecond, touching the right and title of the King, and of the Pope; becauſe they are but ſhort, I thought here to annex them. The effect whereof here followeth:

John Wickliff's Anſwer unto King Richard the Second, as touching the right and title of the King and the Pope.

IT was demanded whether the Kingdom of England may lawfully in caſe of neceſſity, for its own defence, detain and keep back the treaſure of the Kingdom, that it be not carried away to foreign and ſtrange Nations, the Pope himſelf demanding and requiring the ſame under pain of cenſure, and by vertue of obedience.

Wickliff ſetting apart the minds of learned Men, and what might be ſaid in the matter, either by the Canon law, or by the law of England, or the civil law; it reſteth (ſaith he) now only to perſwade and prove the affirmative part of this doubt by the principles of Chriſts law. And firſt I prove it thus: Every natural body hath power given of God to reſiſt againſt his contrary, and to preſerve it ſelf in due eſtate, as Philoſophers know very well. Inſomuch, that bodies without life are indued with ſuch kind of power (as it is evident) unto whom hardneſs is given to reſiſt thoſe things that would break them, and coldneſs to withſtand the heat that diſſolveth them. Forſomuch then, as the Kingdom of England after the manner and phraſe of the Scriptures ought to be one body, and the Clergy with the Commonalty the members thereof, it ſeemeth that the ſame Kingdom hath ſuch power given it of God; and ſo much the more apparently, by how much the ſame body is more precious unto God, adorned with vertue and knowledge. Forſomuch then as there is no power given of God unto any creature for any end or purpoſe, but that he may lawfully uſe the ſame to that end and purpoſe; it followeth that our Kingdom may lawfully keep back and detain their treaſure for the defence of it ſelf, in what caſe ſoever neceſſity doth require the ſame.

The Popes riches is but the alms of good men.

Secondly, The ſame is proved by the law of the Goſpel, for the Pope cannot challenge the treaſure of this Kingdom, but under the title of alms, and conſequently under the pretence of the works of mercy, according to the rule of charity.

Neceſſity taketh away the Popes alms.

But in caſe aforeſaid, the title of alms ought utterly to ceaſe: Ergo, the right and title of challenging the treaſure of our Realm ſhall ceaſe alſo in the preſuppoſed neceſſity. Forſomuch as all charity hath his beginning of himſelf, it were no work of charity, but of meer madneſs, to ſend away the treaſures of the Realm unto foreign Nations, whereby the Realm it ſelf may fall into ruine, under the pretence of ſuch charity.

It appeareth alſo by this, that Chriſt the Head of the Church, whom all Chriſtian Prieſts ought to follow, lived by the alms of devout women, Luke 7.8. He hungred and thirſted, he was a ſtranger, and many other miſeries he ſuſtained, not only in his members, but alſo in his own body, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, 2 Cor. 8. He was made poor for your ſakes, that through his poverty you might be rich: whereby in the firſt endowing of the Church, whatſoever he were of the Clergy that had any temporal poſſeſſions, he had the ſame by form of a perpetual alms, as both Writeings and Chronicles do witneſs.

Whereupon S. Bernard, declaring in his ſecond Book to Eugenius, that he could not challenge any ſecular dominion by right of ſucceſſion, as being the Vicar of Saint Peter, writeth thus; That if Saint John ſhould ſpeak unto the Pope himſelf, as Bernard doth unto Eugenius, were it to be thought that he would take it patiently? But let it be ſo, that you do challenge it unto you by ſome other ways or means; but truly by any right or title Apoſtolical you cannot ſo do. For how could he give unto you that which he had not himſelf? That which he had he gave you, that is to ſay, care over the Church; but did he give you any lordſhip or rule? Hearken what he ſaith, Not bearing rule (ſaith he) as Lords over the Clergy, but behaving your ſelves as examples to the Flock. And becauſe thou ſhalt not think it to be ſpoken only in humility, and not in verity, mark the word of the Lord himſelf in the Goſpel, The Kings of the people do rule over them, but you ſhall not do ſo.

Note well the ſaying here of Bernard.

Here lordſhip and dominion is plainly forbidden to the Apoſtles, and dareſt thou then uſurp the ſame? If thou wilt be a Lord, thou ſhalt loſe thine Apoſtleſhip; or if thou wilt be an Apoſtle thou ſhalt loſe thy Lordſhip: for truly thou ſhalt depart from the one of them. If thou wilt have both, thou ſhalt loſe both, or elſe think thy ſelf to be of that number, of whom God doth ſo greatly complain, ſaying, They have reigned, but not through me; they are become Princes, and I have not known it. Now if it do ſuffice thee to rule with the Lord, thou haſt thy glory but not with God. But if we will keep that which is forbidden us, let us hear what is ſaid, He that is the greateſt amongſt you (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall be made as the leaſt, and he which is the higheſt ſhall be as the Miniſter; and for example he ſet a child in the midſt of them. So this then is the true form and inſtitution of the Apoſtles trade; Lordſhip and rule is forbidden, miniſtration and ſervice commanded.

KING Ric. 2.

The Pope muſt leave his Lordſhip, or elſe Apoſtleſhip; let him chuſe whether.

The manner of the Apoſtles.

By theſe words of this bleſſed Man, whom the whole Church doth reverence and worſhip, it doth appear that the Pope hath not power to occupy the Church goods, as Lord thereof, but as Miniſter, and Servant, and Proctor for the poor. And would to God, that the ſame proud and greedy deſire of rule and Lordſhip, which this Seat doth challenge unto it, were not a preamble to prepare a way unto Antichriſt. For it is evident by the Goſpel, that Chriſt through his poverty, humility, and ſuffering of injury got unto him the children of his Kingdom.

How the Pope ought to occupy the Church goods.

The way to obtain the Kingdom of Chriſt.

And moreover, ſo far as I remember; the ſame bleſſed Man Bernard, in his Third Book, writeth alſo thus unto Eugenius, I fear no other greater poiſon to happen unto thee, than greedy deſire of rule and dominion.

This Wickliff, albeit in his life time he had many grievous enemies, yet was there none ſo cruel unto him, as the Clergy it ſelf. Yet notwithſtanding, he had many good friends, men not only of the baſe and meaneſt ſort, but alſo of the Nobility, amongſt whom theſe Men are to be numbred, John Clenbon, Lewes Clifford, Richard Sturius, Thomas Latimer, William Nevil, John Mountegew, who plucked down all the Images in his Church. Beſides all theſe, there was the Earl of Salisbury, who, for contempt in him noted towards the Sacrament, in carrying it home to his houſe, was enjoyned by Radulph Ergon Biſhop of Salisbury, to make in Salisbury a Croſs of ſtone, in which all the ſtory of the matter ſhould be written: and he every Friday during his life, to come to the Croſs barefoot, and bareheaded in his ſhirt, and there kneeling upon his knees to do Penance for his fact. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani in vita Ric. 2.

J. Clenbon, Lewis Clif. Ford, R. Latimer, Sturius, Latimer, W. Nevil, John Mountegew.

The Earl of Salisbury.

The penance of the Earl of Salisbury.

The Londoners at this time ſomewhat boldly truſting to the Mayors authority, who for that year was John of Northampton, took upon them the office of the Biſhops, in puniſhing the vices (belonging to civil law) of ſuch perſons as they had found and apprehended in committing both Fornication and Adultery. For firſt they put the Women in the Priſon, which amongſt them was then named Dolium. And laſtly, bringing them into the Market-place, where every Man might behold them, and cutting off their golden locks from their heads, they cauſed them to be carried about the Streets, with Bag-pipes and Trumpets blown before them, to the intent they ſhould be the better known, and their companies avoided; according to the manner then of certain Thieves that were named Appellatores, (accuſers or appeachers of others that were guiltleſs) which were ſo ſerved. And with other ſuch like opprobrious and reproachful contumelies did they ſerve the Men alſo that were taken with them in committing the forenamed wickedneſs and vices. Here the ſtory recordeth how the ſaid Londoners were incouraged hereunto by John Wickliff, and others that followed his Doctrine, to perpetrate this act, in the reproach of the Prelates being of the Clergy. For they ſaid, that they did not only abhor to ſee the great negligence of thoſe to whom that charge belonged, but alſo their filthy avarice they did as much deteſt; which for greedineſs of Mony were choaked with bribes, and winking at the penalties due to ſuch perſons by the laws appointed, ſuffered ſuch fornicators and inceſtuous perſons favourably to continue in their wickedneſs. They ſaid furthermore, that they greatly feared,

The fruits of good and true Doctrine.

KING Ric. 2. feared, leſt for ſuch wickedneſs perpetrated within the City, and ſo apparently diſſimuled, that God would take vengeance upon them, and deſtroy their City. Wherefore they ſaid, that they could do no leſs than purge the ſame; leſt by the ſufferance thereof God would bring a Plague upon them, or deſtroy them with the Sword, or cauſe the earth to ſwallow up both them and their City. Hæc ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Alb.

¶ This ſtory (gentle Reader) albeit the Author thereof, whom I follow, doth give it out in reproachful wiſe, to the great diſcommendation of the Londoners for ſo doing, yet I thought not to omit, but to commit the ſame to memory; which ſeemeth to me rather to tend unto the worthy commendation both of the Londoners that ſo did, and to the neceſſary example of all other Cities to follow the ſame. After theſe things thus declared, let us now adjoyn the teſtimonial of the Univerſity of Oxford of John Wickliff.

The publick teſtimony given out by the Univerſity of Oxford, touching the commendation of the great learning and good life of John Wickliff.

Ex 2. tomo operum Joa. Huſſ. fol. ult.

'UNto all and ſingular the Children of our holy Mother the Church, to whom this preſent Letter ſhall come, the Vicechancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, with the whole Congregation of the Maſters, wiſh perpetual health in the Lord. Forſomuch as it is not commonly ſeen, that the Acts and Monuments of valiant Men, nor the praiſe and merits of good Men ſhould be paſſed over and hidden with perpetual ſilence, but that true report and fame ſhould continually ſpread abroad the ſame in ſtrange and far diſtant places, both for the witneſs of the ſame, and example of others; Forſomuch alſo as the provident diſcretion of mans nature, being recompenced with cruelty, hath deviſed and ordained this buckler and defence againſt ſuch as do blaſpheme and ſlander other mens doings, that whenſoever witneſs by word of mouth cannot be preſent, the Pen by writing may ſupply the ſame.

'Hereupon it followeth, that the ſpecial good will and care which we bear unto John Wickliff, ſometime Child of this our Univerſity, and Profeſſor of Divinity, moving and ſtirring our minds (as his manners and conditions required no leſs) with one mind, voice and teſtimony, we do witneſs, all his conditions and doings throughout his whole life to have been moſt ſincere and commendable; whoſe honeſt manners and conditions, profoundneſs of learning, and moſt redolent renown and fame, we deſire the more earneſtly to be notified and known unto all faithful, for that we underſtand the maturity and ripeneſs of his converſation, his diligent labours and travels to tend to the praiſe of God, the help and ſafeguard of others, and the profit of the Church. Great learning joyned with good life & godlineſs.

'Wherefore we ſignifie unto you by theſe preſents, that his converſation (even from his youth upward, unto the time of his death) was ſo praiſe-worthy and honeſt, that never at any time was there any note or ſpot of ſuſpicion noiſed of him. But in his anſwering, reading, preaching and determining, he behaved himſelf laudably, and as a ſtout and valiant Champion of the faith; vanquiſhing by the force of the Scriptures, all ſuch, who by their wilful beggery, blaſphemed and ſlandered Chriſts Religion. Neither was this Doctor convict of any Hereſie, either burned of our Prelates after his burial. God forbid, that our Prelates ſhould have condemned a man of ſuch honeſty, for an Heretick, who, amongſt all the reſt of the Univerſity, had written Logick, Philoſophy, Divinity, Morality, and the ſpeculative Arts, without peer. The knowledge of which all and ſingular things we do deſire to teſtifie and deliver forth, to the intent that the fame and renown of this ſaid Doctor may be the more evident and had in reputation amongſt them unto whoſe hands theſe preſent Letters teſtimonial ſhall come. The bones of Wickliff were not yet commanded by the council of Conſtance to be burned. Ex 2. tomo operum Jo. Huſſ. fol. ult.

In witneſs whereof, we have cauſed theſe our Letters teſtimonial to be ſealed with our common Seal. Dated at Oxford in our Congregation-houſe, the 1ſt. day of October, in the year of our Lord 1406.

The teſtimony and words of Mr. John Huſs, as touching Mr. John Wickliff.

VERILY, as I do not believe, neither grant, that Mr. John Wickliff is an Heretick; ſo do I not deny, but firmly hope that he is no Heretick; forſomuch as in all matters of doubt I ought, as near as I can, to chuſe the beſt part. Wherefore I ſurely truſt, that Maſter John Wickliff is one of the number of them which are ſaved. The words of Chriſt move me thereunto,, ſaying Mat.7. Do ye not judge, that ye be not judged; and Luke the 6th. Do not condemn, and ye ſhall not be condemned; and the words of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 4. Do ye not judge before the Lord himſelf do come, the which ſhall open thoſe things that are hid in darkneſs, to manifeſt the privities of all hearts. The teſtimony and judgement of M. J. Hus concerning J. Wickliff.

Secondly, The love and charity which I ought to bear unto my neighbour (loving him as my ſelf) doth move me thereunto. Luke 10.

Thirdly, His good fame and report moveth me, the which he hath of the good Prieſts of the Univerſity of Oxford, and not of the wicked, and commonly of the vulgar ſort; although not of the covetous, proud and luxurious Prelates.

Fourthly, His own works and writings do ſtir me thereunto, by the which he goeth about with his whole endeavour to reduce all Men unto the law of Chriſt, and ſpecially the Clergy, that they ſhould forſake the pomp and dominion of this world, and with the Apoſtles lead the life of Chriſt.

Fifthly, His own proteſtations, which he doth oftentimes uſe in his ſentences, often repeating the ſame, do not a little move me.

Sixthly, His earneſt deſire and affection which he had unto the law of Chriſt, doth not a little allure me thereunto, diſputing of the verity thereof, the which cannot fail in any one jot or title. Whereupon he made a Book of the verity of the holy Scripture, approving, even unto the uttermoſt, the truth of Gods Law. Lib. de ſenſu & veritate Scripturæ per J. Wickl.

Wherefore, it were too fooliſh a conſequence to ſay, that becauſe the number of the Prelates and Clergy in England, France and Boheme, do count John Wickliff for an Heretick, that therefore he is an Heretick, &c. Like as the reaſon for burning of the Books; for it is written in the firſt Book of Machabees, the firſt Chapter, That they did burn the books of the Lord, tearing them in pieces, and whoſoever was found to have kept any books of the teſtament or will of the Lord, or which obſerved and kept the law of the Lord, they were by the Kings commandment put to death. If then the burning of the Books by wicked men, did argue, or prove the evilneſs of theſe Books, then was the law of God evil and naught. Burning of Books proveth not by and by an Heretick.

So likewiſe the burning of St. Gregory's Books, and divers other Saints and good Men, ſhould argue and prove that they were evil and naughty Men. Whereupon as it doth not follow, that becauſe the Biſhops, Scribes and Phariſes, with the elders of the People, condemned Chriſt Jeſus as an Heretick, that therefore he is an Heretick: ſo likewiſe doth it not follow, of any other Man: The Biſhops, Maſters of Divinity, Monks and Prelates, condemned this Man as an Heretick; Ergo he is an Heretick. For this conſequence is reproved by John Chryſoſtome, which was twice condemned as an Heretick by the Biſhops and whole Clergy. Likewiſe St. Gregory in his Books, was condemned by the Cardinals. A falſe conſequence reproved by Chryſoſtome.

By like proof alſo, as they affirm by Mr. John Wickliff to be an Heretick, John Duke of Lancaſter (a Man of worthy memory, and Progenitor of Henry King of England) ſhould alſo be an Heretick. For the ſaid Duke defended, favoured, and greatly loved Mr. John Wickliff: Ergo, the ſaid Duke is, or was an Heretick; the conſequence is good. The Minor is well known to the Engliſhmen. The Major appeareth in the Canon, where it is ſaid, He which defendeth an Heretick, &c. John Duke of Lancaſter defender of John Wickliff.

But theſe things ſet apart, I demand of the adverſary, whether Maſter John Wickliff be damned for ever or no? If he ſay, that he is damned, becauſe he is an Heretick; I propound this unto him, whether Maſter John Wickliff whilſt he lived, held any falſe Doctrine contrary to J. Wickliff proved no Heretick.

the holy Scripture? If he do affirm it, let him then ſhew what Doctrine it is, and afterward declare that he held it obſtinately. But he ſhall find that in his Books he always wrote moſt commendable proteſtations againſt obſtinacy and ſtiff-neckedneſs. And by and by after, Maſter John Stokes in his Intimation ſaith, that Maſter John Wickliff in England is counted for an Heretick. This ſeemeth alſo falſe by the Letter teſtimonial of the Univerſity of Oxford: unto the which there is more credit to be given than unto him. And this ſhall ſuffice for this preſent.

¶ Now as we have declared the Teſtimony of the Univerſity of Oxford, and of John Hus, concerning the praiſe of John Wickliff; it followeth likewiſe that we ſet forth and expreſs the contrary cenſures and judgments of his enemies, blinded with malicious hatred and corrupt affections againſt him, eſpecially of the Popes Council gathered at Conſtance, proceeding firſt in condemning his Books, then of his Articles, and afterward burning of his bones. The Copy of which their ſentence given againſt him by that Council here followeth.

The Council of Conſtance againſt John Wickliff.

The ſentence given by the Council of Conſtance, in condemning the Doctrine, and five and forty Articles of John Wickliff.

The ſentence of the Council of Conſtance againſt John Wickliff.

THE moſt holy and Sacred Council of Conſtance, making and repreſenting the Catholick Church, for the extirpation of this preſent ſchiſm, and of all other errors and hereſies, ſpringing and growing under the ſhadow and pretence of the ſame, and for the reformation and amendment of the Church, being lawfully congregate and gathered together in the Holy Ghoſt, for the perpetual memory of the time to come.

We are taught by the Acts and Hiſtories of the Holy Fathers, that the Catholick Faith, without the which, as the holy Apoſtle St. Paul ſaith, it is unpoſſible to pleaſe God, hath been always defended by the faithful and ſpiritual Souldiers of the Church, by the ſhield of faith, againſt the falſe worſhippers of the ſame faith, or rather perverſe impugners; which through their proud curioſity will ſeem to know more, and to be wiſer than they ought to be, and for the deſire of the glory of the world have gone about oftentimes to overthrow the ſame. Theſe kinds of wars and battels have been prefigured to us before in thoſe carnal wars of the Iſraelites againſt the Idolatrous people. For in thoſe ſpiritual wars the holy Catholick Church through the vertue and power of faith, being illuſtrate with the beams of the Heavenly light, by the Providence of God, and being holpen by the help and defence of the Saints and holy men, hath always continued immaculate, and (the darkneſs of errors, as her moſt cruel enemies being put to flight) ſhe hath moſt gloriouſly triumphed over all. But in theſe our days the old and unclean enemy hath raiſed up new contentions and ſtrifes, that the elect of this world might be known, whoſe Prince and Captain in time paſt was one John Wickliff a falſe Chriſtian; who during his life time, taught and ſowed very obſtinately many Articles contrary and againſt the Chriſtian Religion, and the Catholick faith. And the ſame John Wickliff wrote certain Books which he called a Dialogue, and a Trialogue, beſides many other Treatiſes and Works, the which he both wrote and taught, in the which he wrote the aforeſaid, and many other damnable and execrable articles; the which his Books for the publication and advancement of his perverſe Doctrine, he did ſet forth openly for every man to read. Whereby beſides many offences great hurt and damage of ſoul hath enſued in divers Regions and Countries, but ſpecially in the Kingdom of England and Boheme. Againſt whom the Maſters and Doctors of the Univerſities of Oxford and Prague, riſing up in the truth and verity of God, according to the order of Schools, within a while after did reprove and condemn the ſaid Articles.

The Dialogue and Trialogue of J. Wickliff.

The Books of Wickliff condemned to be burned.

Moreover the moſt reverend Fathers the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, (for that time preſent) of Canterbury, York and Prague, Legates of the Apoſtolick See, in the Kingdom of England and Boheme, did condemn the Books of the ſaid Wickliff to be burnt. And the ſaid Archbiſhop of Prague, Commiſſary of the Apoſtolick See, did likewiſe in this behalf determine and judg. And moreover he did forbid that any of thoſe Books, which did remain unburned, ſhould be hereafter any more read. And again, thoſe things being brought to the knowledg and underſtanding of the Apoſtolick See, and of the General Council; the Biſhop of Rome in his laſt Council condemned the ſaid Books, Treatiſes and Volumes, commanding them to be openly burned. Moſt ſtraitly forbidding that any men which ſhould bear the name of Chriſt ſhould be ſo hardy either to keep, read, or expound any of the ſaid Books or Treatiſes, Volumes or works, or by any means to uſe or occupy them; or elſe to alledg them openly or privily, but to their reproof and infamy. And to the intent that this moſt dangerous and filthy Doctrine ſhould be utterly wiped away out of the Church, he gave commandment throughout all places, that the Ordinaries ſhould diligently enquire and ſeek out by the Apoſtolick authority and Eccleſiaſtical cenſure, for all ſuch Books, Treatiſes, Volumes and Works. And the ſame ſo being found, to burn and conſume them with fire; providing withal, that if there be any ſuch found, which will not obey the ſame Proceſs to be made againſt them, as againſt the favourers and maintainers of Hereſies. And this moſt holy Synod hath cauſed the ſaid forty five Articles to be examined, and oftentimes peruſed, by many moſt reverend Fathers of the Church of Rome, Cardinals, Biſhops, Abbots, Maſters of Divinity, and Doctors of both Laws, beſides a great number of other learned men; the which Articles being ſo examined, it was found (as in truth it was) that many, yea and a great number of them, be notoriouſly for Heretical reproved and condemned by the holy Fathers; otherſome not to be Catholick, but erroneous; ſome full of offence and blaſphemy; certain of them offenſive unto godly ears, and many of them to be raſhful and ſeditious. It is found alſo that his Books do contain many Articles of like effect and quality, and that they do induce and bring into the Church unſound and unwholſome Doctrine, contrary unto the faith and ordinance of the Church. Wherefore in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, this ſacred Synod, ratifying and approving the ſentences and judgments of the Archbiſhops and Council of Rome, do by this their Decree and Ordinance perpetually for evermore condemn and reprove the ſaid Articles, and every one of them, his Books which he intituled his Dialogue and Trialogue, and all other Books of the ſame Author, Volumes, Treatiſes and Works, by what name ſoever they be intituled or called, the which we will here to be ſufficiently expreſſed and named. Alſo we forbid the reading, learning, expoſition, or alledging of any of the ſaid Books unto all faithful Chriſtians, but ſo far forth as ſhall tend to the reproof of the ſame; forbidding all and ſingular Catholick perſons, under the pain of curſe, that from henceforth they be not ſo hardy openly to preach, teach or hold, or by any means to alledg the ſaid Articles, or any of them, except (as is aforeſaid) that it do tend unto the reproof of them; commanding all thoſe Books, Treatiſes, Works and Volumes aforeſaid, to be openly burned, as it was decreed in the Synod at Rome, as is afore expreſſed. For the execution whereof duly to be obſerved and done, the ſaid ſacred Synod doth ſtraitly charge and command the Ordinaries of the place diligently to attend and look unto the matter, according as it appertaineth unto every mans duty by the Canonical Laws and Ordinances.

What theſe Articles were here condemned by the Council, collected out of all his Works, and exhibited to that ſaid Council, to the number of forty five, the Copy of them following under written declareth.

Certain other Articles gathered out of Wickliffs Books by his adverſaries, to the number of forty five, exhibited up to the Council of Conſtance after his death, and in the ſame Council condemned.

Other Articles of Wickliff to the number of 45, condemned by the Council of Conſtance

BEſides the twenty four Articles above mentioned, there were other alſo gathered out of his Books, to the number of forty five in all, which his malicious adverſaries perverſly collecting, and maliciouſly expounding, did exhibit up to the Council of Conſtance; all which to repeat, though it be not here needful, yet to recite certain of them as they ſtand in that Council, it ſhall not be ſuperfluous.

25. All ſuch as be hired for temporal living to pray for other, offend and ſin of Simony.

26. The prayer of the reprobate prevaileth for no man.

27. Hallowing of Churches, Confirmation of Children, the Sacrament of Orders be reſerved to the Pope and Biſhops only, for the reſpect of temporal lucre.

28. Graduations and Doctorſhips in Univerſities and Colleges as they be uſed, conduce nothing to the Church.

29. The Excommunication of the Pope and his Prelates is not to be feared, becauſe it is the cenſure of Antichriſt.

30. Such as found and build Monaſteries, do offend and ſin, and all ſuch as enter into the ſame, be members of the Devil.

31. To enrich the Clergy is againſt the rule of Chriſt.

32. Silveſter the Pope, and Conſtantine the Emperor were deceived, in giving and taking poſſeſſions into the Church.

33. A Deacon or a Prieſt may preach the word of God without the authority of the Apoſtolick See.

34. Such as enter into Order, or Religion Monaſtical, are thereby unable to keep Gods Commandments, and alſo to attain to the Kingdom of Heaven, except they return from the ſame.

35. The Pope with all his Clergy, having thoſe great poſſeſſions as they have, be Hereticks in ſo having, and the Secular powers in ſo ſuffering them do not well.

36. The Church of Rome is the Synagogue of Satan, neither is the Pope immediately the Vicar of Chriſt, nor of the Apoſtles.

37. The Decretals of the Pope be Apocrypha, and ſeduce from the faith of Chriſt, and the Clergy that ſtudy them be fools.

38. The Emperor and Secular Lords be ſeduced, which ſo inrich the Church with ſuch ample poſſeſſions.

39. It is not neceſſary to Salvation to believe the Church of Rome to be ſupreme head over all Churches.

40. It is but folly to believe the Popes Pardons.

41. All Oaths which be made for any contract or civil bargain betwixt man and man, be unlawful.

42. Benedict, Francis, Dominick, Bernard, with all ſuch as have been Patrons of private Religion, except they have repented, with ſuch alſo as have entred into the ſame, be in a damnable ſtate, and ſo from the Pope to the loweſt Novices, they be altogether Hereticks.

Beſides theſe Articles, to the number of forty and five, condemned (as is ſaid) by the Council of Conſtance, other Articles alſo I find diverſly collected, or rather wreſted out of the Books and writings of Wickliff; ſome by William Woodford, ſome by Walden, by Frier Tiſſington, and other, whom they in their Books have impugned rather than confuted. In the number of whom William Woodford eſpecially findeth out theſe Articles, and writeth againſt the ſame, to the number of eighteen, as here under follow.

W. Woodford Tho. Walden Tiſſington, writers againſt J. Wickliff.

Articles againſt Wickliff by Will. Woodford.

1. The bread remaineth in his own ſubſtance, after the conſecration thereof upon the Altar, and ceaſeth not to be bread ſtill.

2. As John was figuratively Helias, and not perſonally; ſo the bread is figuratively the body of Chriſt, and not naturally. And that without all doubt it is as well a figurative ſpeech, to ſay, This is my body; as to ſay, This John is Helias.

3. In the Decree, Ergo Berengarius, the Court of Rome hath determined, that the Sacrament of the holy Euchariſt is naturally true bread.

4. They which do affirm that the Infants of the faithful, departing without the Sacrament of Baptiſm, are not ſaved, be preſumptuous and fools in ſo affirming.

5. The adminiſtration of the Sacrament of Confirmation is not only reſerved to the Biſhops.

6. In the time of St. Paul, only two Orders of Clerks did ſuffice in the Church, Prieſts and Deacons. Neither was there in the time of the Apoſtles any diſtinction of Popes, Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops; but theſe the Emperors pride did find out.

Beſides this W. Woodford afore-mentioned, divers other there were which wrote againſt theſe Articles of Wickliff aforeſaid, maintaining the Popes part, as ſeemeth for flattery, rather than following any juſt cauſe ſo to do, or ſhewing forth any reaſon or learning in diſproving the ſame. Notwithſtanding on the contrary part ſome there were again both learned and godly, which taking the part of Wickliff, without all flattery, defended the moſt of the ſaid Articles openly in Schools and other places, as appeareth by the works of John Hus; who in his publick determinations in the Univerſity of Prague, ſtood in defence of the ſame againſt all his adverſaries, as partly is here to be ſeen in theſe Tractations under following.

Tractat. par. W. Woodford contra Trialogum Wickleui.

The

¶ The publick defence of certain Articles of John Wickliff, in the first Act before the whole University of Prague, in Charles College.

The determination of John Hus upon the Fourteenth Article of Wickliff, as touching the Preaching and Hearing of the Word of God, made in the year of our Lord, 1412.

The whole Universitie is against the judgment of the Doctors which condemned the 45 Articles.

FOrasmuch as to condemn the truth wittingly, or without reasonable examination, doth tend to great danger of salvation, as the Lord saith, Luk. 6. Do ye not condemn, and ye shall not be condemned. Therefore to avoid this great danger, the University of Prague, and the whole Communalty thereof, the Rector, Masters, Doctors, Bachelors and Students in their general assembly, not agreeing to the condemnation pronounced by the Doctors in their Council-house, requireth of the said Doctors a reasonable proof of their condemnation, and that they should by Scripture, authority, or infallible reason, prove the falshood of every those five and forty Articles: The which being once done, the said University will agree to the said condemnation as just: For the University doth well know, that as Augustine saith in the end of his second Book of Christian Doctrine, whatsoever a man doth learn besides the holy Scriptures, if it be hurtful, there it is condemned; if it be profitable, there it is found. And when a man hath found all things therein which he hath profitably learned elsewhere, he shall much more abundantly find those things which are found in no place else, but are learned in the marvellous depth, and marvellous profoundness of those most sacred Scriptures only.

Thus writeth Augustine. And Gregory in his Three and twentieth Book of Morals, saith thus, God in the holy Scripture hath comprehended whatsoever thing may happen unto any man, and in the same hath by the examples of those which are gone afore, taught them which are to come, how to reform their lives. Whereby it appeareth that if every of the five and forty Articles containeth in it wholly the thing that is false and untruth, the same is either plainly or darkly condemned in the holy Scriptures.

Secondly, It followeth by the sentence and mind of this holy man, that if the condemnation of the five and forty Articles be profitable, the same is found in the holy Scriptures. And whereas again St. Augustine writeth unto St. Hierom, in his Eighth Epistle, and the ninth Distinction, I (saith he) have learned to attribute this honour and reverence unto those writers only which are called Canonical, that I dare affirm none of them to have erred in their Works or Writings. As for all other Writers, I do so read them, that although they abound with never so much holiness, or excell in Doctrine, I do not by and by think it true, because they themselves do so judg; but if they can, by other Canonical Authors or probable reasons, perswade or prove that they do not digress from the truth.

Also the said Augustine in his Book de Unico Baptismo, Lib. 2. saith thus, Who doth not know or understand the holy Canonical Scripture to be contained in his own bonds and limits, and the same to be preferred before all other Letters and Decrees of Bishops, &c. And a little after he hath the like saying, as for the Letters of other Bishops which have been written, or be written, (after the Canon being confirmed) they may lawfully be reprehended and reproved, both by the word of them that be more skilful in that matter, and also by the ancient authority of other Bishops, or by the prudence and wisdom of such as be better learned, or more expert, or else by General Councils, if it so chance that they in any point have erred and gone astray from the sincere truth.

By these sayings of St. Austin and other like, &c. the University of Prague hath concluded and determined, that they will not receive the condemnation of the five and forty Articles, made by the Doctors in their Council-house as just and true, except they which condemned them, will prove their condemnation by the holy Scriptures and probable reasons upon every of the five and forty Articles.

Wherefore for the due examination of the foresaid condemnation, whether it be effectual or no, we will at this present take in hand the fourteenth Article of the number of the five and forty: which Article is this,

{KING Rec. 2.}

They which leave off Preaching and hearing of the Word of God, for fear of Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate, and in the day of judgment shall be counted the betrayers of Christ.

The 14 Article of J. Wickliff.

This Article containeth, first, that all Priests, omitting the Preaching of the Word of God, for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate.

The defence of the 14 Article.

Secondly, It containeth that all such as do omit the hearing of the Word of God, for fear of Excommunication, are already Excommunicated.

Thirdly, That both these sorts of men in the day of judgment, shall be counted Traytors of Christ.

As concerning the first point, it is presupposed that the Preaching of the Word of God is commanded unto the Apostles and their followers, as it appeareth in Mat. 10. where it is said, Jesus sent his twelve Disciples, commanding them and saying, Go and preach that the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Also in the last of Matthew, and the tenth of Luke. Whereupon Peter the Apostle of Christ, acknowledging this precept and commandment for himself, and for the other Apostles and Successors, in the tenth of the Acts, saith thus, He commanded us to preach and testifie, that it is he which is ordained of God the Judg both of the quick and the dead. This commandment also the other Apostles did acknowledg, and specially the chosen vessel, pronouncing under a great threatning [illegible] Wo be unto me if I do not preach the Gospel. And Pope Nicholas considering that great threatning in 43 Distinction, saith, The dispensation and distribution of the Heavenly seed is commanded and injoyned to us. Wo be unto us if we do not sow it abroad, or if we hold our peace. Which thing when as the Vessel of Election did fear and cry out upon, how much more ought all other inferiors to fear and dread the same? To the same purpose doth Saint Gregory write in his Pastoral in the Distinction, Sit rector. It is also evident by many other Doctors and holy men, as by Saint Augustine, Hierome, Isidore, Bernard, whose words it were too long here to rehearse.

The preaching of the Gospel commanded of God.

As touching the second point, That the hearing of the Word and Law of God is commanded unto the people, it is evident both by the old and new Law; for it is said in the 28 of the Proverbs, He that turneth away his ear, and will not hear the Law of God, his Prayer shall be cursed. And our Saviour rebuking the Scribes and Pharisees, concludeth thus in the eighth of St. John, saying, He that is of God, heareth Gods word; but forsomuch as you are not of God, therefore you hear not his word.

The hearing of the word commanded by God.

Thirdly, It is to be noted that Excommunication is a seperation from the Communion, the 11 Quest. 3. Nihil. & Cap. Canonica. And 27. Question, first, Viduas, 34. Question 3. Cum Sacerdos. And this Excommunication is double, that is to say, either secret or manifest. The [illegible] Excommunication is, whereby a man is separated from the Mystical Body of Christ, and so from God through sin, according unto the 59 of Esay, Your iniquities have made separation between your God and you. And with this Excommunication doth the Apostle Excommunicate every man which doth not love the Lord Jesus Christ; saying in the first of the Corinthians, and last Chapter, If any man do not love the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be accursed. The manifest and apert Excommunication may be divided into a manifest Excommunication by God, whereof it is spoken, Mat. 25. Go ye cursed, &c. And oftentimes else in the Law of God. Also into a manifest Excommunication by men, whereby the Prelate doth either justly or unjustly cast out any man from the participation of the Communion of the Church; whereof this shall suffice at this present.

Excommunication.

Excommunication double.

Then as touching the first part of the Article, it is thus argued, &c.

The probation of the first part.

Whosoever forsake or leave the Commandments of God undone, they are Excommunicate of God. But the Priests which leave off the preaching of the Word of God for fear of the unjust Excommunication of men, do leave the Commandment of God undone. Ergo, those Priests which do leave off preaching of the Word are Excommunicated of God.

The

{KING Rich. 2.} The firſt part of this Article is true: The Major appeareth by the Pſalm, Curſed be they which do decline and ſwerve from thy precepts. The Minor is evident by the firſt Propoſition, which proveth that the preaching of the word of God is the Commandment of God injoyned unto thoſe Prieſts and Miniſters. Whereupon the ſaying of our Saviour, Mat. 15. is ſpoken unto them, Wherefore do you tranſgreſs the Commandments of God for your own Traditions? Leaving off the preaching of the word of God for fear of unjuſt Excommunication; and ſo diſhonouring the Father Chriſt, and the Mother the holy Church.

It is thus confirmed, All they which do omit or let ſlip any manner of work, principally and ſtraitly injoyned them of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, under the cloak and colour of grace, for fear of any Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate. But Prieſts, and eſpecially Curates, admoniſhed by the Spirit of God, leaving off the preaching of the word of God for fear of the Excommunication of men, omit and leave off, for fear of the ſame Excommunication, a work principally and ſtraitly injoyned unto them of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, under the cloak and colour of grace: Ergo, Prieſts, and ſpecially Curates and ſuch as be admoniſhed and warned by the Spirit of God, omitting the preaching of the word of God for fear of Excommunication, are Excommunicate. The conſequence is well known. The Major appeareth by the Pſalm, Curſed be they which do decline and go away from thy Commandments. The Minor is alſo evident again by the firſt ſuppoſition.

1. Apoſtles did not obey any wicked inhibition.

Item, If the Apoſtles of Chriſt had left off the preaching of the word of God for fear of the Excommunication of men, which the Lord did foreſhew unto them in the 16th of St. John, ſaying, They ſhall Excommunicate you out of their Synagogues: They had been Excommunicated of God: Ergo, by like evidence the Prieſts and Miniſters of Chriſt, being inſpired with the ſame ſpirit to preach and declare the word of God, if they leave it undone for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate. The conſequence dependeth upon a ſimilitude. And the Antecedent is evident; for if the Apoſtles had left off preaching for fear of Excommunication, they had broken the Commandments of God; and ſo conſequently had been accurſed. Wherefore they willing to obſerve and keep the Commandments of God, and to put off the Excommunication of men, ſaid unto the High Prieſts, Elders, and Scribes at Jeruſalem, to Annas, Caiphas, to John and Alexander, and all other of the kindred of the Prieſts which were gathered together, and commanded them that they ſhould not preach nor teach in the name of Jeſus, If it be juſt in the ſight of God, that we ſhould rather obey you than God, that judg you, Act. 4. And in the fifth of the Acts they ſaid unto them, We ought rather to obey God than man. By this ſaying of the Holy Ghoſt it is concluded, that the Prieſts and Miniſters of Chriſt, inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt to preach the word of God, ought rather obey the Holy Ghoſt, than thoſe that ſhall prohibit and command them to the contrary, and to ſuffer the Excommunication of men patiently. Whereupon Pope Anacletus ſpake very well in this, as it is written, Diſtinction 43. We know (ſaith he) that many do go about to moleſt and trouble the Doctors and Teachers to this end, that they might utterly deſtroy them, and fulfill their own proper luſts and deſires; yet notwithſtanding the ſaid Doctors, as much as in them lieth, ought not to depart or go back from their good doings and intent, knowing aſſuredly that bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake. Thus much writeth he. And for reverend Bede (upon theſe words, Ye ſhall find an aſs tyed up, and an be-fole with her, looſe her and bring her unto me; and if any man ſay any thing unto you, ſay ye that the Lord hath need of them), writeth thus: Here it is myſtically commanded unto the Doctors and Teachers, that if any adverſity do lett or hinder, or any man do prohibit or ſtop, that ſinners cannot be looſed from their bonds or ſnares, and be brought unto the Lord by the confeſſion of their faith, that they notwithſtanding ſhould not leave off preaching, but conſtantly and boldly affirm and ſay, that the Lord hath need of ſuch to edifie and build again his Church. For ſo did the Apoſtles; ſo likewiſe ought all the humble and meek Miniſters of Chriſt to do. And St. Hierome writing unto Ruſticus the Biſhop of Narbone, ſaith thus, Let no Biſhop from henceforth be puffed up or inflamed with the envy of Diveliſh temptation, if the Prieſts now and then do exhort and teach the people, or preach openly in the Churches; or as it is ſaid, do bleſs the people: For unto him which ſhould deny unto me the doing hereof, I would ſay in this manner, He that will not that Prieſts ſhould do thoſe things which they are commanded by God, let him ſay that he is greater and above Chriſt. By the which words St. Hierom doth openly declare, that Prieſts are commanded to exhort and teach the people, and to preach in the Churches. Secondly, That a Biſhop denying or forbidding the ſame to be done, ſpecially the Prieſts or Miniſters being apt men thereunto, is extolled above Chriſt. And therefore conſequently is not to be obeyed nor heard in his doings.

Anacletus, Diſt. 4.

Hieronymus ad Ruſticum.

If the Pope be an Heretick, the godly Biſhops may preach againſt him.

Item, Admit that the Pope be an Heretick, and teach perverſe and contrary Doctrine unto the holy Scriptures, and that the Biſhop be a Catholick man, unto whom the Pope giveth in commandment that he ſhall ſuffer no man to preach contrary to his opinion; as it hapned in Pope Leo, and Saint Hilary the Biſhop: Adding this alſo, That the Biſhop do execute the Popes commandment under pain of Excommunication; this notwithſtanding if the Catholick Prieſts, learned in the Law of God, do leave off preaching againſt the Popes Hereſies, for fear of Excommunication of men, they are already Excommunicate. The which thing is evident, forſomuch as they are accurſed through the conſent of their ſilence, as St. Iſidore ſaith, 11. Queſt. 1. He that doth conſent unto ſinners, or defendeth a ſinner, he ſhall be curſed both before God and man, and ſhall be puniſhed with a moſt ſevere rebuke. And in the 7 Queſtion, 4. Omnis, it is ſaid, He that doth neglect to amend that which he may correct, committeth no leſs fault than he which had before offended; for not only they which do commit the offence, but alſo they which conſent thereunto are judged partakers thereof. In like caſe Prieſts which do not preach againſt the Hereſie which the Pope teacheth, are dumb dogs, not able to open their mouths, or bark againſt the wolf, which will kill the ſheep of Jeſus Chriſt: Ergo, how can it then be otherwiſe, but they muſt needs be betrayers of the ſheep of their own ſhepherd.

Albeit the chief Prieſts be Adulterers, yet ought the Miniſters to preach againſt Adultery.

Item, Let it be ſo, that the Biſhop with the chief Prelates be adulterers, or otherwiſe open offenders, and that he together with his Prelates do command under pain of Excommunication, that none be ſo hardy to preach againſt adultery; in ſuch a caſe they which do omit their duty in preaching againſt Adultery, for fear of Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicated of God: Ergo, the firſt part of the Article is true. The Antecedent is proved: For our Saviour in the eighth of Mark ſaith thus, He that acknowledgeth me and my words in this wicked and adulterous generation, the ſon of man ſhall alſo acknowledg and confeſs him when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father with his Angels. Therefore he that ſhall confeſs Chriſt, and theſe words of Chriſt, Mat. 5. You have heard that it was ſaid to them in old time, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery: But I ſay unto you, that every one which ſhall behold a woman to luſt after her, hath already committed adultery with her in his heart: He, I ſay, that ſhall confeſs theſe things before an adulterous Biſhop with his chief Prelates, the which perchance are the wicked and adulterous generation, the Son of man ſhall alſo acknowledg him, when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father, and ſo conſequently is he bleſſed. Contrariwiſe, he which for the fear of Excommunication of men will not confeſs Chriſt and his words, before the ſinful and adulterous generation is accurſed. The conſequence holdeth by the words of Chriſt, Luk. 9. He that is aſhamed of me and my words, him ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed of, when he ſhall come in his Majeſty, and in the glory of his Father, and his holy Angels: pronouncing that which is ſpoken, Mat. 25. Verily I ſay unto you, I know you not; go you curſed into everlaſting fire.

The example of Chriſt.

Alſo our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt did not omit, or leave off the preaching of the Kingdom of God for any pretended Excommunication of the Biſhops, Scribes and Phariſees; ſo likewiſe his true and humble Prieſts ought not to omit their preaching for any pretenſed Excommunication of men; the conſequence holdeth by the ſaying of Chriſt, Joh. 15. Be ye mindful of the words which I have ſpoken unto you, the ſervant is not greater than his maſter: If they have perſecuted me, they will perſecute you alſo. The Antecedent is apparent by the ſaying of Saint John in his his ninth Chapter. Even now the Jews had conſpired, that whoſoever did confeſs him to be Chriſt, ſhould be Excommunicate. And likewiſe Joh.7. Whether did any of the Princes or Rulers, or any of the Phariſees believe in him. But this people which knoweth not the Law are accurſed.

The obedience of Chriſtian Prieſts toward their Prelates.

Alſo the humble and juſt Miniſters of God ought not, under pain of ſin, to ceaſe from the fruitful preaching of the Law of God for any unjuſt Excommunication, or unlawful Commandment; and it is proved thus: the humble and juſt Miniſters of Chriſt ought not to obey their Prelates in ſuch things as are contrary to God; as all the holy Doctors, and ſuch as are learned in the Law of God, do wholly with one conſent affirm. And forſomuch as an unjuſt Excommunication, and unlawful Commandment are againſt God, therefore the juſt and true Miniſters of God ought not to obey ſuch unlawful Excommunication and Commandments; and conſequently ought not to ceaſe for them from the fruitful preaching of the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; but ought boldly and gladly to preach the ſame. Forſomuch as the Lord doth comfort them in the fifth of Matthew, ſaying thus, Bleſſed and happy are ye when as men do curſe you, and perſecute you, and ſpeak all kind of evil againſt you, making lies and ſlanders upon you for my ſake; rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven.

The power of preaching to edification ought not to ceaſe.

Alſo every Miniſter having power given him from above to preach the Goſpel, hath the ſame given unto him for the edifying of the Church, and not for the deſtruction of the ſame.

And the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 *Cor.*10. But every one leaving off the preaching of the Goſpel, for fear of any pretenſed Excommunication of men, ſhould fruſtrate the power given him for the edifying of the Church. And therefore in ſo doing he ſhould ſin againſt God and his Church, and conſequently ought rather to chuſe not to ceaſe from preaching for fear of any ſuch Excommunication, leſt that he be Excommunicate of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

The preaching of the Goſpel is not to be left off for all the Popes prohibitions.

Item, Set caſe that the Pope doth command that there ſhall be no preaching in any place, then the Miniſters of Chriſt leaving off their preaching for fear of the Popes Curſe, are already Excommunicated of God; It is evident forſomuch as they have neglected the Commandment of God for the Commandment of men. And this caſe is poſſible: for by what reaſon the Pope may command under pain of Excommunication, that there ſhall be no preaching in ſome place, and namely in the Pariſh Churches; by the ſame reaſon he may command that no man ſhould preach in any place.

The firſt part is evident by the prohibition of Pope Alexander, who in his Bull did prohibit to preach the word of God unto the people in Chappels, although the ſaid Chappels were confirmed by the priviledg of the See Apoſtolick. The which Bull the Lord Subincon, Archbiſhop of Prague, with his Canons, obtained. By theſe aforeſaid, the firſt part of the Article is evident, which is this, that all Prieſts omitting the preaching of the word of God, for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate.

The ſecond part of the Article.

The ſecond part of the Article is this, That all they which do omit the hearing of the word of God, for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate.

And it is proved thus: All ſuch as neglect the Commandments of God are Excommunicate. But they which neglect the hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication of men, are they which neglect the Commandments of God. Therefore they which omit the hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication are already Excommunicate.

Means neceſſary unto ſalvation are not to be omitted.

The Major is apparent by the 118 Pſalm, Curſed be they which decline from thy Commandments. And the Minor is evident by the ſecond Suppoſition, which ſaith, That the hearing of the word of God is commanded unto the people.

This is confirmed, All ſuch as omit the neceſſary means unto Salvation are Excommunicate: But ſuch as omit the hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication by men, be ſuch as do omit the neceſſary means unto ſalvation. Therefore in ſo doing they are Excommunicate. The conſequence is plain: the Major is made evident by this, That all ſuch as do omit the neceſſary means unto Salvation, do alſo neglect their Salvation, and ſo are out of the way of Salvation, and be Excommunicated of God. The Minor appeareth hereby, that to hear the word of God is the means moſt neceſſary unto Salvation, as the Apoſtle doth prove in his tenth Chapter to the Romans, How, ſaith he, ſhall they believe on him, whom they never heard of? And how ſhall they hear without a Preacher? And by and by after the Apoſtle inferreth unto the purpoſe, That faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

A man ought to do nothing againſt his conſcience.

Item, Whatſoever is done contrary unto Conſcience, doth edifie unto eternal damnation; as it is ſaid, as touching the reſtitution of the ſpoiled goods, Chap. Literas porro. But to omit the hearing of the word of God for fear of Excommunication of men, is a thing which is done againſt Conſcience. Therefore to omit the hearing of the word of God, for Excommunication doth edifie unto eternal damnation, and therefore conſequently ought not to be done, for fear of any Excommunication. Wherefore a woman being judged unto a man, whom ſhe knoweth to be within the degrees of Conſanguinity, which Gods Law hath prohibited, ought not to obey that judgment, leſt that ſhe offend againſt God; but meekly and patiently to ſuſtain the Excommunication, as it appeareth in the Chapter before alledged. So likewiſe all true Chriſtians ought rather ſhun to offend againſt God, meekly to ſuffer the Excommunication of men, and not to omit the hearing of the word of God. To this purpoſe alſo ſerveth that which is ſpoken in the 11 Queſt. 3. He that feareth the Omnipotent God, will not preſume by any means to do any thing contrary unto the Goſpel or Apoſtles, either unto the Prophets, or the Inſtitutions of the holy Fathers. By theſe premiſſes, the ſecond part of this Article is manifeſt, that all ſuch as do omit the hearing of the word of God for fear of Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicated.

The proofs of the third part.

And forſomuch as all Chriſtians being of lawful age, not repenting at the end, ſhall be counted in a manner as Traytors to Chriſt in the day of judgment, becauſe that they were unfaithful ſervants of Chriſt; therefore they which through fear omit the preaching and hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication of men, ſhall be counted as Traytors to Chriſt, and ſhall render account thereof unto the Lord. Whereupon Chryſoſtom touching both thoſe ſorts in the 41 Homely, ſhewing how the Lord would have ſome to be teachers, and otherſome to be teachers, and otherſome to be diſciples, ſaith thus, For unto thoſe which he would have to be teachers, he ſpeaketh thus by his Prophet Eſay, Ye Prieſts ſpeak to the hearts of the people, for if the Prieſts do not manifeſt all the truth unto the people, they ſhall render account thereof at the day of judgment: and likewiſe if the people do not learn the truth, they ſhall alſo give an account at the day of judgment. It is alſo made more evident by him upon the tenth of Matthew, Do not fear them which kill the body, leſt that through the fear of death, you do not freely ſpeak that which you have heard, neither boldly preach them unto all men which you alone have heard in your ears. So that hereby alone it is evident that not only he is a betrayer of the truth, which tranſgreſſing the truth, doth openly ſpeak lyes inſtead of the truth; but he alſo which doth not freely pronounce, or doth not freely defend the truth, which he ought boldly to defend, is alſo a Traytor unto the Truth. For like as the Prieſt is a debtor to preach the truth which he hath heard of the Lord; even ſo the lay-man is bound to defend the truth, which he hath heard of the Miniſter, approved by the Scriptures; which if he do not, then is he a Traytor unto the truth: for ſtedfaſt belief with the heart prevaileth unto righteouſneſs; the confeſſion which is made with the mouth helpeth unto ſalvation. Thus much writeth Chryſoſtom; who together with the people meekly bearing the Excommunication of the Biſhops, freely preached the truth, and the people heard him? and ſo by his word and his works he freely taught the truth, leſt he ſhould be a Traytor unto the truth, and conſequently be counted as a Traytor unto our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the day of Judgment. And thus the third part of the Article aforeſaid is manifeſt.

Chryſoſtom in his 41 Homily.

Chryſoſtom although he was excommunicate, yet he did preach.

{KING Ric. 2.}

The defenſion of the Fifteenth Article of John Wickliff by John Hus.

The 15th Article of Wickliff.

IT is lawful for any Deacon or Prieſt to Preach the Word of God without the Authority of the Apoſtolick See, or of his Catholicks.

Firſt, I underſtand here by the Authority of the Apoſtolick See, properly his ſpecial conſent authoriſing. And likewiſe I underſtand by Authority of the Biſhop, a ſpecial conſent of the Biſhop authoriſing the ſaid Deacon or Prieſt to Preach.

The confirmation of the Article. Every man being lawfully called of the Church, ought to Preach the Word of God without the Popes licence.

Now as touching the truth of this Article, I thus argue: Like as after Matrimony once complete, the Man and Wife may lawfully, without any ſpecial licence of the Pope or Biſhop, procreate carnal children: So likewiſe Deacons or Prieſts, by the motion of God through the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, may lawfully without any ſpecial licence either of Pope or Biſhop, generate ſpiritual children. Ergo, this Article is true, and the Antecedent is thus proved. For as it is an acceptable work unto God for Man and Wife, without the ſpecial licence of the Pope or Biſhop, to generate carnal children; ſo it is acceptable unto him, that Deacons or Prieſts, by the motion of God through the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhould lawfully generate ſpiritual children, without the ſpecial licence of the Pope, or of any other Biſhop: Ergo, the aſſumption is true.

But if any Man will deny this ſimilitude, let him ſhew the diverſity. Yea, as it is worſe not to receive or to choke the Seed of Gods word, than the Carnal ſeed; ſo contrariwiſe, it is better to receive and ſow abroad that Seed of the word of God, whereby children might be raiſed up unto God, than to receive or give Seed whereby Carnal children may be gotten. Whereupon our Saviour in the 10*th* of Matthew ſaith thus; Whoſoever doth not receive you, neither heareth your words, wipe off the duſt from your feet: verily I ſay unto you, that in the day of judgment it ſhall be better unto the land of Sodom and Gomorrah than to that city.

Alſo a Deacon or Prieſt being ſtirred by the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, may Preach the Word of God without the ſpecial licence of the Pope or Biſhop. Ergo, it is lawful for him ſo to do. The conſequence is thus manifeſt; forſomuch as the Spirit of God, moving the Deacon or Prieſt unto the Preaching of the Goſpel, is of greater force than any prohibition of Pope or Biſhop invented by Man. Ergo, according unto the rule of the Apoſtles, they ought infallibly to be obedient unto the Spirit of Chriſt, which doth ſo move them thereunto, and rather to obey God than Man, Acts 5. Alſo by like reaſon, as Heldad and Medad; upon whom the Spirit of God did reſt, did lawfully prophecy without requiring any licence at Moſes hands, as it is written, Numb. 11. By the ſame reaſon may the meek Miniſter of Chriſt, upon whom the Spirit of God doth reſt, without the requiring of any licence either of the Pope or Biſhop, lawfully Preach the Word of God unto the people. And would to God in this behalf all Prelates had the Spirit of Moſes; for it is ſaid, Numb. 11. That when as Heldad and Medad were prophecying in the Tents, a child ran unto Moſes, and told him, ſaying; Heldad and Medad do prophecy in the Tents; and by and by Joſua the Son of Nun, the ſervant of Moſes which he had choſen out amongſt many, ſaid, My Maſter Moſes, forbid them: and he ſaid, Why enviеſt thou for my ſake? Would God that all the people could prophecy, and that the Lord would give them his Spirit. O would to God the Pope and Biſhops had the affections which this holy Man the friend of God had. Then would he not prohibit the meek Deacons and Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt to Preach the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. The like affection had the bleſſed Man Gregory, which in his 22*d* Book of Morals, writing upon theſe words of Job; And I have not afflicted the Soul of his Husbandmen, ſaith thus; The Husbandmen of this Earth are theſe, which being ſet in ſaſtfull Authority, with as fervent deſire as they can, and with as great labor as they may, do work by the preaching of grace, to the erudition of the holy Church, the which Husbandmen of this World not to afflict, is not to envy their labours and doings: neither ought the Ruler of the Church albeit he do challenge unto himſelf alone the title of Preaching, through envy gainſay others which do Preach truly and uprightly. For the Godly mind of the Paſtor, which ſeeketh not his own glory amongſt men, deſireth to be holpen: the which thing alſo the faithful Preacher doth wiſh, if it might by any means be brought to paſs, that the truth, which he alone cannot ſufficiently expreſs, all mens mouths might declare.

God grant that all the people may prophecy.

Wherefore, when as Joſua would have reſiſted the two which were prophecying in the hoſt, why doſt thou envy (ſaith he) for my ſake? For he did not envy that good in other which he himſelf had. Thus writeth S. Gregory.

The courſe of the word of God ought not to be ſtopped. Bernard.

Alſo the meek Miniſters of Chriſt have, by a ſpecial gift of God, knowledge and mind to Preach the Goſpel; but neither is it lawful for the Pope or Biſhop, or any other Man to lett or hinder them, leſt thereby they ſhould lett the Word of God, that it have not his free courſe. Ergo, this Article is true; for the King doth not ſo much rule over the goods of his ſubjects, no not of his own Sons, but that they may give Alms to whom they will; much leſs hath the Biſhop ſo great Authority over the knowledge of the meek Miniſter, with his other gifts of God, but that he may freely under the title of ſpiritual Alms Preach the Goſpel unto the people. Ergo, forаſmuch as it ſhould ſeem ſtrange, that a Biſhop ſhould forbid any Man to give any corporal Alms to the poor that are an hungred; much more ſtrange and marvellous would it be, if that he ſhould prohibit the ſpiritual Miniſter of Chriſt to give ſpiritual Alms, by the Preaching of the Goſpel of the Word of God.

Item, No Catholick Man ought to doubt, but that a Man able for the purpoſe, is more bound to teach them which are ignorant, to counſel and comfort the weak in Spirit, to correct ſuch as are unruly, to forgive thoſe that do them wrong, than to do any other work of mercy: Forſomuch then as he that hath ſufficient is bound, under pain of damnation, to give corporal Alms, as it appeareth Matth. 25. much more he, which is able, is bound to do ſpiritual Alms. And this Alms S. Barnard, writing unto Eugenius in his 3*d* Book, perceived to be very neceſſary for the Biſhop of Rome, whereas he ſaid thus; I fear no greater poiſon, nor greater ſword or miſchief will happen unto thee, than this unſatiable deſire of dominion. With what face then can the faithful Miniſter withdraw or keep back the ſpiritual Alms for the Pope and any other, even without the ſpecial licence of the Pope or of the Biſhop; which licence, through the far diſtance from the Pope, the Miniſters cannot ſo eaſily obtain or come by? For all prohibition of any Prelate, being broken through neceſſity, is not to be blamed, 11. Queſt. 3. Interceſſor, and alſo in the Chapter following.

Item, All authority of preaching given unto Deacons and Prieſts in their conſecration, were but vain, except that in caſe of neceſſity, without any ſpecial licence, they might Preach the Goſpel. It is evident, forſomuch as it is not lawful for them to uſe that Authority, by their adverſary, without a ſpecial licence. Ergo, it is given them in vain. The conſequence is evident by the common ſaying of the Philoſopher, That power is but vain, whereof proceedeth no uſe of action. But forаſmuch as this Article doth as it were depend upon the Article before paſſed, therefore this ſhall ſuffice to be ſpoken thereof at this preſent.

Objection.

But againſt the affirmations of both theſe Articles this is objected out of the 16. Queſt. 1. All faithful people, and ſpecially all Prieſts, Deacons, and all others of the Clergy, ought to take heed that they do nothing without the licence of their Biſhop. It is alſo objected out of the 5*th* Book of Decretals, Tituli de hæreticis cap. Cum ex injuncto; where it is ſaid, No Man ought to uſurp to himſelf indifferently the Office of Preaching, forſomuch as the Apoſtle ſaith; How ſhall they Preach, except they be ſent? Whereas alſo Innocentius doth declare, that it is not ſufficient for a Man to ſay, that he is ſent of God to Preach except he do ſhew the ſame. As touching the firſt point, the Gloſs doth ſufficiently anſwer upon this word, without licence; That is to be expounded, ſaith he without general licence; the which is obtained and given, when as a Biſhop doth appoint any Prieſt to govern the people, For thereby (ſaith he) it ſeemeth a Biſhop is thought to give him general power to Miniſter unto the people, and to Rule the Church. Thus much in the Gloſs. And to the ſame end and purpoſe poſe it is ſaid in the 7th Queſt. 1. Chapter, Epiſcopi, Biſhops or Prieſts, if they come into the Church of another Biſhop to viſit the ſame, as it is ſaid Gloſs 1. in honore ſuo, Let them be received in their degree, and delired as well to Preach the Word, as to do any other conſecration or oblation. Secondly, it is to be noted, which is very well ſpoken in the ſame place; No man ought to uſurp unto himſelf the Office of Preaching, as a thing indifferent, For to uſurp, is unlawfully to uſe any thing. Ergo, the ſame Deacon or Prieſt doth then uſurp the Office of Preaching as indifferently, who living viciouſly, contrary unto Law the of Chriſt, or being ignorant of the Law of God, doth Preach either for gain, or covetouſneſs of living, either for his belly or dainty life, or for any vain glory: But he which doth live according unto the Laws of Chriſt, and being moved with the affection of ſincere Charity, intending purely the Honor of God, and the Salvation of himſelf and his neighbours, doth Preach no lies nor vain jeſts, or other things not authorizſed, but only the Law of Chriſt, and the minds of the holy Doctors. And he that doth ſo Preach, neceſſity occaſioning or moving him thereunto, in caſe there be no Pope or Biſhop, or in caſe poſſible to withſtand the Preaching of Hereticks or falſe Preachers, in ſo doing doth not uſurp the Office of Preaching; and in ſuch caſe there is no doubt but he is ſent of God. And this doth alſo anſwer unto that which is conſequently ſaid; that if any man will peradventure craftily anſwer, that ſuch Preachers are inviſibly ſent of God, although not viſibly of men, when as that inviſible ſending of God is much better than the viſible ſending of men: A man may reaſonably anſwer thereunto, that forſomuch as that internal ſending is ſecret, it is not ſufficient for a Man only to ſay that he is ſent of God, forſomuch as every Heretick may ſo ſay; but he ought to prove the ſame his inviſible calling by the working of ſome miracle, or by ſome ſpecial Teſtimony of the Scripture.

The anſwer to the objection.

What is falſly to uſurp the Office of a Preacher.

Who is a true Miniſter of the Church.

Here it is to be noted, according to Saint Auguſtine in his 65th Book of Queſt. unto Oroſius, that there are four kinds of ſending. The firſt is from God only, whereof we read in Moſes and other, which were inſpired by God. And this kind of ſending looſeth from the danger of the Statute: So that he whom the Spirit of God hath inſpired, this Prelate giving thanks may proceed unto a better life. Whereupon Pope Urban ſaid 19. Queſt. 2*d* There be (ſaid he) two Laws, the one publick, the other private. The publick Law is that which is confirmed in writing by the holy Fathers, ſuch as is the canon Law, which is only given for tranſgreſſions. As for example, it is decreed in the Canons, that none of the Clergy ſhall go from one Biſhoprick unto another, without the Letters commendatory of his Biſhop; the which was ordained only for offenders, that no infamed perſons ſhould be received of any Biſhop. For they were wont, when they could not celebrate or do their Office under their own Biſhoprick, to go unto another: which now is forbidden by the Laws and Precepts. The private Law is that, which, by the inſtruction of the Holy Ghoſt, is written in the heart, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of many, which have the Law of God written in their hearts. And in another place; forſomuch as the Gentiles have not the Law of God, but naturally do thoſe things which are of the Law, they are Laws unto themſelves. And afterward he ſaith, the private Law is much more worthy than the publick Law. For the Spirit of God is a Law; And they which are moved by the Spirit of God, are led by the Law of God. And who is he, that can worthily reſiſt againſt the Holy Ghoſt? Whoſoever therefore is led by the Spirit of God, albeit his Biſhop do ſay him nay, let him go freely by our Authority; for the Law is not appointed for the juſt Man, for where as the Spirit of God is, there is liberty; and if ye be led by the Spirit of God, ye are not under the Law.

Four kinds of ſending or calling.

The common Law.

The private Law.

Private Law, that is the ſecret and inward working of Gods ſpirit in the heart.

The words of Pope Urban.

Behold, here it is affirmed, that the ſending by God, through inſpiration, is not bound under the bondage of the Law; for that Law is more worthy than the publick Law. Secondly, that the Law is made for Tranſgreſſors and Offenders, and not for the Juſt. Thirdly, that whoſoever is led by the Spirit of God, although his Biſhop ſtand againſt him, he may proceed unto a better life. Whereby it is evident, that a Deacon or Prieſt diſpoſed to Preach, and being led by the Spirit of God, may freely Preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, without the ſpiritual licence of his Biſhop. It is evident, forſomuch as it is good, that a Deacon or Prieſt do live well, and Preach fruitfully. Ergo, he may proceed from idleneſs unto the labor and Office of Preaching, and ſo unto a better life.

But whereas it is ſaid afore, that forſomuch as the inward ſending or calling is ſecret, therefore it is not ſufficient for a man barely to affirm only that he is ſent of God, when as every Heretick may ſo ſay; but it is neceſſary that he do confirm and prove his inviſible ſending by the working of ſome miracle, or by ſome ſpecial Teſtimony of the Scripture: Here is to be noted, that there are two kinds of Preachers; ſome true Preachers of our Saviour Chriſt and others ſeducers, of Antichriſt. The firſt ſort following their Maſter Chriſt, teach the people in truth. The other ſort, being of a corrupt mind, and reprobate touching Faith, reſiſt againſt the verity; and through covetouſneſs, by their fained words do make merchandize of the people. And theſe men do give, and ſhall give miracles, as our Saviour ſaith, Matth. 24. There ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe Prophets, the which ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders, inſomuch that even the elect themſelves, if it were by any means poſſible, ſhould be brought into error. And the Apoſtle in the 2. to the Theſſal. 2. As touching their head Antichriſt, writeth thus: Whoſe coming ſhall be according to the operation of Satan, with all power and ſigns, falſe miracles, ſeducing unto iniquity thoſe which do periſh, becauſe they have not received the charity and love of truth, that they might be ſaved: Therefore will the Lord ſend upon them the operation of error, that they ſhall give credit unto lies: that all ſuch as have not believed the truth, but conſent unto wickedneſs, ſhould be judged. Behold how expreſly our Saviour by himſelf, and by his Apoſtle doth teach us, how the Diſciples of Antichriſt, with their head, ſhould ſhine through their great ſigns and wonders. But the true Diſciples of Chriſt ſhall not ſo do in the time of Antichriſt. For as Saint Iſidor ſaith in his firſt Book, 22. De ſummo bono: Before that Antichriſt ſhall appear, all vertues and ſigns ſhall ceaſe from the Church, that he may the boldlier perſecute the ſame, as an abject. For this profit ſhall all miracles and ſigns ceaſe under Antichriſt, that thereby the patience of the holy Men might be known, and the lightneſs of the reprobate, which are offended, my be opened, and alſo that the cruelty of the perſecutors ſhould be made more fierce. Thus writeth Saint Iſidor. And Saint Gregory in his 24th Book of Morals ſaith; For why? By a terrible examination of Gods ſecret diſpenſation ſhall all ſigns of vertue or power be taken away from the holy Church, before that the Leviathan appear in that moſt wicked and damnable Man, whoſe ſhape he doth take upon him. For prophecy is hidden, the gift of healing is taken away, the vertue of long abſtinence is diminiſhed, the words of Doctrine are put to ſilence, and the wonderful works of miracles are extinguiſhed; which things nothing can utterly take away, but only the diſpenſation of God. But this diſpenſation is not ſo openly and manifoldly declared, as it hath been in times paſt; the which alſo is done by a marvellous diſpenſation, that through one only thing both Gods love and juſtice ſhould be fulfilled. For the power of miracles being a while taken away, the holy Church appeareth the more abject and forſaken, and the reward of good men doth ceaſe, which reverenced the ſame for the hope of heavenly riches, and not for any preſent ſigns: and that the minds of evil men againſt the ſame might the ſooner be known, which neglect to follow the inviſible things which the Church doth promiſe, whiles they be led with viſible ſigns.

Every man may pretend to be ſent of God immediately.

Two kinds of Preachers.

Of the ſigns and wonders of Antichriſt.

Why true miracles ſhall ceaſe under Antichriſt.

Forſomuch then as the humility of the faithful is as it were deſtitute of the multitude and appearing of ſigns by the terrible working of Gods ſecret diſpenſation, whereby mercy is given unto the good and juſt, wrath heaped upon the evil; Forſomuch then, as it is truly ſaid, that before this Leviathan ſhall plainly and manifeſtly come, poverty ſhall go before his face (for before that time the riches of miracles ſhall be taken away from the faithful.) Then ſhall that Ancient enemy ſhew himſelf againſt them by open wonders; that as he is extolled through ſigns and wonders, ſo ſhall he the more manly be vanquiſhed of the faithful, without any ſigns or miracles. Alſo in his 16th Book upon theſe words, which the bleſſed man Job ſaid; Who ſhall reprehend his way before him, or who ſhall caſt in his teeth what he hath done? Whileſt he did ſpeak of the body of all evil, he ſuddenly converted his ſpeech unto the head of all the wicked; for he did ſee that toward the end of the world Satan ſhould enter into man, whom the Scripture calleth Antichriſt, he ſhall be extolled with ſuch pride, he ſhall rule with ſuch power, he ſhall be exalted with ſuch ſigns and wonders, under the pretence of holineſs, that his doing cannot be controlled of men, forſomuch as his ſigns and tokens are joyned with power and terror, and with a certain ſhew of Holineſs. Wherefore he ſaith, who ſhall controul his ways before him, what man is he that dare once rebuke or check him, whoſe look or countenance is he afraid of? But notwithſtanding not only Enoch and Elias, the which are brought as example for his probation, but alſo the elect do argue and reprove his way, whiles that they do contemn, and by the force and power of their minds, reſiſt his malice. But forſomuch as this thing is not done by their own power and ſtrength, but by Gods help and grace, therefore it is very well ſaid: Who ſhall argue or reprove his ways before him? Who but only God? By whoſe help, the elect are aided and made able to reſiſt.

The deſcription of Antichriſt out of S. Gregory.

The proof of Holineſs.

And a little after, upon the ſame Book of Job, Gregory ſaith, inſomuch as holy men do withſtand his iniquity; It is not they themſelves which do ſo rebuke his ways, but it is he through whoſe help they are ſtrengthened. Alſo in his ſecond Book he ſaith; Now the holy Church doth not regard, but deſpiſe the ſigns and miracles of the Hereticks, if they do any; forſomuch as the Church doth ſufficiently underſtand, that it is no kind of Holineſs: For why? The proof of Holineſs is not to make ſigns or wonders, but to love every man as himſelf, to think truly of the very true God, and to think better of thy Neighbour than of thy ſelf: For true vertue and holineſs conſiſteth in love, and not in ſhewing of miracles. This the verity declareth ſaying; Hereby ſhall all men know that ye are my Diſciples, if ye love one another: But he ſaith not, that hereby men ſhall know that ye are my Diſciples, becauſe ye work miracles; but contrariwiſe, if ye love one another: declaring plainly thereby, that it is not miracles, but the mear charity and love of God, which maketh us the ſervants of God. Wherefore the chief Teſtimony of being Gods Diſciple is to have the gift of brotherly love. This thorowout doth Saint Gregory write, and oftentimes in other places he ſpeaketh very much of miracles, how that they ſhall ceaſe amongſt the juſt, and abound amongſt the wicked.

Signs common and indifferent to the Miniſters of Chriſt and Antichriſt.

Alſo Chryſoſtom in his 55*th Homily* ſaith thus; It is a common and an indifferent work between the Miniſters of God and the Miniſters of the Divel, to caſt out Divels; but to confeſs the truth, and to work righteouſneſs, is the only work of the Saints and holy Men: therefore whomſoever thou doſt ſee caſting out of Divels, if he have not the confeſſion of the truth in his mouth, neither righteouſneſs in his hands, he is not a man of God: But if thou doſt ſee a man openly confeſſing and declaring the truth, and doing juſtice, although he do not caſt out any Divels, yet is he the man of God. And it followeth, Let us know, that like as at the coming of Chriſt, before him the Prophets, and with him the Apoſtles wrought miracles through the Holy Ghoſt; for ſuch as the thing is which is ſtirred, ſuch ſent and ſavour will proceed from the ſame. He writeth alſo upon the beginning of Matthew, The whole world did marvel and wonder at three things, That Chriſt roſe again after his death; that fleſh aſcended into Heaven; and that he did convert the whole World by his Twelve Apoſtles. There are four cauſes which wrought the ſame; that is to ſay, the contempt of riches or money; the deſpiſing of pomp and glory, the ſeparation of themſelves from all worldly occupation and buſineſs, and the patient ſuffering of torments. Thus much writeth Chryſoſtom alſo. Alſo S. Iſidore in his firſt Book and 25*th* Chap. De ſummo bono, writeth thus. Like as in the Apoſtles, the marvellous effect and power of works was much more commendable than the vertue of their ſigns; even ſo now in the Church it is much better to live well, than to work any ſigns or miracles. And the cauſe why that the Church of God doth not at this preſent work miracles, as it did in the time of the Apoſtles, is this; that it was neceſſary at that time that the World ſhould believe miracles, and now at this preſent, every faithful believer ought to ſhine with good works, for to this end were ſigns and miracles then outwardly wrought, that their Faith thereby might be inwardly ſtrengthened and eſtabliſhed: for whatſoever faithful man he be that ſeeketh to work miracles, he ſeeketh vain-glory to be praiſed of men, for it is written; Miracles are ſigns and tokens unto the infidels and unbelievers, and not unto the faithful. Thus much writeth Iſidore.

The principal miracles.

The cauſe why the Church now worketh not miracles.

Item, S. Auguſtine in his Book of confeſſions, ſaith thus; There is no greater miracle amongſt men, than to love our Enemies. By theſe words of theſe holy men a man may eaſily gather, that, both in our days, and in the time to come, the Diſciples of Antichriſt both do, and ſhall more flouriſh and ſhew themſelves by ſtrange ſigns and miracles, than the Diſciples of Chriſt, according to the ſaying of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; There ſhall riſe up amongſt you falſe prophets, which ſhall work ſtrange miracles. Secondly, it is approved that they are greater and ſtranger miracles, to confeſs the truth, and to do Juſtice, than to work any other kind of miracle. Thirdly it is gathered thereby, that whatſoever Miniſter or Deacon doth love his Enemies, contemneth riches, deſpiſeth the glory of the world, and flieth from all worldly troubles, meekly ſuſtaineth and ſuffereth moſt terrible and cruel threatnings and ſtrokes for the Goſpel ſake; he worketh miracles, having thereby a Teſtimony and witneſs, that he is the true Diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt. And it is evident by the ſaying of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Mat. 5th Let your good works ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorifie your father which is in heaven. And likewiſe John 10th Truſt unto your good works. Whereupon S. Gregory, in his firſt Book of Dialogues, writeth thus: The eſtimation of a true life conſiſteth in the vertue of his works, and not in the ſhewing of ſigns. Whereby it is fourthly concluded, by that which is aforeſaid, that it is a more effectual Teſtimony and witneſs for a Prieſt or Deacon that he is ſent of God to confeſs the truth, and follow Chriſt in the foreſaid vertues, than to caſt out Divels, or to do any other miracles, as it is evident by the ſaying of Chryſoſtome before alledged. Whomſoever thou doſt ſee to caſt out Divels, if the confeſſion or acknowledging of the truth be not in his mouth, neither righteouſneſs nor juſtice in his hands, he is not a Man of God. This is alſo confirmed by the words of Chriſt. Matth. 7. Many ſhall ſay unto me in that day; Lord, Lord, have not we propheſied in thy name; have not we caſt out divels in thy name; and have not we alſo wrought many great wonders and miracles in thy name? Then I will anſwer and ſay unto them; forſomuch as I have not known you at any time, Depart from me ye workers of iniquity. And as touching the ſecond part, Chryſoſtome ſaith; If you ſee a man confeſſing and preaching the truth, and working righteouſneſs, although he do not caſt out divels, he is a man of God.

A greate miracle to love a mans Enemy.

The true miracles of Chriſts Miniſters.

Hereby it appeareth, that every Deacon, Prieſt, or Miniſter, confeſſing the truth, and working juſtice, hath a perfect and ſure Teſtimony that he is ſent of God; and that it is not neceſſary for him to approve this his ſending by the working of any miracle, in ſtead of working righteouſneſs; neither by any Teſtimonial, the which ſhould plainly declare him by name, that he was ſent of the Lord to Preach.

The Teſtimony of a true Prieſt.

The firſt part appeareth manifeſt by that which is already ſpoken, that all miracles in the time of Antichriſt ſhall ceaſe in the elect.

The ſecond part is alſo evident; forſomuch as none of the preſent Preachers can ſhew by the Scripture of the Law of God, that he is ſpecially named thereunto.

And likewiſe I do alſo affirm and ſay, as touching all Preachers which ſhall come hereafter, that they are not named by name. But let no man here object Enoch and Elias, which were ancient Preachers, and propheſied by the holy Spirit of God. And it is apparent, that like as it is not a cauſe ſufficient to prove, that this Prieſt or Deacon is ſent of God to Preach, becauſe he worketh miracles; ſo is it not a cauſe ſufficient to prove, that he is not ſent of God to Preach, becauſe he doth no miracles; but to confeſs the truth, to work righteouſenſs, to contemn the World with the glory thereof, patiently to ſuffer rebukes, is a ſufficient Teſtimony for any Prieſt or Deacon, having knowledge of the Law of God, freely to Preach the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, forſomuch as in ſuch caſe he is ſent of God. And this is the ſending which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of in the 10. to the Romans; How ſhould they preach, except they be ſent? Whereupon the Gloſs of S. Auguſtine writeth thus; Theſe things ſerve to ſet forth Gods grace, declaring that all our goodneſs is prevented of grace.

For he ſaith, Belief cometh of hearing, hearing cometh of Preaching, and Preaching by the ſending of God; ſo that altogether wholly cometh out of the Fountain of Grace, and Preaching truly cometh of ſending. This hath the Gloſs: how ſhall they then Preach, without they be ſent of God? And this is evident, that the great and principal ſending is from God alone, as it is approved by Moſes.

The ſecond ſending is both from God and Man; as by the example of Joſua and others, which were ſent both by God and the Rulers to Preach.

The third ſending is from Man alone; the which is not founded in the Law of God, but in mens Traditions, which they rather eſteem.

The fourth ſending, which hath but the name only, is proper to them, which of themſelves unworthily uſurp the Office of Preaching, as thoſe falſe Prophets of whom God ſpeaketh in the 23. of Jeremy; I did not ſend them, and they ran: I ſpake not unto them, and they prophecied, if they had continued in my counſels, and had declared my words unto my people, I would have converted them from their evil ways, and wicked imaginations. And our Saviour ſpeaketh of theſe Prophets in Matthew, ſaying, There ſhall ariſe falſe Prophets. And Peter his true Vicar, in his ſecond Epiſtle and ſecond Chapter, propheſying unto the faithful Believers in Chriſt, ſpeaketh thus of them; There were amongſt the people falſe Prophets, as there ſhall be amongſt you alſo Maſters of lies, through whom the truth ſhall be blaſphemed and ſlandered; and that he might the better inſtruct the people to know them, he addeth, That they ſhall go about with fained words, for covetouſneſs ſake, to make merchandize of you.

The difference between the Miniſters of Chriſt and Antichriſt.

Wherefore every faithful man, diligently weighing theſe things in his mind, may now eaſily perceive how great a number of falſe Prophets there be, through whom the Chriſtian truth is blaſphemed, and all covetous dealing is exerciſed, and theſe are they which freely Preach lies. But the humble and true Miniſters of Chriſt, whereſoever they do appear, by and by are perſecuted, whereby the prophecy of the Apoſtle is verified, which is written in the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, the 3. All men, ſaith he, which deſire to live godly, ſhall ſuffer perſecution: But the evil men and Seducers ſhall proſper in their wickedneſs, running daily more and more into all kind of errors. The wicked have now ſo much prevailed, that they do Preach lies, making Hereticks of the faithful Chriſtians; neither is there any man that dare prohibit them their lying, ſo that they do not Preach againſt the vices of the Prelates. How then can you ſay, that Antichriſt is not exalted above all that which is called God, ſuppreſſing the members of Chriſt, in his Office, fortifying and foſtering his members in lying? Therefore the true and faithful Diſciples of Chriſt ought to ſtand ready girt about their loins, and ſhooes upon their feet in defence of the Goſpel, taking the Sword in hand, which is the word of God. Epheſ. 6. And to fight againſt the crafts of Antichriſt, who goeth about utterly to extinguiſh the true Preaching of the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

The Miniſters of Antichriſt do cloke the vices of their Prelates.

The ſecond diſputation in the Univerſity of Pragne, upon the ſeventeenth Article of John Wickliff, moſt fruitful to be read; proving by four and Twenty reaſons out of the Scriptures, how that Princes and Lords temporal have lawful authority and juriſdiction over the ſpirituality and Churchmen, both in taking from them, and correcting their abuſes according to their doings and deſerts.

"TO the Honour of Almighty God, and of our Lord "Jeſus Chriſt, both for the trying out of truth, and "the profit of holy Mother the Church, according to the "Congregation of our Univerſity of Prague, which, avoiding always to do that which ſhall be prejudicial to the "truth, hath deferred to give their conſent unto the condemnation of the Forty five Articles, wiſhing even unto "this preſent ſufficient probation to be given of the condemnation of the ſaid Articles, and particularly of every "one of them. Whereupon the ſaid Univerſity doth always require due proof of the ſame, forſomuch as Pope "Damaſus in his Canon, Diſtinction ſixty eighth Chapter, "Chorepiſcopi, ſaith thus; That it is neceſſary that whatſoever thing ſtandeth not by due reaſon ſhould be rooted "out. Whereby it appeareth, that the condemnation of the "five and forty Articles, if it ſtand not with proof and ſufficient demonſtration for every Article, is neceſſary to be "rooted out.

The condemnation of the xlv. Articles, and therefore is not to be alloyed.

KING. Ric. 2.

"But if any man will object and ſay, that to require a "reaſon of every thing, is to derogate from Gods divine "power. Unto this objection Maſter William doth anſwer "himſelf in his Philoſophy, the firſt Book, almoſt at the end, "where he intreating of the place, in the ſecond Chapter of "Geneſis, God made man of the ſlime of the Earth, &c. "Hath theſe words; For in what point (ſay we) are we "contrary to the holy Scriptures, if we ſeek by reaſon to declare wherefore any thing is done, which is ſaid in the "Scriptures to be done? For if that a wiſe man ſhould ſay "that a thing is done, and do not declare how it is done, "and another man ſpeaketh the very ſelf ſame thing, and "declareth how it is done, what contrariety is there? But "forſomuch as they themſelves know not the force of nature, to the intent that they might have all men partakers "with them of their ignorance, they would have no man "to inquire it out. But they would have us believe as ignorant people, neither to ſeek any reaſon of our belief, that "the prophecy might be fulfilled: Such as the people is, "ſuch ſhall be the Prieſt. But we truly do ſay, that in all "things a reaſon is to be ſought, if it may by any means be "found. But if that any man do ſtay at any thing which "the Scriptures do affirm, let him commit the ſame unto faith, and unto the holy Ghoſt. For Moſes ſaith, If the "Lamb cannot be eaten, let it not be by and by conſumed "in the fire; but let him firſt call his Neighbour which "dwelleth next houſe unto him; and if they alſo be not "ſufficient to eat the Lamb, then let it be burned in the "fire. So likewiſe, when as we go about to ſeek any thing "as touching the Godhead, and that we be not able of ourſelves to comprehend the ſame, let us call our Neighbours "which dwelleth next houſe unto us; that is to ſay, let us "ſeek out ſuch a one as dwelleth in the ſame Catholick faith "with us; and if then neither we, neither yet he be able to "comprehend the ſame, let it then be burned with the fire "of Faith.

An Allegory upon the Paſchal Lamb.

"But theſe men, albeit they have many Neighbours "dwelling near unto them, yet for very pride they will not "call any man unto them, chuſing rather to continue ſtill "ignorant, than to ask any queſtion. And if they do know "any man to enquire for his Neighbour in ſuch caſe, by "and by they cry out upon him as an Heretick; preſuming more upon their own heads, than having confidence "in their wiſdom. But I exhort you to give no credit unto "their outward appearance, for already it is verified in "them which the Satyrical Poet ſaith; No credit is to be "given unto the outward ſhew: For which of them all is "it that doth not abound with moſt ſhameful and deteſtable "vices? And in another place he ſaith; They are very "dainty of their ſpeech, and have great deſire to keep ſilence. And thus much hath M. Wilhelmus. Let all ſuch "hear whom this parable doth touch: for I with the reſt "of the Maſters, Bachelors, and Students of our Univerſity, "conſidering how hard a matter the condemnation of the "Forty five Articles of Wickliff, without reaſon, is, and how "grievous a thing it were if we ſhould thereunto conſent, "do call together my Neighbours, the Doctors of this "Univerſity, and all others which would object any thing "againſt the ſame, that we might preſently find out the "reaſon of the condemnation of this Article concerning the "taking away the temporalties from the Clergy.

A proteſtation, whereby he giveth light unto Reader, how the propoſition aforeſaid is to be underſtood, and addeth, that the goods of the Clergy are not utterly to be taken away, but in caſe they do abuſe the ſame.

"Notwithſtanding I do profeſs that it is not my intent, "like as it is not the meaning of the Univerſity to perſwade, "that Princes or ſecular Lords ſhould take away the goods "from the Clergy when they would, or how they would, "and convert them to what uſe they liſt. But our whole "intent is, diligently to ſearch out whether this Article, as "touching the taking away of temporalties from the Clergy, may have in it any true ſenſe, whereby it may be defended without reproof. Wherefore this Article, being "the ſeventeenth in the number of the Forty five, is, pro-

KING Ric. 2.

The seventeenth Article proved by 44. Arguments.

"propounded under this form: The Lords temporal "may at their own will and pleasure, take away the tem- "poral Goods from the Clergy, if they do offend, and "therein continue. It is thus proved: The Kings of the "Old Testament took away the temporal Goods at Gods "commandment from the Clergy; that is to say, from "the Priests offending. Therefore the Kings also of the "New Testament, at Gods commandment, may do the "like, when as the Priests of the new Law do offend. The "consequence dependeth upon a similitude. And the an- "tecedent is evident. First, it is proved by Solomon in the "3d of the Kings, 2. Chapter, which Solomon deposed A- "biathar the high Priest, because he had taken part with "Adonias the Brother of Solomon to make him King, "without the advice either of David, or of Solomon him- "self, which ought to reign, and set up Sadoc the Priest in "the place of Abiathar, because he had not consented with "Abiathar unto Adonias, as it is written in the 3d Book of "Kings, 1. Chapter, where it is said; Adonias, the Son "of Agithe, exalted himself, saying, I will Reign, and made "unto himself Chariots and Horsemen, and Fourty men "which should run before him; neither did his Father re- "buke him at any time, saying, Wherefore hast thou done "this? For he was very comely, being second Son, next to "Absolom, and his talk was with Joab the Son of Sarvia and "Abiathar the Priest, which took part with Adonias. But "Sadoc the Priest, and Benaias the Son of Joiada, and Na- "than the Prophet, and Semei, and Serethi, and Felethi, and "all the power of Davids Host, were not on Adonias part.

"This was the cause of the deposing of Abiathar, be- "cause he took part with Adonias, that he should be King "against Solomon the eldest Son of King David: Where- "fore it is written in the Third Book, and second Chapter "of the Kings; The King said unto Abiathar the Priest, "Go your ways unto Anathoth thine own Field, for thou "art a Man of death; but this day I will not slay thee, "because thou hast carried the Ark of the Lord before my "Father David, and didst labour in all things wherein my "Father laboured. Then did Solomon cast out Abiathar, "that he should be no more the Priest of the Lord; that "the Word of the Lord might be fulfilled, which he spake "upon the house of Heli in Silo.

"Behold, the most prudent King Salomon, according to "the wisdom which was given him of God, did exercise "his power upon the said Priest, putting him out of his "Priesthood, and setting in his place Sadoc the Priest. This "was a greater matter than to take away the temporalties. "If then in the Law of Christ, which now reigneth over us, "a Bishop should likewise rebel against the true Heir of the "Kingdom, willing to set up another for King; why "should not the King or his Heir have power, in like case, "to take away the temporalties from him so offending?

Nabuchadonozor.

"Item, It is also evident by the King Nabuchadonozor, "which had power given him of God to lead away the "children of Israel, with their Priests and Levites, into "the Captivity of Babylon, as it is written in the 4th Book "of the Kings, 25. Chapter.

3. Joas.

"Item, It is read in the 4th Book of Kings, and 12th "Chap. How that Joas the most godly King of Juda, ac- "cording to the wisdom which God had granted him, took "away all the consecrate vessels which Josaphat, Joram, "and Ochasias, his Fore-fathers Kings of Juda had conse- "crated, and those which he himself had offered, and all the "Treasure that could be found in the Temple of the Lord, "and in the Kings Palace, and sent it unto Azabel King "of Syria, and he departed from Jerusalem. Mark how "this most holy King exercised his power, not only in ta- "king away the Temporalties of the Priests, but also those "things which were consecrate in the Temple of the Lord, "to procure unto the Common-wealth the benefit of peace.

4. Ezechias.

"Item, In the 4th Book, and 18th Chap. of the Kings, it "is written, how that the holy King Ezechias took all the "Treasure that was found in the house of the Lord, and in "the Kings Treasury, and brake down the Pillars of the "Temple of the Lord, and all the Plates of Gold which he "himself had fastned thereupon, and gave them unto the "King of the Assyrians; yet was he not rebuked of the "Lord therefore, as he was for his other sins, as it appeareth "in the 2d Book of Paralip. 32. Chap. Forsomuch then as "in time of necessity all things ought to be in common "unto Christians, it followeth that the secular Lords in case "of necessity, and in many other common cases, may law- "fully take away the moveable goods from the Clergy, "when they do offend.

5. "Item, It is also read in the 12th of S. Matthew, That "the Disciples of Jesus, to slack their hunger, upon the Sab- "bath day pulled the ears of corn, and did eat them, and "the Pharisees rebuked them therefore; unto whom Christ "answered, Have ye not read what David did when he "was hungry, and those that were with him: How he David's "entred into the House of the Lord, and did eat the Shew- "bread, which it was not lawful for him, neither for "them that were with him to eat, but only for the Priests? "This story is written in the first Book of the Kings, and "21. Chapter. And the commandment in the 12th Chapter "of Deuteronomie. Whereby it appeareth, that it is lawful in "time of necessity to use any thing, be it never so much "consecrate. Otherwise children by giving their movea- "bles to the consecration of any Temple, should not be "bound to help their Parents; which is contrary and a- "gainst the Gospel of S. Matthew in the sixteenth Cha- "pter; Whereas our Saviour sharply rebuked the Pharisees, "that for their own Traditions they did transgress the "commandment of God.

Case of necessity.

6. Titus and Vespasian.

"Item, Titus and Vespasian secular Princes had power "given them of God, twenty four years after the Lords Af- "cension, to take away the Temporalties from the Priests "which had offended against the Lords holy one, and "thereby also bereft them of their lives: And it seemeth "unto many, they did and might worthily do the same "according to Gods good will and pleasure. Then forso- "much as our Priests in these days may transgress and of- "fend as much, and rather more against the Lords anoin- "ted, it followeth, that by the pleasure of God, the secular "Lords may likewise punish them for their offence.

7. The example of Christ paying of Tribute.

"Our Saviour being King of Kings, and high Bishop, "with his Disciples, did give Tribute unto Cæsar, as it ap- "peareth in the 17th Chap. of S. Matthews Gospel, and "commanded the Scribes and Pharisees to give the like "unto Cæsar, S. Matth. 22. Whereby he gave example "unto all Priests that would come after him to render Tri- "bute unto their Kings: Whereupon blessed S. Ambrose "in his fourth Book upon these Words in the 5th of S. Luke, "(Cast out yout nets) writeth thus; There is another "kind of fishing amongst the Apostles, after which man- "ner the Lord commanded Peter only to fish, saying, "Cast out thy Hook, and that Fish which cometh first up, "take him. And then unto the purpose he saith; It is "truly a great and spiritual document, whereby all Chri- "stian men are taught, that they ought to be subject unto "the higher powers, and that no man ought to think that "the Laws of a King here on Earth are to be broken. For "if the Son of God did pay Tribute, who art thou so "great a man, that thinkest thou oughtest not to pay "Tribute? He payed Tribute which had no possessions; "and thou which daily seekest after the lucre of the World, "why dost thou not acknowledge the obedience and du- "ty of the World? Why dost thou through the arrogan- "cy of thy mind exalt thy self above the World, when "as, through thine own miserable covetousness, thou art "subject unto the World? Thus writeth S. Ambrose, and "it is put in the 11. q. 1. Magnum quidem. He also writeth "upon these words in Luke 20. Shew me a peny, whose "Image hath it? If Christ had not the Image of Cæsar, "why did he pay any Tribute? He gave it not of his own, "but rendred unto the World, that which was the Worlds: "and if thou wilt not be in danger of Cæsar, possess not "those things which are the Worlds; for if thou hast riches "thou art in danger of Cæsar.

S. Ambrose's mind.

Christ commanded Tribute to be paid unto the Emperor.

"Wherefore if thou wilt owe nothing unto any Earthly "King, forsake all those things, and follow Christ. If "then all Ecclesiastical Ministers, having riches, ought to "be under the subjection of Kings, and give unto them "Tribute: It followeth that Kings may lawfully, by the "Authority which is given them take away their Tempo- "ralties from them.

"Hereupon S. Paul, acknowledging himself to be under "jurisdiction of the Emperor, appealed unto Cæsar, as it "appeareth, Acts 25.

Paul appealed to the Emperor.

"I stand, saith he, at Cæsars Judgment seat, there I "ought to be judged. Whereupon in the eighth Distinc- "on, Chapter Quo jure, S. Ambrose alledgeth, that all

S. Ambrose there in the 8. Distinct.

" things are lawful unto the Emperor, and all things under " his Power. For the confirmation whereof it is said,
Dan. 2. " Daniel second Chapter, The God of Heaven hath given " unto thee a Kingdom, Strength, Empire and Glory, " and all places wherein the Children of men do dwell, " and hath given into thy Power the Beasts of the field, " and Fowls of the Air, and set all things under thy Sub- " jection.

" Also in the 11. question and 1. he saith, If the Em-
9. " peror require Tribute, we do not deny that the Lands of " the Church shall pay Tribute; if the Emperor have need " of our Lands, he hath power to challenge them, let him " take them, if he will; I do not give them unto the Em- " peror, neither do I deny them. This writeth S. Ambrose, " expressly declaring that the secular Lord hath power at " his pleasure to take away the Lands of the Church; and " so consequently the secular Lords have power at their " own pleasures to take away the Temporal goods from " the Ecclesiastical Ministers, when they do offend.

10. S. Augustine " Item, S. Augustine writeth, If thou sayst, what have " we do with the Emperor? But now as I said, we speak " of mans Law. The Apostles would be Obedient unto " Kings, and honour them, saying, Reverence your Kings; " and do not say, What have I to do with the King? " What hast thou then to do with Possessions? By the " Kings Law thy Possessions are possessed. Thou hast said, " What have I to do with the King? but do not say, What " have thy Possessions to do with the King? For then hast " thou renounced the Laws of men, whereby thou didst " possess thy Lands. Thus writeth S. Augustine in his " eigth Distinct. by whose words it is manifest, that the " King hath power over the Church-goods, and conse- " quently may take them away from the Clergy trans- " gressing or offending.

11. Magistrates, Keepers of both Laws. " Item, in his three and thirtieth Epistle unto Boniface, " he saith, What sober man will say unto our Kings, Care " not you in your Kingdom, by whom the Church of the " Lord is maintained, or by whom it is oppressed; it " pertaineth not unto you, who will be either a religious " man, or who will be a Church-Robber? Unto whom " it may be thus answered, Doth it not pertain unto us in " our Kingdom, who will either live a chast life, or who " will be an unchast Whoremonger? Behold, this holy
The duty of Kings to punish the Clergy. " man sheweth here how that it is the duty of Kings to " punish such as are Robbers of Churches, and consequent- " ly the proud Clergy when as they do offend.

12. " Item, he writeth in the 33. quest. 7. Si de rebus; " The secular Lords may lawfully take away the Temporal " goods from Hereticks; and forsomuch it is a case greatly " possible that many of the Clergy are users of Simony, and " thereby Hereticks, therefore the secular Lords may very " lawfully take away their Temporalties from them. For " what unworthy thing is it, saith S. Augustine, if the Catho- " licks do possess, according unto the will of the Lord, those " things which the Hereticks held? Forsomuch as this is " the word of the Lord unto all wicked men, Mat. 21. The Mat. 21. " Kingdom of God shall be taken away from you, and given " unto a Nation, which shall do the righteousness thereof; " is it in vain which is written in the eleventh Chapter of Wisdom 11. " the Book of Wisdom? The just shall eat the labours of " the wicked.

An objection of the desire of other mens goods. " And whereas it may be objected as touching the de- " sire of other mens goods, S. Augustine answereth, That " by that evidence the seven Nations, which did abuse the " Land of Promise, and were driven out from thence by " the Power of God, may object the same unto the people " of God, which inhabit the same. And the Jews them- " selves, from whom, according unto the word of the " Lord, The Kingdom is taken away, and given unto a " people, which shall do the works of Righteousness, may " object the same unto the Church of Christ, as touching " the desire of other mens goods; but S. Augustines An- " swer is thus:

" We, saith he, do not desire another mans goods; for- " somuch as they are ours by the Commandment of him, " by whom all things were made. By like evidence the " Clergy having offended, their Temporal goods are " made the goods of others, for the profit of the Church.
S. Augustine 14. quest 4. " To this purpose also, according to Saint Augustine " serveth the fourteenth question 4. Unto a misbeliever it " is not a half-peny matter, but unto the Faithful is a " whole World of riches: shall we not then convince all
KING Ric. 2. " such to possess another mans goods, which seemed to " have gathered great riches together, and know not how " to use them? for that truly is not anothers, which is " possessed by right: and that is lawfully possessed, which " is justly possessed; and that is justly possessed, which is " well possessed. Ergo, all that which is evil possessed is " another mans, and he doth ill possess it, which doth evil " use it.

" If then any of the Clergy do abuse the Temporal " goods, the Temporal Lords may at their own pleasure, ac- " cording unto the rule of charity, take away the said Tem- " poral goods from the Clergy so transgressing. For then, " according to the Allegation aforesaid, the Clergy doth not " justly possess those Temporal goods, but the Temporal " Lords, proceeding according to the rule of charity, do " justly possess those Temporalties, forsomuch as all things " are the just mans, 1 Cor. 3. All things, saith the Apostle, " are yours; whether it be Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, 1 Cor. 3. " either the World, either Life or Death, or things present, " or things to come: for all things be yours, you be Christs, By Gods Law. Cuncta justo- " and Christ is Gods. Also in the twenty third question 7. rum ex di- " Quicunque, it is written; Juxta divino omnia sunt justo- vina dispo- " rum. The words of S. Augustine in that place, ad Vincen- sitione. " tium, be these, Whosoever, saith he, upon the occasion of " this Law or Ordinance of the Emperor, doth molest or " persecute you, not for love of any charitable correction, " but only for hatred and malice to do you displeasure, I " hold not with him in so doing.

" And although there is nothing here in this earth, that " any man may possess assuredly, but either he must hold " it by Gods Law, by which cuncta justorum esse dicuntur; " that is, all things be said to pertain to the possession of " the Just: or else by mans Law, which standeth in the " Kings Power to set and to ordain, &c. Here, by the words " of S. Augustine alledged, ye see all things belong to the " possession of the Just, by Gods Law.

13. The Clergy subject unto the Emperor and King by means of their possessions. " Item, forsomuch as the Clergy by means of their pos- " sessions are in danger of the Emperor and King: it fol- " loweth, that if they do offend, the Emperor or King " may lawfully take away their possessions from them. " The consequence dependeth on this point, forsomuch as " otherwise they were not in subjection under the Emperor " or King: and the antecedent is manifest by the eleventh " question and first Parag. His ita respondetur. Whereas " it is specified in Latin thus, His ita respondetur, Clerici " ex officio Episcopo sunt suppositi, ex possessionibus præ- " diorum Imperatori sunt obnoxii: ab Episcopo unctionem, " decimas, & primitias accipiunt; ab Imperatore vero " prædiorum possessiones nanciscuntur: that is to say, The " Clergy by means of their Office are under the Bishop, but " by reason of their possessions they be subject unto the " Emperor: Of the Bishop they receive Unction, Tythes, " and First-fruits; of the Emperor they receive possessions. " Thus then it is decreed by the Emperial Law, That " Livelihoods should be possessed; whereby it appeareth, " that the Clergy by the possession of their Livelihoods " are in danger of the Emperor for him to take away from " them, or to correct them according to their deservings, " and to have the controulment of them, as it shall seem " good unto him.

14. Users of Simony are punished by the civil Magistrate. " Item, the Temporal Lords may take away the Tem- " poralties from such as use Simony, because they are He- " reticks. Ergo, this Article is true.

" The Antecedent is manifest, forsomuch as the Secular " Lords may refuse such as use Simony, and punish them " except they do repent. For by the decree of Pope Pas- Paschasius " chasius in the first and last question it appeareth, that all in 1. q. ult. cap. pater. " such as used Simony were to be refused of all faithful " people, as chief and principal Hereticks; and if they do " not repent after they be warned, they are also to be " punished by the extern Power. For all other faults and " crimes in comparison of Simony, be counted but light, " and seem small offences.

The Laity Correctors of the Clergy. " Whereupon the Glosa, expounding the same Text, " saith, That by this word Extern, is understood the Laity, " which have power over the Clergy, besides the Church, " as in the 17. Distinct. Non licuit, & 23. quæst. 5. Prin- " cipes. Whereby it is evident, that the Temporal Lords " may take away the Temporal goods from the Clergy " when as they do offend.

KING Ric. 2.

Gregory writeth to the French Queen.

Wicked Prieſts the deſtruction of the people.

S. Gregory to the French King

"Item, S. Gregory in the Regiſter upon his ſeventh Book and ninth Chapter, writeth thus unto the French Queen: "For ſo much as it is written that righteouſneſs helpeth "the people, and ſin maketh them miſerable: then is that "Kingdom counted ſtable, when as the offence which is "known, is ſoon amended.

"Therefore, for ſo much as wicked Prieſts are the cauſe "of the ruine of the people, (for who ſhall take upon him, "to be Interceſſor for the ſins of the people, if the Prieſt "which ought to intreat for the ſame, have committed "greater offences) and under your Dominions the Prieſts "do live wickedly and unchaſtly: therefore that the of- "fence of a few might not turn to the deſtruction of "many, we ought earneſtly to ſeek the puniſhment of the "ſame. And it followeth, If we do command any perſon, "we do ſend him forth, with the conſent of your Autho- "rity, who together with other Prieſts, ſhall diligently "ſeek out, and according unto Gods word correct and "amend the ſame. Neither are theſe things to be diſſembled, "the which we have ſpoken of, for he that may correct "any thing, and doth neglect the ſame, without all doubt "he maketh himſelf partaker of the ſin or offence.

"Therefore foreſee unto your own Soul, provide for "your Nephews, and for ſuch as you do deſire to Reign "after you, provide for your Country, and with diligence "provide for the correction and puniſhment of that ſin, be- "fore our Creator do ſtretch out his hand to ſtrike.

"And in his next Chapter he writeth unto the French "King: Whatſoever you do underſtand to pertain either "unto the Honour and Glory of our God, to the reverence "of the Church, or to the honour of the Prieſts, that do "you diligently cauſe to be decreed, and in all points to be "obſerved. Wherefore once again we do move you, that "you command a Synod to be congregate, and as we "wrote lately unto you, to cauſe all the carnal Vices, which "reign amongſt your Prieſts, and all the wickedneſs and "Simony of your Biſhops (which is moſt hard to be con- "demned and reproved) utterly to be baniſhed out of your "Kingdom; and that you will not ſuffer them to poſſeſs "any more ſubſtance under your Dominion, than Gods "commandment doth allow.

"Behold how carefully bleſſed Gregory doth exhort the "Queen and the King to puniſh the Vices of the Clergy, leſt "through their negligence they ſhould be partakers of the "ſame; and how they ought to correct their Subjects. "For as it is convenient to be circumſpect and careful "againſt the outward enemies; even ſo likewiſe ought "they to be againſt the inward enemies of the Soul. And "like as in juſt War againſt the outward enemies it is "lawful to take away their goods, ſo long as they continue "in their malice; ſo alſo it is lawful to take away the "goods of the Clergy, being the inward enemy. The con- "ſequence is proved thus, for ſo much as the domeſtical "enemies are moſt hurtful.

"Item, it is thus argued; If God be, the Temporal Lords "may meritoriouſly and lawfully take away the Temporal "goods from the Clergy, if they do offend. For this point "let us ſuppoſe that we ſpeak of power, as the true authen- "thick Scripture doth ſpeak, Mat. 3. 9. God is able even "of theſe ſtones to raiſe up Children to Abraham.

"Whereupon it is thus argued; For if God be, he is "Omnipotent, and if he ſo be, he may give like power "unto the ſecular Lords. And ſo conſequently they may "meritoriouſly and lawfully uſe the ſame power. But leſt "that any man may object, that a proof made by a ſtrange "thing is not ſufficient; it is therefore declared how that "the Temporal Lords have power to take away their "Alms beſtowed upon the Church, the Church abuſing "the ſame, as it ſhall be proved hereafter. And firſt thus, "It is lawful for Kings, in caſes limited by the Law, to "take away the moveables from the Clergy when they do "offend: it is thus proved, For the Temporal Lords are "moſt bound unto the works of greateſt mercy moſt eaſie "for them: but in caſe poſſible, it ſhould be greater Alms "and eaſier Temporal Dominion, to take away their Alms "from ſuch as build therewithall unto eternal damna- "tion, through the abuſe thereof, than to give the ſaid "Alms for any bodily relief. Ergo, the aſſumption is true.

"Whereupon firſt this Sentence of the Law of Chriſt in "the ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians the third Chapter "is noted, whereas the Apoſtle writeth thus; when we "were amongſt you, we declared this unto you, That he "that would not work ſhould not eat. Wherefore the law "of Nature doth licence all ſuch as have the Governance "of Kingdoms, to correct the abuſe of the Temporalties, "which would be the chief cauſe of the deſtruction of their "Kingdoms; whether the Temporal Lords, or any other, "had endowed the Church with thoſe Temporalties or "not. It is lawful for them in ſome caſe to take away the "Temporalties, as it were by way of Phyſick to withſtand "ſin, notwithſtanding any Excommunication, or other "Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures; forſomuch as they are not en- "dowed but only with condition thereunto annexed.

When and how the title of any gift is loſt.

"Hereby it appeareth, that the condition annexed to the "endowing, or enriching of any Church, is, that God "ſhould be honoured: the which condition if it once fail, "the contrary taking place, the title of the gift is loſt, and "conſequently the Lord which gave the Alms ought "to correct the offence. Excommunication ought not "to lett the fulfilling of Juſtice. Secondly, according to the "Canon Law, 16. queſtion 7. this Sentence is noted, where "it is thus ſpoken as touching the Children, Nephews, and "the moſt honeſt of the Kindred of him which hath build- "ed or endowed any Church: That it is lawful for them "to be thus circumſpect, that if they perceive the Prieſt "do defraud any part of that which is beſtowed, they ſhould "either gently admoniſh, or warn him, or elſe complain "of him to the Biſhop, that he may be corrected. But if "the Biſhop himſelf attempt to do the like, let them com- "plain of him to his Metropolitan: and if the Metropoli- "tan do the like, let them not defer the time to report it "in the ears of the King. For ſo ſaith the Canon, Let them "not defer to report it in the ears of the King. To what "end I pray you, but that he ſhould do correction? neither "is it to be doubted, but that correction doth more apper- "tain unto the King in this points for their good, whereof "he is chief Lord by a ſubſtraction proportional, according "to the fault or offence.

It is lawful for the civil Rulers to correct the Clergy.

"Item, it is thus proved; It is lawful for the ſecular "Lords by their power to do correction upon the "Clergy by ſome kind of fearful Diſcipline appertain- "ing to their ſecular power: Ergo, by like reaſon it is "lawful for them by their power to do ſuch correction, "by all kind of fearful Diſcipline pertaining unto their "ſecular power. For ſo much then as the taking of "their Temporalties is a kind of fearful diſcipline pertain- "ing unto the ſecular power; it followeth that it is law- "ful for them thereby to do ſuch correction. And conſe- "quently it followeth that the Truth is thus to be proved. "The conſequence is evident; and the antecedent is "proved by Iſidore 23. queſt. 5. Principes. Where it "is thus written, There ſhould be no ſecular powers "within the Church, but only for this purpoſe, that "whatſoever thing the Prieſts or Miniſters cannot bring "to paſs by Preachings or Teachings, the ſecular powers "may command the ſame by the terrour and fear of Diſ- "cipline. For oftentimes the heavenly Kingdom is pro- "fited and holden by the earthly Kingdom: that they "which are in the Church, and do any thing contrary "unto faith and diſcipline, by the rigour of the Princes "may be trodden down, and that the power of the Rulers "may lay that diſcipline upon the necks of the proud and "ſtiffnecked, which the utility and profit of the Church "cannot exerciſe or uſe.

"Item, all things that by power ought to work or "bring to any perfect end by the reaſonable meaſuring "of the mean thereto, may lawfully uſe by power the "ſubſtraction or taking away of the exceſs, and the ad- "dition of the want of the means, according as ſhall "be convenient or meet for the meaſure to be made. "For ſo much then as the ſecular Lords ought by their "power to provide for the neceſſary ſuſtentation of the "Chriſtian Clergy by the reaſonable meaſuring of their "Temporalties, which they are bound to beſtow upon "the Chriſtian Clergy, it followeth, that they may law- "fully by their power uſe the taking away or putting "unto of thoſe Temporalties according as ſhall be conve- "nient for the performance of that reaſonable matter.

"Item, it is lawful for the Clergy, by their power to "take away the Sacraments of the Church from the Laity "cuſtomably offending, for ſo much as it doth pertain "to the Office of the Chriſtian Miniſters by their power to

"miniſter

" miniſter the ſame unto the Lay-people. Wherefore, for
" ſo much as it doth pertain unto the Office of the Laity,
" according unto their power to miniſter, and give Tem-
" poralties to the Clergy of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſaith,
" 1 Cor. 9. It followeth, that it is alſo lawful for them
" by their power to take away the Temporalties from the " Clergy, when they do cuſtomably ſin and offend.

20. " Item, by like power may he which giveth a ſtipend
" or exhibition, withdraw and take away the ſame from
" the unworthy Labourers, as he hath power to give the " ſame unto the worthy Labourers: forſomuch then as
" Temporalties of the Clergy, are the ſtipends of the Laity;
" it followeth that the Lay-people may by as good autho" rity take away again the ſame from the Clergy, which " will not worthily labour, as they might by their power
" beſtow the ſame upon thoſe which would worthily la" bour, according to the ſaying of the Goſpel, Matth 21.
" The Kingdom ſhall be taken away from you, and given " unto a people which ſhall bring forth the fruits there-
" of.

21. " Item, it is alſo lawful for the ſecular Lords, by their " power, to chaſtiſe and puniſh the Lay-people when they " do offend, by taking away of their Temporalties accord" ing to the exigent of their offence, forſomuch as the Lay-
" people are ſubject under the Dominion of the Secular
" Lords, as appears, Rom. 13. and many other places, it is " evident that it is lawful by their power to puniſh the " Clergy, by taking away of their Temporalties, if their " offence do ſo deſerve.

22. " Item, the true and eaſie direction of the Clergy unto
" the life of Chriſt and the Apoſtles, and moſt profit-
" able unto the Laity, that the Clergy ſhould not live
" contrary unto Chriſts Inſtitution, ſeemeth to be the taking " away of their Alms, and thoſe things which they had " beſtowed upon them. And it is thus proved, That " medicine is moſt apt to be laid unto the ſore, whereby
" the infirmity might ſooneſt be holpen, and were moſt
" agreeable unto the Patients: Such is the taking away
" of the Temporalties: Ergo, this Article is true. The " minor is thus proved, forſomuch as by the abundance of " Temporalties the Worm or Serpent of Pride is ſprung
" up, whereupon unſatiable deſire and luſt is inflamed,
" and therefrom proceedeth all kind of gluttony and le-
" chery. It is evident in this point, for ſo much as the " Temporalties being once taken away, every one of
" thoſe ſins is either utterly taken away, or at the leaſt
" diminiſhed, by the contrary vertue induced and brought " in. It ſeemeth alſo moſt pertinent unto the Laity, for
" ſo much as they ought not to lay violent hands upon
" their Miniſters, or to abject the Prieſtly Dignity, neither
" to judge any of the Clergy in their open Courts. It ſeem-
" eth alſo by the law of conſcience to pertain unto the Lay-
" people, for ſo much as every man, which worketh any " work of mercy, ought diligently to have reſpect unto the " ability of them that he beſtoweth his Alms upon; leſt
" that by nouriſhing or helping Loyterers, he be made par-
" taker of his offence. Whereupon, if Prieſts do not miniſter
" of their Spiritualties, as Hoſtienſis teacheth in his third " Book, Of their Tythes, Firſt-Fuits and Oblations, the " people ought to take away the Alms of their Tythes from " them.

23. " Item, it is confirmed by the laſt Chapter of the ſeven-
" teenth queſtion, out of the decree of Rents appropriate
" unto the Church, Quicunque. Whereas the caſe is put
" thus, That a certain man having no Children, neither
" hoping to have any, gave all his goods unto the Church,
" reſerving unto himſelf the only uſe and profits thereof:
" it hapned afterward that he had Children and the Biſhop
" reſtored again his goods unto him not hoping for it.
" The Biſhop had it in his power, whether to render again,
" or no, thoſe things which were given him; but that
" was by the law of man, and not by the law of conſci-
" ence. If then by the decree of the holy Doctor S. Au-
" guſtine in his Sermon of the life of the Clergy, Aurelius
" the Biſhop of Carthage had no power by Gods Law to " withhold that which is beſtowed upon the Church for
" the neceſſity of Children; by the which Law, the wan-
" ton, proud, and unſtable Clergy, being more than ſuffici-
" ently poſſeſſed and inriched, do detain and keep back the " Temporalties to the detriment and hurt of their own
" ſtate, and of the whole Militant-Church, the ſecular
" Patrons being thereby to impoveriſhed, that they are com- } KING
" pelled by penury to rob and ſteal, to oppreſs their Tenants, } Ric. 2.
" to ſpoil and undo others, and oftentimes by very neceſſity
" are driven to beggery.

" Item, ſuppoſe that a Prieſt and Miniſter, how grievouſly
" ſoever he do offend, by what kind or ſign of offence
" ſoever it be, as it was in the caſe of Biſhop Judas Iſca-
" rioth, of the religious Monk Sergius, of Pope Liberius the " Heretick, and many other Prieſts, of whom the Scrip-
" ture and Chronicles make mention, and daily experience
" doth teach us the ſame: it is evident, that, as it is ſup-
" poſed, the Prieſts in the Kingdom of Boheme grievouſly
" offending, it is the Kings Part, for ſo much as he is
" Supream Head next under God, and Lord of the King" dom of Boheme, to correct and puniſh thoſe Prieſts. And " for ſo much as the gentleſt correction and puniſhment of
" ſuch as be indurate in their malice, is, the caſting
" away of their Temporal goods, it followeth, that it is " lawful for the King to take away Temporalties. Where" fore it ſhould ſeem very marvelous and ſtrange, if that
" Prieſts riding about ſhould ſpoil Virgins, violently cor-
" rupt and defile honeſt Matrons; if in ſuch caſe it were " not lawful for them to take away their Armors, Weapons,
" Horſes, Guns and Swords from them. The like reaſon
" were it alſo, if they had unlawfully conſpired the death
" of the King, or that they would betray the King unto his " Enemies.

" Item, whatſoever any of the Clergy doth require or
" deſire of the ſecular Power, according unto the Law
" and Ordinance of Chriſt, the ſecular power ought to " perform and grant the ſame. But the Clergy, being let-
" ted by riches, ought to require help of the ſecular power
" for the diſpenſation of the ſaid riches. Ergo, the ſecular
" power ought in ſuch caſe, by the Law of Chriſt, to take " upon them the office or duty of getting, keeping, and " diſtributing all ſuch manner of riches. The minor is " hereby proved, that no man ought to have riches, but
" to that end, that they be helps, preferring and helping " unto the office which is appointed of God. Therefore " in caſe that ſecular poſſeſſion do hinder the Clergy from " their duty, the ſecular power ought to take it away; for
" ſo did the Apoſtles, Acts the ſixth, ſaying, It is not law-
" ful for us to leave the word of God untaught, and to
" miniſter unto Tables.

" And thus hitherto hath John Hus proſecuted Wick-
" liffs Articles with long arguments and reaſons; and it
" were too long a travel, neither agreeable for this place,
" to alledge all the whole order of his reaſons and proofs,
" which he uſed in that diſputation, above the number of " twenty more, beſides the teſtimonies of all the Writers be" fore recited, the which he alledgeth out of the Scriptures,
" Decretals, S. Ambroſe in his Book of Offices, S. Auguſtine
" in his fifth Book and fifth queſtion, and alſo unto Ma-
" cedo, Iſidore, the Council of Nice, Gregory his eleventh
" queſtion, Bernard unto Eugenius in his third Book, and " out of Lincolnienſis the ſixty firſt Epiſtle, beſides
" many other more. The ſum of all which Teſtimonies
" tend unto this end, that he might utterly take away all " earthly Rule and Dominion from the Clergy, and to " bring them under the ſubjection and cenſure of Kings
" and Emperors, as it were within certain bonds, the which " is not only agreeable unto equity and Gods word, but
" alſo profitable for the Clergy themſelves. He teacheth it
" alſo to be neceſſary, that they ſhould rather be ſubject
" under the ſecular power, than to be above them; becauſe
" that elſe it were dangerous, leſt that they being entangled
" with ſuch kind of buſineſs, they ſhould be an eaſier prey
" unto Satan, and ſooner trapped in his ſnares. And " thereby it ſhould come to paſs, that the Governance and " Principality of all things being at the length brought " into the hands of the Clergy, the lawful Authority of " Kings and Princes ſhould not only be given over unto " them, but in a manner as it were grow out of uſe; ſpe-
" cially for ſo much as already, in certain Kingdoms and " Commonwealths, the Eccleſiaſtical Power is grown unto
" ſuch height, that not only in Boheme, but alſo almoſt
" throughout all the Commonwealths, they do occupy the " third, or at leaſt the fourth part of the Rents and Re" venues. And laſt of all, he alledgeth the Example of " Gregory and of Mauritius, and afterward the Prophecy Hildegardis
" of Hildegardis, writing in this manner.

As

KING Ric. 2.

" As the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters do willingly receive reward and praiſe of Kings and Rulers for their good " deeds; ſo alſo ought they, when they do offend, willingly ſuffer and receive puniſhment at their hands for their " evil doings. The conſequence holdeth thus, For ſo " much as the puniſhment meekly and humbly received " for his offence doth more profit a man, than his praiſe " received for any good work. Whereupon Saint Gre- Gregorius ad Mauritium. " gory writeth thus unto Mauritius the Emperor, when " he did perſecute him, ſaying, I believe that you do " pleaſe Almighty God ſo much the better, in ſo cruelly " afflicting me, which have been ſo evil a Servant unto " him. If then this holy Pope did ſo humbly and meekly, " without any offence, ſuffer this affliction of the Emperor; " why ſhould not any of the Clergy, when they do offend, " meekly ſuſtain puniſhment at the Kings or Rulers hands, " under whom he is bounden to be ſubject? When as " the true Vicar of Chriſt ſaith, the firſt of Peter and ſe- " cond Chapter, Be ye ſubject unto every Creature for " Gods cauſe, whether it be unto the King, as moſt excel- " lent, or unto the Rulers, as men ſent of God for the puniſh- " ing of the wicked, and to the praiſe of the good; for ſo " is the good will of God.

Pope Leo ſubmitteth himſelf unto the Emperor Ludovicus.

" Whereupon Pope Leo, leaning unto this Rule, ſubmitted himſelf unto Ludovicus the Emperor, as it is " written in the ſecond queſtion 7. under theſe words, If " we have done any thing incompetently, or if we have " not obſerved the upright path and way of equity amongſt " Subjects, we will amend the ſame, either by your own " judgment, or elſe by the advice or judgment of thoſe " which you ſhall appoint for that purpoſe. For if we, " which ought to correct and puniſh other mens faults, do " commit more grievous our ſelves, we are not then the " Diſciples of the Truth (but with ſorrow we ſpeak it) we " ſhall be above all other the Maſters of Error.

" And in the tenth Diſtinction he writeth thus, As " touching the Obedience unto the Emperor, as concern- " ing the Precepts and Commandments of our Emperors, " and our Predeceſſors Biſhops (the which the Gloſs nameth " Emperors, which are anointed after the manner of Bi- " ſhops) to be obſerved and kept unbroken, we do profeſs " our ſelves by all means poſſible, as much as in us lieth, " or that we may and can, we will by the help of God " preſerve and keep them both now and ever. And if per- " adventure any man do inform, or hereafter ſhall inform " you otherwiſe, know you him aſſuredly to be a lyer and " ſlanderer.

" Mark how this devout and holy Pope, calling the " Emperors Biſhops, ſubmitted himſelf according to the " rule of Saint Peter the Apoſtle under the Obedience, and " alſo puniſhment of the Emperor. Wherefore then ſhould " not the Clergy of the Kingdom of Boheme ſubmit them- " ſelves under the Obedience of their King, for Gods cauſe, " to be puniſhed if they do offend; and not only ſubmit " themſelves unto the King, but alſo unto the Rulers; " and not only unto the Rulers, but unto every other " Creature? For by how much they do ſo humble and " abaſe themſelves in this world for Gods ſake, ſo much " the more ſhall they be exalted with him: but what is " the let thereof, but only pride, whereby Antichriſt doth " exalt himſelf, above the moſt humble and meek Lord " Jeſus Chriſt?

The tyranny and pride of the Clergy.

The Prophecy of Hildegardis.

" Alſo it ſeemeth to appear by that which is aforeſaid " upon the taking away of the Temporalties, out of the " Propheſie of Hildegardis the Virgin, the which he writ- " eth in his Books under Eugenius the Pope in the Council " of Treverſe, approved and allowed by many Biſhops of " France, Italy and Almaine, which were there preſent, " whereas alſo Saint Bernard himſelf was preſent; the " which Virgin propheſying, ſpake in this manner; The " Kings and other Rulers of the world, being ſtirred up " by the juſt Judgment of God, ſhall ſet themſelves againſt " them, and run upon them, ſaying, We will not have " theſe men to Reign over us with their rich Houſes and " great Poſſeſſions, and other worldly riches, over the " which we are ordained to be Lords and Rulers; and " how is it meet or comely that thoſe ſhavelings with their " ſtoles and chiſils ſhould have more Souldiers, or more or " richer Armour or Artillery than we? So is it not conve- " nient that one of the Clergy ſhould be a man of war, " neither a Souldier to be one of the Clergy. Wherefore let " us take away from them that, which they do not juſtly, " but wrongfully poſſeſs. And immediately after ſhe ſaith, " The Omnipotent Father equally divided all things; that " is to ſay, the Heavens he gave unto the heavenly Crea- " tures, and the Earth unto the earthly. And by this " means was there a juſt diviſion made between the Chil- " dren of men, that the Spirituality ſhould have ſuch things " as belong unto them, and the ſecular people, ſuch things " as are meet and neceſſary for them, ſo that neither of " theſe two ſorts ſhould oppreſs each other by violence; " for God doth not command, that the one Son or Child " ſhould have both the Cloke and the Coat, and the other " ſhould go naked, but he willed that the one ſhould have " the Cloke, and the other the Coat. Wherefore the ſe- " cular ſort ought to have the Cloke for the greateſs of " their worldly Cares, and for their Children, which daily " increaſe and multiply. The Coat he giveth unto the " Spirituality, that they ſhould not lack clothing, and that " they ſhould not poſſeſs more than neceſſity doth require. " Wherefore we judge and think it good, that all theſe " aforeſaid be divided by reaſon and equity. And whereas " the Cloke and the Coat are both found, there the Cloke " ſhould be taken away, and given unto the needy, that " they do not periſh for lack or want. Theſe aforeſaid " ſpake the Virgin Hildegardis, plainly foreſhewing the " taking away of the Temporalties from the Clergy by the " ſecular Lords, and ſhewing for what cauſe they ſhall be " ſo taken away. And what manner of diviſion ſhall be " made of thoſe things that are taken away, that they be " not conſumed, and ſpent unprofitably.

Forſomuch as mention is here made of Hildegardis, it ſhall not ſeem impertinent, moved by the occaſion hereof, to give forth unto the Reader ſuch things as we have found in certain old Volumes, touching her Prophecy of the coming of certain falſe Prophets, only meaning, as it ſeemeth, the begging-Fryers which ſprang up ſhortly after her time. The tenour whereof is this, word for word, as we find it written.

Hildegardis propheſying of Fryers and Monks.

" In thoſe days there ſhall riſe up a people without un- " derſtanding, proud, covetous, untruſty, and deceitful, the " which ſhall eat the ſins of the people, holding a certain " Order of fooliſh devotion, under the the fained Cloke " of beggery, preferring themſelves above all other, by " their fained devotion, arrogant underſtanding, and pre- " tended holineſs, walking without ſhamefaſtneſs, or the " fear of God, inventing many new miſchiefs, being ſtrong " and ſtout: but this Order ſhall be accurſed of all wiſe " men and faithful Chriſtians; they ſhall ceaſe from labour, " and give themſelves over unto idleneſs; chooſing rather " to live through flattery and by begging. Moreover, they " ſhall together ſtudy, how they may perverſly reſiſt the " Teachers of the Truth, and ſlay them together with the " Noblemen; how to ſeduce and deceive the Nobility, for " the neceſſity of their living and pleaſures of this world; " for the Devil will graft in them four principal Vices; that " is to ſay, flattery, envy, hypocriſies and ſlander. Flattery, " that they may have large gifts given them. Envy, when " they ſee gifts given unto other, and not unto them. Hy- " pocriſie, that by falſe diſſimulation, they may pleaſe men. " Detraction, that they may extol and commend themſelves, " and backbite others, for the praiſe of men, and ſeducing " of the ſimple. Alſo they ſhall inſtantly preach without " devotion or example of the Martyrs, and ſhall detract the " ſecular Princes, taking away the Sacraments of the Church " from the true Paſtors, receiving Alms of the poor, diſeaſed " and miſerable, and alſo aſſociating themſelves with the " common people, having familiarity with women, in- " ſtructing them how they ſhall deceive their Husbands " and Friends by their flattery and deceitful words, and rob " their Husbands to give it unto them: for they will take " all theſe ſtollen and evil gotten goods, and ſay, Give it " unto us, and we will pray for you; ſo that they being curi- " ous to hide other mens faults, do utterly forget their own; " and alas, they will receive all things of Rovers, Pickers, " Spoilers, Thieves and Robbers, of ſacrilegious Perſons, " Uſurers, and Adulterers, Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Apoſtates, " Whores and Bawds, of Noblemen, Perjurers, Merchants, falſe " Judges, ſouldiers, tyrants, Princes, of ſuch as live contrary to

the

" the Law, and of many perverſe and wicked men, follow" ing the perſwaſion of the Devil, the ſweetneſs of ſin, a " delicate and tranſitory life, and fulneſs even unto eternal
" damnation. All theſe things ſhall manifeſtly appear in them
" unto all people, and they day by day ſhall wax more wic-
" ked and hard-hearted; and when as their wickedneſs and
" deceits ſhall be found out, then ſhall their gifts ceaſe, and
" then ſhall they go about their houſes hungry, and as mad
" Dogs looking down upon the Earth, and drawing in " their Necks as Doves, that they might be ſatisfied with " bread: then ſhall the people cry out upon them, Woe be " unto you ye miſerable Children of ſorrow, the world
" hath ſeduced you, the Devil hath bridled your mouths,
" your fleſh is frail, and your hearts without ſavour, your " minds have been unſtedfaſt, and your eyes delighted in " much vanity and folly, your dainty Bellies deſire delicate
" meats, your feet are ſwift to run unto miſchief. Remem" ber when you were apparently bleſſed yet envious, poor
" but rich, ſimple, mighty, devout Flatterers, unfaithful
" Betrayers, perverſe Detracters, holy Hypocrites, Subver-
" ters of the Truth, overmuch Upright, proud, unſhame-
" faſt, unſtedfaſt Teachers, delicate Martyrs, Confeſſors for " gain, meek ſlanderers, religious, covetous, humble, proud,
" pitiful, hard-hearted, lyers, pleaſant Flatterers, Peace-
" breakers, Perſecutors, Oppreſſors of the Poor, bringing in " new Sects, newly invented of your ſelves, mercileſs, wic-
" ked, Lovers of the world, Sellers of Pardons, Spoilers of " Benefices, unprofitable Orators, ſeditious Conſpirators,
" Drunkards, deſirers of Honour, Maintainers of Miſchief,
" Robbers of the world, unſatiable Preachers, Men-pleaſers,
" Seducers of Women, and Sowers of Diſcord: for Moſes
" the glorious Prophet ſpake very well of you in his Song:
" A people without counſel or underſtanding; would to " God they did know, underſtand, and foreſee the end.
" You have builded up on high, and when you could aſ-
" cend no higher, then did you fall; even as Simon Ma-
" gus whom God overthrew, and did ſtrike with a cruel
" Plague; ſo you likewiſe through your falſe Doctrine,
" naughtineſs, lyes, detractions and wickedneſs, are come
" to ruine: and the people ſhall ſay unto them, go ye
" Teachers of wickedneſs, Subverters of the Truth. Brethren
" of the Sunamite, Fathers of Hereſies, falſe Apoſtles, which " have fained your ſelves to follow the life of the Apoſtles,
" and yet have not fulfilled it in any part, Sons of Iniquity,
" we will not follow the knowledge of your ways, for " pride and preſumption hath deceived you, and inſatiable
" concupiſcence hath ſubverted your erroneous hearts. And " when as yet ye would aſcend higher than was meet or
" comely for you, by the juſt Judgment of God you are " fallen back into perpetual opprobry and ſhame.

" This bleſſed Hildegardis, whoſe Prophecy this is,
" flouriſhed about the year of our Lord, 1046. as it is " written in Martins Chronicles.

Hugo de Sacram. part. 2. " Alſo Hugo in his ſecond Book Of Sacraments, in the " ſecond part, third Chapter and ſeventh, ſaith, The Laity
" forſomuch as they intermeddle with earthly matters ne-
" ceſſary unto an earthly life, they are the leaſt part of the " body of Chriſt. And the Clergy, for ſo much as they " do diſpoſe thoſe things which pertain unto a ſpiritual
" life, are as it were the right ſide of the body of Chriſt.
" And afterward interpreting both theſe parts himſelf, he " ſaith, A ſpiritual man ought to have nothing but ſuch as " pertaineth unto God, unto whom it is appointed to be
" ſuſtained by the Tythes and Oblations which are offered
" unto God: but unto the Chriſtian and faithful Laity
" the poſſeſſion of the Earth is granted; and unto the " Clergy the whole Charge of ſpiritual matters is commit" ted, as it was in the Old Teſtament. And in his ſeventh
" Chapter he declareth how that certain things are given
" unto the Church of Chriſt by the devotion of the faith" ful, the Power and authority of the Secular Power re-
" ſerved, leſt there might happen any confuſion; Forſo-
" much as God himſelf cannot allow any diſordered thing.
" Whereupon oftentimes the worldly Princes do grant the " bare uſe of the Church, and oftentimes uſe power
" to exerciſe Juſtice; which the Clergy cannot exerciſe by " any Eccleſiaſtical Miniſter, or any other perſon of the " Clergy, Notwithſtanding they may have certain Lay-
" perſons Miniſters unto that Office. But in ſuch ſort, ſaith
" he, that they do acknowledge the power which they " have to come from the ſecular Prince or Ruler, and that " they do underſtand their Poſſeſſions can never be alienate
" away from the Kings Power; but (if that neceſſity or
" reaſon do require) the ſame poſſeſſions in all ſuch caſe
" of neceſſity do owe him obeyſance and ſervice. For like
" as the Kings Power ought not to turn away the defence
" or ſafeguard which he oweth unto other: ſo likewiſe the " poſſeſſions obtained and poſſeſſed by the Clergy, accord" ing to the duty and homage which is due unto the Pa" tronage of the Kings Power, cannot by right be denied.
" Thus much writes Hugo.

KING Ric. 2.

In the third Act the ſame year, after the Feaſt of S. Vitis, as touching Tythes, &c.

Tythes are pure Alms.

Alms. Mercy.

UPon this Article it is to be noted, that forſomuch as Alms is a work of mercy, as S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, and others do joyntly affirm, and that mercy (according to Lincolnienſis mind) for the preſent is a love or deſire to help the miſerable out of his miſery: and forſomuch as the miſery of Mankind is double; that is to ſay, ſpiritual and bodily, the which is the want or taking away of the goods; and the goods of man is either the goods of the Soul or of the Body; And the goods of the Soul is double (that is to ſay, the lightning of the mind, and the uprightneſs of affection) the miſery of the Soul is alſo double, as the darkneſs of ignorance, and a froward and wilful ſwarving from the Truth. And both the goods of the Soul are wont to be comprehended under one Title of name; that is to ſay, Wiſdom; and both the miſeries of the Soul under the name of Folly. Whereupon all the whole goodneſs of the Soul is Wiſdom, and all the whole miſery thereof is ignorance: The miſeries of the Body are, lack of meat; that is to ſay, Hunger; and lack of drink, called Thirſt: and briefly, all miſery is the want of ſome thing which is deſired. Alſo theſe are bodily miſeries, nakedneſs, lack of harbour, ſickneſs, and impriſonment. All the miſeries therefore being numbred together, are but one of the Soul, the which is folly and lack of wiſdom, and ſix of the Body, the which the Lord in the twenty fifth Chapter of S. Matthew doth plainly rehearſe. There are alſo commonly appointed ſeven bodily Alms; that is to ſay, to feed the hungry, to give drink unto the thirſty, to cloth the naked, to harbour the ſtranger or harbourleſs, to viſit the ſick, and to bury the dead, the which all together are contained in theſe Verſes:

Two kinds of miſeries. Two kinds of goodneſs

Wiſdom. Folly.

The miſeries of the Mind and Body.

Viſito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo, condo.

The which Verſe is thus Engliſhed, word for word:

Viſit the Sick, the Hungry feed,
Give drink to the Thirſty, cloth the Naked,
Bury the Dead, the Captive redeem,
The Harbourleſs receive to thy Lodging.

There be alſo ſeven other ſpiritual Alms appointed, which are theſe; To teach the ignorant; To counſel him that is in doubt; To comfort him which is in heavineſs; To correct the Offender; To forgive him which hath offended againſt thee; To bear thoſe which are grievous; And to pray for all men: The which are alſo contained in theſe Verſes following:

What is Alms.

Conſule, caſtiga, ſolare, remitte, fer, ora.

The which Verſe is thus Engliſhed, word for word:

Inſtruct the Ignorant, the Weak confirm,
Comfort the heavy Heart, and correct Sin:
Forgive the Offender, bear with the Rude,
Pray for all men both Evil and Good.

So that notwithſtanding under the ſame Counſels and Doctrine be comprehended. Thus writeth Thomas in the ſecond part of the ſecond queſt. 23. art. 2.

Secondly, it is to be noted that in this preſent Article our intent is only to intreat of bodily Alms, the which (as Thomas writeth in his ſecond Part, ſecond queſt. 32. and 1.) according unto ſome mens minds is thus defined;

What Alms is.

Alms

{KING Ric. 2.} Alms is a work whereby any thing is given unto the needy, of compaſſion, for Gods ſake. And for ſo much as this definition ſerveth as well for the ſpiritual as for the corporal Alms; therefore to the purpoſe, Alms is a work, whereby any thing is given unto the needy in body for compaſſion, and for Gods ſake. Or that is given of compaſſion or pity unto the bodily needy for Gods ſake.

Whereupon it is manifeſt that Alms, as Saint Auguſtine and other holy men ſay, is a work of mercy, as alſo to give Alms. As it appeareth by the name, for in the Greek it is derived from this word Elemonia, which is Mercy: for as in the Latin, this word Miſeratio, which ſignifieth pity, is derived of Miſericordia, which is, Mercy; ſo this word Eleemoſyna, which ſignifieth Alms, is derived of the Greek word Elemonia, which is to ſay, Mercy; and of the word Syna, which is to ſay, Commandment, as it were a commandment of mercy, or otherwiſe of this word Elemonia. By this Letter I, which is to ſay, God, and this word Syna, which is, Commandment: As if it were ſaid, The Commandment of God, as Januenſis in his Book intituled, Catholicon affirmeth.

For our Saviour doth command, in the 11*th of* Luke to give Alms, ſaying, Give Alms, and behold all things are clean unto you: leſt that in this point there may be any equivocation, it is ſuppoſed preſently, that the Alms given of men is a corporal Alms, given ſimply under the name of Alms. Tythes. Secondly, it is to be noted, that Tythes in this effect are the tenth part of goods of Fortune, given by a man ſimply under the name of Alms for Gods ſake.

Theſe things being thus noted and ſuppoſed, the Article is thus proved. Every gift of Fortune, or Temporal Gift ſimply given under the name of Alms, is Alms. But ſome Tythes are the Gift of Fortune, or Temporal Gift under the name of Alms. Therefore ſome Tythes are Alms. This conſequence is manifeſt of it ſelf. The major appeareth by the firſt ſuppoſition; And the minor by the ſecond.

Item, every Gift given by a man even of love, to relieve and help the miſerable out of his miſery, is an Alms. The tenth part of the goods of Fortune given by a man, ſimply under the name of Alms for Gods ſake, is given by the ſame man even of love, to help the miſerable out of his miſery: Therefore the tenth part of the goods of Fortune, being given by any man ſimply under the name of Alms for Gods ſake, is Alms. The conſequence is manifeſt. The major appeareth by this, that every ſuch gift is either a ſpiritual or bodily Alms. The minor ſeemeth hereby true, for ſomuch as many holy men have given, and do give, even for love to relieve the miſerable out of his miſery. Neither is it to be doubted but that ſuch kind of S. Auguſtine proveth Tythes to be pure Alms. Tythes are Alms. For Saint Auguſtine upon theſe words of the Lord in the Goſpel writeth thus, Woe be unto you Phariſees, which do tythe Mint and Aniſe: If they cannot be cleanſed without they believe in him, he which doth cleanſe his heart through faith, to what purpoſe is it that he ſaith, Give Alms, and behold, all things are clean unto you? Let us give ear, and peradventure he doth expound it himſelf. They did take out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gave it for Alms; the which any Chriſtian-man doth not willingly. Then they mocked him, when he ſpake theſe words to them, as unto men which would do no Alms. This the Lord foreknowing, ſaid, Woe be unto you Phariſees, which tythe Mint and Rue, and all kind of herbs, and paſs over the Judgment and Charity of God; For this it is to do Alms, if thou doſt underſtand it, begin with thy ſelf: For how canſt thou be merciful unto another, which art unmerciful unto thy ſelf? This writeth S. Auguſtine, plainly ſaying, That Tythes are Alms.

Auguſt. in Enchirid. Alſo in his Enchiridion in the ſeventy ſixth Chapter upon theſe words of Saint Luke, in the eleventh Chapter; Notwithſtanding that which is more than ſufficient, give in Alms, and all things ſhall be clean unto you; he ſaith thus, When he had rebuked them, that they waſhed themſelves outwardly, and inwardly were full of inquity and abomination, admoniſhing them, what, and how a man ought firſt to beſtow Alms upon himſelf, and firſt to cleanſe himſelf inwardly, he ſaith; That which doth remain give in Alms, and behold, all things are clean unto you. Afterward, that he might the better declare what he had given them warning of, and what they had neglected to do, that they ſhould not judge him ignorant of their Alms, he ſaith, Woe be unto you Phariſees; as though he ſhould ſay, I verily gave you warning that you ſhould give ſuch Alms, whereby all things might be clean unto you; but woe be unto you which do tythe Mint, Rue, and all kind of herbs (for I do know theſe your Alms, that you ſhould not think with your ſelves that you had given me warning thereof) and neglect and paſs over the judgment and charity of God, by the which Alms ye might be cleanſed from all your inward filthineſs, and your bodies alſo which you do waſh, ſhould be clean, and all theſe things both inward, and alſo outward; as it is ſaid in another place, cleanſe that which is within, and the outward things ſhall be alſo clean.

But leſt that he ſhould ſeem to refuſe thoſe Alms which are given of the fruits of the earth, he ſaid, You ought to have done theſe things; That is to ſay, the judgment and love of God; and not to neglect the other, that is to ſay, the Alms of the fruit of the earth. This writeth Saint Auguſtine, expreſly calling the Tythes Alms.

Alſo Chryſoſtome upon the ſame words in the eleventh Chapter of S. Luke, That which remaineth give in Alms; he ſaith thus, Whereas it was ſpoken of the Jewiſh kind of cleanſing, it is wholly paſſed. But for as much as Tythes is a certain Alms, and the time was not yet expreſly come to kill the Sacrifices of the Law; for this cauſe he ſaith, Ye ought to do thoſe things, and not to omit the other. And S. Thomas alledgeth him in his gloſs upon S. Luke. And Chryſoſtome himſelf doth touch two points: Firſt, That Tythes are Alms. Secondly, That Tythes are in a manner lawful, for ſo much as the gift thereof unto the Prieſts did not ceaſe in the time of Chriſt. Chryſoſtom. in 11. Luke.

Alſo Saint Auguſtine, in a certain Sermon of giving Alms, ſaith thus, What is to ſay, Give Alms, and behold, all things are clean unto you? Let us give ear, and peradventure he doth expound it himſelf. When he had ſpoken theſe words, without doubt they thought within themſelves, who did give Alms, and how they did give it. They tythed all that they had, and took out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gave it for Alms: the which no Chriſtian lightly doth. Mark what the Jews did, they tythed not only their Wheat, but their Wine and Oil; and not that only, but alſo vile things, at the Commandment of the Lord, as Commin, Rue, and Aniſe; of the which they took the tenth part, and gave it for Alms. I think therefore, for ſo much as they called unto their minds, and thought with themſelves, that our Lord Chriſt ſpake in vain unto them that they did no Alms, when as they knew their own works, that they tythed the ſmalleſt and worſt of all their fruits, and gave Alms thereof: they mocked him amongſt themſelves, becauſe he did ſpeak in ſuch ſort unto them, as unto men that did no Alms. The which the Lord foreſeeing, by and by added notwithſtanding: Woe be unto you Scribes, Phariſees and Hypocrites, which tythe your Mint, Commin, and Rue, and all kind of herbs, that you may know, I do underſtand your Alms. Truly, theſe are your Tythes, theſe are your Alms; you tythe out the leaſt and worſt of all your fruits, and have left the weighty matters of the Law undone. Here S. Auguſtine often expoundeth that Tythes are Alms; Alſo he writeth the like in his Book of Homilies in his ſixth Homily.

Item, for the proof of this Article, that Tythes are pure Alms, it is thus argued. For this Propoſition, Tythes are pure Alms, is indefinite; taking the truth for many of his Particularities; It is moſt certain that it is not damnable, but moſt Catholick, that God is ſomething; the which being falſe in all particulars, it is only true of that alone which doth ſurmount all kind. Ergo, by like reaſon this particular is true, tenths are pure Alms; For it is thus proved. Theſe tenths of a good Lay-man being wholly diſtributed by a faithful Miniſter unto a needy Lay-man, according to a good intent, how can they be but pure Alms, yea, and more pure than any Alms given by any of the Clergy being a Fornicator? The whole antecedent I ſuppoſe as poſſible, and doubtful unto the Condemners, if it be true.

Item, It is alſo thus proved; Theſe Tythes, and all other goods of Fortune, are pure Alms in reſpect of God. For ſo much as every man, Emperor and King is a begger of God. As S. Auguſtine doth oftentimes affirm, and conſequently if he do receive fruitfully any ſuch goodneſs at the hand of God, the ſame is pure Alms in reſpect of God: neither is there any faithful man that will deny the ſame, but that it ſimply followeth that the ſame is pure Alms before God, Ergo it is pure Alms.

It is alſo thus argued; All Tythes are by themſelves, and every part of them Alms; neither is there any reaſon contrary unto this, that they are Alms. Ergo, they are pure Alms. For they are by no other means or reaſon than Alms, if they be altogether themſelves Alms: For ſo much as it followeth, if they be by any other means or otherwiſe than Alms, then they are otherwiſe than ſome Alms, and for ſo much as they themſelves are ſome Alms, it followeth, that they are otherwiſe than they are indeed; the which is falſe.

Suſtenance and clothing, given to the Apoſtles, was Alms, Ergo alſo Tythes.

But now to paſs beyond the bounds of Logick, it is to be demanded, whether before the Church was endowed, or that ſuſtenance and clothing were given unto the Apoſtles, there was any pure Alms, or that they were given by any other means by bond of debt, amongſt them. And for ſo much as the reaſon is not to be fained, but that they were pure Alms, ſo afterward the cuſtom of the ſame thing according unto like reaſon doth not alter the kind of the reaſon. For ſo might Beggers challenge by cuſtom, beyond the purity of Alms, the Temporalties which they do beg. Neither doth debt utterly exclude the purity of Alms before God: for every man duly giving Alms doth as he ought to do: as every man duly receiving his Alms, ought ſo to receive it as according to Gods will. And ſimply to eſtabliſh any humane Title, upon the continuance of any ſuch Alms, it is altogether contrary unto the reaſon of Alms. Therefore they do continually obſerve, and keep the reaſon of the purity of Alms, which they had from the beginning, when as the bond conditioned doth not deſtroy the purity therof: wherefore there is no cauſe why it ſhould be denied that Tythes are pure Alms, except that the proud ſhould be marvelouſly extolled, contrary to the humility of Chriſt. For they do challenge, by the Title of their lack or want, ſo to be pleaſed for their Tythes. For ſo might the begging-Fryer, by the continuance of his daily begging, challenge according unto the like quantity or circumſtance. But it is no argument, that if the Curate do perform his corporal Miniſtry, that he ought therefore to challenge Tythes by any civil Title; becauſe that as well on the behalf of him which giveth the Tythe, as alſo on the behalf of the Curate, every ſuch miniſtry ought freely to be given, and not by any civil exchange. Forſomuch as it is not required, but that rather the compariſon of ſuch exchanges are repugnant; for ſo much as alſo no man freely giveth any Alms, except he do look for the duty of recompence, by the law of conſcience.

Item, all temporal goods beſtowed upon the Clergy by the Lay-people under condition, as the goods of the Church, are the Alms of them which give it; it is proved thus, for ſo much as all thoſe goods are the goods of the poor, as it appeareth by many ſayings of holy men and by the Laws.

But they were not the goods of the poor, after they were meer ſecular goods, but only by the mean of the work of mercy, whereby they were beſtowed upon the poor: Ergo, they were pure Alms. The conſequence dependeth upon the definition of pure Alms.

Item, all things changed to the uſe and power of another, either by Civil exchange or Evangelical is changed. But the Church-goods are ſo changed by one of theſe Miniſteries. But the Evangelical exchange is not to be fained; becauſe it is not done either by buying or ſelling, or any other civil exchange. Therefore there doth not remain but only a pure Gift, for hope of a heavenly Reward, the which is mercy, and ſo pure Alms. And it ſeemeth to follow conſequently, that all the Clergy receiving ſuch Alms are not only in reſpect of God, as all other men, but in reſpect of men, beggers. For they would not ſo inſtantly require thoſe Alms except they had need of them: neither ought we to be aſhamed thereof, or to be proud beggers; forſomuch as Chriſt touching his humanity became a begger for us, becauſe he declared his need unto his Father, ſaying, &c.

Item, when any King, Prince, Knight, Citizen, or any other man doth give unto the Clergy, or to any Prieſt for his ſtipend, he giveth the ſame unto the Church of God, and to the private party, as a perpetual Alms, that he ſhould attend to his vocation, preaching, praying, and ſtudying. But this kind of giving doth not ſuffice to ground any ſecular Dominion amongſt the Clergy; it followeth that the bare uſe remaineth in them, or the ſecular uſe without any ſecular power.

The major appeareth hereby, forſomuch as otherwiſe Alms ſhould not be a work of mercy. Whereby it may alſo appear, that tenths are pure Alms given to the Church, to the uſe of the poor.

Tythes are to be given of the leaſt part of goods.

And hereupon the holy men do ſay, That tenths are the Tributes of the needy Souls. Whereupon Saint Auguſtine in a Sermon made upon the reſtoring of Tythes ſaith, The giving of Tythes, moſt dear Brethren, are the Tributes of the poor Souls, therefore pay your Tribute unto the poor. And by and by after he ſaith, Therefore who deſireth either to get any Reward, or to have any remiſſion of Sins by giving of his Tenths, let him ſtudy to give Alms even of the ninth part: ſo that whatſoever ſhall remain more than a competent living, and decent clothing, it be not reſerved for Riot, but that it be laid up in the heavenly treaſury, by giving it in Alms to the poor. For whatſoever God doth give unto us more than we have need of, he doth not give it us ſpecially for our ſelves; but doth ſend it us to be beſtowed upon others by our hands: if we do not give it, we invade another mans Poſſeſſions.

Thus much writeth S. Auguſtine, and is repeated in the 16. queſtion. 1. Decimæ.

Alſo S. Jerome in an Epiſtle, and it is put in the 16. queſtion, and 2. chap. Quicquid. Whatſoever the Clergy hath, it is the goods of the poor.

Alſo Saint Auguſtine in his three and thirtieth Epiſtle unto Boniface, and it is alledged in the firſt queſtion and 12.

Alſo in the twenty third, queſtion 7. If we do poſſeſs any thing privately the which doth ſuffice us, they are not ours, but the goods of the poor, whoſe Stewards we are, except we do challenge to our ſelves a property by ſome damnable Uſurpation. The Gloſs upon that part of the 23. queſtion 7. ſaith, The Prelates are but only the Stewards of the Church-goods, and not Lords thereof.

Saint Ambroſe alſo upon this ſaying of the Goſpel, Luke 16. Give account of your Bayliffſhip or Stewardſhip: Hereby then do we learn, that they are not Lords, but rather Stewards and Bayliffs of other mens Subſtance.

The Clergy are Stewards of the Church-goods, and not Lords thereof.

And Saint Jerome, writing to Nepotianus, ſaith, How can they be of the Clergy? which are commanded to contemn and deſpiſe their own Subſtance, and to take away from a friend, it is Theft; to deceive the Church it is Sacrilege, and to take away that which ſhould be given unto the poor.

And Saint Bernard in his Sermon upon theſe words (Simon Peter ſaid unto Jeſus, Chap. 17.) ſaid, Truly the goods of the Church, are the patrimony of the poor: and whatſoever thing the Miniſters and Stewards of the ſame, not Lords or Poſſeſſors, do take unto themſelves more than ſufficient for a competent living, the ſame is taken away from the poor by a ſacrilegious cruelty.

And Euſebius in his Treatiſe upon the Pilgrimage of Saint Jerome, writeth thus, If thou doſt poſſeſs a Garment, or any other thing more than extream neceſſity doth require, and doſt not help the needy, thou art a Thief and a Robber. Wherefore dearly beloved Children, let us be Stewards of our Temporalties, and not Poſſeſſors.

Iſidorus de ſummo bon.

And Iſidore in his Treatiſe De ſummo bono, Chap. 42. ſaith, Let the Biſhop know that he is the Servant of the people, and not Lord over them.

Alſo in the fifth Book of Decretals, extra de donationibus, ſub authoritate Alexandri tertii, Epiſcopi Pariſienſis, he ſaith, We believe that it is not unknown unto your Brotherhood, that a Biſhop, and every other Prelate is but a Steward of the Church-goods, and not Lord thereof. By theſe ſayings of theſe holy men it is evidently declared. that not only Tythes, but alſo all other ſubſtance which the Clergy hath by gift or work of mercy, are pure Alms, which after the neceſſity of the Clergy once ſatisfied, ought to be tranſported unto the poor.

Secondly, It is declared how that the Clergy are not Lords and Poſſeſſors of thoſe goods, but Miniſters and Stewards thereof.

Thirdly, It is ſhewed, that if the Clergy do abuſe the ſame, they are Thieves, Robbers, and ſacrilegious Perſons, and except they do repent, by the juſt judgment of God they are to be condemned.

{KING Richa.2.}

AND thus hitherto I may peradventure ſeem to have made ſufficient long recital out of John Hus, but ſo notwithſtanding that the commodity of thoſe things may abundantly recompence the prolixity thereof. Wherefore if I ſhall ſeem unto any man in the rehearſal of this diſputation to have paſſed very far the bounds of the Hiſtory, let him think thus of me, that at what time I took in hand to write of theſe Eccleſiaſtical matters, I could not omit theſe things which were ſo ſtraitly joyned with the cauſe of the Church.

Neither that I did make more account of the Hiſtory which I had taken in hand, than of the common utility whereunto I had chief reſpect. There were beſides theſe certain other Articles; whereupon the ſaid John Hus had very wiſely and learnedly diſputed; but theſe ſhall ſuffice us for this preſent. And for the reſidue we will paſs them over, to the intent we may the more ſpeedily return whereas our ſtory left; declaring what cruelty they uſed not only againſt the Books and Articles of John Wickliff, but alſo in burning his Body and Bones, commanding them to be taken up forty one years after he was buried, as appeareth by the Decree of the ſaid Synod, the form whereof we thought hereunto to annex, as followeth.

The order and manner of taking up y^e body of John Wickliff, and Burning his bones 41. years after his death.

The Decree of the Synod of Conſtance, touching the taking up of the Body and Bones of John Wickliff, to be burned forty one years after he was buried in his own Pariſh at Lutterworth.

The Decree of the Council for the burning of Wickliff's dead bones.

FOrſomuch as by the authority of the Sentence and Decree of the Council of Rome, and by the Commandment of the Church, and the Apoſtolical See, after due delays being given, they proceeded unto the condemnation of the ſaid John Wickliff, and his memory having firſt made Proclamation, and given commandment to call forth whoſoever would defend the ſaid Wickliff, or his memory, if there were any ſuch (but there did none appear; which would either defend him or his memory.) And moreover witneſſes being examined, by Commiſſioners appointed by Pope John and his Council, upon the impenitency and final obſtinacy and ſtubbornneſs of the ſaid John Wickliff (reſerving that which is to be reſerved, as in ſuch buſineſs the order of the Law requireth) and his impenitency and obſtinacy even unto his end, being ſufficiently proved by evident ſigns and tokens, and alſo by lawful witneſſes, and credit lawfully given thereunto. Wherefore at the inſtance of the Steward of the Treaſury, Proclamation being made to hear and underſtand the ſentence againſt this day, the ſacred Synod declareth, determineth, and giveth ſentence, that the ſaid John Wickliff was a notorious obſtinate Heretick, and that he died in his hereſie, curſing and condemning both him and his memory.

Ex actis Concilii Conſtan.

This Synod alſo decreeth and ordaineth, That the Body and Bones of the ſaid John Wickliff, if it might be diſcerned and known from the bodies of other faithful people, ſhould be taken out of the ground, and thrown away far from the burial of any Church, according unto the Canon-Laws and Decrees. Which determination and ſentence definitive being read and pronounced, the Lord Preſident, and the foreſaid Preſidents of the four Nations, being demanded and asked whether it did pleaſe them or no? They all anſwered (and firſt Hoſtienſis the Preſident, and after him the other Preſidents of the Nations) that it pleaſed them very well, and ſo they allowed and confirmed all the premiſes, &c.

¶ What Heraclitus would not laugh, or what Democritus would not weep, to ſee theſe ſo ſage and reverend Catoes to occupy their heads to take up a poor mans body, ſo long dead and buried before, by the ſpace of forty one years? and yet peradventure were not able to find his right bones, but took up ſome other body, and ſo of a Catholick made an Heretick. Albeit herein Wickliff had ſome cauſe to give them thanks, that they would at leaſt ſpare him ſo long till he was dead, and alſo to give him ſo long reſpite after his death, forty one years to reſt in his ſepulcher before they ungraved him, and turned him from earth to aſhes; which aſhes they alſo took and threw into the river. And ſo was he reſolved into three Elements, earth, fire, and water, thinking thereby utterly to extinguiſh and aboliſh both the name and Doctrine of Wickliff for ever. Not much unlike to the example the old Phariſees and Sepulcher-Knights, which when they had brought the Lord unto the grave, thought to make him ſure never to riſe again. But theſe and all other muſt know, that as there is no counſel againſt the Lord; ſo there is no keeping down of verity, but it will ſpring and come out of duſt and aſhes, as appeared right well in this man. For though they digged up his Body, burnt his Bones, and drowned his aſhes; yet the Word of God, and truth of his Doctrine, with the fruit and ſucceſs thereof, they could not burn; which yet to this day, for the moſt part of his Articles, do remain; notwithſtanding the tranſitory Body and Bones of the man was thus conſumed and diſdiſperſed, as by this picture here above ſet forth to thine eyes (gentle Reader) may appear.

Theſe things thus finiſhed and accomplished, which pertain to the ſtory and time of Wickliff; let us now (by the ſupportation of the Lord proceed to intreat and write of the reſt, which either in his time or after his time, ſpringing out of the ſame Univerſity, and raiſed up (as ye would ſay) out of his aſhes were partakers of the ſame Perſecution. Of whom ſpeaketh Thomas Walden in his Book, De Sacramentis & Sacramentalibus, Cap. 53. where he ſaith, that after Wickliff many ſuffered moſt cruel death, and many mo did forſake the Realm.

Ex Th. Walden, lib. de Sacrament.

In the number of whom was William Swinderby, Walter Brute, John Purvey, Richard White, William Thorpe, Raynold Pecock Biſhop of Saint Aſaph, and afterward of Chicheſter.

Laurence Redman, David Sautre, John Aſchwarby, W. James, T. Brightwell, William Hawlam, Rafe Grenhurſt, J. Scut Phil. Norice.

To this Catalogue alſo pertaineth (mentioned in ancient writers) Laurence Redman Maſter of Art, David Sautre, Divine, John Aſchwarby Vicar, as they call him, of St. Mary Church at Oxford, Will. James an excellent young man, well learned, Thomas Brightwell, and William Hawlam a Civilian, Rafe Grenhurſt, John Scut, and Philip Norice; which being Excommunicated by Pope Eugenius the Fourth, in the year of our Lord 1446, appealed unto a General or Oecumenical Council.

Peter Paine.

Peter Paine alſo, who flying from Oxford unto Boheme, did ſtoutly contend againſt the Sophiſters, as touching both kinds of the Sacrament of the laſt Supper; who afterward among the reſt of the Orators was one of the fourteen that was ſent unto the Council of Baſil: where by the ſpace of three days he diſputed upon the fourth Article, which was touching the Civil Dominion of the Clergy, Anno 1438. Alſo the Lord Cobham, &c. with divers others beſides, whoſe names are mentioned in the Kings Writ, ſent to the Sheriff of Northampton, which Writ of the King followeth in this tenor: Rex Vicecomiti Northamptoniæ ſalutem, &c. Forſomuch as John Attyate of Chepingwarden, John Warryner, Ro. Brewood, &c. being receivers and fautors of Hereticks, and eſpecially of John Woodward Prieſt, publickly defamed and condemned of Hereſie, will not be juſtified by the cenſures of the Church, as the reverend Father John Biſhop of Lincoln hath certified us: We therefore willing to withſtand all defenders and fautors of ſuch Hereſies, do will and command as well the forenamed, as namely the foreſaid John Woodward to be apprehended, ſtraitly charging the ſame to be impriſoned by their bodies, or otherwiſe puniſhed as ſhall ſeem good to the Juſtices, until they and every of them ſhall ſubmit themſelves to the obedience of the foreſaid Biſhop in that behalf accordingly. Whereof fail you not under pain of an hundred pound. Witneſs our ſelves: Yeaven at our Manor of Langley the eighth day of March, the twelfth year of our raign.

Lord Cobham.

To theſe above rehearſed, and other favourers of Wickliff, within this our Country of England, we may add alſo the Bohemians; forſomuch as the propagation of the ſaid Doctrine of Wickliff in that Country alſo took root, coming from England to Boheme by this occaſion, as in ſtory here followeth.

The occaſion how the Doctrine of Wickliff came to Boheme.

There chanced at that time a certain Student of the Country of Bohemia to be at Oxford, one of a wealthy houſe, and alſo of a noble ſtock; who returning home from the Univerſity of Oxford to the Univerſity of Prague, carried with him certain Books of Wickliff, De Realibus Univerſalibus. De Civili Jure, & Divino. De Eccleſia. De quæſtionibus variis contra Clerum, &c. It chanced the ſame time a certain Nobleman in the City of Prague had founded and builded a great Church of Matthias and Matthæus, which Church was called Bethelem, giving to it great Lands, and finding in it two Preachers every day, to preach both Holy-day and working-day to the people. Of the which two Preachers this John Hus was one, a man of great knowledg, of a pregnant wit, and excellently favoured for his worthy life amongſt them. Thus John Hus having familiarity with this young man, in reading and peruſing theſe Books of Wickliff, took ſuch pleaſure and fruit in reading thereof, that not only he began to defend this Author openly in the Schools, but alſo in his Sermons; commending him for a good man, an holy man, and heavenly man, wiſhing himſelf, when he ſhould die, to be there placed, whereas the ſoul of Wickliff ſhould be. And thus for the ſpreading of Wickliffs Doctrine enough.

Wickleum vir bonus, ſanctus, cælo dignus.

The great affection of John Hus to John Wickliff.

And thus much briefly concerning the favourers and adherents of John Wickliff in general. Now particularly and in order let us (by Chriſts grace) proſecute the ſtories and perſecutions of the ſaid parties aforenamed, as the courſe of their times ſhall require, firſt beginning with the valiant Champions William Swinderby, and Walter Brute.

The Hiſtory of William Swinderby.

IN the year 1389, William Swinderby Prieſt, within the Dioceſs of Lincoln, being accuſed and detected upon certain opinions, was preſented before John Biſhop of Lincoln, and examined upon certain Articles in the Church of Lincoln, after the form and order of the Popes law, according to their uſual rite obſerved; his denouncers were theſe, Frier Frisby Obſervant, Frier Hincely, Auguſtine, and Thomas Blaxton, Dominican. The Articles wherewith they charged him, although in form of words as they put them up, they might ſeem ſomething ſtrange here to be recited; yet to the intent that all men may ſee the ſpite and malice of theſe Spider-Friers, in ſucking all things to poyſon, and in forging that which is not true, as in proceſs (Chriſt willing) hereafter ſhall better appear by his anſwers, I thought good to notifie the ſame.

Anno 1389. Ex Regiſtro Epiſc. Linc. W. Swinderby firſt examined. Denouncers of W. Swinderby, 3 Friers, Hincely, Blaxton.

That men may ask their debts by charity, but in no manner for debt to impriſon any man; and that he ſo impriſoning is accurſed.

That if Pariſhioners do know their Curate to be a lecher, incontinent, and an evil man, they ought to withdraw from him their Tythes, or elſe they be fautors of his ſins.

That Tythes purely be alms, and in caſe that Curates be evil men, the ſame may lawfully be conferred to other men.

That for an evil Curate to curſe his Suget for withholding of Tythes, is nothing elſe, but to take with extortion wickedly, and unduly from them their money.

That no Prelate may curſe a man, except he know before that he is curſed of God.

That every Prieſt may abſolve any ſinner being contrite and is bound (notwithſtanding the inhibition of the Biſhop) to preach the Goſpel unto the people.

That a Prieſt taking any Annual penſion upon Covenant, is in ſo doing a Simoniack, and accurſed.

That any Prieſt being in deadly ſin, if he give himſelf to conſecrate the body of the Lord, committeth Idolatry rather than doth conſecrate.

That no Prieſt entreth into any houſe, but to evil intreat the wife, the daughter, or maid: and therefore he admoniſhed the good man of the houſe to take heed what Prieſt he let into his houſe.

Another Concluſion falſly to him objected, That a child is not truly baptized, if the Prieſt that baptizeth, or the Godfather or Godmother be in deadly ſin.

Item, That no man living againſt the Law of God is a Prieſt, however he were ordained Prieſt of any Biſhop.

Theſe Articles or Concluſions untruly collected, were as cruelly exhibited againſt him by the Friers in the Biſhop of Lincolns Court. The which Articles although he never preached, taught, or at any time defended, as appeareth more in the Proceſs fol'owing: Yet the Friers with their witneſſes ſtanding forth againſt him, declared him to be convict; bringing alſo dry wood with them to the Town to burn him, and would not leave him, before they made him promiſe and ſwear for fear of death, never to hold them, teach them, nor preach them privily, nor apertly under pain of relapſe; and that he ſhould go to certain Churches to revoke the foreſaid Concluſions, which he never affirmed. As firſt in the Church of Lincoln, then in St. Margarets Church of Leiceſter; alſo in St. Martins Church in Leiceſter, and in our Ladies Churches at Newark, and in other Pariſh-Churches alſo of Melton-Mowbray, of Haloughton, Hareburgh, and Lenthburgh. Which penance being to him enjoyned, he did obediently accompliſh, with this form of revocation, which they bound him unto, under theſe words.

W. Swinderby compelled by the Friers to abjure Articles which he never taught.

The Revocation of William Swinderby, whereunto he was forced by the Friers.

The forced abjuration of W. Swinderby.

I William Swinderby Prieſt, although unworthy, of the Dioceſs of Lincoln, acknowledging one true Catholick and Apoſtolick Faith of the Holy Church of Rome, do abjure all hereſie and error repugning to the determination of the Holy Mother Church, whereof I have been hitherto defamed, namely, the Concluſions and Articles above prefixed, and every one of them to me judicially objected, by the Commiſſary of the reverend Father in Chriſt and Lord, Lord John by the Grace of God Biſhop of Lincoln; and do revoke the ſame, and every one of them, ſome as heretical, ſome as erroneous and falſe, and do affirm and believe them to be ſo, and hereafter will never teach, preach, or affirm publickly or privily the ſame. Neither will I make any Sermon within the Dioceſs of Lincoln, but asking firſt and obtaining the licenſe of the foreſaid reverend Father and Lord, the Biſhop of Lincoln. Contrary to the which if I ſhall preſume hereafter to ſay or do, to hold or preach, I ſhall be content to abide the ſeverity of the Canon, as I have judicially by the neceſſity of the Law, ſworn, and do ſwear, &c.

Thus have you the Concluſions and Articles of this good man, falſly objected to him by the malicious and lying Friers; and alſo the retractation whereunto they by force compelled him; whereby it may likewiſe be conjectured, what credit is to be given to the Articles and Concluſions which theſe cavilling Friers, wreſting all things to the worſt, have objected and imputed both to Wickliff and all other of that ſort, whom they ſo falſly do defame, ſo ſlanderouſly do belye, and ſo maliciouſly do perſecute. After theſe thing thus done and wrought in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, it ſo befell that the ſaid W. Swinderby removed to the Dioceſs and Country of Herford; where he was as much or more moleſted by the Friers again, and by John Treſnant Biſhop of Hereford, as by the proceſs and ſtory here enſuing, ſet out at large out of their own Regiſters, may appear.

Here followeth the Proceſs of John Treſnant, Biſhop of Hereford, had againſt the aforſaid William Swinderby in the cauſe of Heretical pravity, as the Popiſh Hereticks call it.

The proceſs of the B. of Hereford againſt W. Swinderby.

The flouriſhing Invocation of Gods name.

THE Glorious name of the Prince of Peace, and his counſel (whoſe counſellor no man is, and whoſe providence in his diſpolition is never deceived) being invocated. To all and ſingular believers of Chriſt, which ſhall ſee or hear this our proceſs under-written, John by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Hereford, greeting, and peaceable charity in the Lord. Foraſmuch as God the Creator of all things, the keeper of juſtice, the lover of right, and the hater of malice, beholding from the high Throne of his Providence the ſons of men, now through the fall of their firſt father prone and declining to diſhoneſt and filthy, and deteſtable miſchiefs, and to keep under their malice (which wicked tranſgreſſion did firſt gender) hath appointed divers preſidents of the world ſtabliſhed in ſundry degrees, by whom and their circumſpect providence mans audacity ſhould be reſtrained, innocency ſhould be nouriſhed amongſt the good, and terror ſhould be ſtricken into the wicked not to deceive; alſo that their power to hurt, and their inſolency ſhould be bridled in all places. And whereas amongſt many kinds of cares which come to our thoughts, by the duty of the office committed unto us, we are ſpecially bound to extend our ſtrength, chiefly that the Catholick faith may proſper in our times, and heretical pravity may be rooted from out of the borders of the faithful; we therefore being excited through the information of many credible and faithful Chriſtians of our Dioceſs, to root out peſtiferous plants, as ſheep diſeaſed with an incurable ſickneſs, going about to infect the whole and ſound flock, are by the care of the ſhepherd to be removed from the flock, that is to ſay, Preachers, or more truly execrable offenders of the new Sect, vulgarly called Lollards, which under a certain cloked ſhew of holineſs, running abroad through divers places of our Dioceſs, and endeavouring to cut aſunder the Lords unſowed coat, that is to ſay, to rent the unity of the holy Church, and of the Catholick Faith, and alſo to tear in pieces with their tempeſtuous blaſts the power of Saint Peter, that is to ſay, to weaken the ſtrength of the Eccleſiaſtical ſtates and degrees, and the determination of the ſame holy Church, have wickedly preſumed and do preſume from day to day to ſpeak, to teach, to maintain, (and that which is more horrible to be uttered) to preach openly many things heretical, blaſphemies, ſchiſms, and ſlanderous defamings, even quite contrary to the Sacred Canons and Decrees of the holy Fathers, ſo that they know not to direct their paths in the ways of righteouſneſs and truth, in that they expound to the people the Holy Scripture as the letter ſoundeth, after a judicial ſort, otherwiſe than the Holy Ghoſt will have it, whereas the words wander from their proper ſignifications, and appear to bring in by gheſſing new meanings, whereas the words muſt not be judged by the ſenſe that they make, but by the ſenſe whereby they be made, whereas the conſtruction is not bound to the Donates rules; whereas faith is far placed from the capacity of reaſon: But they labour by their pernicious Doctrines and teachings publick and privy, to boyl out the poyſon of ſchiſms between the Clergy and the people: We to encounter againſt ſuch kind of Preachers, nay rather deceivers, and horrible ſeducers amongſt the people, advancing and rouſing up our ſelves in Gods behalf, and holy Mother Church, with the ſpiritual ſword, which may ſtrike them wiſely, and wound them medicinably, for their health and welfare; and namely William Swinderby Prieſt (ſo pretending himſelf to be) as a teacher of ſuch kind of pernicious Doctrine, and an horrible ſeducer amongſt the people; to whom perſonally appearing before us on the Wedneſday, to wit, the fourteenth of the month of June, in the Pariſh-Church of Kington of our Dioceſs, in the year of our Lord 1391, he being vehemently defamed to us of hereſie, ſchiſm, and his perverſe Doctrines both manifeſt and privy; we therefore have cauſed many Caſes and Articles concerning the Catholick Faith to be miniſtred unto him, that he ſhould anſwer to the ſame at a day and place for him meet and convenient, of his own choice and free will; that is to ſay, on the Friday, being the laſt of the ſame month of June next following; aſſigned to him, at the Church of Bodenhame of the ſame our Dioceſs. Of which Caſes and Articles exhibited unto us by many of Chriſts faithful people, * zealous followers of the Catholick Faith, to make information to our office (which Caſes and Articles alſo were by us adminiſtred, as is before ſaid, to the ſame William Swinderby) the tenour thereof followeth, and is thus:

Lollards by the Popes interpretation, is a word derived of Lolium.

They counterfeit in the Prophets words as Apes do in Princes apparel.

Who expoundeth the Scripture more after the letter, let the Reader judg by Hoc eſt corpus meum.

If ſuch medicines ſhould be miniſtred to you, ye would con your Phyſician little thank.

{Anno 1391.}

* Such as were in Q. Maries days as John Beard, J. Awaſter, Robin Papiſt, and other like murderers.

¶ Reverend Father and high Lord, Lord John, by God ſufferance Biſhop of Hereford: It is lamentably declared unto your reverend Fatherhood on the behalf of Chriſts faithful people, your devout children of your Dioceſs of Hereford, that notwithſtanding the misbelief of very many Lollards, which have too long a time ſprung up here in your Dioceſs, there is newly come a certain child of wickedneſs, named William Swinderby; who by his horrible perſwaſions, and miſchievous endeavours, and alſo by his open preachings and private teachings, doth pervert as much as in him is the whole Eccleſiaſtical ſtate, and ſtirreth up, with all his poſſible power, ſchiſm between the Clergy and the people. And that your reverend Fatherhood may be the more fully informed, what and what manner of man the ſame William Swinderby is; there be propoſed and exhibited hereafter to the ſame your Fatherhood, on the behalf of the ſame faithful people of Chriſt, againſt the ſame William Swinderby, Caſes and Articles. Which if the ſame William ſhall deny, then ſhall the ſame Caſes and Articles moſt evidently be proved againſt him by credible witneſs worthy of belief, and by other lawful proof and evidences, to the end that thoſe being proved, the ſame Fatherhood of yours may do and ordain therein, as to your Paſtoral office belongeth.

The denunciation of the Promoters to the Biſhop of Hereford.

Matters articulated againſt W. Swinderby.

Inprimis, the ſame William Swinderby, pretending himſelf Prieſt, was openly and publickly convicted of certain Articles and Concluſions being erroneous, ſchiſmatical, and heretical, preached by him at divers places and times, before a multitude of faithful Chriſtian people. And the ſame Articles and Concluſions did he by force of Law revoke and abjure, ſome as heretical, and ſome as erroneous and falſe; avouching and believing them for ſuch, as that from thenceforth he would never preach, teach, or affirm openly or privily any of the ſame Concluſions: And if by preaching or avouching he ſhould preſume to do the contrary; that then he ſhould be ſubject to the ſeverity of the Canons, accordingly as he did take a corporal oath, judicially upon the Holy Goſpels.

2. Alſo the Concluſions, which by the ſame William were firſt openly taught and preached, and afterward abjured and revoked, as is aforeſaid, are contained before in the proceſs of the Biſhop of Lincoln, even as they be there written word by word. And for the Caſes and Articles, they were conſequently exhibited by the forenamed faithful Chriſtian people againſt the ſaid William Swinderby, together with the Concluſions before ſaid, and hereafter written: of which Caſes and Articles the tenor here enſueth.

3. Item, The ſaid William contrary to the former revocation and abjuration, not converting to repentance, but perverted from ill to worſe, and given up to a reprobate ſenſe, came into your Dioceſs, where he running about in ſundry places, hath preſumed to preach, or rather to pervert and to teach of his own raſhneſs many heretical, erroneous, blaſphemous, and other ſlanderous things contrary and repugnant to ſacred Canons, and the determination of the Holy Catholick Church. What thoſe things were, at what place and what time, it ſhall hereafter more particularly be declared.

Item, The ſame William notwithſtanding your Commandments and admonitions ſealed with your Seal, and to all the Curates of your Dioceſs directed, containing amongſt other things that no perſon of what ſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he were, ſhould preſume to preach or to teach, or elſe expound the Holy Scripture to the people, either in hallowed or prophane places within your Dioceſs, without ſufficient authority, by any manner of pretence that could be ſought, as in the ſame your Letters Monitory and of inhibition (the tenour whereof hereafter enſueth) is more largely contained; which Letters the ſame William did receive into his hands, and did read them word by word in the Town of Monemouth of your Dioceſs, in the year of our Lord 1390, ſo that theſe your Letters, and the Contents thereof came to the true and undoubted knowledg of the ſame William; yet notwithſtanding hath the ſame William preſumed in divers places and times to preach within the ſame your Dioceſs, after and againſt your Commandment aforeſaid. The tenor of the ſame Letters before mentioned followeth, and is this.

The Letter Monitory of the B. of Hereford inhibiting to preach without his licenſe.

JOHN by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Hereford, to the Dean and Chapter of our Church of Hereford, and to all and ſingular Abbots, Priors, Provoſts, Deans rural, Parſons and Vicars of Monaſteries, Priories, Churches, Colledges, and Pariſhes, and to other having Cure of Souls within the City and Dioceſs of Hereford, and to all and every other being within the ſame City and Dioceſs, greeting. Grace and bleſſing. Foraſmuch as the golden lawrel of teaching Doctoral is not from above indifferently every mans gift; neither is the office of preaching granted ſave to ſuch as are called, and eſpecially by the Church admitted thereunto: We do admoniſh and require you all and ſingular Clerks aforeſaid, and do ſtraitly enjoyn you all in the vertue of holy obedience, that you nor any of you do admit any man to preach or to teach the Catholick faith, ſaving ſuch as the ſame office of preaching ſhall by the Authority Apoſtolical, or elſe your Biſhop, be ſpecially committed unto; but that as much as in you ſhall lie, you do by word and deed labour to lett thoſe that would attempt the contrary. And you Lords, Ladies, Knights, Barons, Eſquires, and all ſingular perſons, of what eſtate, degree, preheminence, or condition ſoever ye be, remaining within the City and Dioceſs of Hereford, we do beſeech and exhort in our Lord, that following the words of our Saviour, you beware of the leven of the Phariſees.

Would God both they and all men did beware of that leven.

Item, According to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Be not ye carried away with divers and ſtrange Doctrines; and that in the mean while (as ſaith the Apoſtle) you be not removed from the ſenſe of the holy ancient Fathers, leſt that any man by any means ſhould ſeduce you; but you agreeing together in one mind, ſee that you honour God with one mouth. But if any man to whom that thing is not ſpecially (as is aforeſaid) committed, ſhall attempt to inſtruct or in this your life to direct you into the Catholick Faith, do ye deny to give them audience, and refuſe you to be preſent at their aſſemblies, and ſhun ye their teachings, becauſe they be wicked and perverſe. And as for us, we will not omit to proceed, according to the ſacred Canons and Precepts of the holy Fathers, againſt ſuch as do the contrary.

Dated at London in the houſe of our habitation, under our Seal, the laſt day ſave one of December, in the year of our Lord 1389, and of our Conſecration the firſt.

5. Item, The ſame William in his preaching to the people, on Monday being the firſt of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1390, in the Pariſh of Whitney of your Dioceſs, did hold and affirm, That no Prelate of the world, of what eſtate, preheminence or degree ſoever he were of, having cure and charge of ſouls, he being in deadly ſin, and hearing the confeſſion of any under his hand, in giving him abſolution, doth nothing: As who neither doth looſe him from his ſin, nor in correcting or excommunicating him for his demerits, doth bind him by his ſentence, except the Prelate ſhall be free himſelf from deadly ſin, as St. Peter was, to whom our Lord gave power to bind and looſe.

6. Item, The ſame William in many places ſaid and affirmed, in the preſence of many faithful Chriſtian people, that after the Sacramental words uttered by the Prieſt having the purpoſe to conſecrate, there is not made the very Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar.

7. Item, That accidents cannot be in the Sacrament of the Altar without a ſubject; and that there remaineth material bread there to ſuch as be partakers Communicant with the Body of Chriſt, in the ſame Sacrament.

8. Item, That a Prieſt being in deadly ſin, cannot be able by the ſtrength of the Sacramental words to make the Body of Chriſt, or bring to perfection any other Sacrament of the Church, neither yet to miniſter it to the members of the Church.

9. Item, That all Prieſts are of like power in all things, notwithſtanding that ſome of them in this world are of higher and greater honour, degree, or preheminence.

10. Item, That only contrition putteth away ſin, if ſo be that a man ſhall be duly contrite; and that all auricular and outward confeſſion is ſuperfluous, and not requiſite of neceſſity to ſalvation.

11. Item, Inferiour Curates have not their power of binding and looſing immediately from the Pope or Biſhop, but immediately from Chriſt: And therefore neither can the Pope nor Biſhop revoke to themſelves ſuch kind of power, when they ſee time and place at their luſt and pleaſure.

12. Item, That the Pope cannot grant ſuch kind of Annual and yearly pardons; becauſe there ſhall not be ſo many years to the day of judgment, as are in the Popes Bulls or pardons contained. Whereby it followeth that the pardons are not of ſuch like value as they ſpeak of, and are praiſed to be.

13. Item, It is not in the Popes power to grant unto any perſon penitent forgiveneſs of the puniſhment of the fault.

14. Item, That perſon that giveth his alms to any, which in his judgment is not in neceſſity, doth ſin in ſo giving it.

15. Item, That it ſtands not in the power of any Prelate, of what Religion ſoever he be of, privately to give Letters for the benefit of his Order, neither doth ſuch benefit granted, profit them, to the ſalvation of their ſoul, to whom they be granted.

16. Item, That the ſame William, unmindful of his own ſalvation, hath many and oftentimes come into a certain deſart Wood, called Dervallwood, of your Dioceſs, and there in a certain Chappel not hallowed, or rather in a prophane cottage, hath in contempt of the Keys preſumed of his own raſhneſs to celebrate, nay rather to prophanate.

17. Item, The ſame William hath alſo preſumed to do ſuch things in a certain prophane Chappel, being ſituate in the Park of Newton nigh to the Town of Leintwarden, of the ſame your Dioceſs.

Upon

UPON Friday being the laſt of the Month of June, in the year above ſaid, about ſix of the Clock, in the ſaid Pariſh Church of Bodenhone, hath the ſaid William Swinderby perſonally appeared before us. And he willing to ſatisfie the term to him aſſigned, as before ſpecified, hath read out word by word before all the multitude of faithful Chriſtian people, many anſwers made and placed by the ſame William (in a certain Paper-book of the ſheet folded into four parts) to the ſaid Articles, and the ſame anſwers for ſufficient hath he already to us exhibited, avouching them to be agreeable to the Law of Chriſt. Which thing being done, the ſame William (without any moe with him) did depart from our preſence, becauſe that we at the inſtance of certain noble perſonages, had promiſed to the ſame William free acceſs, that is to wit, on that day for the exhibiting of thoſe anſwers, and alſo free departing without prefixing of any term, or without citation, or elſe any other offence or harm in body or in goods.

As for the tenour of the ſame anſwers, exhibited unto them by the ſame William, as is before ſpecified; we have here under annexed it word for word, and in the ſame old language uſed at that time, when it was exhibited. And it followeth in theſe words.

The Proteſtation of William Swinderby, with his Anſwers to the Articles by the Promoters laid againſt him to the Biſhop of Hereford, taken out of the Regiſters in the ſame old Engliſh wherein he wrote it.

The proteſtation of William Swinderby, with his anſwers.

IN the name of God, Amen. I William Swinderby Prieſt unworthy, Covenanting and purpoſing wholly with all my heart to be a true Chriſtian man, with open confeſſion knowledging mine own defaults, and unwiſe deeds, making openly this Proteſtation, cleping God to record here before our worſhipful Biſhop John through the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Hereford, with witneſs of all this people; that it is not mine intent any thing to ſay or affirm, to maintain or to defend that is contrary to holy writ, againſt the belief of holy Church, or that ſhould offend the holy determination of Chriſts Church, or the true ſentences of holy Doctors. And if I have here before through mine uncunning been unordered, or by evil counſel been deceived, or any thing ſaid, preached, holden, maintained or taught contrary to the Law of God; wholly and fully for that time, for now and ever with full will I revoke it and withdraw it, as everich Chriſten man ſhould; Praying and beſeeching ech Chriſten man, to whom this writing ſhall come to, that gif I ought err (as God forbid that I do) or ever erred in any point contrary to holy writ, that it be had and holden of them, as for thing nought ſaid. And all the troths that I have ſaid according with the Law of God, that may maintain them, and ſtand by them for life or death to Gods worſhip, as a true Chriſten man ſhould, ſubmitting me meekly to the correction of our Biſhop, that here is, or of any other Chriſten man, after Chriſts laws and holy writ; in will ever ready to be amended; and with this proteſtation I ſay and anſwer to theſe Concluſions and Articles that here followen after, the which been put to me to anſwer to.

1 Objection.

The firſt is this, That I William of Swinderby, pretending (he ſaith) my ſelf a Prieſt was judicially convented of certain articles and concluſions of error, falſe, ſchiſmatick, and hereſie, by me in divers places and times preached (he ſaith) before multitudes of true Chriſten men; and the ſame articles and concluſions by need of law revoked and forſworn, ſome as hereſies, and ſome as errors and falſe; and ſuch I affirmed and believed them to be; and that none of them from that time forth I ſhould preach, teach, or affirm, openly or privily, ne that I ſhould make no Sermon to the people, ne preach, but by lawful leave asked and gotten; and if I would preſume in doing or affirming the contrary, then to the ſeverity of the Law I ſhould be buxom, as by need of the Law I ſwore.

To this I ſay, witneſſing that God is in heaven, to my wit and underſtanding, that I never preached, held, ne taught theſe concluſions and articles, the which falſly of Friers and of leacherous Prieſts were put upon me to the Biſhop of Lincoln. For I was ordained by proceſs * yerſaid of their law, by the Biſhop and his Commiſſaries, ſo as I granted them to bring my Purgation of thirteen Prieſts of good fame. And ſo I did with a Letter and twelve Seals thereby, from the Mayor of Leiceſter, and from true Burgeſſes and thirty men to witneſs with me, as the Duke of Lancaſter knew and heard, the Earl of Darby, and other many great men that were that time in the Town, that I never ſaid them, taught them, ne preached them. But when I ſhould have made my Purgation, there ſtooden forth five Friers or moe, that ſome of them never ſaw me before, ne heard me, and three lecherous Prieſts openly known, ſome living in their lechery twenty year (men ſayden) or more, as by their childer was openly known. Some of theſe they clepinden denunciations, and ſome weren cleped comprobations, that weren there falſly foreſworn, they ſuing buſily and crying with many another Frier, with great inſtance to give the dome upon me, to burn me, and boughten dry wood before, as men tolden in that Town; and theſe ſleights, and ſwearing, and money giving, as men ſayden, with favour of the Biſhop (by what law I wot not, but ſoothly not by Gods law) they ſayden they held me as convicted, and might not have forth my Purgation. So as I fully forſook them, and never granted that I ſaid them. Over this they made me ſwear, never to hold them, teach them, ne preach them, privily ne apertly; and that I would go to certain Churches to revoke the concluſions that I never ſaid, in ſlander of my ſelf, by great inſtance of the Friers. And ſo for dread of death, and for fleſhly counſel that I had, I aſſented, and ſo I did. And alſo they maden me to ſwear, that I ſhould not preach (by inſtance of the Friers) within that Dioceſs, withouten licenſe asked and granted; and never ſithen I did. And now the ſame concluſions bene rehearſed to me again; whether by Friers counſel I will not deme, God wot, but in ſlander of me it is; and therefore I will anſwer now (with Gods help) to the concluſion. Of the which the firſt is this.

* Yerſaid, that is, beforeſaid.

Witneſſes with William Swinderby, 13 Prieſts and 30 other with the Letter of the Mayor of Leiceſter, and Burgeſſes, with 12 Seals.

Theebaſtity of Votaries to be noted.

1. Concluſion.

That men mowen aſken their debts by charity, but in no manner for debt to priſon any man; and that he ſo impriſoning is accurſed.

Anſwer. How debt is to be purſued.

So I ſaid not: but thus I have ſaid, and yet ſay with proteſtation put before; that whoſo purſues his brother with malice, priſoneth him cruelly for debt without mercy, that fain would pay it if he might, he ſinneth againſt Chriſts teaching, Eſtote miſericordes, ſicut pater veſter miſericors eſt.

2. Concluſion.

The ſecond Concluſion, that falſe Friers and lecherous Prieſts putten upon me was this: That if the Parochians know her Curate to bene a lechour, incontinent, and an evil man, they owen to withdraw from him tithe, and elſe they bene fautors of his ſins.

Anſwer.

Thus I ſaid not, but on this wiſe, and yet I ſay with proteſtation put before: That if it be known openly to the people, that Parſons or Curates come to her Benefice by ſimony, and liven in notorie fornication, and done not their office and her duties to her Parochians by good enſample of holy life, in true preaching, living and reſidence, wending away from his Cure, occupied in ſecular office; he owes nought to have of the Parochians, tithes, ne offerings, ne hemowes, not to hold him for her Curate, ny hemowes, not to geven him tithes, leſt they bin guilty to God of conſent and maintaining of her open ſin. Nemo militans Deo implicat ſe negotiis ſecularibus. 1. q. 1. ca. Quiſquis per pecuniam, & diſt. 80. cap. Siquis.

3. Concluſion.

The third Concluſion was this, That Friers and Prieſts putten upon me, that tithes purgly bene almeſſes: And in caſe that Curates bene evil men, they mowen leefully be given to other men, by temporal Lords, and other temporalities been done away from men of the Church, actually and openly treſpaſſing.

Anſwer.

Thus I ſaid not in theſe terms: but thus I ſay with proteſtation made before, That it was medeful and leefful to ſecular Lords by way of charity, and power given to him of God, in default of Prelates that amend not by Gods law, curſed Curates that openly miſuſen the goods of Holy Church, that beene poor mens goods, and cuſtomably againſt the Law of God; the which poor men Lords ben holden to maintain and defend, to take away and withdraw from ſuch Curates poor mens goods, the which they wrongfully holden in help of the poor, and their own wilful offerings, and their bodily alms-deeds, and give them to ſuch that duly ſerve God in the Church, and been needy in upbearing of the charge that Prelates ſhoulden do, and do it not. Alter alterius onera portate, & ſic adimplebitis legem Chriſti. And as anenſt taking away of Temporalities, I ſay, thus with proteſtation made before; that it is leeful to Kings, Princes, Dukes and Lords of the World, to take away fro Popes, Cardinals, fro Biſhops and Prelates, poſſeſſions in the Church, their Temporalties, and their Alms that they have given them, upon condition they ſhoulden ſerve God the better, when they verily ſeene that their giving and their taking bene contrary to the law of God, to Chriſts living and his Apoſtles; and namely in that, that they taken upon them (that ſhoulden be next followers of Chriſt and his Apoſtles in poorneſs and meekneſs) to be ſecular Lords, againſt the teaching of Chriſt and S. Peter, Luke 22. Reges gentium, & 1 Pet. 5. Neque dominantes in clero. And namely, when ſuch Temporalties maken them the more proud, both in heart and in aray, then they ſhoulden been elſe, more in ſtriſe and debate againſt peace and charity, and in evil enſample to the world more to be occupied in worldly buſineſs; Omnem ſolicitudinem projicientes in eum; and draws them from the ſervice of God, from edifying of Chriſts Church, in impoveriſhing and making leſs the ſtate and the power of Kings, Princes, Dukes and Lords that God hath ſet them in; in wrongful oppreſſion of Commons for unmightfulneſs of Realms, For Paul ſaith to Men of the Church (whoſe lore Prelates ſhoulden ſovereignly followen) Habentes victum & veſtitum, his contenti ſimus.

4th. Concluſion. The fourth Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts putten upon me falſly, That an evil Curate curſing his Soget for withholding of Tithes is naught elſe, but to take with extortion wickedly and unduly money from them.

Anſwer. Here may you ſee the falſhood of the Papiſts, gathering Articles againſt good men, which they never ſaid nor meant. Thus ſaid I not, but thus I ſaid, and yet do with proteſtation made before; that an evil Curate curſing his Parochians, unmighty to pay their tithing, with vengeance without pity, for his ſingular worldly winning againſt charity, and not for heed of their ſouls, there he is hold by his power reaſonably to help his needy Parochians, and doth nought of the Goods of the Church; wickedly and unduly he withholds from them that which is due to them by the law of God, Dimittite, & dimittetur vobis; date, & dabitur vobis; verum mihi vindictam, & ego retribuam, dicit Dominus.

5th. Concluſion. The fifth Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts falſly putten upon me; That no man may curſe any man, but if he were wete him curſed of God, ne the commers with him rennen not into ſentence of curſing in any manner.

Anſwer. Thus ſaid I not, but thus I ſaid, and ſay with proteſtation put before; that no man ought to curſe any man but for charity and with charity, Omnia veſtra cum charitate fiant. And ſikerly I ſay, that no wrongful curſing of Pope, or any Prelate in earth binds anenſt God, but when they wrongfully and wittingly curſen men, for that men will not do their ſingular will, unreaſonable bidding, with highneſs of heart and cruelty (ſtanding patience and charity in them that they curſen wrongfully) he is bleſſed of almighty God, and they themſelfe bene curſed, Mat. 5. Beati eritis cum maledixerint homines, &c. Et in Pſalmo, Maledicent illi & tu benedices. Et Auguſtinus 11. q. 3. cap. Illud.

Againſt.

6th. Concluſion. The ſixth Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts putten upon me falſly, *That ech Prieſt may aſſoil him that ſweneth, contrition had; and, notwithſtanding forbiddings of the Biſhop, * is holden to preach to the people the Goſpel.*

* Holden, that is, bound.

Anſwer. Thus I ſaid not, but thus I ſaid, and yet ſay, with proteſtation made before; That ech true Prieſt may counſel ſinful men, that ſhewen to him her ſins, after the wit and cunning that God had given him, to turn fro ſin to vertuous life. And as touching preaching of the Goſpel, I ſay, that no Biſhop ows to let a true Prieſt, that God had given grace, wit and cunning to do that office; for both Prieſts and Deacons, that God had ordained Deacons and Prieſts, ben holden by power given him of God to preach to the People the Goſpel, and namely and ſomely Popes, Biſhops, Prelates and Curates; For this is due to the people and Parochians, for to have and ask of hem, and they duly and freely owen to done it, Mat. 5. Luke 5. Ite, ecce ego mitto vos. Et Marc. 16. Euntes in mundum universum. Et Mat. 5. Euntes autem prædicate. Et diſt. 21. cap. In novo teſtamento. Et Iſidor. de ſummo bono. 44. Et Chryſoſt. diſtinct. 34. ca. Nolite. Et Aug. diſtinct. 34. ca. Quiſquis. Et Greg. in ſuo paſtorali, ca. 38. Et Tollitano. ca. Ignorantia. Et Jerom. diſtinct. 95. ca. Ecce ego. KING Ric. 2.

The ſeventh Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts falſly putten upon me; That a Prieſt taking for annuel, through Covenant, in that, he is ſchiſmatick and curſed.

This ſaid I, never in theſe terms, but thus I ſaid, and yet ſay with proteſtation put before; that no Prieſts ows to ſell by bargaining and covenant his ghoſtly travel, ne his maſſes, ne his prayers, ne Gods word, ne hallowings, baptiſm, ne confirming, order-giving, for weddings, for ſhrift, for houſel, or for ennointing; any worldly mens reward to ask or take for theſe, or for any of theſe, or for any ghoſtly thing, he errs and doth ſimony. Ut patet 1. q. 2. ca. Nullus. Et ex concilio Triburenti. cap. Dictum eſt. Et Chriſtus evangelio vendentes & ementes ejecit de templo, Mat. 22.

The eighth Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts putten unto me falſly, ſaying, that I believe ſadly as my ſelf ſays, That ych Prieſt being in deadly ſin, yef hę put him to make Chriſts body, rather he does idolatry than makes it.

Thus ſaid I not; but thus I ſaid, and yet ſay with proteſtation put before; that what Prieſt that puts himſelf preſumptuouſly and unworthily in deadly ſin, wittingly to miniſter and to receive that holy Sacrament, and ſo records hit curſedly and damnably, he receives his doom. Qui manducat & bibit indigne, judicium ſibi manducat & bibit: 1 Cor. 11.

The ninth Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts falſly putten upon me; That no Prieſts enters into any houſe, but evil for to treat the wife, the daughter or the wench; and therefore they ſayden that I prayed the people, that their husbands ſhould beware that they ſuffer no Prieſt to enter into her houſe.

And if I had ſaid thus, then I had prayed againſt my ſelf, for I come oft into mens houſes; but thus I ſaid, and yet I do, praying Chriſtian men to beware that they nouriſh nor maintain no lecherous Prieſt in their ſins; for there be where (as men well known) they ben maintained in many places, continuing homely with her Women. And iche man there ſaine they paine therefore a certain to the Biſhops alms. Et ideo ait Iſido, 11. q. 4. qui conſentit peccantibus & defendit alium delinquentem, maledictus erit apud Deum & homines.

The tenth Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts putten upon me falſly, That a child is not verily baptiſed, if the Prieſt that baptiſeth, the Godfather or the Godmother, been in deadly ſin.

God wot in Heaven they ſaid full falſe; but thus I ſaid, and yet I ſay, that the prayers that an evil Prieſt (living in lechery or other deadly ſin) over the child when it ſhall be hallowed, ben not acceptable to God as ben the prayers of a good Prieſt. And though better and cleaner the Prieſt is, the Godfather and the Godmother; the more graciouſly God will hear him, if all they ben not greateſt nor moſt rich in the World. Unde gg. 13. q. 7. cap. in gravibus. Cum eſt qui diſplicit ad intercedendum peccator admittitur, irati animus procul dubio ad deteriora provocatur.

The eleventh Concluſion is this, that Friers and Prieſts putten upon me falſly, That no man living againſt the law of God is a Prieſt, however he were ordained Prieſt of any Biſhop.

Certes this is falſe, for I ſaid never thus in theſe terms; but thus I ſaid, and thus I ſay with a proteſtation put before, that what ever Pope, or Cardinal, Biſhop or Prieſt, or any Prelate of the Church comes to his ſtate or dignity by Simony, and in Simony occupies that office, and holy Churches Goods; I ſay, that he is a thief, and that by the doom of God, and comes but to ſteal and kill, Joh. 10. Fur non venit niſi ut furetur, & mactet, & perdat. And furthermore I ſay, that what Pope, Cardinal, Biſhop, Prelate or Prieſt, in manner of living, or teaching, or laws making contrary to Chriſts living and his laws, or any other ground put in ruling of the Church of Chriſt, but by

KING Ric. 2. by Christ and his laws, is very Antichrist, adversary to Jesus Christ and his Apostles. Aliud fundamentum nemo potest ponere, præter id quod positum est, quod est Christus. Et patet 1.q.3.c. Si quis. Et 1.q.6.c. Ego autem. Quicunque.

The true description who is Antichrist

But this worshipful Father Bishop of Hereford, that here is, says thus in his writing; That I William of Swinderby, notwithstanding the foresaid revocation and abjuration (not setting at heart, but from evil to worse, he says, perverted his Diocess) he says, I come running about by divers places; and by mine own folly he says, that I have presumet to preach many heresies, errors, blasphemies, schisms, and other diffames, and to holy Canons and determination of holy Church contrary and repugnant. Which, where, and when within forth more specially it shall be shewed, that ye be false enformed, that I have presumed in divers places of your Diocess to preach heresies, errors, blasphemies, schisms and other diffames. And sir, all the Country knows whether this be sooth or not; for sir, I presume not, sithen it is the office of a Priest, by the law of Christ, to preach the Gospel; ne nought I did it for presumption, but for the charge that I have of God by Priesthood (if all I be unworthy) and to the worship of God, and help of Christen souls, freely without gathering of her goods for my preaching, if I erred in this, I will be amended. And sir, touching your mandement that ye senden to me, there was sent none. And sir, I made never yet disobedience unto you, ne to your Ministers; and yet all I had, me ows more to obeyche to God than to you, in that ye bidden contrary to Christs bidding. And sir, as ye saine, that I had no mind of my hele, it is too lightly demet; for God forbid, but yet there be hele, more than in your bidding; for God wot, for hele I did it, of mine and of the people, and that was in my mind. But sir, it seems me, that ye charge not by evidence of the punishing so greatly the breaking of Gods hests, as ye done of your own. And sir, if it be your will, in default that the people wanted you to teach him (and her Curates did not) by the desire of the people that weren hungry and thirsty after Gods word, ichone to bear up others charge as Gods law bids: I preached not for disobedience to you, but sir, in fulfilling of the obedience that Gods law bids me do, in excusing of my self to you of that ye blame me of, in open shewing to holy Church, with the protestation that I first made, I answer thus to the Articles that ye have put to me.

1st. Article. Anno 1390. Note here how the Papists use falsly to wrest good mens sayings and Articles.

The first is this, that I William of Swinderby the Monday the first of August, the year of our Lord 1390. preaching to the people in the Church of Whitney of your Diocess, held and affirmed (as ye sain) That no Prelate of the world, of what state or degree that he be, having cure of souls, being in deadly sin, and hearing confession of his suget, does nought in assoiling him, ne he assoiles him not of his sin; and also in amending his suget, openly sinning, and him for his deserts cursing; his sentence binds not; but if that Prelate be as clean out of deadly sin as was S. Peter, to whom our Lord gave power of binding and unbinding.

Answer. The Popes binding, how far it extendeth.

I never thought this, ne spake this, ne heard it, to the time that I saw it written in our Book; and that will witness, the Lord of the Town that has the same Sermon written, and many Gentiles and other that harden me that day. But thus I said, and thus I say with protestation put before, that there is no man, Pope ne Bishop, Prelate ne Curate, that binds soothly verily and ghostly, but inasmuch as his binding or unbinding, accords with the Keies of Heven that God gave to Peter. And as S. Gregory says, that power han they only, that hold together the ensample of the Apostles with her teaching. Illi soli in hac carne positi ligandi atque solvendi potestatem habent, sicut sancti Apostoli, qui eorum exempla simul cum doctrina tenent: gg. li. quarto sententiarum.

Greg. lib. 4. Sent.

2d. Article. And what if he had said it?

The second Article that is put upon me, is this, that I should have said, preached and affirmed in many places before many true men of Christ, That after the Sacramental words said of the Priest, having intention of consecration; That in the Sacrament of Gods Body, is not very Gods Body.

Answer. This said I never God wot, and true men that have heard me.

3d. Article. The third Article is this, that our Bishop puts upon me, that I should have said in many places, and affirmed, That accidents mow not be in the Sacrament of the Altar, without subject, and that material bread leaves not therewith Gods body in the Sacrament.

Answer. This Conclusion I have not holden, ne taught, ne preached, for I have not medled me of that matter, my wit sufficeth not thereto. But here I tell my belief with protestation put before, That the Sacrament of the Altar made by vertue of heavenly words, that Christ himself said in the Cene, when he made this Sacrament, that it is bread and Christs body, so as Christ himself says in the Gospel, and S. Paul says, and as Doctors in the common law have determined to this sentence. Mat. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22. Pa. 1 Cor. 10. & 11. de con. dist. 2. panis: & de consecr. dist. 2. Corpus. Io. 6. verus panis.

Bread and Christs body in the Sacrament.

4th. Article. The fourth Article is this, that our Bishop accuseth me of, that I should have preached about and said, That a Priest being in deadly sin may not by the strength of the Sacramental words make Gods body, or note other Sacrament of the Church, either perform to minister them to the members of the same.

Answer. The wickedness of the Priest impairs no Sacrament. Thus I never said, thought it, preached it, ne taught it; for well I wot, the wickedness of a Priest may appaire no very Sacrament; but the wickedness of the Priests appaires himself, and all that boldness and example of his sin causen the people to liven the worse against Gods law. Unde Greg. Et si sacerdos in peccatis fuerit, totus populus ad peccandum convertitur.

5th. Article. The fifth Article is this, that our Bishop puts unto me; That all Priests ben of even power in all things, notwithstanding that some of this world bene of higher dignity, or more passing in bigness of degree.

Answer. Equality of Priests. Certes, no man would say thus as I suppose, no more did I, ne never heard it that I wot of; but this I say, with protestation made before; that what Priest lives most holily, next following the law of God, he is most lover of God, and most profitable to the Church. If men speaken of worldly power and lordships and worships, with other vices that reign therein; what Priest that desires and has most hereof (in what degree so he be) he is most Antichrist of all the Priests that ben in earth. Unde Augustinus ad Valerium scribens ait; Nihil est in hac vita, & maxime hoc tempore facilius & levius, & hominibus acceptabilius, Episcopi, Presbiteri, aut Decani officiis: sed si perfunctorie aut adulatorie, nihil apud Deum miserabilius, aut tristius & damnabilius.

Aug. ad Valerium.

6th Article. The sixth Article is this, That only contrition does away sin, if a man be duly contrite; and all outward confession by word is superfluous, and not required of need of health.

Answer. Confession. God forgiveth sin. Aug. de consecr. dist. This conclusion said I never that I know of. But thus I say with protestation put before; that very contrition of heart, that is never without charity and grace, does away all sins before done of that man that is verily contrite. And all true confession made by mouth outward to a wise Priest, and a good, profiteth much to man, and it is needful and helping, that men shew their life to such, trusting full to Gods mercy, and that he forgives thy sin. Unde August. de confe. dist. 4. Nemo tollit peccata mundi nisi solus Christus, qui est agnus tollens peccata mundi.

7th Article. The seventh Article is this, that I should say That lower Curates have not here power of binding and assoiling by mean of Pope and Bishop, but of Christ without mony. And therefore neither Pope ne Bishop may revoke such manner power for time and place at her will.

Answer. † Not for thy, that is, notwithstanding. Thus said I not, but † not for thy it seems me thus, that no man should grant any thing after his own will, ghostly ne bodily. But everich man should be well adviset, that he so grant nothing, but if it be the will of God that he grant it. And it is no doubt that ne God grants * by mean persons, as does Antichrist to torment Christs people. Unde & Joh. 19. ait Pilatus, Nescis quia potestatem habeo dimittere te? Et Christus; Non haberes potestatem adversum me ullam, nisi esset tibi datum de super.

*Something here lacketh in the copy.

8th. Article. The eighth Article that our Bishop puts me to, is this, that I should say, That the Pope may not grant such manner indulgence of years, for there shall not be so many years unto the day of doom, as bene contained in his Bulls, or in the Popes indulgences, whereof it follows that Indulgeuces bene not so much worth as they semen, and bene preached.

This

Anſwer. This Article I ſaid not thus; but I ſay, that the Pope may grant Indulgences written in his Letter of years, all ſo far forth, that he may grant him in Gods law ſo far to grant, and further not; years may he grant no mo than God hath ſet. If indulgence ben forgiveneſs of ſin, I wot well all only God forgives ſin. If it be releaſing of pains in purgatory ordainet of God, if God have bidden him releaſe ſo many, or ordained that he ſhould releaſe ſo many, he may then releaſe him. If it be in his own diſpoſing to releaſe whom him likes, and how much, then he may deſtroy Purgatory, and let none come there, and releaſe his own pain, as charities wots. So it ſeems he may be ſiker to be ſaved, if himſelf liſt. If any go to purgatory, then it ſeems he full fails charity. If Bulls been the indulgence that men bringen from the Court, then ben they not ſo much worth, as they coſten there; for lightly they might be loſt, drenched or brend, or a Rat might eaten them; his indulgence then were loſt. Therefore, ſir, have me excuſet, I know not theſe terms; teach me theſe terms by Gods law, and truly I will learn them.

Againſt pardons.

9th Article. The ninth Article is this, that I ſhould have ſaid, That it is not in the Popes power to grant to any man (doing penance) remiſſion from pain, ne from blame.

The Pope proved a blaſphemer. Lewd I am, but this Article ſaid I not thus lewdly; but thus I ſay, that ſithen it is only due to God to give and to grant plenary remiſſion from pains and from blame; that whatever he be, Pope or other, that preſumptuouſly miſtakes upon him that power that is only due to God: in that (in as much as in him is) he makes himſelf Chriſt, and blaſphemeth God, as Lucifer did, when he ſaid, Aſcendam, & ero ſimilis Altiſſimo. Farther I ſay, if the Pope hold men of arms, in maintaining his temporalties and lordſhip to venge him on hem that gilten and offenden him, and geves remiſſion to fight and to ſlay hem that contrarien hem, as men ſayden he did by the Biſhop of Norwich, not putting his Swerd into his ſheath, as God commanded Peter, Mitte, &c. he is Antichriſtus; for he does contrary to the commandments of Jeſus, that bade Peter forgive to his brother ſeventy ſithe ſeven ſithe, Si peccaverit in me frater meus, quotiens dimittam ei? Septies? &c. Et Chriſtus; non dico tibi ſepties, ſed ſeptuageſies ſepties.

Of this Hen. Spencer Biſhop of Norwich, ſee pag 488.

10th Article The tenth Article is this, that our Biſhop puts to me, that I ſhould have ſaid, That a man giving his alms to any man after his dome (not having need) ſins in ſo giving.

Anſwer. This Article ſoothly I ſaid not in theſe terms; but of this matter I have ſpoken, and will with proteſtation made before on this wiſe; that it is needful to give alms to ich man that asketh it bodily or ghoſtly, but not to give it to ich ſhameleſs begger, ſtrong and mighty of body, to get his lifelode leveful and will not, and in what degree ſo he be, men owen not to give it to ſuch a one, that he unreaſonably asketh, for if he give it to him wittingly, he ſins as fautor of his idleneſs. Unde Sap.12. Si benefeceris, ſcito cui benefeceris, & erit gloria in bonis tuis multa.

He meaneth of begging Friers.

Eleventh Article. The eleventh Article is this, that is put to me, that I ſhould have ſaid, That it is not in the power of any Prelate of what ever private Religion, to grant Letters of the good deeds of her order, ne ſuch Benefices grauntet profits not to hele of ſouls, to hem that they ben grauntet to.

Anſwer. I ſaid never thus in theſe terms; but thus I ſay with proteſtation, That Prelates of private Religion mowen graunt Letters of the good deeds of her order; but the ghoſtly mede that comes of good deeds they mow not graunt, for that is only propriet to God. And if they blind the people in misbelief for her worldly winning, wittingly behetting hem of her own graunt ghoſtly medes in heaven by her Letters and her Seal (uncertain, who ſhall be damned) but make the people bolder to ſin by truſt of her prayers; hit is none heal to the ſouls, but harms to that one and to that other. For God ſhall yeld to ech one after her werks. Ipſe reddet unicuique ſecundum opera ſua.

Good deeds of the order profit nothing.

Twelfth Article. The twelfth Article is this, that our Biſhop puts to me, That I many times and oft have come (he ſays) to a deſart wood, cleped, Derwalſwode of his Dioceſs, and there in a Chapel not hallowed, but accurſet * ſhepherds hulk, by mine own folly, he ſays, have preſumed to ſing (but rather to curſe) in contempt of the Keys.

* Or ſheep Coat.

Hereto I ſay, that this is falſly put upon me of him that told you this. For it is a Chappel where a Prieſt ſings certain days in the year with great ſolemnity; and certes, I never ſong therein ſeth I was born into this world.

KING Ric. 2.

Anſwer. The accuſers proved with a lie.

Thirteenth Article. The thirteenth Article is this, That I ſhould alſo preſume to ſing in an unhallowed Chappel, that ſtonds in the Parſe of Newton, beſides the Town of Leyntwardy of this ſame Diceſs.

Another lie. Truly I wot not where the place ſtonds.

Fourteenth Article. The fourteenth Article is this, That I ſhould ſay, that no man owes to ſwear for any thing, but ſimply without Oath to affirm or to deny, and if he ſwear, he ſins.

Anſwer. This Article ſaid I not that I have mind of, in this manner; but oft have I ſaid, and yet will, that men ſhould not ſwear by any creature by the law of God; and that no man ſhould ſwear in idel, as wellnigh all the people uſeth, and therefore methinks it is no need to comfort the people in ſweating. For from the old unto the young, and namely men of holy Church breken his heſt, and few Biſhops purſuen hem therefore.

To swear by no creature.

fifteenth Article. The fifteenth Article is this, that I ſhould have taught to true men of Chriſt, That on no manney they ſhould worſhip the Image of him that was done on the Croſs, or the Image of the bleſſed Maid his Mother, or of other Saints into honour and worſhip of the ſame ordeinet in the mind of them. And oft ſithes the worſhip of ſuch image he was reprovet, ſaying and ſtrongly affirming, that Churchmen ſinnen and done idolatry.

Anſwer. This concluſion have I not ſaid in theſe terms; but this I ſay with proteſtation, that God commands in his law in divers places, Exod.20. Levit. 19. & 26. Deut. 5. & 7. Tobiæ 1. Baruc. 6. 2. ad Corin.10. Eſay 45. Jer.2.6.8. & 10.22. & ultimo Sapient. 13. & 14. & 15. Mac.2. & Threnorum 4. & peſtremo; that men ſhould not worſhippen graven images that ben werks of mens hands; and alſo he bids, that men ſhould not make to hem graven images in likeneſs of the things that ben in Heaven, to that end to worſhippen hem; ſethen neither God ne Chriſt by his Manhood, gave never commandment to make theſe images, ne expreſs counſel, ne his Apoſtles in all his law, ne to worſhip ſuch that bene made. But well I wot, that by mens own relation, that have miſbelevet in hem, that many men ſinnen in maumetry, worſhipping ſuch dead images: † Not for thy, to tho men ben Images good to whom they have ben but Kalenders, and through the ſight of them they knowen the better and worſhippen oft God and his Saints. And to ſuch men they done harm that ſetten her hope and truſt in hem, or done any worſhip to hem againſt Gods law and his heſt. Unde ait Gregorius in regiſtro, libro 10. in Epiſtola ad ſerenum Epiſcopum; Si quis imagines facere voluerit, minime prohibe; adorare omnino prohibe. Sed hoc ſolicite fraternitas tua admoneat, ut ex viſione rei geſtæ ardorem compunctionis percipiant, ut in adoratione totius trinitatis proſternantur.

Images not to be worſhipped.

† Not for thy, that is, notwithſtanding.

Greg. Regiſt. lib. 10.

These Concluſions, Points and Articles that I have under proteſtation, in this Book affirmed, I will ſtand by hem, and maintain hem (with the grace of almighty God) to the time that the contrary be provet duly by Gods law: And this proteſtation I make for my faith and my belief as I did at the beginning; that whenſoever this worſhipful or any other Chriſtian man ſhews me verily by Gods law the contrary of this, I will wholly forſake hem, and take me to the veray trouth and better underſtanding of wiſer men, ready to be amended by the law of Jeſus Chriſt, and be a true Chriſten man, and faithful ſon of holy Church; and of theſe I beſeech you all bear witneſs where ye commen.

And to ſee and hear poſitions and articles denied by the ſaid William, to be proved by faithful witneſſes, and other lawful trials againſt the ſaid William. And to receive for his falſe, heretical, erroneous and ſchiſmatical Doctrine, that Juſtice ſhall appoint, or elſe to ſhew cauſes why the premiſes ſhould not be done.

'And if the ſaid William lieth privily, or elſe cannot be ſo cited in his proper perſon; we will that in your Churches, when moſt people ſhall then come together to Divine Service, you openly with a loud voice, and that may be underſtood, cauſe the ſaid William peremptorily to be cited unto the premiſes, certifying the ſame William, that whether he ſhall appear the day and place appointed or no, we notwithſtanding will proceed unto the premiſes againſt the ſaid William, according to the canonical Decrees by form of law, in the abſence or contumacy of the ſaid William notwithſtanding. We will moreover, if the ſaid William ſhall appear at the ſaid day and place, as is aforeſaid, before us, friendly hear him, and honeſtly, and favourably, as far as we may with Gods leave, deal with him; granting free licence to come and to go for his natural liberty without any hurt either in body or goods. And ſee that you fully certifie us of the things that you or any of you ſhall do about the execution of this our commandment, and that by your Letters Patents ſigned with your Seal authentical, giving alſo faithfully to the ſaid William, or to his lawful Proctor, if he require it, a Copy of this our preſent commandment.

'Given at our houſe of Whitburne under our Seal the fifth day of the Month of July, in the year of our Lord 1391.

On Thurſday the 20*th* of July, in the year of the Lord aforeſaid, We in the Pariſh Church of North Lidebury aforeſaid, about ſix of the Clock ſitting in judgment, after that it was reported unto us, how the foreſaid William was perſonally taken and lawfully cited; cauſed the ſame W. then and there openly in judgment to be called out, to do, hear and receive ſuch things, whereto he was afore cited, and to do otherwiſe that which Juſtice ſhould perſwade. And the ſaid William appeared neither by himſelf, nor by Proctor; but only by a ſervant (whoſe name we know not) he ſent a certain Schedule of Paper, made like an Indenture unto us, to excuſe him. After which Schedule, ſeen, read, and with right deliberation weighed, and in any wiſe notwithſtanding, we adjudged the ſaid William (after he was often called, and long, even to the due hour tarried for, and by no means appearing) worthily obſtinate; and for his obſtinacy, and for his ſtubborneſs, we aſſigned unto him the 29*th* day of July, in the Church of Ponſley, to appear before us with the foreſaid ſafeguard, to anſwer more fully to ſuch Articles, and otherwiſe to hear, receive and do as before is noted.

The ſecond days Act.

Upon Saturday being the 29*th* of July, and in the year of the Lord aforeſaid, We John by Gods permiſſion the fore remembred Biſhop in the Church of Pontesbury, of our Dioceſs, at ſix of the clock, or thereabout, ſitting in judgment; made the ſaid William of Swinderby to be openly called, that (as was to him appointed and aſſigned) he ſhould appear before us, to anſwer to the foreſaid Articles more fully, and to declare the ſaid Articles as the darkneſs of his anſwers did worthily require. And becauſe the ſaid William being called, and for a due time looked for, did make no means to appear, we pronounced him to be obſtinate, and for his obſtinateneſs (to overcome his malice, and of our exceeding favour) thought good to appoint, and did appoint the 8*th*. of Auguſt, then next following, at Cleobury Mortemere of the ſame our Dioceſs, unto the ſaid William for the ſame thing.

The ſecond ſitting againſt Will. Swinderby.

The third days Act.

Upon Tueſday the 8*th* of Auguſt, the year aforeſaid, I John by Gods permiſſion Biſhop of Hereford aforeſaid, in the Church of Cleobury Mortemer, about ſix of the clock, ſitting in judgment, cauſed the foreſaid William Swinderby to be called many times openly, to do and receive about the premiſes, according to the appointment of the ſame day that Juſtice ſhould adviſe, which William did not appear at all. Whereupon, we after that the ſaid William was called, and often proclaimed, and long looked for, but appeared not at all, did judge him worthily (as of right appertained) obſtinate; and for his obſtinateneſs, aſſigned him the ſixteenth day of the ſame Month of Auguſt next following, in the Pariſh Church of Whithorne of the ſame our Dioceſs, to bring forth, or to ſee brought forth, all laws, muniments, and other kinds of proofs, and to ſee all witneſſes brought forth, admitted and ſworn, by whom and which things we intend to prove the foreſaid Articles, or at leaſtwiſe ſome of the ſame.

The third ſitting againſt Will. Swinderby.

The fourth days Act.

Upon Wedneſday the 16*th*. day of the Month of Auguſt the year aforeſaid, We John the Biſhop in the Pariſh Church of Whithorn aforeſaid of our Dioceſs, ſitting in Judgment, cauſed the ſaid William Swinderby oftentimes to be called, who (as is aforeſaid) appeared not at all; whom, after that he was ſo called, proclaimed, and long looked for, and yet by no means appeared, we pronounced to be obſtinate. We received alſo by certain faithful Chriſtians, and zealous Men for the Catholick Faith of our Dioceſs, a certain proceſs made, and had at another time againſt the ſame William, before the reverend Father in God and Lord, Lord John by the grace of God, Biſhop of Lincoln, confirmed by the hanging on of the Seal of the ſame reverend Father, the Lord Biſhop of Lincoln. The tenor whereof word for word is contained before. And theſe faithful Chriſtians moreover againſt the obſtinateneſs of the ſaid William Swinderby brought forth diſcreet men, Mr. William Leviet, Parſon of the Pariſh Church of Kyverſly, and alſo Edmund Waterdon, Pariſh Chaplain of the Chappel of N. and Roger Newton, and Hugh Sheppert, Lay men of the Dioceſs of Lincoln, asking inſtantly that they might be received for witneſſes, to prove ſome of the foreſaid Articles, whom againſt the obſtinateneſs of the ſaid William Swinderby, we thought good to receive and did receive, and their Oaths on the holy Goſpels of God, being laid hands on corporally in our hand: And did diligently examine them in proper perſon ſeverally in form of law; whoſe ſayings and depoſitions are afterward brought in, and at the inſtance of the ſame faithful Chriſtians, we aſſigned the ſecond day of September then next following, to the ſaid William Swinderby, to ſay and alledge againſt the ſaid Proceſs, Witneſſes, and their ſayings, in the ſaid Church of Whithorn; decreeing that a Copy ſhould be made for him of theſe things that were brought forth, and of the depoſitions of the Witneſſes. Here we fail in our Copy, till the Regiſter come to our hands again.

The fourth ſitting againſt Will. Swinderby.

Of this proceſs mention is made before, pag. 531.

by the door, but wendeth upon another half, he is a night thief and a day thief. And there he telleth, how he that flyeth from the flock, is not the Sheepherd, but an hired man, and it pertaineth not to him of the ſheep.

2d. Concluſion. * To the ſecond Concluſion that he ſaien is error or hereſie, that toucheth taking away of the temporalties and of lordſhips of Prieſts that been evil livers.

Declaration I ſay, me ſeemeth that the Concluſion is true, and is this, that it were needful and leeful to ſecular Lords by way of charity, and by power given to them of God, in default of Prelates that amend nought by Gods Law; curſed Curates, that openly miſuſe the goods of the holy Church, that ben poor mens goods; and cuſtomably ayens the Law of God, (the which poor men Lords ben holden to maintain and defend) to take away, and to draw from ſuch Curates, poor mens goods in help of the poor, and their own wilful offerings, and their bodily alms deeds of worldly goods, and give them to ſuch as duly ſerven God in the Church, and ben ready in upbearing of the charge that Prelates ſhoulden do, and done it not. And as anences taking away of temporalties, I ſay thus, that it is leeful to Kings, to Princes, to Dukes, and to Lords of the world, to take away from Popes, from Cardinals, from Biſhops, Prelates, and poſſeſſioners in the Church, their temporalties and their alms that they have given them upon condition, that they ſhoulden ſerve God the better; when they verily ſeen that their giving and taking ben contrary to the law of God, contrary to Chriſts living, and his Apoſtles; and namely, in that they taken upon them that they ſhoulden be next followers of Chriſt and his Apoſtles in poorneſs and meekneſs, to be ſecular Lords againſt the teaching of Chriſt and of Saint Peter. Truly me ſeemeth that all chriſten men, and namely Prieſts ſhoulden take keep, that their doing were according with the law of God, either the old law, either the new. The Prieſts of the old law were forbidden to have lordſhips among their brethren; for God ſaid, that he would be their part and their heritage. And Chriſt that was the higheſt Prieſt of the New Teſtament forſook worldly lordſhip, and was here in form of a ſervant, and forbad his Prieſts ſuch Lordſhips, and ſaid, Reges gentium dominantur eorum, &c. vos autem non ſic; that is, The Kings of the Heathen bear dominion and rule, &c. but you ſhall not do ſo. And as St. Peter ſaith, Neque dominantes in clero, &c. Not bearing rule and dominion of the Clergy, &c. So it ſeemeth me, that it is againſt both laws of God, that they have ſuch Lordſhips, and that their title to ſuch Lordſhips is not full good. And ſo it ſeemeth me, that if they have been thereto of evil living, it is no great peril to take away from them ſuch Lordſhips, but rather needful, if the taking away were in charity, and not for ſingular covetouſneſs, ne wrath. And I ſuppoſe, that if Friers that been bounden to their founders to live in poverty, would break their rule and take worldly Lordſhips; might not men lawfully take from them ſuch Lordſhips, and make them to live in poverty as their rule would? And forſooth, it ſeemeth me, that Prieſts oughten alſo well to keep Chriſts rule, as Friers owen to keep the rule of their founder. Jeremy witneſſeth, how God commended Rechab's children, for that they would not break their faders bidding in drinking of wine; and yet Jeremy proffered them Wine to drink. And ſo I trow, that God would commend his Prieſts if they woulden forſake worldly Lordſhips, and holden them apayed with liſelot, and with clothing, and buſie them faſt about their heritage of Heaven. And God ſaith Numer. 18. In terra eorum nihil poſſidebitis, nec tenebitis partem inter eos: Ego pars & hæreditas veſtra in medio filiorum Iſrael, &c. Et Deut. 18. Non habebites Sacerdotes & Levitæ, & omnes qui de eadem tribu eſtis, partem & hæreditatem cum reliquo Iſrael; quia ſacrificia Domini & oblationes ejus comedunt, & nihil accipiunt de poſſeſſione fratrum ſuorum. Dominus enim ipſe hæreditas ipſorum, ſicut locutus eſt illis. Et Lucæ 14. Sic ergo omnis ex vobis, qui non renunciaverit omnibus quæ poſſidet, non poteſt meus eſſe diſcipulus. Et Jeronymus in Epiſtola 34. Et Bernardus libro 20. ad Eugenium Papam. Et Hugo de Sacramentis, parte 2. libri Secundi, cap. 7. Et 12. q. pri. cap. Duo ſunt: Et cap. Clericus. Et Bernardus in ſermone de Apoſtolis, ſuper illud; Ecce nos reliquimus omnia. Et Chryſoſt. ſuper Matth. Et [illegible]tus Teſtamentum. That is, You ſhall have no inheritance in that land, nor have no part amongſt them; I will be your part and inheritance amongſt the Children of Iſrael, &c. Deut. 18. The Prieſts and Levites, and all that be of the ſame Tribe, ſhall have no part nor inheritance with the reſt of Iſrael, becauſe they ſhall eat the Sacrifices of the Lord and his Oblations, and they ſhall take nothing for the poſſeſſion of their brethren. The Lord himſelf is their poſſeſſions, as he ſpake unto them. And the 14*th.* Chapter of Luke, Even ſo every one of you, which forſaketh not all that he poſſeſſeth, cannot be my Diſciple. And Jerome in his 14*th.* Epiſtle hath the like words. And Bernard in his 20*th.* Book to Eugenius the Pope. And alſo Hugo in his Book De Sacramentis, the ſecond part of his ſecond Book the 7*th* Chapter. And alſo in the 12*th* firſt Chapter, Duo ſunt, and in the Chapter Clericus. And again Bernard in Sermone de Apoſtolis, upon this place, Ecce nos reliquimus omnia, Behold we leave all, &c. Chryſoſtome upon the Goſpel of S. Matth. &c.

Every gift given upon condition, is fruſtrate upon the breach of every ſuch condition.

If the Pope may take from the Friers, to cauſe them to keep St. Francis rule, may not the Emperor take from the Pope to cauſe him to keep Chriſts rule.

* The third Concluſion toucheth the matter of preaching of Prieſts, withouten leave of Biſhops, and is this, That ſuch Prieſts may counſel ſinful men, that ſhewen to them their ſins, after the wit and cunning that God hath given, to turn hem from ſin to vertuous life.

As touching preaching of the Goſpel, I ſay that no Biſhop oweth to lett a true Prieſt, that God hath giffen grace, wit and cunning to do that office. For both Prieſts and Deacons that God hath ordained Deacons or Prieſts bene holden, by power given to them of God, to preach to the people the Goſpel, and namely and ſoverenly, Popes, Biſhops, Prelates and Curates; for this is due to the people and the Pariſhioners, to have it and ask it. And hereto ſeemeth me, that Chriſt ſaid generally to [illegible] his Diſciples; Ite & prædicate Evangelium omni creaturæ, Go and preach the Goſpel to all creatures, as well as he ſaid, Ite & baptizate omnes gentes, Go and baptiſe all Nations; and alſo as well longeth preaching to Prieſts without leave of a Biſhop, as doth baptiſing; and then why may he not preach Gods Word withouten a Biſhops leave? And ſithen Chriſt bod his Prieſts preach, who ſhould forbidden them preach? The Apoſtles were forbidden of a Biſhop at Jeruſalem, to ſpeak more of the name of Jeſus, but Peter ſaid, Si juſtum eſt in conſpectu Dei, vos potius audire quam Dominum, judicate; that is, Whether it be juſt in the ſight of God to hear and obey you before the Lord, be your ſelves Judges. A Biſhop may not lett a Prieſt of giving bodily alms in his Dioceſs; much more may he not lett the doing of ſpiritual alms in his Dioceſs by Gods law. A Prieſt may ſay his Mattens withouten the Biſhops leave; for the Pope, that is above the Biſhop, hath charged Prieſts therewith: And me thinketh, that Chriſts bidding ſhould be all ſo much of charge as the Popes, Mat. 10. Euntes autem prædicate. Ite, ecce ego mitto vos. Et Mar. 16. Euntes in mundum univerſum, &c. Lucæ 10. Et Anacletus Pap. Diſt. 21. cap. In Novo Teſtamento. Et Beda ſuper illud; Meſſis quidem multa. Et Iſidorus de ſummo bono, cap. 44. Et Gregorius in Canone diſt. 43. Præconis quippe officium ſuſcipit, &c. Et Chryſoſt. Diſtinct. 43. Nolite timere. Et Auguſt. diſt. 34. cap. Quiſquis. Et Gregorius in ſuo paſtorali, cap. 38. Qui enim eſt. Et Chryſoſtom. Hom. 31. & in Toletano Concilio: Ignorantia. Et Auguſt. In Prologo ſermonum ſuorum, & Hieronymus, diſt. 9. Ecce ego. Et Auguſt. ſuper id. Homo quidam peregrinus; That is, Go you forth and preach. And again, Behold I ſend you, &c. Mark 16. Go you into all the world, &c. and Luke 10. cap. in Novo Teſtamento. And Beda upon this place Meſſis quidem multa; the Harveſt is great. Alſo Iſidorus, De ſummo bono, cap. 44. And Gregorius in the Canon diſt. 43. Præconis quippe officium ſuſcipit, &c. And Chryſoſtome in his 34*th* diſtinction, Nolite timere. And Auguſtine in his 34*th* diſtinction, cap. Quiſquis. And Gregorius in his paſtoral, cap. 39. Qui enim eſt. And Chryſoſtome in his 31*ſt.* Homily. Et in Toletano Concilio, Ignorantia. And Auguſtine in the prologue of his Sermons. And Hierome in the 95th. diſtinct. Ecce ego. And Auguſtine upon this place, Homo quidam peregrinus, a certain Traveller, &c.

A Prieſt admitted ought to preach, [illegible] Biſhop forbid, ſo that he preach the Word.

* The

KING Ric. 2. 4th. Concluſion.

* The fourth Concluſion toucheth the Sacrament of the Altar, and is this.

That wholly I believe that the Sacrament of the Altar, made by vertue of heavenly words, is bread and Chriſts body; ſo as Chriſt himſelf ſaith in the Goſpel, and as S. Paul ſaith, and as Doctors in the common law have determined; to this ſentence John 6. Moſes hath not given you bread from Heaven, but my father will give you bread from Heaven. He is the true bread that came down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the World. My father giveth unto you bread indeed; the very true bread of God is that, which came down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the World. I am the bread of life; The bread which I will give is my fleſh. And in the Canon of the Maſs, Panem ſanctum vitæ æternæ, the holy bread of life. And Corinthians the tenth Chapter and firſt Epiſtle, The bread which we break, is it not the communicating of the body of the Lord? Let a man prove himſelf, and ſo eat of that bread, &c. And Canon De conſecratione, diſtinct. 2. under the authority of Hilarius the Pope, Corpus Chriſti quod ſumitur de altari, &c. And Auguſtine in the foreſaid diſt. That which is ſeen is bread, &c. That which faith requireth, is bread and is the body of Chriſt. And in the foreſaid diſtinction, cap. Omnia quæcunque, &c. By theſe two ſentences it is manifeſtly declared, that that bread and this be not two, but one bread and one fleſh. Note the words, for that he ſaith the bread and fleſh. And the Author, De divinis officiis, and alſo Auguſtine in his Book De remediis pœnitentiæ; Why preparеſt thou thy teeth, &c? And Ambroſe, De Sacramentis, de conſecratione, diſt. 2. Revera mirabile eſt, &c. This meat which you receive, and this bread of one which deſcended from Heaven, doth miniſter the ſubſtance of eternal life, and whoſoever ſhall eat the ſame ſhall not die everlaſtingly, and is the body of Chriſt. Note how he ſaith, and is the body of Chriſt.

5th. Concluſion.

* The fifth Article telleth of forgiveneſs of ſins, and is this: That very contrition withouten charity and grace, do away all ſins before done of that man that is verily contrite; and all true confeſſion made by mouth outwardly to a wiſe Prieſt and a good, profiteth much to a man, and it is needful and helping, that men ſhew their life to ſuch, truſting fully to Gods mercy, that he forgiveth the ſin.

Declaration

Remiſſion double.

And hereto I ſay, that there been two remiſſions of ſin; one that belongeth only to God, and that remiſſion is the cleanſing of the ſoul from ſin: and the other remiſſion, a certifying that one man certifieth another, that his ſins been forgiven of God, if he be ſorry with all his heart for them, and is in full will to leave them for ever; and this manner of forgiveneſs longeth to Prieſts. Of the firſt manner of forgiveneſs David ſaith, And I ſaid, I will confeſs my unrighteouſneſs unto the Lord, and thou forgaveſt me my miſdeed. And Zechary ſaith, And thou, O child, ſhalt be called the Prophet of the higheſt, &c. To give knowledge of ſalvation unto his people for the remiſſion of their ſins, by the bowels of Gods mercy. And John Baptiſt, Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world. And Saint John the Evangeliſt ſaith in his Epiſtle, If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and cleanſe us from all our iniquity. And it followeth, If any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, even Jeſus Chriſt, and he it is that is the propitiation for our ſins. And of the other remiſſion of ſins, Chriſt ſpeaketh in the Goſpel, and ſaith, Whoſe ſins ye forgive they ſhall be forgiven. And mans forgiveneſs availeth little, but if God forgive our ſins through his grace.

6th. Concluſion.

* The ſixth Concluſion toucheth indulgences and pardons that the Pope granteth in his Bulls; and men callen it an Abſolution A pœna & culpa.

Declaration Either there is no Purgatory, or elſe the Pope is cruel & uncharitable.

The Popes powver can keep none from bodily pain. Ergo much leſs from ſpiritual.

Of this manner of ſpeech I cannot find in the Goſpel, ne in no place of holy Writ, ne I have not read that Chriſt uſed this manner of remiſſion, ne none of his Apoſtles. But as me ſeemeth, if the Pope had ſuch a power, ſithen the pains after a mans death been much greater than any bodily pains of the world; me thinketh he ſhould of charity keep men out of ſuch pains, and then men needed not to find ſo many vicious Prieſts, after their life, to bring their ſouls out of Purgatory. Another thing me thinketh, that ſith the Popes power ne may not keep us in this world from bodily pains, as from cold, from hunger, from dread, from ſorrow and other ſuch pains, how ſhould his power help us from ſpiritual pains, when we been dead? But for that no man cometh after his death to tell us the ſooth of what pain they been, men mow tell thereof what him luſt. Saint John ſaith in his Apocalyps, that he ſaw under the Altar the ſouls of them which were ſlain for the Word of God, and for the teſtimony which they had. And they did cry with a loud voice, ſaying, How long Lord holy and true, doſt not thou revenge our blood of them which dwell on the earth? And white ſtoles were given to every of them to reſt a while, till the number of their fellow ſervants and brethren ſhould be fulfilled, which alſo remained to be ſlain as they were, &c. Here ſeemeth it, that theſe ſouls were not aſſoiled a pœna, that is, from pain; for their deſire is not fulfilled. And they were bidden abide awhile, and that is a pain. And if Martyrs were not aſſoiled from pain, it is hard for any man to ſay, that he aſſoileth other men a pœna. Alſo good mens ſouls have not but ſpiritual bliſs, and they want bodily bliſs, until their Reſurrection in the day of doom. And after they deſired to have that bliſs, and abiden it, and that is pain to them. And I cannot ſee that the Pope hath power to bring him from this pain. But if any man can ſhew me, that he hath ſuch a power granted in the troth of holy Writ, I will gladly leeſen it.

If the Martyrs being dead, be not aſſured from grief of tarrying, much leſs can they aſſoil other from pains of Purgatory.

The Pope hath no powver ground. d upon Scripture to bring from pain of purgatory.

7th Concluſion.

* The ſeventh point ſpeaketh of the Pope, and is this; Sith it is only due to God, as I have ſaid before, to geve and to grant plenar remiſſion from pain, and from blame; that whatſoever he be, Pope or other, that preſumptuouſly miſtaketh upon him the power that is only due to God, in that, inaſmuch as in him is, he maketh himſelf even with Chriſt, and blaſphemeth God, as Lucifer did, when he ſaid, Aſcendam, & ero ſimilis altiſſimo; that is, I will aſcend, and be like the higheſt, &c.

The Pope maketh himſelf even with Chriſt.

Declaration The Biſhop of Norwich, Henry Spencer the Popes Warrior ſet up of the Pope to ſlay his enemies, Pag. 309.

For that I ſay, if the Pope hold men of armes in maintaining of his temporal Lordſhip, to venge him on them that gilten and offenden him, and geveth remiſſion to fight and to ſley them, that contrarien him, as men ſayden he did by the Biſhop of Norwich, not putting his ſword in his ſheath, as God commanded to Peter, he is Antichriſt. For he doth the contrary of the commandment of Jeſus Chriſt, that bad Peter forgiven to his brother ſeventy ſithe ſeven ſithe. Well I find in the Goſpel, that when Chriſt ſent his Diſciples to Samaria, the Samaritans would not receive them. And ſome of them bidden Chriſt, that he ſhould make fire come down from Heaven, to deſtroy the City. And he blamed them and ſaid, Neſcitis cujus ſpiritus eſtis, Filius hominis non venit animas perdere, ſed ſalvare. That is, ye know not of what ſpirit ye are; The Son of Man is not come down to deſtroy, but to ſave the lives and ſouls of men, &c. If Chriſt then come to ſave men, and not to ſlay them; who that doth the reverſe hereof, is againſt Chriſt, and then he is Antichriſt. Chriſt bad Peter put his ſword into his ſheath and ſaid, Omnes qui gladium acceperunt gladio peribunt: That is, all which take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. And I cannot find that Peter drew out his ſword after that time, but ſuffered as Chriſt ſaid, Cum ſenueris, alius cinget te, & ducet te quo tu non vis: That is, When thou ſhalt wax old, another ſhall gird thee, and lead thee whether thou wilt not. And therefore, ſaid Peter, Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us example that we ſhould follow his ſteps. And Paul ſaith, Not defending your ſelves, but give place to anger, leave revenging to me and I ſhall reward them, &c. And therefore it ſeemeth to me, that it is much againſt Chriſts lore, that his Vicar ſhould be a fighter; ſithen that he mote be a Shepherd, that ſhould go before his ſheep, and let them come after him, and not with ſwords to drive them away from him. For as Chriſt ſaith, A good ſhepherd ſhall put his life for his ſheep. And zif all that Chriſt had two ſwords, when that he was taken of the Jews, he ſaid himſelf it was for that the Scriptures moten zif be fulfilled, Quoniam cum iniquis deputatus eſt; that is, He was reputed among the wicked; and not to figure two ſwords that men ſayen the Pope hath to govern with the Church. And when I ſee ſuch doings of the Pope, and many other that accorden not with Chriſts lore, ne his living; and when I read divers Scriptures of holy Writ, I am ſoul aſtonied whether they ſhoulden be underſtood of him, or of any other. And I pray you for Gods love tell me the ſooth. Chriſt ſaith, Many ſhall come in my name, ſaying,

The Pope contrary to Chriſt.

The Pope again proved Antichriſt.

Two ſwords never given to the Pope.

ing, I am Chriſt, and ſhall ſeduce many, &c. Chriſt (I wot well) is as much to ſay, as he that is anointed, and two anointings there were in the law, one of Kings, another of Prieſts. And Chriſt was both King and Prieſt, and ſo the Pope ſaith that he is. And if all that have been Emperors of Rome, and other Heathen Kings have been Antichriſts, they come not in Chriſts name. But whoſo cometh in Chriſts name, and feigneth himſelf Chriſts friend, and he be privily his enemy, he may lightly beguile many. Saint Paul ſaith, before there cometh a defection firſt and the ſon of perdition ſhall be revealed, which is the adverſary, and is extolled above all that is named God, or which is worſhipped; ſo that he ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, ſhewing himſelf as God. And it followeth in the ſame place; and now ye know what holdeth till he be revealed in his time, for he worketh already the myſtery of iniquity. Only he that holdeth, let him hold till he come abroad, and then that wicked one ſhall be revealed, whom the Lord Jeſus ſhall ſlay with the ſpirit of his mouth, &c. And St. John ſaith in the Apocalyps, I ſaw another Beaſt aſcending out of the earth, and two horns like to the Lamb. He ſpake like the Dragon, and had the power of the firſt Beaſt. Many ſuch authorities aſtonied me oft ſithes; and therefore I pray you, for the love of God, to tell me what they mean.

Tvvo ſorts of anointings in Scripture.

A defection in Antichriſts time.

The Sentence.

Mention vvas made of this ſchedule before in the firſt days Act, pag. 537.

THe which Schedule aforementioned, with the contents thereof, diligently of us peruſed, we conſidering that Diſeaſes, which be not eaſily cured with gentle remedy, muſt have harder plaiſters; conſidering moreover, theſe his Articles, with his anſwers to the ſame, and to other Articles alſo laſtly againſt him produced; firſt mature deliberation had before upon the whole matter, with the foreſaid Maſters and Doctors, as well ſecular as regular, to a great number, obſerving in the ſame all things to be obſerved in this behalf, have given ſentence againſt the ſaid William in form as followeth.

The ſentence given againſt him.

The name of Chriſt being invocated, We John by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop of Hereford, ſitting in Tribunal Seat, having God before our eyes, weighing and conſidering the Articles by the foreſaid faithful Chriſtians put up againſt the ſaid Swinderby, pretending himſelf to be Prieſt, with his anſwers upon the ſame, Actis & Actitatis before us in the cauſe of Heretical perverſity, with mature deliberation had before in this behalf, with Maſters and Doctors of Divinity, and alſo of other faculties, with their counſel and conſent; Do pronounce, decree and declare the ſaid William to have been and to be an Heretick, Schiſmatick, and a falſe informer of the people, and ſuch as is to be avoided of faithful Chriſtians. Wherefore we admoniſh, under the pain of the law, all and ſingular Chriſtians, of what ſex, ſtate, condition or prehemінence ſoever, that neither they nor any of them within our Dioceſs, or any other, do believe, receive, defend, or favour the ſaid William, till he ſhall deſerve fully to be reconciled to the boſom again of holy Church.

The Appeal of William Swinderby, from this ſentence of the Biſhop prefixed, unto the King and his Council.

The Appeal of William Swinderby from the Biſhop to the King and his Council.

IN nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen. I William Swinderby, Prieſt, knowledge openly to all Men, that I was before the Biſhop of Hereford the third day of October, and before many other good Clerks, to anſwer to certain Concluſions of the Faith that I was accuſed of. And mine Anſwer was this, that if the Biſhop or any man couthe ſhew me by Gods law, that my Concluſions or my Anſwers were error or hereſie, I would be amended, and openly revoke them before all the people.

* Something there lacketh in the Copy.

* Knowes in any of my Concluſions, but ſayden ſingly with ſword, that there was errors in them, and bidden me ſubject me to the Biſhop, and put me into his grace, and revoke mine error, and ſhewed me nought by Gods law ne reaſon, ne proved which they weren. And for I would not knowledge me guilty, ſo as I knew no error in them, of which I ſhould be guilty, therefore the Biſhops ſate in doom in mine abſence, and deemed me an Heretick, a Schiſmatick, and a teacher of errors, and denounced me accurſed, that I come not to correction of the Church, and therefore for this unrightful Judgment, I appeal to the Kings Juſtices for many other cauſes.

The Kings Court above the Biſhops Court.

One cauſe is, for the Kings Court in ſuch matter is above the Biſhops Court; for after that the Biſhop has accuſed, he may no fear by his law, but then mote he ſech ſuccour of the Kings law and by a Writ of Significavit put a man in Priſon.

The ſecond cauſe is, for in cauſe of Hereſie there liggeth judgment of death, and that dome may not be given without the Kings Juſtices. For the Biſhop will ſay, Nobis non licet interficere quemquam: That is, It is not lawful for us to kill any man, as they ſaiden to Pilate when Chriſt ſhould be doomed. And for I think that no Juſtice will give ſodainly an untrue doom, as the Biſhop did, and therefore openly I appeal to hem, and ſend my Concluſions to the Knights of the Parliament, to be ſhewed to the Lords, and to be taken to the Juſtices, to be well aviſet or that they geven doom.

What is an Heretick.

The third cauſe is, for it was a falſe doom; for no man is an Heretick, but he that maſterfully defends his error or hereſie, and ſtifly maintains it. And mine anſwer has been alway conditional, as the people openly knows, for ever I ſay, and yet ſay, and alway will; That if they cannen ſhew me by Gods law that I have erret, I will gladly bene amendet, and revoke mine errors, and ſo I am no Heretick, ne nevermore in Gods grace will ben en no wiſe.

The Biſhops lavv of condemnation full of hereſies and errors.

The fourth cauſe is, for the Biſhops aw, that they doom men by, is full of errors and hereſies, contrary to the truth of Chriſts law of the Goſpel.

For there, as Chriſts law bids us love our enemies, the Popes law gives us leave to hate them, and to ſley them and grants men pardon to werren againſt Heathen Men, and ſley hem. And there as Chriſts law teaches us to be merciful, the Biſhops law teaches to be wretchful. For death is the greateſt wrecth that man mowen done to him that guilty is.

Whereas Chriſts law teaches us, to bleſſen him that diſeazen us, and to pray for him; the Popes law teacheth us to curſe them, and in their great ſentence that they uſen, they preſume to damn hem to Hell that they curſen. And this is a foul hereſie of blaſphemy; whereas Chriſts law bids us be patient, the Popes laws juſtifies two ſwords, wherewith he ſmiteth the ſheep of the Church. And he has made Lords and Knights to ſwear to defend him and his Church.

There as Chriſts law forbiddeth us lechery, the Popes law juſtifies the abominable whoredom of common women, and the Biſhops in ſome place have a great Tribute or Rent of Whoredom.

The contrariety betveen the Pope and Chriſt.

There as Chriſts law bids to miniſter ſpiritual things freely to the people; the Pope with his law ſells for mony, after the quantity of the gift, Pardons, Orders, Bleſſings and Sacraments, and Prayers, and Benefices, and preaching to the people, as it is known amongſt them.

There as Chriſts law teaches peace; the Pope with his law aſſoiles men for mony to gader the People, Prieſts, and other to fight for his cauſe.

There as Chriſts law forbids ſwearing; the Popes law juſtifieth ſwearing, and compels men thereto.

Whereas Chriſts law teacheth his Prieſt to be poor; the Pope with his law juſtifies and maintains Prieſts to be Lords.

The cauſe vvhy Swinderby forſook the Pope.

And yet the fifth cauſe is, for the Popes law, that Biſhops demen men by, is the ſame unrightful law that Chriſt was demet by of the Biſhops, with the Scribes and with the Phariſees. For right as at that time they gaven more credens to the two falſe witneſſes that witneſſed againſt Chriſt, than they deden to all the people that witneſſeden to his true preaching and his Miracles; ſo the Biſhops of the Popes law geven more leven by their law to two Hereticks and Apoſtates, or two comen women that woulden witneſſeden agains a man in the cauſe of hereſie, than two thouſands of people that were true and good. And for the Pope is this Antichriſt, and his law contrary to Chriſt his law, fully I forſake this law, and ſo I reed all Chriſten men. For thus by another point of this law they mighten conquer much of this world; For whan they can, by this law preſent a man an Heretick, his goods ſhulen be forfeit from him and from his Heirs, and so might they lightly have two or three false witnesses to record an heresie again what true man so hem liked. Herefore me thinks, that whatsoever that I am a Christen man, I may lawfully appeal from a false doom of the Law, to be righteously demet by the trouth of Gods Law. And if this appeal will not serve, I appeal openly to my Lord Jesus Christ that shall deme all the world, for he, I wot well, will not spare for no man to deeme a trouth. And therefore I pray God Almighty with David in the Sauter Book, Deus judicium tuum regi da, & justitiam tuam filio regis; judicare populum tuum in justitia & pauperes tuos in judicio. That is, O God, give thy judgment to the King, and thy justice to the Kings Sons, to judge thy people in justice, and thy poor ones in judgment, &c.

A Letter sent to the Nobles and Burgesses of the Parliament, by Master William Swinderby.

A fruitful Letter to the Lords and Burgesses of the Parliament.

Jesus that art both God and Man, help thy people that loven thy Law, and make known through thy grace thy teaching to all Christen men. Dear Sirs, so as we seen by many tokens that this world draws to an end, and all that ever have been brought forth of Adams kind into this world shulen come togeder at Domesday, rich and poor, schone to geve accompt and receive after his deeds, joy or paynen for evermore: Therefore make we our werkes good, ye while that God of mercy abides, and be ye stable and true to God, and ye shulen see his help about you. Constantes estote & videbitis auxilium Domini super vos. This Land is full of Ghostly Cowards; in ghostly battel few dare stand. But Christ that comforter of all that falleth (to that his Heart brast for our love) against the fiend, the doughty Duke comforteth us thus; Estote fortes in bello, &c. Be ye strong in battel, he sayes, and Fight ye with the old Adder. State in fide, viriliter agite, &c. Wake ye and pray ye, stond ye in believe, do ye manly and be ye comfortet, and let all your things be done with charity. For Saint Paul that saw the privities of God in Heaven, bids thus in the Epistle; Evigilate justi, &c. Awake ye that been righteous men, be ye stable and unmoveable: Awake ye quickly and sleep nought, and stond now strongly for Gods Law. For Saint John in the Apocalyps says, Blessed be he that awakes; for nought to sleepers but to wakers God has behite the Crown of Life. For the hour is now, as S. Paul saith to us, from sleep for to rise, for he that early awakes to me, he shall find me, saith Christ himself. This awaking Ghostly is good living out of sin: This sleep betokens that which Cowardeth a mans heart from Ghostly comfort, and to stand in the same through a deceiveable sleep is this that lets a Man of the bliss of Heaven: The fiend makes men bold in sin, and ferd to do worship to God: death is a likening to a Thiefe that privily steals upon a man that now is rich, and full of wele, anon he makes him a needy wretche. Therefore said God by Saint John in the Apocalyps in this wise, Be thou waking, for if thou wake nought, I shall come to thee as a Thiefe, and thou shalt not wit what hour. And if the Husbandman (sayes Christ) wist what hour the Thiefe should come, he would wake and suffer him not to undermine his house. Saint Peter therefore warneth and saith; Wake and be ye ware, suffer ye no man (he sayes) as a Thiefe, but willingly for Gods love; for it is time, as Peters sayes, that doome begin from the House of God. Ye been the Body of Christ, sayes Paul, that needs must suffer with the head, or else your bodies been but dead and departed from Christ that is the head. And therefore cursed be he, sayes Paul, that loves not Jesus Christ. And wist it is that loves him, Christ himself tels in the Gospel; he that has my hests, and keepes them, he it is that loves me. Cursed be he therefore, sayes Paul, that doth Christs works deceiveably. Be ye not therefore, sayes Paul, ashamed of the true witness of Jesus Christ; for Christ our God says in the Gospel, He that shames me and my words, him shall mans Son ashame, when he shall come for to set in the siege of his Majesty. And each man, he says, that knows me and my words before men in this sinful Generation and whorish, Mans son shall knowledge him before my Father, says Christ himself, when he shall come with his Angels in the Glory of his Father. Sith ye therefore been Christen men, that is to say, Christs men, shew in deed that ye been such as ye daren shew you the Kings men; for hit had been, as Peter says, better not to have known the way of truth, then after the knowing thereof to be converted backward therefrom. We knowen Christ, that is trought; we sain all through our belief, if we turn from him for dred, truly we deny the troth. And therefore sith our time is short, how short no man knows but God, do we the good that we may to Gods worship, when we have time. Be true, says God, to the death, and you shall have the Crown of life. And think on Judas Macchabeus, that was Gods true Knight, that comforted heartily Gods true people, to be the followers of his Law. And geve ye, he said, your lives for the Testament of your Fathers. And ye shulen win, he said, great joy, and a name for evermore. Was not Abraham, *he said, in temptation founden true, and was * areckt unto him evermore to righteousness? Joseph in time of his anguish he kept truly Gods best, he was made by Gods providence Lord of* Egypt, for his troth. Phinees our fadure loving, he saith, the zeal of God, took the Testament of everlasting Priesthood. Josua, for he fulfillet the Word of God, was doomes man in Israel. Caleph, that witnessed in the Church, he took therefore the Heritage, he saith: David in his mercy he gat the Siege of the Kingdom in Worlds: Heli, for that he loved the zeal of Gods Law, was taken up into heaven. Ananny, Azary, and Misael, he says, weren delivered thoore through true belief out of the hoat flame of fire. True Daniel in his simpleness was deliveret from the Lions mouth. Bethink ye therefore, he says, by Generation and Generation, and thou shalt never find that he failed that man that truly trusted in him. And therefore dread you nought, he says, of the words of a sinful man; his glory is, he says but worms and tords: he is to day, he saith, ymade hy, to morrow, he says, he is not founden; for he is turned, he says, into his Earth again, and the mind of him is perished. Sons therefore, he says, by ye comfortet, and dy manly in the Law: For when ye han done that that God commands you to do, ye shulen be glorious in him. And King David says also on this wise in the Psalter Book; Blessed be they (Lord) that keepen thy Law, in Worlds of Worlds they shall praise thee. And in Levit. says God thus, Gif that ye wenden in mine hests, and keepen my commandments, and done hem, I shall bring forth their Fruit, and Trees shall be fulfilled with Apples. And ye shall eat your Bread in fulness, ye shoulen dwell in your Land without dred; I shall give peace in your costs, ye shall sleep and no man shall fear you. Evil beasts I shall done away from you, and sword shall not pass your terms, ye shulen pursue your Enemies, and they shall fall before you; fifty of yours shulne pursue an hundreth of heren, an hundret of yours, a thousand of theirs: your Enemies, he saith, sholen fall through sword, and your sute: I shall, he says, behold you and make you to wax, and ye shall be multipliet: And I shall strength with you my covenant, ye shall eat the aldest, and the new shull come in thereon. And ye shulne cast forth the old: I shall dwell in the midst of you. And I shall wend amongs you, and I shall be your God, and ye shulne be my people. If that ye hear me not, ne done nought all my hests, but despisen my law and my doomes, and that ye done not tho things that of me bene ordenet, and breaken my commandments and my covenants; I shall do these things to you. I shall visit you surely in nene and brenning, which shall dimme your eghen, and shall wast your lives about nought. Ye shulne sow your seed, for hit shall be devouret of Enemies, I shall put put my face against you, and ye shall fall before your Enemies. And ye shullen be underlings to them that han hatet you, ye shall flee, no man pursuing. And if ye will not be buxome to me, I shall add thereunto thornes and sevenfold blame. And I shall all to brast the hardness of you, I shall geve the Heaven above you as Iron, and the Earth as Brass. About nought shall your labour be, for the Earth shall bring you forth no Fruit, ne Tree shall geve none Apples unto you. If that ye wenden against me, and will not hear me, I shall add hereto sevenfold wounds for your sins. I shall send amongst you Beasts of the field that shall devoure you and your Beasts, I shall bring you into a field, and ways shulne be desart. And if that ye will not receive lore, but wenden againſt me, I will alſo wenden againſt you, and I ſhall ſmite you ſeven ſithes for your ſins. I ſhall lead in upon you ſword, venger of my covenant: and upon the fleen into Cities I ſhall ſend Peſtilence in the mideſt of you. So that tenne women ſhall bake their Bread in one furnace, and yield them again by weight, and ye ſhall eat, and be not fillet. If that ye hear me not by theſe things, but wenden againſt me, I ſhall wend in againſt you in a contrary woodneſs, and blame you with ſeven plagues for your ſins, ſo that they ſhulene eat the fleſh of your Sons and of your Daughters. And inſomuch my ſoul ſhall loth you, that I ſhall bring your Cities into wildernes, and your Sanctuaries I ſhall make deſart, ne I ſhall not over that receive ſweet odor of your Mouth. And I ſhall diſperkle your Land, and Enemies ſhullen marvel thereon, when they ſhulen inhabit it, I ſhall ſperkle you among heathen, and draw my ſword after you. Theſe vengeances and many moe God ſaid ſhould fall on them that break his bidding, and deſpiſeth his laws, and his doomes. Then ſith Chriſt become man, and bought us with his heart blood, and has ſhewed us ſo great love, and given us an eaſie law, of the beſt that ever might be made, and to bring us to the joy of Heaven, and we deſpiſe it and loven it nought: what vengeance will be taken hereon, ſo long as he has ſuffered us, and ſo mercifully abidden, when he ſhall come that righteous judge in the clouds to deme this world? Therefore turn we us to him, and leave ſin that he hates, and over all things maintain his law that he confirmed with his death. For other laws, that men had made, ſhould be demed at that day by the juſt Law of Chriſt, and the maker that them made; and then we won that long life and that joy that Paul ſpeaketh of, that eye ne ſee not, ne ear heard not, ne into mans heart aſcended not, the bliſs and joy that God hath ordained to them that loven him and his laws.

Dan. 14.

Psal. 119. Levit. 26.

Dear worſhipful Sirs in this World, I beſeech you for Chriſt's love, as ye that I trow loven Gods law and trouth (that in theſe days is greatly born aback) that they wollen vouchſafe theſe things that I ſend you written to Gods worſhip, to let them be ſhewed in the Parliament, as your wits con beſt conceive, to moſt worſhip to our God, and to ſhewing of the trouth and amending of holy Church. My concluſion, and mine appeal, and other true matters of Gods law (gif any man can find therein error, falſeneſs, or defalt, provet by the Law of Chriſt clearly to Chriſten mens knowledge) I ſhall revoke my wrong conceit, and by Gods law be amendet; ever ready to hold with Gods law openly and privily with Gods grace, and nothing to hold, teach, or maintain that is contrary to his law.

The faithful requeſt of William Swinderby.

¶ Of this proceſs, anſwers, and condemnation of this worthy Prieſt, and true ſervant of Chriſt, William Swinderby, you have heard. What afterward became upon him I have not certainly to ſay or affirm; whether he in priſon died, or whether he eſcaped their hands, or whether he was burned, there is no certain relation made. This remaineth out of doubt, that during the life of King Richard the Second no great harm was done unto him. Which was to the year 1401. at what time King Richard being wrongfully depoſed, Henry the Fourth invaded the Kingdom of England. About the beginning of whoſe reign we read of a certain Parliament holden at London, mentioned alſo of Thomas Walden (as is above ſpecified) in which Parliament it was decreed; That whoſoever ſhewed themſelves to be favourers of Wickliff, who at that time were called Lollards, they ſhould be apprehended, and if ſo be they did obſtinately perſevere in that Doctrine, they ſhould be delivered over unto the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, and from him ſhould be committed unto the ſecular Magiſtrate. This law (ſaith the Story) brought a certain Prieſt unto puniſhment the ſame year, who was burned in Smithfield in the preſence of a great number. This have we drawn out of a piece of an old Story: and it is moſt certain that there ſuch a Prieſt was burned for the affirmation of the true faith; but it doth not appear by the Story what the Prieſts name was. Notwithſtanding by divers conjectures it appeareth unto me that his name was Swinderby, that was forced to recant before the Biſhop of Lincoln. Whereby what is to be conjectured by the premiſſes, let other men judge what they think, I have nothing hereof expreſly to affirm. This is plain for all men to judge (which have here ſeen and read his Story) that if he were burned, then the Biſhops, Friers, and Prieſts, which were the cauſes thereof, have a great thing to anſwer to the Lord, when he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead, & ſeculum per ignem.

The ſtory and proceſs againſt Walter Brute.

The Story of Walter Brute a Britain.

AFter the ſtory of William Swinderby, I thought good and convenient next to adjoyn the acts and doings of Walter Brute his joynt fellow and companion, being a Lay-man, and learned; brought up as it ſeemeth in the Univerſity of Oxford, being there alſo graduate. The tractation of whoſe diſcourſe, as it is ſomething long: So therein may appear divers things worthy to be read and conſidered.

Firſt, the mighty operation of Gods Spirit in him, his ripe knowledge, modeſt ſimplicity, his valiant conſtancy, his learned tractations and manifold conflicts ſuſtained againſt Gods Enemies. On the contrary part in his adverſaries may appear Might againſt Right, mans authority againſt plain verity; againſt which they, having nothing directly to anſwer, proceed in condemnation againſt whom they are able to bring forth no confutation. The chiefeſt occaſion, that ſeemed to ſtir up the heart and zeal of this Walter againſt the Pope, was the impudent pardons and indulgences of Pope Urban, granted to Henry Spencer Biſhop of Norwich, to fight againſt Pope Clement, mentioned before Pag. 508. Secondly, the wrongful condemnation of the Articles and concluſions of William Swinderby; the whole Order whereof, in the proceſs here following, more plainly may appear.

Ex regiſtro Epiſ. Here-ford.

The proceſs had by John Biſhop of Hereford againſt Walter Brute a Lay-man and learned, of the Dioceſs of Hereford, touching the cauſe of Hereſie, as they called it, ſet forward by the way of the Biſhops Office, &c. At the inſtruction of certain faithful Chriſtians, as he termed them, but indeed cruel and falſe promoters.

Murdring hypocrites under loving words.

IN the name of God, Amen: To all manner of faithful Chriſtian people, that ſhall ſee and hear this our preſent proceſs, John by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Hereford ſendeth greeting and continual charity, in the Lord. We would that you all ſhould know, that of late by many faithful Chriſtian people, and ſpecially zealous followers of the Catholick Faith, it was lamentably done us to underſtand by way of complaint; that a certain Son of ours going out of kind, named Walter Brute, a lay perſon, learned, of our Dioceſs, hath under a cloked ſhew of holineſs damnably ſeduced the people; and, ſetting behind him the fear of God, doth ſeduce them as much as he can, from day to day, informing and teaching openly and privily as well the Nobles as the Commons, in certain concluſions heretical, ſchiſmatical and erroneous, and alſo heretofore condemned. And they have alſo probably exhibited againſt the ſame Walter, Articles under-written, in manner and form as followeth.

Articles exhibited and denounced to the Biſhop, againſt Walter Brute.

Articles denounced againſt Walter Brute by Prieſts and Friers.

REverend Father and Lord, we the faithful people of Chriſt, and zealous lovers of the Catholick Faith, and alſo your humble and devout Children, do Miniſter and exhibite to your Reverend Fatherhood the Articles under-written, touching the Catholick Faith, contrary and againſt malicious perſons, and detractors of the ſame faith, and the determinations of Holy mother Church, and namely againſt the child of Belial, one Walter Brute, a falſe teacher and ſeducer amongſt the people: Humbly beſeeching, that you would vouchſafe to have regard to the correction of the Enormities under-written, according unto the Canoi-

cal

KING Ric. 2. all conſtitutions, even as to your office paſtoral doth lie and belong.

The firſt Article. Imprimis, We do give and exhibit and intend to prove that the ſame Walter Brute, being unmindful of his Salvation, hath been by many and divers faithful Chriſtian people ſundry times accuſed of the Curſedneſs of Hereſie; As by the ſwift report, ſlander, and rumour of the people, proceeding before the moſt Reverend Father and Lord, Lord William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and alſo before the the Reverend Father and Lord, Lord John late Biſhop of Hereford your Predeceſſor, and now Biſhop of S. Aſaph, hath been teſtified, and alſo hath been many and divers times cited to anſwer unto Articles by him againſt the Catholick Faith avouched, and openly and publickly taught. But he in this matter of heretical Curſedneſs (ſo grievouſly and ſhamefully ſpoken of) hath never regarded to purge his innocency; but lurkingly, and running into corners, hath many and ſundry years laboured to advance things erroneous, and ſchiſmatical, and alſo Hereſies, and to imprint them in the hearts of faithful people.

The ſecond Article. Item, The foreſaid Walter Brute hath openly, publickly, and notoriouſly avouched; and commonly ſaid and taught, and ſtubbornly affirmed; that every Chriſtian man (yea and woman) being without ſin, may make the body of Chriſt ſo well as the Prieſt.

The third Article. Item, The ſame Walter hath notoriouſly, openly and publickly avouched and taught, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the very body, but a ſign and a memorial only.

The fourth Article. Item, The foreſaid Walter hath ſaid commonly, and avouched, and alſo hath laboured to inform men and companies, that no man is bound to give Tithes, nor Oblations; and if any man will needs give, he may give his Tithes, and Oblations to whom he will, excluding thereby their Curates.

The fifth Article. Item, That ſuch as do preach and prefer croiſed matters, and pardons (granted by the high Biſhop to them that helped the purpoſe of the Reverend Father Lord Henry by the grace of God Biſhop of Norwich, when as he took his journey upon him to fight for the holy Father the Pope) are ſchiſmaticks and hereticks, and that the Pope cannot grant ſuch manner of pardons.

The ſixth Article. Item, The ſaid Walter hath oftentimes ſaid, and commonly avouched, that the Pope is Antichriſt, and a ſeducer of the people, and utterly againſt the Law and life of Chriſt.

The ſeventh Article. Item, Whereas of late your Reverence did (at the inſtance of faithful Chriſtian people) proceed in form of law againſt William Swinderby; and that the ſaid William Swinderby had unto the ſaid Articles objected againſt him given up his anſwers in writing, containing in them errors, ſchiſms and hereſies, even as you with the mature counſel of Maſters and Doctors in Divinity, and other faculties have determined and given ſentence, and have pronounced the ſame William Swinderby to be an Heretick and a ſchiſmatick, and an erroneous Teacher of the people: Nevertheleſs the forenamed Walter hath openly, publickly, and notoriouſly ſaid, avouched and ſtubbornly affirmed, that the ſaid Williams anſwers (whereof notice hath been given before) are good, righteous and not able to be convinced, in that they contain none error, and that your ſentence beforeſaid, given againſt the ſaid William, is evil, falſe and unjuſt; and that your aſſiſtance have wickedly, naughtily, perverſly, and unjuſtly condemned the anſwers aforeſaid.

Otherwiſe bloody promoters. Theſe concluſions and Articles of William Swinderby here repeated, and objected to Walter Brute are to be found before. pag. 530. and 532.

Now thereupon immediately thoſe ſame faithful Chriſtian people have inſtantly required, that we would vouchſafe that other Articles given by the ſame faithful Chriſtians againſt the ſaid William Swinderby, together with the writings and anſwers of the ſame William thereunto, ſhould be admitted againſt Walter Brute, mentioned of in this matter of curſed Hereſie: of which Articles and anſwers, the Tenors do follow in theſe words.

Imprimis, That one William Swinderby, pretending himſelf Prieſt, was of certain Articles and concluſions erroneous, falſe, ſchiſmatical, and heretical by him preached, at divers places and times, before a great multitude of faithful Chriſtians judicially convinced; and the ſame Articles and concluſions did he (inforced by neceſſity of law) revoke and abjure, ſome as heretical, and other as erroneous and falſe; and for ſuch did he avouch them ever afterward, promiſing ſo to take and believe them, and that from thenceforth he would openly or privily preach, teach, or affirm none of them; nor that he ſhould make Sermon or Preach within your Dioceſs without licence demanded and obtained. And in caſe he ſhould to the contrary preſume, by preaching or avouching; that then he ſhould be ſubject to the ſeverity of the Canons, even as he judicially ſwear accordingly as the law inforced. Alſo the concluſions abjured by the ſaid William, do follow, and are ſuch.

1. Imprimis, That men by the rule of charity may mand debts, but by no means impriſon any man for debts: and that the party ſo impriſoning a body, is excommunicated, before pag. 530. 1 Concluſion.

2. Item, That if the Pariſhioners ſhall know their Curate to be incontinent and naughty, they ought to withdraw from their Tithes, &c. ibid.

3. Item, That Tithes are meer Alms; and in caſe that the Curates ſhall be ill, that they may be lawfully beſtowed upon others by the temporal owners, &c. ibid.

4. Item, That an evil Curate to excommunicate any under his juriſdiction, for withholding of Tithes, is nought elſe, &c. ibid.

5. Item, That no man may excommunicate any body, except that firſt he know him excommunicate of God: Neither do thoſe that excommunicate with ſuch a one, incur the ſentence of excommunication by any manner of means. ibid.

6. Item, That every Prieſt may abſolve every ſinner being contrite, and is bound to Preach the Goſpel unto the people, notwithſtanding the prohibition of the Biſhops. ibid.

7. Item, That a Prieſt, receiving by bargain any thing of yearly annuity, is in ſo doing a ſchiſmatick, and excommunicate. ibid.

8. Item, He doth aſſuredly believe (as he avoucheth) that every Prieſt being in deadly ſin, if he diſpoſe himſelf to make the body of Chriſt, doth rather commit idolatry, than make Chriſts body: ibid.

9. Item, That no Prieſt doth enter into any houſe, but to handle ill the Wife, the Daughter, or the Maid, and therefore, &c. ibid.

10. Item, That the Child is not rightly Baptized, if the Prieſt, &c. ibid.

11. Item, That no manner of perſon if he live againſt Gods law, &c. ibid.

12. Item, The ſame William againſt the things premiſed, and his revocation and abjuration (not to his heart converting, but from evil to worſe perverting) did turn aſide into our Dioceſs; where running to and fro in divers places, he hath of his own raſh head preſumed to Preach, or rather to pervert, &c. pag. 532.

13. Item, After that we had heard divers rumors, and ſlanders of very many, we directed divers monitions and commandments comminatory, to be ſent abroad by our commiſſaries to ſundry places of our Dioceſs; that no perſon, of what eſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he were, ſhould preſume to Preach or to Teach the ſacred Scripture to the people in places holy or prophane, within our Dioceſs, &c. ibidem.

14. Item, That the ſame ſort of monitions, inhibitions and precepts confirmed by our Seal, came to the true and undoubted knowledge of the ſaid William.

15. Item, The ſame William, unmindful of his own ſalvation, hath hitherto and againſt thoſe monitions, inhibitions, and precepts, and (that which is more abominable to be ſpoken) in contempt of the high Biſhops Dignity, and to the ſlander and offence of many people, preſumed in divers places of our ſaid Dioceſs to Preach or rather to pervert and to teach the forementioned, and other heretical, erroneous and ſchiſmatical devices: pag. 532. Infandum facinus ſciliceſ.

16. Item, The ſame William in Preaching to the people, on Monday, to wit, the firſt of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1390. in the Church of Whitney in our Dioceſs, held and affirmed; that no Prelate of the World, of what ſtate, preheminence or degree ſoever he were, having cure of ſouls and being in deadly ſin, &c. ibid.

17. Item, The ſame William in many places ſaid and affirmed in the preſence of many faithful Chriſtian people, after the ſacramental words uttered by the A perilous door to open.

Prieſt, having the intent to conſecrate, there is not made the very body of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Eucharist. ibid.

18. Item, That accidents cannot be in the Sacrament of the Altar without their ſubject; and that there remaineth material Bread Concomitanter, with the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament. Vide ſupra, pag. 532.

19. Item, That a Prieſt being in deadly ſin cannot by the power of the Sacrament words, make the body of Chriſt. ibid.

20. Item, That all Prieſts are of like power in all points, notwithſtanding that ſome of them are in this world of higher Dignity, degree, or preheminence. ibid.

21. Item, That contrition only putteth away ſin, if a man ſhall be duly contrite; and that all vocal confeſſion and exerciſe is ſuperfluous, and not requiſite of neceſſity to ſalvation. ibid.

22. Item, That inferiour Curates have not their power of binding and looſing immediately from the Pope or Biſhop, but immediately of Chriſt &c. ibid.

23. Item, That the Pope cannot grant ſuch a kind of annual pardons, becauſe there ſhall not be ſo many years to the day of judgment as are contained in the Popes bulls or pardons. Whereby it followeth, that pardons are not ſo much worth as they are noiſed and praiſed to be. ibid.

24. Item, That it is not in the Popes power to grant to any penitent body forgiveneſs of the pain, or of the treſpaſs. ibid.

25. Item, That one giving his Alms to any body, which as he judgeth hath no need thereof, doth ſin in ſo giving, &c. ibid.

26. Item, That it ſtands not in the power of any Prelate, of what private Religion ſoever he be, to give by letters Benefits of their Order; Neither do ſuch kind of Benefits given, profit them to whom they be given for the ſalvation of ſouls. Vide ſupra, pag. ibid.

A foul fault forſooth.

27. Item, That the ſame William, unmindful of his own ſalvation, hath many times and often reſorted to a certain deſart Wood called Derwalſwood of our Dioceſs, and there in a certain unhallowed Chappel (nay a prophane Cottage) hath preſumed of his own proper raſhneſs, to celebrate, &c. ibid.

28. Item, The ſame William hath alſo preſumed to do the like things in a certain prophane Chappel, ſituate in the Park of Newton, nigh to the Town of Leyntwardyn, in the ſame our Dioceſs, pag. ibid.

Walter Pride promoter, or rather a proud promoter.

¶ Which things being done, the ſame faithful Chriſtian people, and eſpecially Sir Walter Pride the penitentiary of our Cathedral Church of Hereford, perſonally appearing before us, ſitting in our judgment Seat in the Pariſh Church of Whiteborne of our Dioceſs, brought forth and exhibited two publick Inſtruments againſt the ſame Walter Brute, in the caſe of curſed Hereſie aforeſaid, of which Inſtruments here followeth the Tenors and Articles in this ſort.

The firſt Inſtrument exhibited by certain Canons of Hereford againſt Walter Brute.

IN the name of God, Amen. Be it evidently known to all perſons by this preſent publick Inſtrument, that in the year from the Incarnation, after the courſe and computation of the Church of England 1391. the Indiction xv. of the pontifical Office of our moſt holy Father and Lord in Chriſt, Lord Boniface the Ninth, by Gods wiſdom Pope, the ſecond year, the xv. day of the Month of October, in the dwelling Houſe of the worſhipful man, M. John Godemoſton, Canon of the Cathedral Church of Hereford, in the preſence of me the publick Notary under-written, and of witneſſes ſubſcribed; Walter Brute a Lay-man, learned, of Hereford Dioceſs, perſonally appearing ſaid, avouched, and ſtiſly maintained; that the ſaid Biſhop of Hereford, and aſſiſtants which were with him the third day of the foreſaid Month of October, the year of our Lord aforeſaid, in the Church of Hereford, did naughtily, wickedly, perverſly, and unjuſtly condemn the anſwers of Sir William Swinderby Chaplain, given by the ſame Sir William to the ſame Lord Biſhop in writing, and alſo the Articles miniſtred by the ſame Sir William.

Biſhop of Hereford unjuſtly condemned the Articles of Sir Wil. Swinderby.

And furthermore he ſaid, held, and avouched, that the ſame concluſions given by the ſame Sir William, even as they were given, are true and Catholick.

Item, As touching the matters objected againſt him by them that ſtood by, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, he ſaid, that after the Sacramental words there doth remain very Bread, and the ſubſtance thereof after the conſecration of the body of Chriſt, and that there do not remain accidents without ſubſtance or ſubject after the conſecration of the body of Chriſt. And as touching this matter, the Doctors hold divers opinions.

§ KING § Ric. 2. § Matters objected againſt Walter Brute.

The Pope Antichriſt.

Furthermore, as concerning the Pope, he ſaid, held, and avouched; that he is the very Antichriſt, becauſe that in life and manners he is contrary to the Laws, Doctrines, and Deeds of Chriſt our Lord.

All and every of theſe things were done, even as they be above-written and rehearſed in the year of our Lord, pontifical Office, month, day, and place aforeſaid, at Supper time of the day, aforenamed, then and there being preſent the worſhipful and diſcreet men, Sir Walter Ramſbury, chief Chaunter of the ſaid Cathedral Church of Hereford, Roger Hoore Canon of the ſame Church, Walter Wall, Chaplain of the ſaid Church of Hereford, being a Vicar of the Choral, and certain other worthy witneſſes of credit, that were ſpecially called and deſired to the premiſſes. Ex Regiſt. Hereford.

Witneſſes againſt Walter Brute.

And I Richard Lee Wheeler, Clerk of Worceſter, being a publick Notary, by the authority Apoſtolick, was perſonally preſent at all and ſingular the premiſſes, whilſt that (as is before rehearſed) they were done and a doing in the year of our Lord 1391. Pontifical Office, month, day, place, and the hour aforeſaid: and I did ſee, write, and hear all and ſingular thoſe things thus to be done, and have reduced them into this publick manner and form; and, being deſired truly to teſtifie the premiſſes, have ſealed the ſaid Inſtrument, made hereupon, with mine accuſtomed Seal and name.

Richard Lee Regiſter and writer hereof.

The form of the ſecond Inſtrument.

In the name of God, Amen. Be it plainly known to all perſons, by this preſent publick Inſtrument, that in the year from the Incarnation of the Lord, after the courſe and computation of the Church of England, 1391. the indiction fifteen, in the third year of the Pontifical Office of the moſt holy Father in Chriſt, and our Lord, Lord Boniface Pope by the providence of God the ninth, and in the nineteenth day of the Month of January; Walter Brute Lay-man, of Hereford Dioceſs, perſonally appearing before the Reverend Father in Chriſt and Lord, Lord John by Gods grace Biſhop of Hereford, in the preſence of me being a publick Notary, and one of the witneſſes under-written, did ſay, hold, publiſh, and affirm, the Concluſions hereafter written, that is to ſay, that Chriſtian people are not bound to pay Tithes neither by the Law of Moſes, nor by the Law of Chriſt.

Matters and Concluſions miniſtred againſt Walter Brute. This Concluſion ſeemeth to be falſly collected, as were before the Articles of William Swinderby. This concluſion alſo is not rightly gathered.

Item, That it is not lawful for Chriſtians, for any cauſe in any caſe, to ſwear by the Creator, neither by the Creature.

Item, He confeſſeth openly and of his own accord, that within the ſame Month of January, he did eat, drink, and communicate with William Swinderby, not being ignorant of the ſentence of the ſaid Reverend Father, whereby the ſame William Swinderby was pronounced an Heretick, ſchiſmatick, and a falſe ſeducer of the Common people. Which concluſions the ſame Reverend Father cauſed to be written, and in writing to be delivered to the ſame Walter. Which when he had ſeen and read, he ſaid alſo that he did maintain and juſtifie them according to the Laws aforeſaid. Theſe things were done in the Chamber of the ſaid Biſhop of Hereford, at his Manner of Whiteborne of the ſaid Dioceſs of Hereford; there being then preſent the ſame Biſhop aboveſaid, Maſter Reynold of Wolſton Canon of Hereford, Sir Philip Dileſk Parſon of the Pariſh Church of Blamurin, Thomas Guildeſeld Parſon of the Church of Engliſbyknore, John Creſſes Parſon of the Church of Whiteborne, and Thomas Wallewain houſhold ſervant, for witneſſes eſpecially called and deſired to the premiſſes, of the Dioceſs of Hereford and Saint Aſaph.

Witneſſes againſt Walter Brute.

And I Benedict Come Clerk, of the Dioceſs of S. Aſaph, publick Notary by the Apoſtolick Authority of the Dioceſs of S. Aſaph, was perſonally preſent together with the witneſſes before named, at all and ſingular theſe and other things here premiſed, whilſt they were ſo done and a doing, and did ſee, hear, and write thoſe things ſo to be done, as is before mentioned; and did write the ſame, and reduce them into this publick form, and with my wonted wonted and accuſtomed ſeal and name have ſealed it, being deſired and required truly to teſtifie the premiſſes.

At the laſt, the foreſaid Walter Brute did preſent and cauſe to be preſented to us (at divers places and times aſſigned by us to the ſame Walter to anſwer to the former Concluſions and Articles) divers Scrouls of paper, written with his own proper hand, for his anſwers to the ſame Articles and Concluſions above written; he partly appearing by his own ſelf, before us ſitting in our judgment Seat, and partly by his Meſſengers, ſpecially appointed to that purpoſe: of which Scrouls, the Tenors do follow in order word by word, and be on this matter.

Certain exhibits of Walter Brute in writing preſented to the Biſhop for his defence.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, Amen. I Walter Bruſe, Sinner, Lay-man, Husbandman, and a Chriſtian (having my Off-ſpring of the Britains, both by my Fathers and Mothers ſide) of the Britains, have been accuſed to the Biſhop of Hereford, that I did erre in many matters concerning the Catholick Chriſtian Faith; by whom I am required that I ſhould write an anſwer in Latin to all thoſe matters. Whoſe deſire I will ſatisfie to my power, proteſting firſt of all, before God and before all the World; that like as it is not my mind through Gods grace, to refuſe the known truth, for any reward greater or ſmaller, yea, be it never ſo big, nor yet for the fear of any temporal puniſhment; even ſo it is not my mind to maintain any eroneous Doctrine for any Commodities ſake. And if any man, of what ſtate, ſect, or condition ſoever he be, will ſhew me that I erre in my writings or ſayings, by the Authority of the ſacred Scripture, or by probable reaſon grounded on the ſacred Scripture, I will humbly and gladly receive his information. But as for the bare words of any teacher (Chriſt only excepted) I will not ſimply believe, except he ſhall be able to ſtabliſh them by the truth of experience, or of the Scripture: becauſe that, in the holy Apoſtles elected by Chriſt, there hath been found error by the Teſtimony of the holy Scripture, becauſe that Paul himſelf doth confeſs that he rebuked Peter, for that he was worthy to be rebuked, Galath. the 2*d* Chapter. There have been errors found in the holy Doctors, that have been before us, as they themſelves confeſs of themſelves. And oftentimes it falleth out, that there is error found in the Teachers in our age: who are of contrary opinions among themſelves, and ſome of them do ſometimes determine one thing for truth, and others do condemn the ſelf ſame thing to be Hereſie and error. Which proteſtation premiſed, I will hear place two ſuppoſitions or caſes for a ground and a foundation of all things that I ſhall ſay, out of which I would gather two probable concluſions ſtabliſhed upon the ſame, and upon the Sacred Scripture. By which concluſions, when as they ſhall be declared after my manner and faſhion, it ſhall plainly appear what my opinion and judgment is concerning all matters that I am accuſed of. But becauſe I am ignorant and unlearned, I will get me under the mighty defences of the Lord: O Lord, I will remember thine only righteouſneſs.

Proteſtation made.

No writer or Doctor without his error, the Scripture only excepted.

Error in the Doctors.

Errors and contrarieties among the Popiſh writers.

Bruſe modeſtly excuſeth his learning.

God the Father Almighty uncreate, the Maker of Heaven and Earth, hath ſent his Son (that was everlaſtingly begotten) into this World, that he ſhould be incarnated for the ſalvation and redemption of mankind, who was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, everlaſtingly proceeding from the Father and the Son, and was born of Mary the Virgin, to the end that we might be born anew. He ſuffered paſſion under Pontius Pilate for our ſins, laying down his life for us, that we ſhould lay down our life for our Brethren. He was Crucified, that we ſhould be Crucified to the World, and the World to us. He was dead, that he might redeem us from death, by purchaſing for us forgiveneſs of ſins. He was buried, that we being buried together with him into death by Baptiſm, and that we being dead to ſins ſhould live to righteouſneſs. He deſcended into Hell, thereby delivering man from Thraldom, and from the Bondage of the Devil, and reſtoring him to his inheritance which he loſt by ſin. The third day he roſe from the dead, through the glory of the Father, that we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life. He aſcended up to the Heavens, to which no body hath aſcended, ſaving he that deſcended from Heaven, even the Son of Man which is in Heaven. He ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, until his enemies be made his footſtool. He being in very deed ſo much better than the Angels, as he hath obtained by inheritance a more excellent name than they. From whence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead, according to their works, becauſe the Father hath given all Judgment to the Son. In whoſe terrible Judgment we ſhall riſe again, and ſhall all of us ſtand before this judgment Seat, and receive joy as well bodily as ſpiritually, for ever to endure, if we be of the Sheep placed at the right hand; or elſe puniſhment both of body and ſoul, if we ſhall be found amongſt Goats, placed on the left hand, &c.

Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, very God and very Man, a King for ever, by eſtabliſhing an everlaſting Kingdom (breaking to powder all the Kingdoms, of the World,) Daniel 2. A Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedech, whereby alſo he is able evermore to ſave ſuch as by him come unto God, and always liveth to intreat for us, Heb. 7. He offering one ſacrifice for our ſins, hath made perfect for ever by one oblation thoſe that be ſanctified, Heb. 10. Being the wiſdom that cannot be deceived and the truth that cannot be uttered, he hath in this world taught the Will of God his Father, which Will he hath in work fulfilled, to the intent that he might faithfully inſtruct us, and hath given the Law of Charity to be of his faithful people obſerved; which he hath written in the hearts and minds of the faithful with the finger of God, where is the Spirit of God, ſearching the inward ſecrets of the Godhead. Wherefore his doctrine muſt be obſerved above all other Doctrines, whether they be of Angels or of men, becauſe that he could not nor would not erre in his teaching. But in mens Doctrine there chanceth oftentimes to be error; and therefore we muſt forſake their Doctrines, if clokedly or expreſly they be repugnant to the Doctrine of Chriſt. Mens Doctrines being made for the peoples profit, muſt be allowed and obſerved, ſo that they be grounded upon Chriſts Doctrine, or at leaſt be not repugnant to his words.

The ſecond caſe or aſſertion.

If the high Biſhop of Rome calling himſelf the Servant of the Servants of God, and the chief Vicar of Chriſt in this World, do make and maintain many laws contrary to the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt; then is he of thoſe that have come in Chriſts name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, and have ſeduced many a one, by the Teſtimony of our Saviour in Matth. Chap. 24. And the Idol of deſolation ſitting in the Temple of God and taking away from him the continual ſacrifice for a time, times, and half a time, which Idol muſt be revealed to the Chriſtian people by the Teſtimony of Daniel. Whereof Chriſt ſpeaketh in the Goſpel; When ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation that was told of by Daniel the Prophet, ſtanding in the holy place; let him that readeth underſtand, he is the peſtiferous mountain infecting the whole Univerſal Earth, as witneſſeth Jeremy, Chapter 51. And not the Head of Chriſts body. For the ancient perſon in years, and honourable in reverence he is the Head, and the Prophet teaching lies is the Tail, as Eſay alledgeth, Chapter 9. And he is that wicked and ſinful Captain of Iſrael, whoſe foreappointed day of iniquity is come in time of iniquity, who ſhall take away Cidarim, and take away the Crown, Ezechiel Chapter 21. To whom it was ſaid; Forasmuch as thy heart was exalted, and didſt ſay, I am a God, and ſitteſt in the Seat of God, in the heart of the Sea, ſeeing thou art a Man and not God, and haſt given thine heart, as if it were the heart of God; therefore behold I will bring upon thee the moſt ſtrong and mighty Strangers of the nations, and they ſhall draw their Swords upon the beauty of thy wiſdom, and ſhall defile the commandments, and kill thee, and pull thee out, and thou ſhalt die in the deſtruction of the ſlain. And it followeth,

The firſt Concluſion.

The Pope an Idol of deſolation ſitting in the Temple of God.

The Pope, if his laws be contrary to Chriſt, is the peſtiferous mountain infecting the whole Earth. Jerem. 51.

The Pope the ſinful Captain of Iſrael, ſpoken of Ezechiel 21.

In the multitude of thine iniquities, and of the iniquities of thy Merchandize, thou haſt defiled thy ſanctification. I will therefore bring forth a fire, from the middeſt of the whole Earth, and will make thee as aſhes upon Earth. Thou art become nothing, and never ſhalt thou be any more, Ezech. Chapter 28. Furthermore he is the idle Sheepherd forſaking his flock, having a ſword on his Arm, and another ſword on his right eye, Zech. 11. And ſitting in the Temple of God, doth advance himſelf above all things that is called God, or whatſoever is worſhipped, by the Teſtimony of Paul to the Theſſ. 2.

Antichriſt deſcribed.

Ezech 28.

The Pope an idle ſhepherd. Zech. 11.

Epiſtle, Chap. 2. And in the defection or falling away ſhall the man of Sin be revealed, whom the Lord Jeſus ſhall ſlay with the breath of his mouth. For every Kingdom divided in it ſelf ſhall be brought to deſolation. He is alſo beſides, The Beaſt aſcending up out of the earth, having two horns like unto a Lamb, but he ſpeaketh like a Dragon, and as the cruel Beaſt aſcending up out of the Sea, whoſe Power ſhall continue 42 months. He worketh the things that he hath given to the Image of the Beaſt. And he compelled Small and Great, Rich and Poor, Free-men and Bond-ſlaves, to worſhip the Beaſt, and to take his mark in their Forehead or their Hands, Ap. c. Chap. 13. And thus by the teſtimony of all theſe places is he the chief Antichriſt upon the Earth, and muſt be ſlain with the Sword of Gods word, and caſt with the Dragon, the cruel Beaſt and the falſe Prophet that hath ſeduced the Earth, into the lake of fire and brimſtone to be tormented world without end.

The Beaſt horned like the Lamb.

The Pope ſignifieth the Beaſt aſcending out of the earth.

Terrible Scriptures againſt the Pope. Apoc. 13.

If the City of Rome do allow his Traditions, and do diſallow Chriſts holy Commandments, and Chriſts Doctrine, that it may confirm his Traditions; then is ſhe Babylon the Great, or the Daughter of Babylon, and the Great Whore ſitting upon many waters, with whom the Kings of the Earth have committed Fornication, and the Inhabitants of the Earth are become drunken with the Wine of her Harlotry lying open to Bawdry. With whoſe ſpiritual Whoredom, Enchantments, Witchcrafts, and Simon Magus Merchandiſes, the whole round world is infected and ſeduced; ſaying in her heart, I ſit as Queen, and Widow I am not, neither ſhall I ſee Sorrow and Mourning. Yet is ſhe ignorant that within a little while ſhall come the day of her deſtruction and ruine by the Teſtimony of the Apoc. Chap. 17. Becauſe that from the time of the continual Sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination of Deſolation placed, there be paſſed 1290 days by the Teſtimony of Daniel, and the Chronicles added do agree to the ſame. And the holy City alſo hath been trodden under foot of the Heathen, for forty two months, and the Woman was nouriſhed up in the Wilderneſs (unto which ſhe fled for fear of the face of the Serpent) during 1260 days, or elſe for a time, times, and half a time, which is all one. All theſe things be manifeſt by the Teſtimony of the Apocalyps, and the Chronicles thereto agreeing. And as concerning the fall of Babylon aforeſaid, it is manifeſt in the Apocalyps, where it is ſaid, In one day ſhall her Plagues come, Death, Lamentation, and Famine, and ſhe ſhall be burned with fire. For, ſtrong is the Lord, which ſhall judge her. And again, Babylon that great City is fallen, which hath made all Nations to drink of the Wine of her Whoredom. And thirdly, One mighty Angel took up a mill-ſtone, that was a very great one, and did caſt it into the Sea, ſaying, With ſuch a violence as this is, ſhall that great City Babylon be overthrown, and ſhall no more be found. For her Merchants were the Princes of the Earth, and with her Witchcraft all Nations have gone aſtray, and in her is there found the blood of the Saints and Prophets. And of her deſtruction ſpeaketh Eſay in the thirteenth Chapter, And Babylon that glorious City, being ſo noble amongſt Kingdoms in the pride of the Caldeans, it ſhall be that like as the Lord did overturn Sodom and Gomorra upſide down, it ſhall never more be inhabited, nor have the foundation laid in no age, from Generation to Generation. Jeremy ſaith, Your Mother that hath born you is brought to very great confuſion, and made even with the ground. And again, The Lord hath deviſed and done as he hath ſpoken againſt the Inhabiters of Babylon; which dwell richly in their Treaſures upon many waters, thine end is come. And thirdly, Drought ſhall fall upon her waters, and they ſhall begin to be dry: for it is a Land of graven Images, and boaſteth in her prodigious Wonders: it ſhall never more be inhabited, neither be builded up in no Age nor Generation. Verily even as God hath ſubverted Sodom and Gomorra with her Calves.

Pardon me (I beſeech you) though I be not plentiful in pleaſant words. For if I ſhould run after the courſe of this wicked world, and ſhould pleaſe men, I ſhould not be Chriſts Servant. And becauſe I am a poor man, and neither have nor can have Notaries hired to teſtifie of theſe my writings; I call upon Chriſt to be my Witneſs, which knoweth the inward ſecrets of my heart, that I am ready to declare the things that I have written after my faſhion, to the profit of all Chriſtian people, and to the hurt of no man living, and am ready to be reformed if any man will ſhew me where I have erred; being ready alſo (miſerable Sinner though I be) to ſuffer for the Confeſſion of the Name of Chriſt, and of his Doctrine, as much as ſhall pleaſe him by his Grace and Love to aſſiſt me a miſerable Sinner. In witneſs of all theſe things I have to this writing ſet the Seal of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: which I beſeech him to imprint upon my Forehead, and to take from me all manner of mark of Antichriſt. ¶ Theſe two Suppoſitions (as they are termed in the Schools) written by Walter Brute, and exhibited unto the Biſhop, although they contained matter ſufficient either to ſatisfie the Biſhop if he had been diſpoſed to learn, or elſe to have provoked him to reply again, if his knowledge therein had been better than his: yet could they work neither of them effect in him. But he receiving and peruſing the ſame, when he neither could confute that which was ſaid, neither would reply or anſwer by learning to that which was truth, finding other by Cavillations, ſaid, That this his writing was too ſhort and obſcure, and therefore required him to write upon the ſame again more plainly and more at large. Whereupon the ſaid Maſter Walter ſatisfying the Biſhops requeſt (and ready to give to every one an account of his Faith) in a more ample Tractation reneweth his matter again before declared, writing to the Biſhop in words and form as followeth:

Another declaration of the ſame matter before, after more ample Tractation exhibited by W. Brute to the Biſhop.

REverend Father, forſomuch as it ſeemeth to you that my motion in my two Suppoſitions or Caſes, and in my two Concluſions, is too ſhort and ſomewhat dark: I will gladly now ſatisfie your deſire, according to my ſmall Learning, by declaring the ſame Concluſions. In opening whereof, it ſhall plainly appear, what I do judge in all matters that I am accuſed of to your reverence; deſiring you firſt of all that your diſcretion would not believe that I do enterprize of any preſumption to handle the ſecrets of the Scriptures, which the holy and juſt, and wiſe Doctors have left unexpounded. It is not unknown to many, that I am in all points far inferiour to them whoſe holineſs of life and profoundneſs in knowledge is manifoldly always allowed. But as for mine ignorance, and multitude of ſins, they are to my ſelf and others ſufficiently known: wherefore I judge not my ſelf worthy to unlooſe or to carry their ſhooes after them. Do you therefore no otherwiſe deem of me, than I do of mine own ſelf. But if you ſhall find any goodneſs in my writings, aſcribe it to God only: who according to the multitude of his mercy doth ſometimes reveal thoſe things to Idiots and Sinners, which are hidden from the holy and wiſe, according to this ſaying, I will praiſe and confeſs thee, O Father, for that thou haſt hidden theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt diſcloſed them to the little ones: Even ſo, O Father, becauſe it hath thus pleaſed thee. And in another place, I am come to Judgment into this world, that they which ſee not, may ſee; and that they which ſee, may be made blind. And Paul ſaith, That God hath choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the mighty; that no man ſhall boaſt in himſelf, but that all men ſhould give the honour to God.

They that ſo humbly judge of themſelves and do not ſo carelefly commend are of God

It was commanded to Eſay, bearing the Type of CHRIST; Go, and ſay to this people: Hear ye with your hearing; and do not underſtand? Behold ye the Viſion, and yet know ye not the thing that ye ſee? Make blind the heart of this people, and make dull their ears, and ſhut their eyes, leſt that perchance with their eyes they ſhould ſee, and with their ears they ſhould hear, and with their hearts they ſhould underſtand, and be converted, and I ſhould heal them. And I ſaid, How long Lord? And he ſaid, until that the Cities be made deſolate without Inhabitants, and the Houſe without any perſon within it. Alſo in Eſay thus it is written, And the multitude of all Nations, which ſhall fight againſt Ariel, and all perſons that have warred, and beſieged and prevailed againſt it, ſhall be as a dream that appeareth in the night, and as the hungry perſon dreameth that he eateth, but when he ſhall awake out of ſleep, his Soul is empty. He ſhall ſhut your eyes, he ſhall cover your Trophets and Princes that ſee Viſions. And a Viſion ſhall be to you, altogether, like the words of a ſealed Book, which when he ſhall give to one that is learned, he ſhall ſay, Read here, and he ſhall anſwer, I cannot, for it is ſealed. And the Book ſhall be given to one that is unlearned, and knoweth not his letters, and it ſhall be ſaid unto him, Read; And he ſhall anſwer, I know not the letters, I am unlearned. Wherefore the Lord ſaith, Foraſmuch as this people draweth nigh me with their mouths, and glorifie me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me, and they have rather feared the commandments of men, and have cleaved to their Doctrines: Behold therefore I will add beſides, and bring ſuch a muſe and marvel upon this people which ſhall make men amazed with marveling. For Wiſdom ſhall periſh from their wiſe men, and the Underſtanding of the prudent perſons ſhall be hidden. And ſoon after it followeth in the ſame place; yet a little while and Libanus ſhall be turned into Charmell, and Charmell counted for a Cops or Grove, and in the ſame day ſhall the deaf Folks hear the word of this Book, and the eyes of the blind (changed from darkneſs and blindneſs) ſhall ſee.

Libanus and Charmell, two hills, the one in Phœnicia, fruitful and pleaſant: the other in the borders of Jewry, barren and unpleaſant, which is Charmell.

Nabuchodonoſer enquiring of Daniel, ſaid, Thinkeſt thou that thou canſt truly declare me the dream that I have ſeen, and the meaning thereof? And Daniel ſaid, As for the myſtery whereof the King doth ask, neither the Wiſe-men, Magicians, Soothſayers, nor Enchanters can declare to the King: But there is a God in Heaven, that diſcloſeth myſteries, who will declare to thee (O King Nabuchodonoſer) what things ſhall come to paſs in the laſt times of all. To me alſo is this Sacrament or Myſtery diſcloſed (not for any wiſdom that is in me more than in all men living) but to the end that the interpretation might be made manifeſt to the King, and that thou ſhouldſt know the cogitations of thy mind.

Dan. 2.

It was alſo ſaid to Daniel, And thou Daniel, ſhut up the words, ſeal up the Book, until the time appointed. Verily many people ſhall paſs over, and manifold knowledge ſhall there be. And Daniel ſaid to the man that was clothed with linnen Garments, who ſtood upon the waters of the flood; How long will it be before the end ſhall come of theſe marvelous things? And I heard the man that was clothed in linnen apparel, who ſtood upon the waters of the floods; when he had lift up his right hand and his left hand unto Heaven, and had ſworn by him that liveth for evermore, that for a time, times, and half a time. And when the ſcattering abroad of the hand of the holy people ſhall be accompliſhed; then ſhall all theſe things be finiſhed. And I heard and underſtood not, and I ſaid, O my Lord, what ſhall be after theſe things? And he ſaid, Go thy ways Daniel, for this talk is ſhut and ſealed up until the time that is before appointed.

All theſe things have I written, to ſhew that he that hath the Key of David, Who openeth and no man ſhutteth, ſhutteth and no man openeth, doth (when and how long it pleaſeth him) hide the myſteries, and hide ſecrets of the Scriptures from the Wiſe, Prudent, and Righteous: and otherwhiles at his pleaſure revealeth the ſame to Sinners, and Lay-perſons, and ſimple Souls, that he may have the honour and glory in all things. Wherefore as I have before ſaid, if you ſhall find any good thing in my writings, aſcribe the ſame to God alone: If you ſhall find otherwiſe, think ye the ſame to be written of ignorance, and not of malice. And if any doubt of error be ſhewed me in all my writings, I will humbly allow your information and fatherly correction.

But why that ſuch manner of matters are moved touching the diſcloſing of Antichriſt in this Kingdom, more than in other Kingdoms, and in this time alſo more than in time paſt: the anſwer as concerning the time of the motion, is, that it is the laſt Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in the ſign of the Twins, which is the houſe of Mercury, being the ſignifier of the Chriſtian people: which Conjunction ſeemeth to me to betoken the ſecond coming of Chriſt to reform his Church, and to call men again, by the diſcloſing of Antichriſt, to the perfection of the Goſpel, from their Heatheniſh Rites, and ways of the Gentiles. By whom the holy City was trampled under foot, for 42 months, even as the Conjunction of the ſaid two Planets being incloſed in the ſide of the Virgin, which is alſo the houſe of Mercury, did betoken the firſt coming of Chriſt, for the ſalvation of all people that were periſhed of the houſe of Iſrael, whereby to call them, through the ſame coming, to the full perfection of the Goſpel. As touching this calling of the Heathen, ſpeaketh Chriſt in the Goſpel, I have alſo other ſheep that are not of this fold, and thoſe muſt I bring, and they ſhall hear my voice, and there ſhall be one Sheepfold, and one Shepherd. For although the Gentiles be converted from the infidelity of their Idolatry to the Faith of Chriſt: yet are they not converted to the perfection of the Law of Chriſt. And therefore did the Apoſtles in the Primitive-Church, lay no burthen upon the Gentiles, but that they ſhould abſtain from hainous things, as from things offered to Idols, and from blood, and ſtrangled, and Fornication. As touching this ſecond coming ſpeaketh Eſay, On that day the root of Jeſſe which ſtandeth for a ſign or mark to the people, to him ſhall the Heathen make their homage and ſupplication, and his Sepulchre ſhall be glorious: and in that day ſhall it come to paſs, that the Lord ſhall the ſecond time put to his hand, to poſſeſs the remnant of his people, &c. And he ſhall lift up a token toward the Nations, and he ſhall aſſemble the runnagate people of Iſrael that were fled, and thoſe that were diſperſed of Juda ſhall he gather together from the four quarters of the Earth. And the zealous emulation of Ephraim ſhall be broken to pieces, and the enemies of Juda ſhall come to nought. Paul to the Theſſalonians ſaith, We beſeech you Brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and our gathering together before him, that you be not ſoon removed from your underſtanding, neither that you be put in fear, as though the day of the Lord were at hand, neither, as it were, by Letter ſent by us, neither by Spirit, nor yet by talk. Let not any body by any means bring you out of the way, or ſeduce you. For except there ſhall firſt come a departing, and that the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, ſhall be diſcloſed, which maketh reſiſtance, and is advanced above all things that is called God, or that is worſhipped, ſo that he doth ſit in the Temple of God, ſhewing himſelf as if he were God. Do you not remember, that whilſt I was as yet with you, I told you of this? And now ye know what keepeth him back, that he may be uttered in his due time. For even now doth he work the myſtery of Iniquity; only that he which holdeth, may hold ſtill until he be come to light: and then ſhall that wicked One be diſcloſed, whom the Lord Jeſus ſhall ſlay with the breath of his mouth, and ſhall deſtroy with brightneſs of his coming, even him, whoſe coming is, according to the working of Satan, in all power, with ſigns and lying wonders, and in all deceitful leading out of the truth towards thoſe that do periſh, becauſe that they receive not heartily the love of Truth, that they might be ſaved.

Schiſm between the two Popes which laſted 39 years; by the which Conjunction, his meaning is, that God would have Antichriſt to be diſcloſed, and his Church to be reformed.

By this perſecution (I ſuppoſe) he meaneth the reformation of the Church being out of the way.

The revealing of Antichriſt.

Chriſt being demanded of the Apoſtles what ſhould be the token of his coming, and of the end of the world, ſaid unto them, There ſhall come many in my Name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, and they ſhall ſeduce many: Alſo he telleth them of many other ſigns, of Battels, Famine, Peſtilence, and Earthquakes. But the greateſt ſign of all he teacheth to be this, When you ſhall ſee (ſaith he) the abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place, he that readeth let him underſtand. But Luke 21. in his Goſpel ſpeaketh more plainly hereof, When you therefore ſhall ſee Jeruſalem to be compaſſed about with an Army, then know ye that the deſolation thereof ſhall draw nigh. And afterward it followeth, And they ſhall fall by the face of the Sword, and ſhall be led away Captive to all Nations, and Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden under foot of the Heathen, until the times of the Nations be fulfilled. Now in Daniel thus it is written of this matter, And after 72 weeks ſhall Chriſt be ſlain, neither ſhall that be his people, that will deny him. And as for the City and Sanctuary, a people ſhall (with his Captain that will come with them) deſtroy the ſaid City and Sanctuary, and his end ſhall be to be waſted utterly, till it be brought to nought, and Deſtruction of the Jews Temple.

and after the end of the War, ſhall come the Deſolation appointed. In one week ſhall he confirm the Covenant to many, and within half a week ſhall the Offering and Sacrifice ceaſe. And in the Temple ſhall there be the abomination of Deſolation, and even unto the end ſhall the Deſolation continue. And elſewhere in Daniel thus it is written, From the time that the continual Sacrifice ſhall be offered, and that the abomination ſhall be placed in Deſolation, there ſhall be one thouſand, two hundred, and ninety days.

1290 days, in Daniel expounded.

Now if any man will behold the Chronicles, he ſhall find, that after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was accompliſhed, and after the ſtrong hand of the holy people was fully diſperſed, and after the placing of the abomination; that is to ſay, the Idol of Deſolation of Jeruſalem, within the Holy place, where the Temple of God was before, there had paſſed 1290 days, taking a day for a year, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. And the times of the Heathen people are fulfilled, after whoſe Rites and Cuſtoms God ſuffered the holy City to be trampled under foot for forty and two months. For although the Chriſtian Church, which is the holy City, continued in the Faith from the Aſcenſion of Chriſt, even till this time: yet hath it not obſerved and kept the perfection of the Faith all this whole ſeaſon. For ſoon after the departure of the Apoſtles, the Faith was kept with the Obſervation of the Rites of the Gentiles, and not of the Rites of Moſes Law, nor of the Law of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore ſeeing that this time of the Error of the Gentiles is fulfilled: it is likely that Chriſt ſhall call the Gentiles from the Rites of their gentility to the perfection of the Goſpel, as he called the Jews from the Law of Moſes to the ſame perfection in his firſt coming: that there may be one Sheepfold of the Jews and Gentiles under one Shepherd. Seeing therefore, that Antichriſt is known, which hath ſeduced the Nations, then ſhall the Elect, after that they have forſaken the errors of their gentility, come through the light of Gods Word to the perfection of the Goſpel, and that ſame Seducer ſhall be ſlain with the Sword of Gods word. So that by theſe things it doth partly appear unto me, why at this time rather than at any other time this matter of Antichriſt is moved.

For theſe 42 months look page 452.

Why rather at this time, than any other, the matter of Antichriſt is moved, and why rather in this Kingdom than in another?

And why that this motion is come to paſs in this Kingdom rather than in other Kingdoms, me thinks there is good reaſon; becauſe that no Nation of the Gentiles was ſo ſoon converted unto Chriſt as were the Britains, the Inhabitants of this Kingdom. For to other places of the world there were ſent Preachers of the Faith, who by the working of Miracles, and continual preaching of the word of God, and by grievous paſſion and death of the body, did convert the people of thoſe places: but in this Kingdom, in the time of Lucius the King of the Britains and of Eleutherius Biſhop of the Romans, that were Infidels (by the way of rumors and tales) of the Chriſtian Faith, which was preached at Rome. Who believed ſtraightways, and ſent to Rome, to Eleutherius for men skilful to inform him more fully in the very Faith it ſelf: at whoſe coming he was joyful, and was baptized with his whole Kingdom. And after the receiving of the Faith, they never forſook it, neither for any manner of falſe preaching of other, neither for any manner of Torments, or yet aſſaults of the Painims, as in other Kingdoms it hath come to paſs. And thus it ſeemeth to me the Britains amongſt other Nations, have been, as it were by the ſpecial Election of God, called and converted to the Faith of Chriſt.

The firſt receiving the Faith in this Realm by the Britains

Britains by the ſpecial Election of God called to Faith.

Of them as me ſeemeth did Eſay propheſie, ſaying, For they did ſee to whom there was nothing told of him, and they did behold, that had not heard of him. And again, Behold, thou ſhalt call a Nation which thou knoweſt not; and Nations that have not known thee, ſhall run unto thee, for the Lord thy God, and the holy One of Iſrael, ſhall glorifie thee.

The calling of the Gentiles to faith

Of this Kingdom, did Saint John in the Apocalyps Propheſie (as me ſeemeth) where he ſaid, The Dragon ſtood before the Woman, which was about to be delivered of child, to the intent that when ſhe had brought it forth into the World, he might devour up her Son: And ſhe brought forth her Child, which was a Manchild, who ſhould govern all Nations with an iron Rod. And the ſame Son was taken up to God, and to his Throne. And the Woman fled into the Wilderneſs, whereas ſhe had a place prepared of God, that they may feed her 1260 days. And again in the ſame Chapter, After that the Dragon ſaw that he was caſt out upon the earth, he did perſecute the Woman, which brought forth the Manchild. And there were given to the Woman two Wings of a great Eagle, that ſhe might flee into the Wilderneſs into her place, whereas ſhe is foſtered up for a time, times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent. And the Serpent did caſt as it were a flood of Water after the Woman, to the intent that he might cauſe her to be drowned by the flood: and the earth opening her mouth did help the Woman, and did ſwallow up the flood which the Dragon did caſt out of his mouth. Let us ſee how theſe ſayings may be applied unto this Kingdom rather than to other Kingdoms. It is well known that this Kingdom is a wilderneſs or a deſert place, becauſe that the Philoſophers and wiſe men did not paſs upon it, but did leave it for a Wilderneſs and Deſert, becauſe it is placed without the Climates.

Apoc. 12.

The woman fed in the Deſert 1260 days.

KING Ric. 2.

This place of the Deſert in the Scripture ſeemeth here ſome thing hardly expounded.

Unto this place fled the Woman; that is to ſay, the Church (which by Faith did ſpiritually bring forth Chriſt into the world) whereas ſhe was fed with the heavenly Bread, the Fleſh and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, for one thouſand, two hundred and ſixty days, ſeeing that for ſo many days, taking a day for a year, the Britains continued in the Faith of Chriſt: which thing cannot be found ſo of any Chriſtian Kingdom, but of this Deſert: and well it is ſaid, That ſhe flew to this place. For from the Eaſt came the Faith into Britain, not by walking in journey, nor yet by ſailing: for then ſhould it have come by Rome, Italy, Almaine, France, which cannot be found: and therefore ſhe flew over thoſe places, and reſted not in them, even as a Bird, flying over a place reſteth not in the ſame: but reſted in this Wilderneſs for a time, times, and half a time; that is, one thouſand two hundred and ſixty years, from the firſt coming of the Faith into Britain, until this preſent.

Faith came into Britain from the Eaſt, not from Italy, or Rome.

In ſaying for a time, times, and half a time, there is a going forward from the greater to the leſs. The greateſt time that we name, is a 1000 years, there is a time: and the next time that is leſs in the ſingular number, is 100 years. In the plural number, times ſignifie that there be more hundreds than one, at leaſt two hundred years. Wherefore, if they be put under a certain number, it muſt needs be that they be two, but the ſame two cannot fitly be called ſome times, except they be hundreds. For in that, that there is a going down from the greater to the leſs, when as it is ſaid a time, times, and half a time, and that the number of a 1000 is likely aſſigned for a time: It muſt needs follow that times muſt be taken for hundreds, and half a time for ſixty, becauſe it is the greater half of a hundred years, though that fifty be the even half.

A time, times, and half a time expounded.

And when that the Serpent ſent the water of the Perſecution after the Woman to cauſe her to be drowned of the flood; then did the earth, that is to ſay, the ſtableneſs of Faith help the Woman, by ſupping up the water of Tribulation. For in the moſt cruel Perſecution of Diocleſian and Maximian againſt the Chriſtians, when as Chriſtianity was almoſt every where rooted out; yet did they in this Kingdom ſtand continually in the Faith unmoveable. And ſo, conſidering that the Britains were converted to the Faith of Chriſt, as you would ſay, by an election, and picking out amongſt all the Nations of the Heathen, and that after they had received the Faith, they did never ſtart back from the Faith for no manner of Tribulation; it is not to be marvelled if in their place the calling of the Gentiles be made manifeſt, to the profiting of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, by the revealing of Antichriſt.

Perſecution in Diocleſian time ſwallowed up, look page 85.

But beſides this, me ſeemeth that Ezekiel doth ſpecially ſpeak of them, whereas he ſpeaketh of the fall of the Prince of Tyre, ſaying, Foraſmuch as thy heart is lifted up, as if it were the heart of God, therefore behold, I will bring upon thee ſome of the ſtrongeſt of the Heathen, and they ſhall draw their naked Swords upon the beauty of thy Wiſdom, and they ſhall defile thy comelineſs, and they ſhall ſlay thee, and pull thee out, and thou ſhalt die in the ſlaughter of the ſlain perſons, in the heart of the Sea.

This Prince who ſaith that he himſelf is God, and doth ſit in Gods Chair in the heart of the Sea, doth ſignifie

(as

KING Ric. 2. A friend to the Welchmen.

(as moſt likely it ſeemeth to me) that Antichriſt ſhall be deſtroyed by the moſt mighty perſons of the Gentiles Folk, through the Sword of the Word of God. Becauſe that amongſt the other Gentiles there have been none more ſtrong than the Britans, either in their body or their faith, and in their bodily Wars there have been none more mighty than they. For never in Wars have they been vanquiſhed, but by their own Sedition or Treaſon. But how many Kingdoms have they conquered? Yea, and neither by the moſt mighty City of Rome could they be driven out of their Kingdom, until that God ſent upon them Peſtilence and Famine; whereby they being waſted were compelled to leave their Country, which thing I have not heard of any other people. Now, in the faith, have they been amongſt all the people the ſtrongeſt, as is before ſaid, becauſe that by no Tribulation could they be compelled to forſake the Faith.

The ſtrong faith of the Britans.

Wherefore of them this ſeemeth to me to be underſtood: Then I will bring upon thee ſome of the ſtrongeſt people, and they ſhall draw their naked Swords, &c. By theſe things it may plainly appear, why at this time (rather than in time paſt) this matter is ſtirred up; and why in this Kingdom (rather than in other Kingdoms) the calling of the Gentiles is intreated of, to the verifying of the Goſpel, through the diſcloſing of Antichriſt.

Tales of Antichriſt.

But foraſmuch as many Tales and Fables are told of Antichriſt and his coming, and many things, which do rather ſeduce than inſtruct the Hearers, are applied to him out of the Scriptures of the Prophets; we will briefly write thoſe things which are ſpoken of him, and we will ſhew that the ſame Fable ſprang from the error of people imagining, and from no truth of the Scriptures propheſying. Now then they do ſay, that Antichriſt ſhall be born in Babylon of the Tribe of Dan, and conceived of the mixture of man and woman in ſin, becauſe that Chriſt was born of a Virgin, and conceived of the Holy Ghoſt. They ſay, that he ſhall be an ill favoured Perſonage, becauſe that it is written of Chriſt; Comely and beautiful is he, beyond the Sons of men. They ſay, that he ſhall preach three years and half where Chriſt preached, and that he ſhall circumciſe himſelf, and ſay that he is Chriſt, and the Meſſias ſent for the Salvation of the Jews. And they ſay, that he ſhall three manner of ways ſeduce the people, by falſe Miracles, Gifts, and Torments. So that whom he ſhall not be able to overcome with Miracles nor with Gifts, thoſe ſhall he go about to overcome with divers kinds of Torments. And thoſe that he ſhall ſeduce, will he mark with his tokens in their forehead or hands. He ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, and cauſe himſelf to be worſhipped as God. He ſhall fight (as they ſay) with the two Witneſſes of Chriſt, Enoch and Heli, and ſhall kill them, and he himſelf ſhall finally be ſlain with lightning. To this imagined man of their own imagination, but of none of the Prophets foreſhewed (at leaſt in no ſuch wiſe as this is) do they apply the Prophets, as this of Daniel. When that continual Sacrifice ſhall be taken away, and abomination ſhall be placed to deſolation: That is (ſay they) when the worſhipping of God ſhall be taken away, and deſolation (to wit, Antichriſt) ſhall abominably ſhew forth himſelf to be worſhipped, then ſhall there be 1290 days: that is to ſay, three years and an half. And this time do they ſay is the time, times, and half a time. And when it is ſaid in Daniel, Bleſſed is he that looketh for, and cometh to 1335 days: This do they ſay is thus to be underſtood, 45 days of Repentance to ſuch as have worſhipped Antichriſt: which 45 days added to the 1290 make 1335 days. Which days they that ſhall reach unto ſhall be called Bleſſed.

A falſe imagination of Antichriſt.

The Scripture and Prophets not rightly underſtood touching Antichriſt.

They apply alſo to this Antichriſt, this ſaying of the Apocalyps, I ſaw a Beaſt riſing up out of the Sea, having ſeven heads and ten horns, who had power given him to make 42 months. Which months (as they ſay) do make three years and an half, in which Antichriſt ſhall Reign. And many other things there are told, and applied unſtly to this imagined Antichriſt, that are not truly grounded upon the Scriptures.

Touching theſe 42 months, ſee above pag. 452.

Now let us ſhew the Errors of this Fable: Firſt of all, if there ſhall come ſuch a one (ſaying expreſly that he is Chriſt) what Chriſtian would be ſeduced by him, though he ſhould do never ſo many Miracles? neither ſhall he come after the manner of a Seducer, which ſhall ſhew himſelf an expreſs Adverſary. Neither is it likely that the Jews can be ſeduced by ſuch a one, ſeeing that Chriſt is not promiſed unto them of the Stock of Dan by any of the Prophets, but of the Stock of Juda: nor yet is he promiſed to them to be a King Warlike, but peaceable, taking war away, and not making war. For of Chriſt ſaith Eſay, And in the laſt days, ſhall there be prepared the Mountain of the Houſe of the Lord, in the top of the Mountains, and it ſhall be exalted above the Hills: and to it ſhall all the Nations have great recourſe, and many people ſhall go and ſay; Come, let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, and to the Houſe of the God of Jacob, and he ſhall teach us his ways, and we ſhall walk in his paths. For out of Sion ſhall there go a Law, and the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem, and he ſhall judge the Nations, and reprove much people. And they ſhall turn their Swords into Plow-ſhares, and their Spears into Sythes. There ſhall not a Nation lift up it ſelf againſt another Nation, nor yet ſhall they be any more exerciſed to war. And again, A little Babe is born to us, and a Son is given to us; and his Imperial Kingdom upon his ſhoulder, and his Name ſhall be called, The great Counſellor, The mighty God, The Father of the World to come, The Prince of Peace. His Empire ſhall be multiplied, and there ſhall be no end of his peace. He ſhall ſit upon the Seat of David, and upon his Kingdom: that he may make it ſtedfaſt and ſtrong in Judgment, and in Juſtice, from henceforth and for evermore. Zechary doth ſay of CHRIST, Rejoyce thou greatly, O thou Daughter Sion, be thou exceeding merry, O Daughter Jeruſalem: Behold thy King ſhall come a righteous Perſon and a Saviour unto thee, and yet he a poor man, and getting up upon an Aſs, even upon a young Colt of the ſhe-Aſs. And I will ſcatter abroad the Chariot of Ephraim, and the Horſe of Jeruſalem: And the Bow of war ſhall be diſperſed, and he ſhall ſpeak peace to the Nations, and his Power ſhall be from the Sea to the Sea, and from the Flood unto the borders of the Earth.

Antichriſt cometh not ſo groſly as the Papiſts imagine.

Zech. 9.

By which things it is manifeſt, that the wiſe Jews knew well enough, Chriſt to be promiſed to them of the Stock of Juda; and not of the Stock of Dan; and that he was given all to peace, and not to war: Therefore it is not likely that they can be ſeduced by ſuch a one. But if there ſhould have been in time to come ſome ſuch ſingular Antichriſt, then would Chriſt (ſeeing he loved his) have ſaid ſomewhat unto them of him. Now, of one ſingularly doth he not ſpeak, but of many, ſaying, Many ſhall come in my Name, and ſay, I am Chriſt, and they ſhall ſeduce many perſons. But now let us ſee, how the Propheſies in Daniel, and in the Apocalyps (aforeſaid) be falſly and erroneouſly applied to the ſame imagined Antichriſt. For in Daniel the ninth Chapter, thus it is written, And after 72 weeks ſhall Chriſt be ſlain, and they which will deny him ſhall not be his people. And the City and Sanctuary ſhall be a people, with their Captain that ſhall come with them, deſtroy, whoſe end ſhall be utter deſolation, and after the end of the war a determined deſtruction. Now he ſhall in one week confirm his Covenant towards many, and in the half week ſhall the Offering and Sacrifice ceaſe, and in the Temple ſhall there be an abomination of deſolation, and even to the fulfilling up of all, and to the end ſhall the deſolation continue. It is plain and manifeſt that this Propheſie is now fulfilled. For the people of Rome with their Captain deſtroyed Jeruſalem even to the ground, and the people of the Jews was ſlain and ſcattered. And the abomination, that is, the Idol of Deſolation was placed of Adrian, in the laſt deſtruction, in Jeruſalem, in the holy place; that is to ſay, in a place of the Temple. And from that time hitherto have paſſed near about 1290 days, taking a day for a year, as Daniel takes it in his Propheſies, and other Prophets likewiſe. For Daniel ſpeaking of 62 weeks, doth not ſpeak of the weeks of days but of years. So therefore when he ſaith, From the time that the continual Sacrifice was taken away, &c. 1290 days muſt be taken for ſo many years, from the time of the Deſolation of Jeruſalem, even unto the revealing of Antichriſt: and not for three years and an half; which they ſay, Antichriſt ſhall Reign. And again, whereas Daniel ſaid, How long till the end of theſe marvelous matters? It was anſwered him, For a time, and times, and half a time. Behold alſo, how unſtly they did aſſign this time, by three years and a half,

Antichriſt cannot come of the Tribe of Dan.

Dan. 9.

The abomination or Idol of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place.

Antichriſt to Reign only three years and an half, is falſe.

The old imagination touching Antichriſt confuted.

a half, which they say, Antichrist shall Reign. For when as it is said a time, times, and half a time; there is a going downward from the greater to the less, from the whole to the part, because it is from a time to half a time. If therefore there be a going downward from the whole to the part, by the midst (which is greater than the whole it self) the going downward is not meet nor agreeing. And this is done when as it is said, that a time, times, and half a time, is a year, two years, and half a year. Wherefore more fitly it is said, that a time, times, and half a time doth signifie 1290 years, as is before said in the Chapter preceeding. Thus therefore is the Prophesie of Daniel falsly applied to that imagined Antichrist.

Likewise is the process of the Apocalyps applied to the same imagined Antichrist too much erroneously. Because that the same cruel Beast which came up out of the Sea, having seven Heads, and ten Horns, to whom there was power given over every Tribe, People, and Tongue, and the power given for the space of 42 months: This Beast doth note the Roman Emperors, which most cruelly did persecute the people of God, as well Christians as Jews. For when as the condemnation of the great Whore, sitting upon the many waters was shewed to John: he saw the same Woman sitting upon the purple coloured Beast full of the names of blasphemy, having seven Heads and ten Horns: and he saw a Woman being drunk with the blood of the Saints and Martyrs of Jesus. And the Angel expounding and telling him the mystery of the Woman, and the Beast that carried her said, That seven heads are seven hills, and are seven Kings: Five are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come: and when he shall come, he must Reign a short time. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten Kings, who have not yet taken their Kingdom, shall receive their Power as it were in one hour under the Beast. And finally he saith, The Woman whom thou sawest is the great City, which hath the Kingdom over the Kings of the Earth. And it is manifest that the City of Rome at the time of this Prophesie, had the Kingdom over the Kings of the Earth. And this City was born up and upholden by her cruel and beastly Emperors; who by their cruelty and beastliness did subdue unto themselves in a manner all the Kingdoms of the World, of zeal to have Lordship over others, and not vertuously to govern the people that were their Subjects, seeing that they themselves did lack all vertue, and drew back others from the faith and from vertue.

Apoc. 13.

The beast in the 13th of the Apocalyps expounded.

The purple Beast in the Apocalyps meaneth Rome.

Wherefore that cruel Beast coming up out of the Sea, doth rightly note the Roman Emperors, who had power over every Language, People, and Country. And the power of the Beast was for 42 months, because that from the first Emperor of Rome, that is to say, Julius Cæsar, unto the end of Frederick the last Emperor of Rome, there were 42 months, taking a month for 30 days, as the months of the Hebrews and Grecians are, and taking a day always for a year, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. By which things it may plainly appear how unfitly this Prophesie is applied to that imagined Antichrist, and the 42 months taken for three years and a half, which (they say) he shall Reign in, against the saying of the Prophets, because that days are taken for years. As in the second of the Apocal. They shall be troubled ten days. Which do note the most cruel Persecution of Dioclesian against the Christians that endured ten years. And in another place of the Apocalyps it is writen of the smoke coming up out of the bottomless Pit: Out of which Pit there came forth Grasshoppers into the Earth, and to them was power given, as Scorpions have power, to vex and trouble men five months. Now it is manifest, that from the beginning of the Fryers Minors and Preachers, to the time that Armachanus began to disclose and uncover their Hypocrisie, and their false Foundation of valiant begging under the Poverty of Christ, were five months, taking a month for thirty days, and a day for a year. And to Ezekiel were days given for years. Wherefore it is an unfit thing to assign the 42 months, being appointed to the power of the Beast, unto three years and a half, for the Reign of that phantastical and imagined Antichrist; specially seeing that they do apply to his Reign the 1290 days in Daniel, which make 42 months, and in the Apocalyps they assign him 42 months. It is plain that the Psaltery and the Harp agree not. And therefore seeing that it is sufficiently shewed that the same fabling Tale of that imagined Antichrist to come, is a Fable and erroneous; let us go forward to declare whether Antichrist be already come, and yet is he hid from many, and must be opened and disclosed within a little while according to the truth of the holy Scripture, for the Salvation of the Faithful.

KING Ric. 2.

Whether Antichrist be already come.

And because that in the first conclusion of mine answer I have conditionally put it, who is that Antichrist lying privy in the hid Scriptures of the Prophets: I will pass on the Declaration of that conclusion, bringing to light those things which lay hid in darkness, because nothing is hid which shall not be disclosed, and nothing covered which shall not be known. And therefore the thing which was said in the darkness, let us say in the light; and the thing that we have heard in the ear, let us preach upon the house tops. I therefore, as I have before said, so say, that if the high Bishop of Rome, calling himself the Servant of God, and the chief Vicar of Christ in this world, do make and justifie many Laws contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ: then is he the chief of many, which coming in the name of Christ have said I am Christ, who have seduced many. Which is the first part of the first conclusion, and is manifest. For Christ is called of the Hebrews the very same that we call anointed. And amongst them there was a double sort of legal anointing by the Law, the one of Kings, and the other of Priests. And as well were the Kings, as the Priests, called in the Law Christs. The Kings, as in the Psalm, The Kings of the Earth stood up together, and the Princes assembled themselves in one against the Lord, and against his Christ or anointed. And in the Books of the Kings very often are the Kings called Christs. And our Saviour was Christ, or anointed King, because he was a King for evermore upon the Throne of David, as the Scripture doth very oftentimes witness. The Priests also were called anointed, as where it is written, Do not ye touch my Christs; that is, mine anointed Ones, and be not ye spiteful against my Prophets. And so was our Saviour Christ, a Priest for ever, according to the Order of Melchisedec.

The Pope proved Antichrist.

Anointing double in Scripture.

Kings and Priests anointed.

Seeing then that the Bishops of Rome do say that they are the High Priests; they say also therein that they are Kings, because they say that they have the Spiritual Sword pertaining to their Priesthood, and the corporal Sword which agreeth for a Kings State. So is it plain, that really and in very deed, they say, That they are Christs, albeit that expresly they be not called Christs. Now that they come in the name of Christ it is manifest, because they say that they are his principal Vicars in this World, ordained of Christ specially for the Government of the Christian Church. Therefore, seeing they say, that really and in very deed they are Christs, and the chief friends of Christ: If they make and justifie many Laws contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, then is it plain that they themselves in earth are the principal Antichrists, because there is no worse plague and pestilence, than a familiar enemy. And if in secret they be against Christ, and yet in open appearance they say that they are his friends, they are so much the more meet to seduce and deceive the Christian people, because that a manifest enemy shall have much ado to deceive a man, because men trust him not: but a privy enemy, pretending outward friendship, may easily seduce, yea those that be wise.

The Popes make themselves Priests and Kings.

The Pope maketh himself Christ.

The Pope cometh in the name of Christ.

Popes proved principal Antichrists.

The Pope an outward friend and a privy enemy to Christ.

But that this matter may the more fully be known, let us see what is the Law and Doctrine of Christ, that ought to be observed of all faithful people, which being known, it shall be an easie thing to see, if the Bishop of Rome do make or maintain any Laws contrary to the Law of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Whether the Pope doth maintain any Laws against the Laws of Christ.

I say then, that the Law of Christ is Charity, which is the perfect love of God and of Christ. This thing is plain and manifest. For Christ being demanded of a certain Doctor of the Law, What is the greatest commandment in the Law? answered: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind: That is the principal and greatest commandment. And as for the second it is like unto this: Thou shalt love thy Neighbour as thine own self. In these two commandments, doth the Law and whole Prophets depend. And in another place Christ saith: All manner of things therefore that you would that men should do to Joh. 13.

The Law of love commended in the Gospel.

you

KING Ric. 2. you, the ſame alſo do ye unto them; For this is the Law and the Prophets. And in John the thirteenth Chapter, Chriſt ſaith, And now do I ſay unto you, I give you a new Commandment, that you ſhould love each other; as I loved you, in like manner that you alſo ſhould love one another. In this ſhall all men know that you are my Diſciples, if you ſhall have love one towards another. And John fifteenth Chapter, This is my Commandment, that you love together as I have loved you. Greater love than this hath no body, than a man ſhould give his life for his Friends. The Apoſtle Peter ſaith in his firſt Epiſtle fourth Chapter. Above all things having continually Charity one towards another; for Charity covereth the multitude of ſins. Be ye Harborers, and entertain ye one another without grudging; every one as he hath received Grace, ſo let him beſtow it upon another man, as the good Stewards of the manifold Graces of God. If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the Word of God. If any man do ought for another, let it be done with ſingleneſs and unfained verity, miniſtred of God to us-ward, that in all things God may be honoured through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. James in his Epiſtle the ſecond Chapter, If ye perform the Royal Law accordingly to the Scriptures (thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour) ye do well: But if ye be partial in receiving and preferring mens perſonages, ye work wickedneſs, being blamed of the Law as Tranſgreſſors. And again, So ſpeak ye, and ſo do ye, as ye ſhould now begin to be judged by the Law of Liberty. What ſhall it avail (my Brethren) if a man ſay he have Faith, and have no Works? never ſhall the Faith be able to ſave him. For if a Brother or Siſter be naked, and have need of daily food, and ſome of you ſay to them, go ye in peace, be ye made warm and ſatisfied: and if ye ſhall not give thoſe things that are neceſſary for the body, what ſhall it avail? Even ſo Faith, if it have not Works, is dead in it ſelf.

John in his firſt Epiſtle the third Chapter, This is the tydings which you have heard from the beginning, that you ſhould love one another. And again, we know that we are tranſlated from death to life, if we love the Brethren: He that loveth not, abideth in death. And again herein we know the love of God, becauſe that he hath laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the Brethren. He that ſhall have the ſubſtance of this world, and ſhall ſee his Brother have need, and ſhall ſhut up his bowels from him, how abideth the love of God in him? My little Children, let us not love in word nor tongue, but in deed and truth. And again, Chap. 4. Moſt dearly Beloved, let us love together. For love is of God; he that loveth, not knoweth not God; for God is love. In this thing hath the love of God appeared in us, that God hath ſent his only begotten Son into the World, that we ſhould live by him. Herein is love; not that we have loved God, but that he hath firſt loved us, and hath ſent his his Son an attonement for our ſins. Moſt dearly Beloved, if God have loved us, we ſo ought to love together. No man hath ſeen God at any time; if we love together, God abideth in us, and his love is perfect in us. And again, Let us love God, for he hath firſt loved us. If a man ſhall ſay, I love God, and do hate his Brother, he is a lyar. For he that loveth not his Brother whom he ſeeth, how can he love God whom he ſeeth not? And this Commandment have we of God, that who ſo loveth God, ſhould love his Brother alſo. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Romans the thirteenth Chapter, Owe ye nothing to no body, ſaving that you ſhould love together, for he that loveth his Brother hath fulfilled the Law. For thou ſhalt not commit Adultery, thou ſhalt not Murther, thou ſhalt not Steal, thou ſhalt not bear falſe Witneſs, thou ſhalt not covet thy Neighbours goods; and if there be any other Commandment, it is plentifully fulfilled in this word, Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thy ſelf. Wherefore the fulfilling of the Law is love.

Paul to the Corinths the thirteenth Chapter ſaith, If I ſhould ſpeak with the Tongues of men and Angels, and yet have not Charity, I am become as it were a piece of ſounding metal or tinkling Cymbal. And if I have all Prophecy, and know all Myſteries and all Knowledg, and ſhall have all Faith, ſo that I might remove Mountains, and yet ſhall not have Charity, I am nothing. And if I ſhall give abroad all my Goods to feed the Poor, and ſhall give up my Body to be burned, and yet have not Charity, it profits me nothing. To the Galathians ſaith Paul, For you my Brethren are called unto liberty: do ye not give your liberty for an occaſion of the fleſh, but by Charity of the Spirit ſerve ye one another. For all the Law is fulfilled in one ſaying; Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thine own ſelf. To the Epheſians the fourth Chapter, he ſaith, I therefore that ſuffer bonds in the Lord do beſeech you, that you would walk worthy of the calling wherewith ye are called, with all humbleneſs and mildneſs, with patience, forbearing one another in love, being careful to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of Peace: that you be one body and one ſpirit, even as you be called in one Hope of your calling. And again in the fifth Chapter, Be ye followers of me as moſt dear Children, and walk ye in love, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us, and hath delivered up himſelf for us, an Offering and Sacrifice to God of a ſweet ſavour. To the Philippians, thus he ſpeaketh in the firſt Chapter, Only let your Converſation be worthy of the Goſpel of Chriſt, that either when I ſhall come and ſee you, or elſe in mine abſence I may hear of you, that you ſtand ſtedfaſt in one ſpirit, labouring together with one accord for the Faith of the Goſpel. And in nothing be ye afraid of the Adverſaries, which is to them a cauſe of damnation, but to you of ſalvation, and that of God. For to you it is given, not only that you ſhould believe in him, but alſo that you ſhould ſuffer with him, you having the like fight and battel that both you have ſeen in me, and alſo now do hear of me. If therefore there be any Conſolation in Chriſt, if any comfort of Charity, if any fellowſhip of the ſpirit, if any bowels of compaſſion fulfil you my joy, that you may be of one judgment, having one and the ſelf ſame Charity, being of one accord, of one manner of judgment, doing nothing of contention nor of vain glory, but in humbleneſs accounting other amongſt you, every one better than your ſelves; not every body looking upon the things that be his own, but thoſe that belong unto others. And to Col. 3. thus he writeth, You therefore as the Elect of God, holy, and beloved, put upon you the bowels of mercy, gentleneſs, humbleneſs, lowlineſs, modeſty, patience, bearing one with another, and giving place to your ſelves (if any have a quarrel againſt any body) even as the Lord forgave you, ſo do you alſo. Above all things have ye Charity, which is the bond of Perfection, and let the peace of Chriſt triumph in your hearts, in which peace you alſo are called in one body. And be ye kind and thankful. And to the Theſſalonians, thus Paul writeth in the fourth Chapter, As concerning brotherly Charity we have no need to write unto you: for you your ſelves have learned of God, that you ſhould love one another. And the ſame thing ye do towards all the Brethren throughout all Macedony.

Gal. 5. Eph. 4. Eph. 5. Phil. 1. Col. 3. 1 Theſſ. 4.

Out of all theſe any many other places of the holy Scripture it ſufficiently appeareth, that the Law of Chriſt is Charity; neither is there any vertue commanded of Chriſt, or any of his Apoſtles, to be obſerved of the faithful people, but that it cometh out of Charity, or elſe doth nouriſh Charity.

The Law is given by Moſes, and the Truth by Chriſt. Chriſt came not to unlooſe the Law and the Prophets, but to fulfil them. But yet many things were lawful and might have been obſerved in the time of the Law, which in the time of Grace muſt not be obſerved. And many things were unlawful to them that were under the Law, which in the time of Grace are lawful enough. After what ſort then he did not looſe the Law, but did fulfil it, it is neceſſary to declare, for thoſe things which hereafter muſt be ſaid. For amongſt Chriſtians many things are judged to be lawful, becauſe in the former Teſtament in the Law they were lawful: and yet they be expreſly contrary to Chriſts Goſpel. But the Authors of ſuch things do argue and reaſon thus, Chriſt came not to looſe the Law or the Prophets. Now after what ſort he did not unlooſe them it is manifeſt by the holy Scripture: that the Law given by Moſes, was written in Tables of ſtone, to declare the hardneſs of the peoples heart towards the love of God, or of Chriſt. But Chriſt hath written his Law in the hearts and in the minds of his; that is to ſay, the Law of perfect love of God, and of Chriſt. Which Law whoſoever obſerveth, he doth obſerve the Law of Moſes, and doth much greater works of Perfection, than were the works of the Law. Thus therefore were the morals

Many things obſerved in the old law, which be not obſerved now.

Many things unlawful in the old law, which be lawful now. How Chriſt did looſe, and not looſe the Law.

of

of the old Law fulfilled in the Law of Charity of Chriſt, and not unlooſed; becauſe they are much more perfectly obſerved, than of the Jews: This I ſay, if the Chriſtians do obſerve the Commandments of Chriſt in ſuch ſort, as he commanded the ſame to be obſerved. Chriſt hath fulfilled the Laws moral of the Old Teſtament, becauſe that the morals and judicials were ordained, that one perſon ſhould not do injury to another, and that every man ſhould have paid him that is his. Now they that are in charity, will do no injury to others, neither do they take other mens goods away from them. Nay, it ſeeketh not her own things. For charity ſeeketh not the things that be her own. Wherefore much leſs by a ſtronger reaſon it ought not to ſeek for other mens goods. And when as the judicials and morals were ordained, Chriſt did not by the works of the Law juſtifie the Believers in him, but by Grace juſtified them from their ſins. And ſo did Chriſt fulfil that by Grace that the Law could not by Juſtice.

Free juſtification, by Faith only. Grace, that is, free favour, mercy and goodneſs of God.

Paul to the Romans declareth in a godly diſcourſe, and to the Galathians likewiſe, That none ſhall be juſtified by the works of the Law, but by Grace in the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. As for the morals and ceremonies of the Law, as Circumciſion, Sacrifices for Offences, and for ſins, Firſt-fruits, Tenths, Vows, divers ſorts of Waſhings, the ſprinkling of blood, the ſprinkling of aſhes, abſtaining from unclean Meats, which are ordained for the ſanctifying and cleanſing of the people from ſin, no nor yet the prayers of the Prieſts, neither the preachings of the Prophets could cleanſe a man from his ſin. For death reigned even from Adam to Moſes, and ſin from Moſes to Chriſt,

Rom. 5. as Paul declareth to the Romans in the fifth Chapter. But Chriſt willing to have Mercy and not Sacrifice, being a Prieſt for ever after the Order of Melchiſedec, and an High

Heb. 9. Prieſt of good things to come, did neither by the blood of Goats, or Calves, but by his own blood enter in once into the holy places, when as everlaſting Redemption was found: neither did Jeſus enter into the holy places that were made with hands, which are the examples of true things, but unto the very Heaven, that now he may appear before the countenance of God for us. Nor yet he did ſo, that he ſhould offer up himſelf oftentimes, as the high Biſhop entred into the holy place every year with ſtrange blood (for otherwiſe he muſt needs have ſuffered oftentimes ſithence the beginning of the world) but now in the later end of the world hath he once appeared by his own Sacrifice, for the deſtruction of ſin. And like as it is decreed for men once to die, and after that cometh judgment: even ſo was Chriſt once offered up to conſume away the ſins of many. The ſecond time ſhall he appear without ſin to the ſalvation of ſuch as look for him. For the Law having a ſhadow of good things to come, and not the very image or ſubſtance it ſelf of the things, can never by thoſe Sacrifices which they offer (of one ſelf ſame ſort continually year by year) make them perfect that come unto her. Otherwiſe men would leave off offering, becauſe that thoſe Worſhippers being once cleanſed ſhould

Heb. 10. have no more prick of conſcience for ſin afterwards. But in them is there remembrance made of ſins every year. For it is impoſſible, that by the blood of Goats and Bulls ſins ſhould be taken away. Wherefore he entring into the world doth ſay, As for Sacrifice and Offering thou wouldſt not have, but a Body haſt thou framed unto me. And Sacrifices for ſin have not pleaſed thee: then ſaid I, behold, I come; In the head, or principal part of the Book it is written of me, that I ſhould do thy will, O God. Wherefore he ſaid before, that Sacrifices, Oblations, and Burnt-Offerings, and that for ſin thou wouldſt not have: neither were thoſe things pleaſant to thee which are offered according to the Law: then ſaid I, behold, I come, that I may do thy will, O God: He taketh away the firſt, that he may eſtabliſh that that followed. In which Will we are ſanctified and made holy by the offering up of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt once. And verily every Prieſt is ready every day miniſtring, and oftentimes offering the ſelf ſame Sacrifices, which never can take away ſins. But this man, offering one Sacrifice for ſins, doth for ever and ever ſit at Gods right hand, looking for the reſt to come, till that his Enemies be placed to be his Footſtool. For with one Offering hath he for ever made perfect thoſe that be ſanctified. By which things it plainly appeareth, that Chriſt by once offering hath cleanſed his from their ſins; who could not be cleanſed from the ſame by all the Ceremonies of the Law, and ſo did fulfil that which the Prieſthood of the Law could not. Wherefore only the morals and judicials he fulfilled by the Law of Charity, and by Grace; and the Ceremonials, by one offering up of his Body on the Altar of the Croſs. And ſo it is plain that Chriſt fulfilled the whole Law.

KING Ric. 2.

All ſhadows ought to ceaſe among Chriſtians.

Wherefore ſithence that the holy things of the Law were a ſhadow of thoſe things that were to come in the time of Grace, it were meet that all thoſe things ſhould utterly ceaſe amongſt Chriſtians, which, ſhould either be againſt Charity or the Grace of Chriſt. Although in the time of the Law they were lawful, and not utterly contrary to it, but were figures of Perfections in Chriſts Faith; yet it were meet that they ſhould ceaſe at the coming of the Perfection which they did prefigurate; as Circumciſion, the eating of the Paſchal-Lamb, and other ceremonial points of the Law. Whereupon alſo Paul to the Hebrews the ſeventh Chapter, ſaith thus, If therefore the making up of the perfection of all was by the Levitical Prieſthood (for the people received the Law under him) why was it neceſſary beſides, that another Prieſt ſhould riſe up after the Order of Melchiſedec, and not be called after the Order of Aaron? For when the Prieſthood is removed, it muſt needs be that the Law alſo be removed. For he in whom theſe things are ſpoken is of another Tribe, of which none ſtood preſent at the Altar: becauſe it is manifeſt that our Lord had his Off-ſpring of Juda, in which Tribe Moſes ſpake nothing of the Prieſts. And beſides this it is manifeſt; If according to the Order of Melchiſedec there do ariſe up another Prieſt, which was not made according to the law of the carnal commandment, but according to the power of the life that cannot be loſed. For thus he beareth witneſs, That thou art a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec: ſo that the commandment that went before, is diſallowed for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof. For the Law hath brought no body to perfection. By which things it appeareth that Chriſt making an end of the Prieſthood of Aaron, doth alſo make up a full end of the Law belonging to that Prieſthood. Whereupon I marvel that your learned men do ſay, That Chriſtian folks are bound to this ſmall Ceremony of the payment of Tythes, and care nothing at all for other, as well the great as the ſmall Ceremonies of the Law.

Where the Prieſthood is removed, there alſo the Law is removed.

Bound, as a matter of Religion, or as by the neceſſity of Gods Law, and not mans: but now Tythes ſtand by mans Law, and not by the old Law.

The cauſe ceaſing, the effect alſo ceaſeth. He meaneth that neceſſity of tythes, which ſtandeth by the neceſſity of the old Law, to ceaſe.

It is plain, that the Tythes were given to the Sons of Levi, for their ſerving in the Tabernacle and in the Temple of the Lord, as the Firſt-fruits were given to the Prieſts, and alſo part of the Sacrifices, and ſo were the Vows of their Miniſtery, as it appeareth in the Book of Numbers the 22*th* Chapter. But foraſmuch as the labour of thoſe Sacrifices did ceaſe at the coming of Chriſt, how ſhould thoſe things be demanded, which were ordained for that labour? And ſeeing that the Firſt-fruits were not demanded of Chriſtians, which Firſt-fruits were then rather and ſooner demanded than the Tythes: why muſt the Tythes be demanded except it be therefore peradventure, becauſe that the Tythes be more worth in value than be the Firſt-fruits.

If Tythes be claimed by force of the old Law, by the ſame Law Prieſts are bound to have no Temporalties.

Secondly, why are the Lay-people bound to the payment of Tythes, more than the Levites and the Prieſts were to the not having of Poſſeſſions of Realties and Lordſhips amongſt their Brethren, ſeeing that the ſelf ſame Law in the ſelf ſame place (where he ſaith, That the Tythes ought to be given to Levites) ſaith alſo to the Levites, You ſhall be contented with the offering of the Tythes, and have none other thing amongſt your Brethren. Wherefore ſeeing that the Prieſts be bound, to the not having of Temporal Lordſhips, how are the Lay-people bound by that Law (of God he meaneth, and not of man) to the payment of Tythes?

He proveth not contrary, but that Tythes be due by the profitable law of man; Although not by the ceremonial law of Moſes.

Thirdly, as touching Circumciſion, which is one of the greater Ceremonies of the Law, and was given before the Law, and was an univerſal Ceremony concerning the Covenant between God and his people, and was ſo much regarded in the Law, that thereof it was ſaid, The Soul, whoſe fleſh ſhall not be circumciſed in the foreſkin, ſhall periſh from among his people: Yet did this Ceremony utterly ceaſe at the coming of Chriſt, although that certain of the Jews did ſay in the Primitive-Church, that the Circumciſion ceaſeth: Ergo, the Ceremonies do ceaſe.

{KING Ric. 2.}

the Christians must needs keep the commandment of circumcision with the Faith; whom Paul reproveth, writing thus to the Galatians, the fourth Chapter, where he speaketh of the children of the bondwoman and of the freewoman, which do signifie the two Testaments. But we (O Brethren) are the children of the promise after Isaac; but like as at that time he that was born after the flesh, did persecute him which was after the spirit, even so it is now also. But what saith the Scriptures? Throw out the bondwoman and her son. The son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. Wherefore brethren, we are not the sons of the bondwoman, but of the free. Stand ye stedfast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath delivered you, and be not ye holden again under the yoke of slavery. Behold, I Paul say unto you, if you be circumcised, Christ shall nothing profit you. For I testifie again, to every man that circumciseth himself, that he is bound to keep all the whole law. Ye are utterly void of Christ: whosoever will be justified in the law, are fallen from grace.

Gal. 4.

Christian liberty from the bondage of the law.

In like manner we may reason, if we be bound to tithing, we are debters and bound to keep all the whole law. For to say, that Men are bound to one ceremony of the law, and not to the others, is no reasonable saying. Either therefore we are bound to them all, or to none. Also, that by the same * old law Men are not bound to pay Tithes, it may be shewed by many reasons, which we need not any more to multiply and increase, because the things that be said are sufficient. Whereupon some do say, that by the Gospel we are bound to pay Tithes, because Christ said to the Pharisees, Matth. 23d Chap. Wo be to you Scribes and Pharisees, which pay your Tithe of Mint, of Anise-seed, and of Cummin, and leave judgment, mercy and truth undone, being the weightier things of the law; both should ye have done these things, and also not have left the other undone. O ye blind guids, that strain at a Gnat, and swallow up a Camel. This word soundeth not as a commandment, or manner of bidding, whereby Christ did command Tithes to be given; but it is a word of disallowing the hypocrisie of the Pharisees, who of covetousness did weigh and esteem Tithes because of their own singular commodity, rather than other great and weighty commandments of the law. And me seemeth that our Men are in the same predicament of the Pharisees which do leave off all the ceremonies of the old law, keeping only the commandment of tithing. It is manifest and plain enough by the premises, and by other places of the Scripture, that Christ was a Priest after the order of Melchisedek, of the Tribe of Judah, not of the Tribe of Levi, who gave no new commandment of tithing of any thing to him and to his Priests, whom he would place after him; but when his Apostles said to him, Behold we leave all things and have followed thee, what then shall we have? he did not answer them thus, Tithes shall be paid you; neither did he promise them a temporal, but an everlasting reward in Heaven. For he both for food, and also apparel, taught his Disciples not to be careful; Be ye not careful for your life what ye shall eat, or for your body what ye shall put on: Is not the life of Man more worth than the meat, and the body more worth than apparel? Behold ye, the Birds of Heaven, which do not sow, nor reap, neither yet lay up in Barns, and yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. And as for apparel, why should you be careful? Consider the Lilies of the field, how they grow, they labour not, neither do they spin, &c. In conclusion he saith, Be not ye careful, saying, what shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be covered? For all these things do the Gentiles seek after; for your Father knoweth that you have need of all these things. First, therefore seek ye for the Kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be cast unto you. And Paul right well remembring this Doctrine, instructeth Timothy, and saith thus, But we having food, and wherewithal to be covered, let us therewith be contented. And as the Acts of the Apostles do declare in the first conversion of the Jews at Jerusalem, they had all things common, and to every one was division made, as need required. Neither did the Priests make the Tithes their own proper goods. For like as it was not meet that the lay people being converted, should have propriety of goods; even so neither that Priests should have propriety of Tithes. So that if the Priests started back from fervent charity in challenging to themselves the propriety of Tithes; it is no marvel of departing backward (as do the Priests from the perfection of charity) also of the laity, to be willing to appropriate to themselves the nine parts remaining after Tithes. Wherefore seeing that neither Christ, nor any of the Apostles, commanded to pay Tithes; it is manifest and plain, neither by the law of Moses, nor by Christs law, Christian people are bound to pay Tithes; but by the Tradition of men they are bound.

Bound in one thing (he meaneth) bound in all. Either bound to all, or to none.

* Here he expresseth his meaning plainly.

The one is disallowed, the other is not commanded.

Priests wrest religion to their own profit.

Tithes not expressly commanded anew by Christ in the Gospel.

Mat. 6.

1 Tim. 6.

Tithes not required in the primitive Church.

Tithes due to be paid by the positive Law of Men.

By the premises now it is plain, that Christ did not undo the law, but by grace did fulfil it. Notwithstanding, in the law many things were lawful, which in the time of grace are forbidden; and many things were then unlawful, which now are lawful enough. For nothing that is contrary to charity, is lawful to a Christian.

Let us now hear what manner of commandments Christ hath given us in the Gospel, without the observation of which commandments, charity shall not perfectly be kept. By which commandments Christ did not undo the old law, but did fulfil it. By the observation also of which commandments, he teacheth us to pass and go beyond the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, who most perfectly thought themselves to keep the law. This absolute and perfect righteousness, which we are bound to have beyond the righteousness of the Pharisees and the Scribes, he teacheth in Matthew 5, 6, and 7 Chapters, which being heard and compared to the Traditions made and commanded by the Roman Prelates, it shall plainly appear, whether they be contrary or no. Christ therefore saith, You have heard, that it was said to them of the old time, Thou shalt not kill. For he that killeth shall be guilty of judgment. But I say unto you, that every one that is angry with his brother shall be in danger of judgment. In this he doth teach that we ought not to be angry with our brethren; not that he would undo this old commandment (Thou shalt not kill) but that the same should be the more perfectly observed. Again he saith, You have heard that it was said, thou shalt love thy friend, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, do well to them that hate you, pray for them that persecute and slander you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven: Which maketh his Sun to arise upon the good and the evil people, and raineth upon the just and unjust. For if you love them which love you, what reward shall you have? Do not the Publicans thus? And if you shall salute your brethren only, what great thing do ye? Do not the Heathen thus also? Be you therefore perfect, as also your heavenly Father is perfect.

The Doctrine of Christ, whether it be contrary to the traditions of the Pope or not.

Mat. 5.

Again Christ saith, You you have heard that it is said, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. But I say unto you, see that you resist not evil. But if any man shall strike you upon the right cheek, give him the other too. And to him that will strive with thee for thy Coat in judgment, let him have thy Cloak also. And whosoever shall constrain thee one Mile, go with him also two other. He that asketh of thee, give him; and he that will borrow of thee, turn not thy self from him.

By these things it may plainly appear how that Christ the King of peace, the Saviour of Mankind, who came to save, and not to destroy; who gave a law of charity to be observed of his faithful people; hath taught us not to be angry, not to hate our enemies, nor to render evil for evil, nor to resist evil. For all these things do foster and nourish peace and charity, and do proceed and come forth of charity, and when they be not kept, charity is loosed, and peace is broken. But the Bishop of Rome approveth and alloweth Wars, and slaughters of men in War, as well against our enemies, that is, the Infidels, as also against the Christians for temporal goods. Now, these things are quite contrary to Christs Doctrine, and to Charity, and to Peace.

The Doctrine of Christ and of the Pope compared.

In the Decrees 23. q. 1. cap. Paratus, it is taught, that the precepts of patience must always be retained in purpose of the heart, so that patience with benevolence must be kept in the mind secret. But apparently and manifestly that thing should be done which seemeth to do good to those, whom we ought to wish well unto. Wherein they give to understand, that a Christian may freely defend himself,

The gloss of Gracianus upon the c. Paratus 23. q. 1. disproved.

Chriſt in anſwering to his ſtriker, did not break his rule of patience outwardly. The precept of Chriſt to turn the other cheek, hath a privy compariſon; as if he would ſay, rather be you content to ſuffer two blows than to revenge one.

ſelf. And for confirmation of this ſaying they do ſay, That Chriſt, when he was ſtricken on the face of the High Biſhops ſervant, did not fulfil (if we look upon the words) his own commandment; becauſe he gave not to the ſmiter the other part, but rather did forbid him, that he ſhould not do it, to double his injury. For he ſaid, if I have ſpoken evil, beare witneſs of the evil; but if well, why doſt thou ſtrike me? I do marvel of this ſaying; for firſt, if thoſe commandments of patience muſt be kept in ſecret in the mind; and ſeeing the body doth work at the motion of the mind, and is and ought to be moved and ruled by the ſame; it muſt then needs be, that if patience be in the mind, it muſt appear alſo outwardly in the body.

This Article of Brute muſt have a relation ever to the Doctrine of the Clergy.

Secondly, I marvel that it is ſaid, that Chriſt did not fulfil his own precept of patience. For it is manifeſt, that albeit he teaching always as a good Schoolmaſter, thoſe things which were fit for the ſalvation of ſouls, ſpeaking the wholeſome word of inſtruction to the High Biſhops ſervant, ſmiting him unjuſtly, did neither by word forbid another ſtroke to be given on the other cheek, neither did he defend himſelf bodily from ſtriking on the ſame cheek; but ſpeaking to him, it is likely that he gave him the other cheek; he meaneth, that he turned not the other cheek away. For a man turneth not away from him whom he ſpeaketh to, or whom he informeth, but layeth open before him all his face; even ſo do I believe that Chriſt did, that he might fulfil in very deed that which before he had taught in word. Neither yet did Chriſt by his word or by his deed ſhew any thing of defence, or of bodily reſiſtance.

The cauſe here again of Chriſt was private, and his Doctrine is to be underſtood in private caſes. War in caſe allowed of W. Brute.

Thirdly, I marvel why wiſe men leaving the plain and manifeſt Doctrine of Chriſt, whereby he teacheth patience, do ſeek corners of their own imagining, to the intent they may approve fightings and wars. Why mark they not after what manner Chriſt ſpake to Peter, ſtriking the High Biſhops ſervant, ſaying, Put up thy Sword into the Sheath, for every one that ſhall take the Sword, ſhall periſh with the Sword? But in another caſe we muſt make reſiſtance; which caſe may be ſo righteous, as it is for a Mans Lord and Maſter being a moſt righteous Man, and yet ſuffering injury of miſchievous perſons.

He meaneth reſiſtance for private cauſes, or for worldly goods.

Fourthly, I marvel, ſeeing that we are bound of charity, and by the law of Chriſt, to give our lives for our Brethren, how they can allow ſuch manner of diſſentions and reſiſting. For when thy Brother ſhall maliciouſly ſtrike thee, thou mayſt be ſure, that he is manifeſtly fallen from charity, into the ſnare of the Devil. If thou ſhalt keep patience, he ſhall be aſhamed of his doing, and thou mayſt bow and bend him to repentance, and take him out from the ſnare of the Devil, and call him back again to charity. If thou reſiſt, and perchance by reſiſtance doſt ſtrike again, his fury ſhall be the more kindled, and he being ſtirred up to greater wrath, peradventure ſhall either ſlay thee, or thou him. Touching thy ſelf thou art uncertain if thou go about to make reſiſtance, whether thou ſhalt fall from charity, and then ſhalt thou go backward from the perfection of Chriſts commandment: Neither doſt thou know but that it may happen thee ſo greatly to be moved, as that by the heat and violence of wrath, thou ſhalt ſlay him. Whereas if thou wouldſt diſpoſe thy ſelf to patience (as Chriſt teacheth) thou ſhouldſt eaſily avoid all theſe miſchiefs, as well on the behalf of thy Brother, as alſo of thine own part. Wherefore the obſerving of charity, as the precept of patience, is to be obſerved.

Patience commended in private cauſes amongſt Chriſtian brethren.

The inconvenience of private reſiſtance amoug Chriſtian brethren.

Fifthly, I do marvel, why that for the allowing of this corporal reſiſtance, he doth ſay in the ſame Chapter, that Paul did not fulfil the precept of the patience of Chriſt, when as he being ſtricken in the place of judgment by the commandment of the High Prieſt, did ſay, God ſtrike thee, O thou painted Wall: Doſt thou ſit to judge me according to the law, and doſt thou command me to be ſtricken againſt the law? It is manifeſt that Paul made reſiſtance in nothing, though he ſpake a word of inſtruction to the Prieſt, who againſt the law commanded him to be ſtricken. And if Paul had overpaſſed the bounds of patience, through the grief of the ſtroke, what of that? Muſt the deed of Paul's impatience for this cauſe be juſtified, and the commandment of patience taught by Chriſt be left undone for Paul's deed, and corporal reſiſtance be allowed? God forbid. For both Paul and Peter might err. But in the Doctrine of Chriſt there may be found no error. Wherefore we muſt give more credence and belief to Chriſts ſayings, than to any living mans doings. Wherefore although Paul had reſiſted, which I do not perceive in that Scripture, it followeth not thereof, that corporal reſiſtance muſt be approved, which is of Chriſt expreſly forbidden. I much marvel that always they ſeek corners and ſhadows to juſtifie their deeds. Why do they not mark what great things Paul reciteth himſelf to have ſuffered for Chriſt? And where I pray you, have they found that he, after his converſion ſtrook any man that did hurt him? Or where do they find that he in expreſs word doth teach ſuch a kind of corporal reſiſtance? But as touching patience, he ſaith in plain words to the Romans, Be not wiſe in your own conceits: Render ill for ill to no body: providing good things not only before God, but alſo before all men, if it be poſſible. Be at peace with all folks, as much as in you lieth; not revenging your ſelves, my moſt dearly beloved, but give you place unto anger. For it is written, Vengeance is mine, and I will recompence them, ſaith the Lord. But if thine enemy ſhall be an hungred, give him meat; if he be athirſt, give him drink. For thus doing, thou ſhalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome thou evil with good.

KING 1 Reg. 2.

The fact either of Paul or of any other, doth not derogate from the doctrine of our Saviour.

Rom. 12. Rules of Chriſtian patience.

To the Corinthians the 5th. as touching judgment and contention, which are matters of leſs weight than are fightings, thus he writeth, Now verily there is great fault in you, that ye be at law amongſt your ſelves. Why rather take ye not wrong? Why rather ſuffer ye not deceit? And generally in all his Epiſtles, he teacheth that patience ſhould be kept, and not corporal reſiſtance by fighting, becauſe charity is patient, it is courteous, it ſuffereth all things. I marvel how they juſtifie and make good the wars by Chriſtians, ſaving only the wars againſt the Devil and ſin. For ſeeing that it is plain, that thoſe things which were in the Old Teſtament, were figures of things to be done in the New Teſtament; Therefore we muſt needs ſay, that the corporal wars being then done, were figures of the Chriſtian wars againſt ſin, and the Devil, for the heavenly Country which is our inheritance. It is plain that it was written thus of Chriſt: The mighty Lord, and of great power in battel hath girded himſelf in force and manlineſs to the War; and he came not to ſend peace into the earth, but War. In this war ought Chriſtian people to be ſoldiers, according to that manner which Paul teacheth to the Epheſians the laſt, Put upon you the armour of God, that you may be able to ſtand againſt the deceits of the Devil. For we have not to wraſtle againſt fleſh and bloud, but againſt Princes and Poteſtates, againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of the World, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs in heavenly things, which are in the high places. Wherefore take ye the armour of God, that ye may be able to reſiſt in the evil day, and to ſtand perfectly in all things. Stand ye therefore girded about in truth upon your loyns, having put upon you the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, and your feet ſhod in a readineſs to the Goſpel of peace; in all things taking the ſhield of faith, wherewith you may quench all the fiery darts of that wicked one. And take unto you the helmet of ſalvation, and the ſword of the ſpirit, which is the word of God.

I Cor. 5. He meaneth ſuch wars of Chriſtians, as the Pope allowеth, rifing rather of private revenge of Princes, for Worldly glory or affection, than for any publick neceſſity.

Corporal Wars in the Old Teſtament be figures of the ſpiritual wars in the New Teſtament againſt ſin & the Devil.

Ephe. 6.

By theſe things it is plain, what are the wars of Chriſtians, and what are the weapons of their warfare. And becauſe it is manifeſt, that this Teſtament is of greater perfection than the former, we muſt now fight more perfectly than at that time. For now ſpiritually; then corporally; now for an heavenly everlaſting inheritance, then for an earthly and temporal; now by patience, then by reſiſtance. For Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are they that ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſs, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. He ſaith not, bleſſed are they that fight for righteouſneſs. How can a man ſay that they may lawfully make war and kill their Brethren for the temporal goods, which peradventure they unjuſtly occupy, or unjuſtly intend to occupy? For he that killeth another to get thoſe goods which another body unjuſtly occupieth, doth love more the very goods than his own Brother. And then he falling from charity, doth kill himſelf ſpiritually. If he go forward without * charity to make war, then doth he evil, and to his own damnation. Wherefore he doth not lawfully nor juſtly in proceeding to the damnation of his own ſelf and his Brother; whom, though he ſee unjuſtly to occupy

What be the wars moſt proper to Chriſtians.

All this teacheth meaneth the lawfulneſs of wars, in caſe of publick neceſſity, but only in private caſe for temporal goods.

* Note this word, without charity.

KING 1 Rich. 2.

Such kind of Wars, that is, ſuch kind as be for private revenge of temporal goods.

occupy his goods, yet he doth intend to kill; And what if ſuch kind of Wars were lawful to the Jews? this argueth not, that now they are lawful to Chriſtians; becauſe that their deeds were in a ſhadow of imperfection, but the deeds of Chriſtians in the light of perfection. It was not ſaid unto them, All people that ſhall take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. What if John the Baptiſt diſallowed corporal fightings, and corporal warfare, at ſuch time as the Soldiers asked him ſaying, And what ſhall we do? who ſaith to them, See that you ſtrike no man, neither pick ye quarrels againſt any, and be you contented with your wage. This ſaying of John alloweth not corporal warfare amongſt Chriſtian. For John was of the prieſts of the Old Teſtament, and under the Law, neither to him it appertained not to follow the law, but to warn the people to the perfect obſervation of the law; for he, being likewiſe demanded of the Publicans what they ſhould do, ſaid unto them, Do no other thing than is appointed unto you. But Chriſt the Author of the New Teſtament, and of greater perfection than was the perfection of the old law, gave new things, as it plainly appeareth by the Goſpel. So that Chriſtians ought to receive information of Chriſt, not of John. For of John alſo doth Chriſt ſpeak; Verily I ſay unto you, there hath not riſen amongſt the children of Men, a greater than John Baptiſt, but he that is leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he. In which ſaying, Chriſt ſheweth, that thoſe that be leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven in the time of grace, are placed in greater perfection than was John, which was one of them that were the Elders, and he lived alſo in the time of the law in greater perfection. And when as certain of John's Diſciples ſaid unto him, Maſter, he that was beyond Jordan, to whom thou gaveſt witneſs, behold he baptiſeth, and all people come unto him; John anſwered and ſaid, A man cannot take upon him, unleſs it ſhall be given him from above. You your ſelves do bear me record, that I ſaid I am not Chriſt, but that I was ſent before him. He that hath the bride, is the bridegroom; as for the bridegrooms friend, who ſtandeth and heareth him, he rejoiceth with great joy to hear the voice of the bridegroom. This therefore my joy is fulfilled; he muſt increaſe and I muſt be diminiſhed. He that cometh from on high, is above all. He that is of the earth is earthly, and ſpeaketh of the earth: He that cometh from Heaven, is above all folks; that which he hath ſeen and heard, the ſame doth he witneſs, and yet his witneſſing doth no body receive. But he that receiveth his witneſſing, hath put to his Seal, that God is true. For he whom God hath ſent, ſpeaketh the Words of God.

How John Baptiſt allowed not warfare.

They that be leaſt in the Kingdom of heaven greater than John Baptiſt expounded.

By which things it plainly appeareth, that credence is to be given neither to John, nor yet to Angel, if he teach any thing that is not agreeable to Chriſts Doctrine. For Chriſt is above the Angels, becauſe that God infinitely paſſeth them in wiſdom. Now if Moſes the ſervant of God, a Miniſter of the Old Teſtament, was ſo much to be believed, that nothing could be added, nor yet any thing diminiſhed from the Commandments that were given by him, (for ſo Moſes had ſaid, The thing that I command thee, that do thou only to the Lord, neither add thou any thing, nor diminiſh;) How much more ought we not to add nor to take away from the Commandments given by God himſelf, and alſo the Son of God? In the primitive Church becauſe the Chriſtians had fervent love and charity, they obſerved theſe precepts as they were given; but the fervent charity afterward waxing lukewarm, they invented Gloſſes by drawing the commandments of God back to their own deeds, which they purpoſed to juſtifie and maintain; that is to ſay, wars againſt the infidels. But that theſe by wars ſhould be converted to the faith, as a fact faithleſs enough: becauſe that by violence or unwillingly, no body can believe in Chriſt, nor be made a Chriſtian, neither did he come to deſtroy them by battel, that believed not in him; for he ſaid to his Diſciples, You know not what ſpirit you are of. The ſon of man came not to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them. Then to grant pardons and forgiveneſs of ſins to thoſe that kill the infidels, is too much an infidels fact, ſeducing many people. For what greater ſeducing can there be, than to promiſe to a man forgiveneſs of ſins, and afterward the joy of Heaven, for ſetting himſelf againſt Chriſts commandments in the killing of infidels, that would not be converted to the faith? whereas Chriſt doth ſay, Not every one that ſaith to me Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doth the will of my Father which is in Heaven, thus perſon ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Now the will of the Father is, that we ſhould believe in his only Son Jeſus Chriſt, and that we ſhould obey him by obſerving of thoſe things which he himſelf hath commanded. Wherefore Chriſts precepts of patience muſt be fulfilled, wars, fightings and contentions muſt be left, becauſe they are contrary to charity.

Herein eaneth thoſe Wars againſt Infidels ſtirred up and procured by the Pope upon blind ſuperſtition, to fight for the Holy Land, and not taken by Princes in the neceſſary defence of themſelves, and of their Country.

But peradventure ſome man will thus reaſon againſt Chriſt, The Saints by whom God hath wrought Miracles, do allow wars againſt the faithful people, as alſo againſt the Infidels. And the holy Kings were Warriors, for whoſe ſakes Miracles alſo have been ſhewed, as well in their death, as alſo in their life, yea in the very time wherein they were a warfare. Wherefore it ſeemeth that their facts were good and lawful. For otherwiſe God would not have done Miracles for them. Objection.

To this again I ſay, That we for no Miracles muſt do contrary to the Doctrine of Chriſt; for in it can there be no error; but in Miracles there oftentimes chanceth error, as it is plain as well by the Old as by the New Teſtament. God forbid then that a Chriſtian ſhould for deceivable Miracles depart from the infallible Doctrine of Chriſt. In Exod. the 7*th* Chap. it is manifeſt, how that the wicked wiſe men of the Egyptians, through the inchantments of Egypt, and certain ſecret workings, threw their Wands upon the earth, which were turned into Dragons, even as Aaron before time in the preſence of Pharaoh threw his Wand upon the earth, which by the power of God was turned into a Serpent. In the 3d of the Kings the 22d Chap. Michens did ſee the Lord ſitting upon his Throne, and all the Hoſt of Heaven ſtanding about him on the right hand and on the left. 3 Re. 22. And the Lord ſaid, who ſhall deceive Achab the King of Iſrael, that he may go up and be ſlain in Ramoth Gilead? And one ſaid this way, and another otherwiſe; now, there went forth a ſpirit, and ſtood before the Lord and ſaid, I will deceive him. To whom the Lord ſpake, by what means? And he ſaid, I will go forth, and be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all his Prophets. And the Lord ſaid, thou ſhalt deceive him and prevail. go thy ways forth, and do even ſo. Thus alſo it is written in Deut. If there ſhall ariſe a Prophet amongſt you, or one that ſhall ſay, he hath ſeen a dream, and ſhall foretel a ſign and a wonder; and if that ſhall come to paſs that he hath ſpoken, and he ſhall ſay unto thee, let us go and follow ſtrange Gods (whom thou knoweſt not) and let us ſerve them; thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that Prophet or Dreamer; for the Lord your God tempteth you, to make it known whether you love him or no, with all your heart, and with all your ſoul.

Answer! Legibus agendum, non exemplis.

True miracles here of holy men be not diſproved, but ſpeaking univerſally, the ſtable Doctrine and Word of God, is the ſure rule for men to follow.

Achab deceived by falſe Prophets.

In Jeremy the 23d Chap. Are not my words even like fire, ſaith the Lord? and like an hammer that breaketh the ſtone? Therefore behold, I will come againſt the Prophets which have dreamed a lie (ſaith the Lord) which have ſhewed thoſe things, and have ſeduced the people through their lies and their miracles, when as I ſent them not, neither commanded them; which have brought no profit unto this people (ſaith the Lord) In Mark the 13th Chap. ſaith Chriſt, For there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe Prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders to deceive, if it were poſſible, even the very elect. Paul in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians the 11th Chap. Such falſe Apoſtles are deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the Apoſtles of Chriſt. And no marvel, for even Satan transformeth himſelf into an Angel of Light; therefore it is no great thing though his Miniſters transform themſelves, as though they were the Miniſters of righteouſneſs, whoſe end ſhall be according to their works.

Jer. 23. Prophets muſt be tried by Doctrine.

Mark 13 Falſe Prophets.

2 Cor. 11

In the Apocalyps the 13th Chap. John ſaw a Beaſt aſcending up out of the earth, and it had two horns like a Lamb, but he ſpake like the Dragon, and he did all that the firſt beaſt could do before him; and he cauſed the earth and the inhabitants thereof to worſhip the firſt beaſt, whoſe deadly wound was healed, and did great wonders, ſo that he made fire come down from Heaven on the earth, in the ſight of men, and deceived them that dwelt on the earth, by means of the ſigns which were permitted him to do in the ſight of the beaſt.

Apoc. 13

By theſe things it is moſt manifeſt and plain, that in Miracles this manifold error oftentimes happeneth, through the working of the Devil, to deceive the people withal. Wherefore we ought not for the working of Miracles to depart from the Commandments of God. I would to God that they which put confidence in Miracles, would give heed unto the word of Chriſt, in the 7th Chap. of Mat. thus ſpeaking, Many ſhall ſay unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not in thy name propheſied? and in thy name caſt out Devils, and in thy name done many great works? &c. I will profeſs unto them, I never knew you, depart from me all ye which work iniquity.

Miracles are to be tried.

{KING Ric. 2.}

Mat. 7.

The ſervants of Chriſt diſcerned by working not of Miracles, but of vertues.

By this ſaying it is moſt manifeſt that the ſervants of Chriſt are not diſcerned by working of Miracles, but by the working of vertues, departing from iniquity, and obeying the commandments of God. Wherefore it is wonderful, that any in this life dare preſume to prevent the day of the Judgment of God, to judge by means of Miracles, that ſome are Saints, whom Men ought to worſhip, whom peradventure, God will in the laſt Judgment condemn, ſaying, Depart from me all ye which work iniquity. If any Man could here on earth judge ſinners to be condemned; then if this judgment were certain, Chriſt ſhould not judge the ſecond time; and whatſoever ſuch Judges bind in earth, the ſame ought to be bound in Heaven. But if ſuch a judgment be uncertain, then it is perilous and full of deceit, when as by it men on earth, may inſtead of Saints, worſhip ſuch as are damned with the fellowſhip of the Devils, and in prayer require their aid, who even like as the Devils their companions, are more ready, and more of might to evil than to good, more to hurt than to profit. I wonder they mark not what Chriſt ſaid, when his Kinſwoman came unto him, deſiring and requiring ſomething of him, and ſaying, Command that theſe my two ſons may ſit one upon thy right hand, and the other upon thy left hand in thy Kingdom. But Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, Ye know not what ye aſk, can ye drink of the cup which I ſhall drink of? they ſaid unto him, we can. He ſaid unto them, of my cup indeed ye ſhall drink, but to ſit at my right hand or at my left, it is not mine to give, but unto whom it is prepared of my Father. Chriſt being equal unto the Father according to his Godhead, and exceeding all manner of men, according to his manhood, namely in Goodneſs and Wiſdom, ſaid, to ſit at my right hand, or at my left, is not mine to give, but unto whom it is prepared of my Father. If it were none of his to give to ſit at the right hand, or at the left, &c. how then is it in the power of any ſinful man to give unto any Man a ſeat either on the right hand or on the left in the Kingdom of God, which ſinful Man knoweth not whether ſuch have any ſeat prepared for them of the Father in his Kingdom? They much extol themſelves which exerciſe this judicial power in giving judgment, that there are ſome Saints which ought to be honored of Men, by reaſon of the evidences of Dreams, or of deceitful Miracles; of which men they are ignorant, whether God in his judgment will condemn them or not, together with the Devils for ever to be tormented. Let them beware, for the infallible truth ſaith, that every one that exalteth himſelf ſhall be brought low.

Men or women are not raſhly to be judged Saints.

This propoſition of W. Brute, concerning the War of Chriſtians not to be lawful, is not to be taken univerſally, but in particular caſe as he meaneth, which is this, That no ſuch Wars allowed of the Pope, not for the neceſſary defence of publick peace, liberty and ſafeguard of our Countries, or againſt publick injuries offered; but only to go and kill the Infidels, becauſe they believe not, having no other cauſe, thoſe Wars of the Pope he liketh not.

By theſe things is gathered that the Wars of Chriſtians are not lawful; for that by the Doctrine and Life of Chriſt they are prohibited, and by reaſon of the evidence of the deceitful Miracles of thoſe which have made Wars amongſt the Chriſtians, as well againſt the Chriſtians, as alſo againſt the Infidels. Becauſe Chriſt could not err in his Doctrine, foraſmuch as he was God: And foraſmuch as Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs away, but the Words of Chriſt ſhall not paſs away; He therefore which eſtabliſheth his laws, allowing wars and the ſlaughter of men in wars, as well of Chriſtians as of Infidels, doth he not juſtifie thoſe things which are contrary unto the Goſpel and Law of Chriſt? Therefore in this he is againſt Chriſt, and therefore Antichriſt; ſeducing the people, making men believe that to be lawful and meritorious unto them, which is expreſly prohibited by Chriſt.

¶ And thus much concerning the firſt part, touching peace and war, wherein he declareth Chriſt and the Pope to be contrary, that is, the one to be given all to peace, the other all to war, and ſo to prove in concluſion, the Pope to be Antichriſt. Where in the mean time thou muſt underſtand (gentle Reader) his meaning rightly; not that he ſo thinketh no kind of wars among the Chriſtians in any caſe to be lawful, for he himſelf before hath openly proteſted the contrary; but that his purpoſe is, to prove the Pope in all his doings and teachings more to be addicted to war than to peace; yea, in ſuch caſes where is no neceſſity of war. And therein proveth he the Pope to be contrary to Chriſt, that is, to be Antichriſt. Now he proceedeth further to the ſecond part, which is of mercy.

Doctrine of Chriſtian mercy declared.

In which part he ſheweth how Chriſt teacheth us to be merciful, becauſe mercy (as he ſaith) proceedeth from charity, and nouriſheth it. In which Doctrine of mercy, he breaketh not the law of righteouſneſs, for he himſelf by mercy hath cleanſed us from our ſins, from which we could not by the righteouſneſs of the law be cleanſed. But whom he hath made clean by mercy, undoubtedly it behooveth thoſe ſame to be alſo merciful. For in the fifth Chapter of Matthew he ſaith, Bleſſed are the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy. And again in the ſixth Matthew he ſaith, If ye forgive unto men their ſins, your father will forgive unto you your ſins. And again in the ſeventh Chapter of Matthew. Judge not and ye ſhall not be judged, condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned, and with what meaſure ye meaſure, with the ſame ſhall it be meaſured unto you again. In the 18*th.* Chapter of Matth. Peter asked the Lord, ſaying, Lord, how often ſhall my Brother ſin againſt me, and I ſhall forgive him, ſeven times? Jeſus ſaid unto him, I ſay not unto thee ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven. Therefore is the Kingdom of Heaven likened unto a certain King, which would take account of his ſervants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him which oweth him ten thouſand Talents; And becauſe he had nothing wherewithal to pay, his maſter commanded him to be ſold, and his wife and his children, and all that he had, and the debt to be paid. The ſervant therefore fell down, and beſought him, ſaying, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. And the Lord had pity on that ſervant, and looſed him, and forgave him the debt. But when that ſervant was departed, he found one of his fellow ſervants, which ought him an hundred pence, and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, ſaying, pay me that thou oweſt; and his fellow fell down, and beſought him, ſaying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. But he would not, but went and caſt him into priſon, till he ſhould pay the debt. And when his other fellows ſaw the things that were done, they were very ſorry, and came and declared unto their maſter all that was done: Then his maſter called him, and ſaid unto him, O thou ungracious ſervant, I forgave thee all that debt when thou deſireddſt me, oughteſt thou not then alſo to have ſuch pity on thy fellow, even as I had pity on thee? And his Lord was wroth, and delivered him unto the Jaylors, till he ſhould pay all that was due unto him. So likewiſe ſhall my Heavenly Father do unto you, except ye forgive from your hearts each one, to his brother their treſpaſſes.

Mat. 5. Mat. 6. Mat. 7. Mat. 18.

Mercy and pity commended among Chriſtians.

Mercy and compaſſion neceſſary to all Chriſtians.

By this Doctrine it is moſt plain and manifeſt, that every Chriſtian ought to be merciful unto his brother, how often ſoever he offendeth againſt him. Becauſe we, ſo often as we offend, do ask mercy of God. Wherefore, foraſmuch as our offence againſt God is far more grievous than any offence of our brother againſt us; it is plain that it behoveth us to be merciful unto our brethren, if we will have mercy at Gods hand. But contrary to this Doctrine of Mercy, the Romiſh Biſhop maketh and confirmeth many laws, which puniſh offenders, even unto the death; as it is plain by the proceſs of the Decrees, Diſt. 25. quæſt. 5. It is declared and determined, that to kill men ex officio, that is, having authority and power ſo to do, is not ſin. And again, the ſoldier which is obedient unto the higher power, and ſo killeth a man, is not guilty of murder. And again, he is the Miniſter of the Lord, which ſmiteth the evil in that they are evil, and killeth them. And many other ſuch like things are throughout the whole proceſs of that queſtion determined; That for certain kinds of ſins men ought by the rigour of the law to be puniſhed even unto death. But the foundation of their ſaying they took out of the old law, in which for divers tranſgreſſions were appointed divers puniſhments. It is very much wonderful unto me, why that wiſe men, being the authors and makers of laws, do always for the foundation of their ſayings look upon the ſhadow of the law, and not the light of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, for they give not heed unto the figure of perfection, nor yet unto the perfection figured. Is it not written in the 3d of John, God ſent not his Son into the World, to judge the World,

KING Ric. 2. World, but to ſave the world by him? in John the 8th. Chap. The Scribes and Phariſees bring in a Woman taken in adultery, and ſet her in the midſt, and ſaid unto Chriſt, Maſter, even now this woman was taken in adultery. But in the law Moſes hath commanded us to ſtone ſuch, what ſayſt thou therefore? This they ſaid to tempt him, that they might accuſe him. But Jeſus ſtooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground. And while they continued asking him, he lift himſelf up, and ſaid unto them, let him that is among you without ſin, caſt the firſt ſtone at her. And again he ſtooped and wrote on the ground. And when they heard it, they went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt; ſo Jeſus was left alone, and the woman ſtanding in the midſt. When Jeſus had lift up himſelf again, he ſaid unto her, where be they which accuſed thee, hath no man condemned thee? She ſaid, no man Lord. And Jeſus ſaid unto her, neither do I condemn thee. Go thy way, and ſin now no more.

It is manifeſt by the Scriptures, that Chriſt was promiſed he ſhould be King of the Jews, and unto the Kings pertained the judgments of the law; but becauſe he came not to judge ſinners according to the rigour of the law, but came according to grace, to ſave that which was loſt, in calling the ſinner to repentance; it is moſt plain, that in the coming of the law of grace, he would have the judgment of the law of righteouſneſs to ceaſe; for otherwiſe he had dealt unjuſtly with the foreſaid woman, foraſmuch as the witneſſes of her adultery, bare witneſs againſt her. Wherefore ſeeing the ſame King Chriſt was a Judge, if it had been his will that the righteouſneſs of the Law ſhould be obſerved, he ought to have adjudged the woman to death, according as the law commanded; which thing, foraſmuch as he did not, it is moſt evident that the judgements of he righteouſneſs of the law are finiſhed in the coming of the King, being King of the law of grace; even as the Sacrifices of the Prieſthood of Aaron, are finiſhed in the coming of the Prieſt, according to the order of Melchiſedek; who hath offered himſelf up for our ſins; becauſe, as it is before ſaid, neither the righteouſneſs of the law, nor Sacrifices for ſin, brought any man to perfection. Wherefore it was neceſſary that the ſame, by reaſon of their imperfection ſhould ceaſe. And ſeeing among all the laws of the world, the law of Moſes was moſt juſt, foraſmuch as the author thereof was God, who is the moſt juſt Judge; and by that law always look, what manner of injury one had done unto another, contrary to the commandment of the law, the like injury he ſhould receive for his tranſgreſſion, according to the upright judgment of the law; as death for death, a blow for a blow, burning for burning, wound, for wound, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, and moſt juſt puniſhments were ordained according to the quantity of the ſins. But if this law of righteouſneſs be clean taken away in the coming of the law of grace, how then ſhall the law of the Gentiles remain among Chriſtians, which was never ſo juſt? Is not this true, that in them which are converted unto the faith, there is no diſtinction between the Jew and the Grecian? For both are under ſin, and are juſtified by grace in the faith of Chriſt, being called unto faith, and unto the perfection of the Goſpel.

Here is meant, and to be underſtood, not what publick Magiſtrates may do, in caſes of righteouſneſs, but what eccleſiaſtical perſons, according to the office of their profeſſion, ſhould in not revenging by death, as they do by offices. Whether the judicial lavv of Moſes fully (now after the coming of Chriſt) ſtandeth in force, or not. The lavv of Moſes of all lavvs moſt juſt.

If therefore the Gentiles converted, are not bound to play the Jews, to follow the law of the Jews; why ſhould the Jews converted, follow the laws of the Gentiles which are not ſo good? Wherefore, it is to be wondred at, why Thieves are among Chriſtians, for theft put to death, where after the law of Moſes they were not put to death. Chriſtians ſuffer Adulterers to live, Sodomites, and they which curſe Father and Mother, and many other horrible ſinners; and they which according to the moſt juſt law of God were condemned to death, are not put to death. So we neither keep the law of righteouſneſs given of God, nor the law of mercy taught by Chriſt.

It is marvel I not for ſuch, vvhy Thieves are put to death; but why the judicial law of Moſes in this point is broken, and another point is ſtrictly kept. Mark his meaning.

Wherefore the Law-makers and Judges do not give heed unto the foreſaid ſentence of Chriſt unto the Scribes and Phariſees, who ſaid, * He which amongſt you is without ſin, let him caſt the firſt ſtone at her. What is he that dareth be ſo bold as to ſay, he is without ſin? Yea, and without a grievous ſin, when as the tranſgreſſion of the commandment of God is a grievous ſin? And who can ſay that he never tranſgreſſed this commandment of God, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf? Or the other commandment which is of greater force, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. Wherefore thou, whatſoever thou art, that judgeſt thy brother unto death, thinkeſt thou that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God, which peradventure haſt offended more grievouſly than he hath whom thou judgeſt? How ſeeſt thou a mote in thy brothers eye, and ſeeſt not a beam in thine own eye? Knoweſt thou not that with what meaſure thou meaſureſt, that ſame ſhall be meaſured to you again? Doth not the Scripture ſay, Unto me belongeth vengeance, and I will render again ſaith the Lord? How can any man ſay that theſe men can with charity keep theſe judgments of death? Who is it that offendeth God, and deſireth of God juſt judgment for his offence? He deſireth not judgment but mercy. If he deſire mercy for himſelf, why deſireth he vengeance for his brother offending? How therefore loveth he his brother as himſelf? Or how doſt thou ſhew mercy unto thy brother (as thou art bound by the commandment of Chriſt) which ſeekeſt the greateſt vengeance upon him that thou canſt infer unto him? for death is the moſt terrible thing of all, and a more grievous vengeance than death, can no man infer. Wherefore, they which will keep charity ought to obſerve the commandments of Chriſt touching mercy; and * they which live in the law of charity, ought to leave the law of vengeance and judgments. Ought we to believe that Chriſt in his coming, by grace abrogated the moſt juſt law which he himſelf gave unto the children of Iſrael by Moſes his ſervant, and eſtabliſhed the laws of the Gentiles, being not ſo juſt, to be obſerved of his faithful? Doth not Daniel expound the Dream of Nabuchodonozer the King, concerning the image, whoſe head was of gold, the breaſt and arms of ſilver, the belly and thighs of braſs, the legs of iron, one part of the feet was of iron, and the other part of clay. Nabuchodonozer ſaw that a ſtone was cut out of a mountain without hands, and ſtrake the image in his feet of iron and of clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the braſs, the ſilver, and gold broken all together, and became like the chaff of the Summer flower, which is carried away by the wind, and there was no place found for them; and the ſtone that ſmote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. He applieth therefore four Kingdoms unto the four parts of the image, namely, the Kingdom of the Babylonians unto the head of gold; the Kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, unto the breaſt and arms of ſilver; the Kingdom of the Grecians unto the belly and thighs of braſs, but the fourth Kingdom which is of the Romans, he applieth unto the feet and legs of iron. And Daniel addeth, in the days of their Kingdoms ſhall God raiſe up a Kingdom which ſhall never be deſtroyed, and his Kingdom ſhall not be delivered unto another, but it ſhall break and deſtroy thoſe Kingdoms; and it ſhall ſtand for ever, according as thou ſaweſt, that the ſtone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and brake in pieces the clay, and iron, braſs, ſilver and gold. Seeing therefore it is certain, that this ſtone ſignifieth Chriſt, whoſe Kingdom is for ever; it is alſo a thing moſt aſſured, that he ought to reign every where, and to break in pieces the other Kingdoms of the world. Wherefore if terreſtrial Kings, and the terreſtrial Kingdom of the Jews, and their laws and judgments have ceaſed by Chriſt the King, calling the Jews unto the perfection of his Goſpel, namely, unto Faith and Charity; it is not to be doubted, but that the Kingdom of the Gentiles, which is more unperfect, and their laws, ought to ceaſe among the Gentiles, departing from their Gentility unto the perfection of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. For there is no diſtinction between the Jews and Gentiles being converted unto the faith of Chriſt; but all of them abiding in that eternal Kingdom, ought to be under one law of charity and of vertue. Therefore they ought to have mercy, and to leave the judgments of death, and the deſire of vengeance. Wherefore they which do make laws mark not the parable of Chriſt, ſaying, The kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man which ſowed good ſeed in his field; but when men were on ſleep, the enemy came and ſowed tares in the midſt of the Wheat, and went his way. But when the herb was grown and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares. And the ſervants came unto the good man of the

And the ſervants ſaid unto him, wilt thou that we go and gather them up? And he ſaid no, leſt peradventure gathering up the tares ye pluck up the wheat by the roots; ſuffer them both to grow until the harveſt, and in the time of the harveſt, I will ſay unto the harveſt men, gather firſt the tares and bind them in bundles, that they may be burnt, but gather the wheat into my barn.* Chriſt himſelf only expoundeth this Parable in the ſelf ſame Chapter, ſaying, He which ſoweth the good ſeed is the ſon of man, but the field is the world, and the good ſeed, thoſe are the children of the Kingdom. But the tares are the naughty children. And the enemy which ſoweth them is the Devil. And the Harveſt is the end of the World, and the Harveſtmen are the Angels. Even as therefore the tares are gathered and burnt with fire, ſo ſhall it be in the end of the World. The ſon of man ſhall ſend his Angels, and they ſhall gather out of his kingdom all offenders, and thoſe which commit iniquity, and ſhall put them into a furnace of fire, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

His purpoſe is not that no evil doer ſhould be puniſhed in a Commonwealth, but his relation is to the 23. q. 5. aforeſaid, noting cauſes of religion, vvhich the Pope and his Prelates are vvont to puniſh vvith death, taking many times for tares, that vvhich indeed is pure Wheat.

By which plain Doctrine it is manifeſt, that Chriſt will have mercy ſhewed unto ſinners, even unto the end of the world, and will have them to remain mingled with the good; leſt peradventure, when a man thinketh that he doth right well to take away the tares, he taketh away the wheat. For how great a ſinner ſoever a man be, we know not whether his end ſhall be good, and whether in the end he ſhall obtain mercy of God: neither are we certain of the time, wherein God will by grace judge him whom we abhor as a ſinner. And peradventure ſuch a one ſhall more profit after his converſion in the Church, than he whom we think to be juſt, as it came to paſs in Paul. And if God juſtifieth a man by grace (although at his end) why dareſt thou be ſo bold to be his judge, and to condemn him? Yea rather, although a man ſeem to be obſtinate and hardned in his evil, ſo that he is not corrected by a ſecret correction (correct him before one alone;) if he do not receive open correction being done before two or three witneſſes; neither paſſeth upon a manifeſt correction when his ſin is made known unto the Church; Chriſt doth not teach to puniſh ſuch a one with the puniſhment of death. Yea, rather he ſaith, If he hearken not unto the Church, let him be unto thee as an Ethnick and Publican. And Paul following this Doctrine in the 1 Corinth. 5th Chapter, ſaith, There goeth a common ſaying, that there is fornication among you, and ſuch fornication as is not once named among the Gentiles, that one ſhould have his fathers wife. And ye are puffed up, and have not rather ſorrowed, that he which hath done this deed might be put from among you. For I verily as abſent in body, but preſent in Spirit, have already determined, as though I were preſent, that he which hath done this thing, when ye are gathered together, and my ſpirit, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ſuch a one by the power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, be delivered unto Satan for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus. Paul teacheth not to kill this man (as ſome gather by this Text) but to ſeparate him from the other faithful, and ſo from Chriſt, which is the head of the Church of the faithful, and ſo is he delivered unto Satan, which is ſeparated from Chriſt, that the fleſh may be killed, that is, that the carnal concupiſcence, whereby he luxuriouſly luſted after the wife of his father, may be deſtroyed in him by ſuch a ſeparation, that the ſpirit may be ſaved; and not that his body ſhould be killed, as ſome ſay, as it is manifeſt in the ſame Chap. where he ſaith, I wrote unto you an Epiſtle, that you ſhould not keep company with fornicators, and I meant not of all the fornicators of this World, either of the covetous, or extortioners, or idolaters, for then muſt ye needs have gone out of the World. But now I have written unto you, that ye keep not company together; if any that is called a brother be a fornicator or covetous perſon, or a worſhipper of images, either a curſed ſpeaker, or drunkard, or an extortioner; with him that is ſuch, ſee that ye eat not.

1 Cor. 5.

By which it is manifeſt, that Paul would have the foreſaid fornicator ſeparated from the fellowſhip of the faithful; that his carnal concupiſcence might be mortified, for the health of the ſpirit, and not that the body ſhould be killed. Wherefore they do ill underſtand Paul, which by this ſaying do confirm the killing of men. And forſomuch as Hereſie is one of the moſt grievous ſins (for an Heretick leadeth men in errors, whereby they are made to ſtray from faith, without which they cannot be ſaved) it doth moſt great hurt in the Church.

Further, as concerning ſuch a wicked man, Paul thus ſpeaketh, flee from the man that is an Heretick after the firſt and ſecond correction, knowing that ſuch a one is ſubverted and ſinneth, forſomuch as he is by his own judgment condemned. Behold, Paul teacheth not to kill this man, but with Chriſt to ſeparate him from the fellowſhip of the faithful. But ſome ſay, that Peter in the Primitive Church ſlew Ananias and Saphira for their ſins, wherefore they ſay it is lawful for them to condemn wicked men to death. We will declare in ſhewing the whole proceſs how falſly they ſpeak in alledging of Peter, to juſtifie their error.

In the fourth Chap. of the Acts it is written, That as many as were poſſeſſors of lands or houſes, they ſold them, and offered the prices of that which they ſold, and laid it before the feet of the Apoſtles; and it was divided unto every one as he had need thereof. But a certain man called Ananias with Saphira his wife, ſold a piece of Land, and kept back a part of the price of the field, his wife being privy unto it, and bringing a certain part thereof, he laid it at the feet of the Apoſtles. But Peter ſaid unto Ananias, Ananias, why hath Satan tempted thy heart, that thou ſhouldſt lie unto the Holy Ghoſt, to keep back a part of the price of the land? Did it not whilſt it remained, remain unto thee: and being ſold, was it not in thine own power? why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou haſt not lied unto men, but unto God. And when Ananias heard theſe words, he fell down and gave up the Ghoſt, and great fear came on all them that heard theſe things. And the young men roſe up and took him up, and carried him out, and buried him. And it came to paſs, about the ſpace of three hours after, that his wife came in, being ignorant of that which was done. And Peter ſaid unto her, Tell me Woman, ſold ye the land for ſo much? And ſhe ſaid, yea for ſo much. But Peter ſaid unto her, why have ye agreed together to tempt the ſpirit of the Lord? Behold the feet of them which buried thy Husband are at the door, and ſhall carry thee out. And ſtraightway ſhe fell down before his feet, and gave up the ghoſt, and the young men entring in, found her dead, and they carried her out, and buried her by her husband. And great fear came on all the Church, and all thoſe which heard theſe things.

It is marvel that any man that is wiſe, will ſay that by this proceſs Peter ſlew Ananias or his wife. For it was not his act, but the act of God, who made a wedding to his ſon, and ſent his ſervants to call them that were bidden unto the wedding, and they would not come. The King then ſent forth his ſervants to the outcorners of the High ways, to gather all that they could find, both good and evil, and ſo they did. And the Marriage was full furniſhed with gueſts; Then came in alſo the King to view and ſee them ſitting; among whom he perceived there one ſitting, having not a wedding garment, and ſaith unto him, friend, how cameſt thou hither? And he being dumb, had not a word to ſpeak. Then ſaid the King to the ſervitors, take and bind him hand and foot, and caſt him into the outward darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Many there be called, but few choſen, &c.

It is manifeſt, that this wedding garment is charity, without which becauſe Ananias entred into the Marriage of Chriſt, he was given to death, that by one many might be informed to learn and underſtand, that they which have faith and not charity, although they appear to men to have, yet it cannot be privy to the Spirit of God, that they do feign. Such there are no doubt, but they ſhall be excluded from the Marriage of Chriſt, as we ſee this here exemplified in the death of Ananias and his Wife by the hand of God, and not by the hand of Peter. And how ſhould Peter then have judged Ananias (albeit he had judged him) worthy of death by the rigour of the old law? for why? by the law he had not been guilty of death, for that part which they did fraudulently and diſſemblingly reſerve to themſelves; yea, and if they had ſtolen as much from another man, which was greater; neither yet {KING Ric. 2.} for his life committed, he had therefore by that law of juſtice been found guilty of death. Wherefore, if he did not condemn him by the law of juſtice, it appeareth that he condemned him by the law of grace and mercy, which he learned of Chriſt. And ſo conſequently, it followeth much more apparent, that Peter could not put him to death. Furthermore, to ſay that Peter put him to death by the meer motion of his own will, and not by the authority of the old law, nor by the new, it were derogatory and ſlanderous to the good fame and name of Peter. But if Peter did kill him, why then doth the Biſhop of Rome which pretendeth to be ſucceſſor of Peter, excuſe himſelf and his Prieſts from the judgment of death againſt Hereticks and other offenders, although they themſelves be conſenting to ſuch judgments done by lay men? For, that which was done of Peter without offence, may reaſonably excuſe him and his fellow Prieſts from the ſpot of crime, Acts 5. It is manifeſt that there was another which did more grievouſly offend than Ananias, and that Peter rebuked him with more ſharp words; but yet he commanded him not ſo to be put to death. For Simon Magus alſo remaining at Samaria, after that he believed and was baptiſed, he joyned himſelf with Philip; and when he ſaw that the holy Spirit was given by the Apoſtles (laying their hands upon men) he offered them mony, ſaying; Give unto me this power, that upon whomſoever I ſhall lay my hand, he ſhall receive the Holy Ghoſt. To whom Peter anſwered, Deſtroyed be thou and thy mony together; And for that thou ſuppoſeſt the gift of God to be bought with money, thou ſhalt have neither part nor fellowſhip in this Doctrine. Thy heart is not pure before God, therefore repent thee of thy wickedneſs, and pray unto God that this wicked thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee: for I perceive thou art even in the bitter gall of wickedneſs, and band of iniquity. Behold here the grievous offence of Simon; Peter's hard and ſharp rebuking of him, and yet thereupon he was not put to death. Whereby it appeareth that the death of Ananias aforeſaid, proceeded of God and not of Peter. Of all theſe things it is to be gathered, ſeeing the judgments of death are not grounded upon the expreſs and plain Scriptures, but only under the ſhadow of the old law, that they are not to be obſerved of Chriſtians becauſe they are contrary to charity. Ergo, The Biſhop of Rome approving ſuch Judgments, alloweth thoſe that are contrary to the Law and Doctrine of Chriſt, as before is ſaid of Wars, where he approveth and juſtifieth that which is contrary to charity. The order of Prieſthood, albeit it doth juſtifie the Judgments to death of the Laity, whereby offenders are condemned to die, yet are they themſelves forbidden to put in execution the ſame Judgments. The Prieſts of the old law being unperfect, when Pilate ſaid unto them concerning Chriſt (whom they had accuſed worthy death) take him unto you, and according to your law judge him, anſwered, That it was not lawful for them to put to death any man.

Peter not the cauſe of Ananias's death.

Acts 5.

John 18.

Whereby it appeareth, that our Prieſts, being much more perfect, may not lawfully give judgment of death againſt any offenders; yet notwithſtanding, they claim unto them the power judicial upon offenders: Becauſe, ſay they, it belongeth unto them to know the offences by the auricular confeſſion of the offenders, and to judge upon the ſame being known, and to enjoyn divers penances unto the parties offending, according to the quantity of their offences committed, ſo that the ſinner may make ſatisfaction, ſay they, unto God for the offences which he never committed. And to confirm unto them this judicial power, they alledge the Scriptures in many places, wreſting it to ſerve their purpoſe.

First, They ſay that the Biſhop of Rome (who is the chief Prieſt and Judge among them) hath full power and authority to remit ſins. Whereupon they ſay, that he is able fully and wholly, to abſolve a man a pœna & culpa, ſo that if a man at the time of his death, had this remiſſion, he ſhould ſtraightways fly unto Heaven without any pain of Purgatory. The other Biſhops (as they ſay) have not ſo great authority. The Prieſts conſtituted under every Biſhop, have power, ſay they, to abſolve the ſins of them that are confeſſed, but not all kind of ſins: becauſe they are ſome grievous ſins reſerved to the Abſolutions of the Biſhops; and ſome again, to the Abſolution only of the chief and high Biſhop. They ſay alſo, that it beboveth the offenders, for the neceſſity of their ſouls health, to call to remembrance their offences, and to manifeſt the ſame with all the circumſtances thereof, unto the Prieſt in auricular confeſſion, ſupplying the place of God, after the manner of a Judge; and afterward humbly to fulfil the penance enjoyned unto him by the Prieſt for his ſins, except the ſaid penance ſo enjoyned, or any part thereof, be releaſed by the ſuperiour power. All theſe things (ſay they) are manifeſtly determined, as well in the Decrees as Decretals. And although theſe things have not expreſly their foundation in the plain and manifeſt Doctrine of Chriſt, nor any of the Apoſtles; yet the Authors of the Decrees and Decretals concerning this matter, have grounded the ſame upon divers places of the Scriptures, as in the proceſs of Chriſt in the Goſpel of Saint Matthew the 16*th Chapter*, Whereupon they ground the Popes power judicial to ſurmount the powers of other Prieſts, as where Chriſt ſaid unto his Diſciples, Whom do men ſay that I am? And they anſwered, ſome ſay that thou art John Baptiſt, ſome Elias, and ſome Jeremy, or one of the Prophets. To whom he ſaid, but who ſay you that I am? Simon Peter, making anſwer, ſaid, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon the Son of Jonas; for fleſh and bloud hath not opened this unto thee; but my Father which is in Heaven. And I ſay unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and Hell gates ſhall not prevail againſt it. And I will give thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. And whatſoever thou ſhalt bind upon earth, ſhall alſo be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe upon earth, ſhall be looſed alſo in Heaven.

The Popes uſurped power falſly founded upon Scriptures.

Out of this Text of Chriſt, divers Expoſitions have drawn divers errors. For when Chriſt ſaid, And I ſay unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church; Some thereupon affirm, that Chriſt meant he would build his Church upon Peter by authority of that Text, as it is written in the firſt part of the Decrees, Diſt. 19. cap. Ita Dominus noſter. The Expoſition hereof is aſcribed to Pope Leo; the error whereof is manifeſtly known. For the Church of Chriſt is not builded upon Peter, but upon the Rock of Peter's confeſſion, for that he ſaid, Thou art Chriſt the Son of the living God. And for that Chriſt ſaid ſingularly unto Peter, I will give unto thee the keys of the kindom of Heaven, and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind, &c. By this ſaying they affirm, that Chriſt gave unto Peter ſpecially, as chief of the reſt of the Apoſtles, a larger power to bind and to looſe, than he did unto the reſt of the Apoſtles and Diſciples. And becauſe Peter anſwered for himſelf and all the Apoſtles, not only confeſſing the faith which he had chiefly above the reſt, but alſo the faith which the reſt of the Apoſtles had even as himſelf, by the revelation of the heavenly Father: it appeareth that as the Faith of all the Apoſtles was declared by the anſwer of one; ſo by this that Chriſt ſaid unto Peter, whatſoever thou ſhalt bind, &c. is given unto the reſt of the Apoſtles, the ſame power and equality to bind and to looſe, as unto Peter. Which Chriſt declareth in the Goſpel of Saint Matthew, the 18*th Chapter* in theſe words, Verily I ſay unto you, what things ſoever you ſhall bind upon earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever you ſhall looſe upon earth, ſhall be alſo looſed in Heaven. And further he addeth, And again I ſay unto you, that if two of you ſhall conſent upon earth, and requeſt, whatſoever it be, it ſhall be granted unto you of my Father which is in Heaven, For when two or three be gathered together in my name, I am there in the midſt of them. And in John the 20*th Chap.* he ſaith generally unto them, Receive ye my Spirit. Whoſe ſins ye ſhall remit, ſhall be remitted unto them; and whoſe ſins you ſhall retain, ſhall be retained.

Dist. 9. c. Ita Dominus noſter.

The place of Chriſt giving the keys to Peter, Mat. 16. aptly expounded.

Mat. 18.

John 20.

By this it appeareth, that the power to bind and to looſe is not ſpecially granted to Peter, as chief and head of the reſt; and that by him the reſt had their power to bind and to looſe; for that the head of the body of the Church is one, which is Chriſt, and the head of Chriſt is God. Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles are the good members of the body of Chriſt; receiving power and vertue of Chriſt, whereby they do confirm and glew together the other members (as well the ſtrong and noble, as the weak and unable) to a perfect compoſition and ſeemlineſs of the body of Chriſt;

Chriſt only the head of the Church.

The Miniſter of him in whom ye have believed, and he as God giveth unto every man. I have planted, Apollo hath watered, but God hath given the increaſe. Therefore neither he that planted is any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increaſe.*
Gal. 2. And Paul to the Gal. 2. God hath no reſpect of perſons. Thoſe that ſeemed to be great and do much, availed or profited me nothing at all: But contrariwiſe, when they ſaw that the Goſpel of the Uncircumciſion was committed unto me, as the Circumciſion unto Peter (for he that wrought with Peter in the Apoſtleſhip of the Circumciſion, wrought with me alſo among the Gentiles) and when they knew the grace which was given me, Peter, James and John, ſtraightways joyned themſelves with me and Barnabas: that we among the Gentiles, and they in Circumciſion only might be mindful of the poor, the which to do, I was very careful.
Act. 9. Hereby it appeareth that Paul had not his authority of Peter to convert the Gentiles, to baptize them, and to remit their ſins, but of him which ſaid unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? It is hard for thee to kick againſt the prick. Here is Paul of the head of the Church, and not of Peter: By which head they ſay, that all the members are ſuſtained and made lively.

The third Error.

The third Error which the Authors of the Canons conceive in the ſaid Text of Chriſt, which was ſaid to Peter, Unto thee will I give the Keys, &c. is this, They ſay that in this ſentence which was ſaid to Peter of the authority to bind and looſe, was meant, that as Chriſt gave unto Peter above all the reſt of the Apoſtles a ſpecial, and as it were an excellent power above all the Apoſtles; even ſo, ſay they, he gave power unto the Biſhops of Rome (whom they call Peters chief Succeſſors) the ſame ſpecial power and authority, exceeding the power of all other Biſhops of the world.

Other Apoſtles had like power to bind and to looſe as Peter had.

The firſt part of this ſimilitude and compariſon, doth appear manifeſtly by the premiſſes to be erroneous; wherein is plainly ſhewed that the other Apoſtles had equal power with Peter to bind and looſe. Wherefore conſequently it followeth the ſecond part of the ſimilitude, grounded upon the ſame Text, to be alſo erroneous. But and if the firſt part of the ſaid ſimilitude were truth, as it is not, yet the ſecond part muſt needs be an error, wherein is ſaid, that the Biſhops of Rome are Peters chief Succeſſors. For although there be but one Catholick Chriſtian Church, of all the faithful ſort converted; yet the firſt part thereof, and firſt converted, was of the Jews, the ſecond of the Greeks, and the third part was of the Romans or Latins. Whereof the firſt part was moſt perfectly converted unto the Faith, for that they faithfully obſerved the perfection of charity, as Act. 2. appeareth in the Acts of the Apoſtles, by the multitude of the believers. They were of one heart, and one ſoul, neither called they any thing that they poſſeſſed their own, but all was common amongſt them.
Rom. 1. Hereupon Paul to the Romans: Salutation to every believer, firſt to the Jew, and to the Greeks after the Jews. The Greeks were the ſecond, and after the Jews next converted, and after them the Romans, taking their information of the Greeks, as appeareth by the Chronicles, although indeed ſome Romans were converted unto the faith by Peter and Paul. And as Chriſt ſaid thrice unto Peter,

Peter ruled three Churches.

And when they heard the words of Peter, they were pricked at the heart, ſaying unto him and the reſt of the Apoſtles, What ſhall we then do? And Peter ſaid unto them, Repent, and let every one of you be baptized in the name of Jeſus Chriſt for the remiſſion of your ſins, and ye ſhall receive the Holy Ghoſt. And there were joyned unto them the ſame day about three thouſand ſouls. And Act. 3. 4, 5. it appeareth that Peter above the reſt did thoſe things which belonged to the Miniſtry of the Apoſtleſhip, as well in preaching as in anſwering. Whereupon ſome Chronicles ſay, that Peter governed the Church of the Jews at Jeruſalem, four years before he governed Antioch. And by the teſtimony of Paul to the Galathians as before is ſaid, the Goſpel of the Uncircumciſion is committed to Paul, even as the Circumciſion to Peter. And he that wrought with Peter in the Apoſtleſhip of Circumciſion, wrought with Paul amongſt the Gentiles. Whereby it appeareth that the Church of the Jews was committed to the Government of Peter. And in the proceſs of the Acts of the Apoſtles it appeareth, that Peter believed that the Faith of Chriſt was not to be preached unto thoſe Gentiles, which always lived in uncleanneſs of Idolatry. But when Peter was at Joppe, Cornelius a Gentile ſent unto him that he would come and ſhew him the way of life: But Peter (a little before the coming of the meſſengers of Cornelius) being in his chamber, after he had prayed, fell in a trance, and ſaw heaven open, and a certain veſſel deſcending even as a great ſheet, letten down by four corners from heaven to earth. In the which were all manner of four-footed beaſts, ſerpents of the earth, and fowls of the air. And a voice ſpake unto him, ſaying, Ariſe Peter, kill and eat: and Peter ſaid, Not ſo Lord, becauſe I have never eaten any common or unclean thing. This was done thrice. And Peter deſcended (not knowing what the viſion did ſignifie) and found the meſſengers of Cornelius.

Act. 3. 4, 5.

Peter governed the Church at Jeruſalem before he governed Antioch. Gal. 2.

As concerning the authority judicial of the Clergy, many things are written thereof in the Canons of Decrees, greatly to be marvelled at, and far from the truth of the Scripture. The Authors of the Canons ſay, That Chriſt gave unto the Prieſts power judicial over ſinners that confeſſed their ſins unto them. And this they ground upon the Text of Chriſt: I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatſoever thou looſeſt, &c. And theſe Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, they call the knowledg to diſcern, and the power to judg, which they ſay only belongeth to the Prieſts, except in caſe of ſucceſſion, then they ſay a lay-man may abſolve a man from ſin. And as touching abſolution, they ſay there are three things to be required on the ſinners part: Firſt, hearty contrition, whereby the ſinners ought to bewail their offending of God through ſins: The ſecond is, Auricular confeſſion, whereby the ſinner ought to ſhew unto the Prieſt his ſins, and the circumſtances of them: The third is ſatisfaction through penance injoyned unto him by the Prieſt for his ſins committed. And of his part that giveth abſolution there are two things (ſay they) to be required: That is to ſay, knowledg to diſcern one ſin from another, whereby he ought to make a difference of ſins, and appoint a convenient penance, according to the quantity of the ſins. The ſecond is, authority to judg, whereby he ought to injoyn penance to the offender. And further they ſay, that he that is confeſſed ought with all humility to ſubmit himſelf to the authority, and wholly and voluntarily to do thoſe penances which are commanded him by the Prieſt, except the ſaid penance be releaſed by a ſuperior power: for all Prieſts (as they ſay) have not equal authority to abſolve ſins. The chief Prieſt whom they call Peters Succeſſor, hath power fully and wholly to abſolve. But the inferior Prieſts have power, ſome more, ſome leſs. The more as they are next him in dignity, the leſs as they are farther from the degree of his dignity. All this is declared by proceſs in the Decrees, but not by the expreſs Doctrine of Chriſt, or any of his Apoſtles. For although Chriſt abſolved men from their ſins, I do not find that he did it after the manner of a Judg, but of a Saviour. For Chriſt ſaith, God ſent not his Son into the world to judg ſinners, but that the world ſhould be ſaved by him, Joh. 3. Whereupon he ſpake unto him whom he healed of the palſie, Behold thou art made whole, go thy

Joh. 5. condemned thee? who ſaid, No man, Lord. To whom then Jeſus thus ſaid, No more will I condemn thee, go and now ſin no more.

By which words and deeds of Chriſt, and many other places of the Scripture it appeareth he was not as a Judg at his firſt coming, to puniſh ſinners according to the quantity of their offences; but that day ſhall come hereafter, wherein he ſhall judg all men according to their works, as
Mat. 25. in Mat. 25. where he ſaith, When the Son of man ſhall come in his Majeſty, and all his Angels with him; then ſhall he ſit upon the ſeat of his Majeſty, and all Nations ſhall be gathered together before him, and he ſhall ſeparate them one from another, as a ſhepherd ſeparateth the ſheep from the goats, &c. Neither ſhall he judg alone, but his Saints

For he ſaith, You that have followed me in this generation, when the Son of man ſhall ſit in the ſeat of his Majeſty, ſhall ſit alſo upon twelve ſeats, and judg the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. If then Chriſt came not as a Judg, why do the Prieſts ſay that they ſupply the room of Chriſt on earth, to judg ſinners according to the quantity of their offences? And yet not only this, but it is more to be marvelled at, how the Biſhop of Rome dareth to take upon him to be a Judg before the day of Judgment, and to prevent the time, judging ſome to be Saints in Heaven, and to be honoured of men, and ſome again to be tormented in Hell eternally with the Divels? Would God

For in the 20*th* of John, Chriſt ſaith, Receive unto you the Holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſins you ſhall remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſe ſins you ſhall retain, they are retained. Seeing therefore that all Chriſtians that are baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, receive the Holy Ghoſt; it appeareth that they have power given to them
The miniſterial power to remit ſin, belongeth as well to our Prieſt as to another. of Chriſt to remit ſins Miniſterially. Hath not every Chriſtian authority to baptize? and in the Baptiſm all the ſins of the baptiſed are remitted. Ergo, they that do baptize do remit ſins. And thus Miniſterially all ſuch have power to remit ſins. Therefore to ſay that one man hath more authority to remit ſins than all other Chriſtians have, is too much to extoll him, and to place him even in Gods ſeat. I pray you how are the ſins remitted him that is baptized of the Prieſt (yea although he were of the Pope himſelf baptized) more than if he were baptized of another Chriſtian? Surely I think no more. For ſeeing that before Baptiſm he remaineth a ſinner, and of the Kingdom of the Devil by ſin, after Baptiſm he entreth into the Kingdom of Heaven; it appeareth that he that doth baptize, openeth the Gate of the Kingdom of Heaven to him that is baptized; the
The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. which he cannot do without the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Therefore every one that doth baptize hath the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; as well the inferior Prieſt as the Pope. But theſe Keys are not the knowledg to diſcern, and power to judg, becauſe theſe do nothing avail in Baptiſm. Ergo, There are other Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven than theſe. Wherefore it ſeemeth that the Authors of the Canons erred in miſtaking the Keys, whereupon they ground the Authority Judicial of the Clergy.
The Keys in the Popes Canons.

Now a little error in the beginning granted, groweth to great inconvenience in the end. Wherefore in my judgment it ſeemeth that the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven
Faith and Hope be the Keys of Heaven. are Faith and Hope. For by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and hope in him for the remiſſion of ſins, we enter the Kingdom of Heaven. This faith is a ſpiritual water, ſpringing from Jeſus Chriſt the fountain of wiſdom, wherein the ſoul of the ſinner is waſhed from ſin. With this water were the faithful Patriarchs baptized before the Law, and the faithful people of the Hebrews, and the faithful Chriſtians after the Law. Wherefore I greatly marvel of that ſaying in the Decrees, which is aſcribed unto Auguſtine, That little children that are not baptized ſhall be tormented with eternal fire, although they were born of faithful Parents that wiſhed them with all their hearts to have been baptized; as though the Sacrament of Baptiſm in water were ſimply neceſſary to Salvation, when nevertheleſs many Chriſtians are ſaved without this kind of Baptiſm, as Martyrs. If that kind of Sacrament be not neceſſary to one of elder years, how then is it neceſſary to an Infant born of the faithful? Are not all baptiſed with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire? But yet not with material fire: no more is the lotion of water corporally neceſſary to waſh away ſins, but only ſpiritual water, that is to ſay, the water of Faith. Are not the quick baptiſed for them that are dead? as witneſſeth Paul,
1 Cor. 15 1 Cor. 15. If the dead riſe not at all, why are the living then baptized for them? If the living be baptized for the dead, why then is not the Infant ſaved by the Baptiſm of his Parents; ſeeing the Infant it ſelf is impotent at the time of death, and not able to require Baptiſm? Chriſt ſaith, He that believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved. He ſaith not, He that is not baptized, but he that believeth not ſhall be damned. Wherefore in the 12*th* Chapter of John, Chriſt
Joh. 12. ſaith, I am the reſurrection and life, he that believeth in me, yea, although he were dead, ſhall live. The faith therefore is neceſſary which the Infant hath in his faithful parents, although he be not waſhed with corporal water. How then is the Infant damned and tormented with eternal fire? Were not they that were before the coming of Chriſt, and dead before his death by a thouſand years, ſaved alſo by his death and paſſion? All that believed in him were baptized in his blood, and ſo were ſaved and redeemed from ſin, and the bondage of the Devil, and made partakers of the Kingdom of Heaven. How then in the time of Grace ſhall the Infant be damned that is born of faithful parents, that do not deſpiſe, but rather deſire to have their children baptized? I dare not conſent to ſo hard a ſentence of the Decrees; but rather believe that he is ſaved by vertue of the Paſſion of Chriſt, in faith of his faithful parents, and the hope which they have in Chriſt. Which faith and hope are the Keys of the Heavenly Kingdom. God were not juſt and merciful, if he would condemn a man that believeth not in him, except he ſhewed unto him the faith which he ought to believe. And therefore Chriſt ſaith, If I had not come and ſpoken unto them, ſin could not have been laid unto their charge, but now they have no excuſe of ſin. Therefore ſeeing the faith of Chriſt is not Children departing before Baptiſm not condemned. manifeſt unto the Infant departing before Baptiſm, neither hath he denied it; how then ſhall he be damned for the ſame? But if God ſpeaketh inwardly by way of illumination of the intelligence of the Infant, as he ſpeaketh unto Angels; who then knoweth (ſave God alone) whether the Infant receiveth or not receiveth the Faith of Chriſt?

What is he therefore that ſo raſhly doth take upon him to judg the Infants begotten of faithful parents, dying without Baptiſm, to be tormented with eternal fire? Now let us conſider the three things which the Canons of Decrees affirm to be requiſite for the remiſſion of the ſins of thoſe that ſin after Baptiſm: that is to ſay, contrition of heart, Auricular confeſſion. Auricular confeſſion, and ſatisfaction of the deed through penance enjoyned by the Prieſt for the ſins committed. I cannot find in any place in the Goſpel, where Chriſt commanded that this kind of confeſſion ſhould be done unto the Prieſt; nor can I find that Chriſt aſſigned any penance unto ſinners for their ſins, but that he willed them to ſin no more. If a ſinner confeſs that he hath offended God through ſin, and ſorroweth heartily for his offences, minding hereafter no more to ſin; then is he truly repentant for his ſin, and then he is converted unto the Lord. If he ſhall then humbly and with good hope crave mercy at God and remiſſion of his ſins: what is he that can lett God to abſolve that ſinner from his ſin? And as God abſolveth a ſinner from his ſin, ſo hath Chriſt abſolved many, although they confeſſed not their ſins unto the Prieſts, and although they received not due penance for their ſins. And if Chriſt could after that manner once abſolve ſinners; how is he become now not able to abſolve? Except ſome man will ſay that he is above Chriſt, and that his power is miniſhed by the ordinances of his own Laws. How were ſinners abſolved of God in the time of the Apoſtles, and always heretofore, tofore, unto the time that theſe Canons were made? I ſpeak not theſe things as though confeſſion to Prieſts were wicked, but that it is not of neceſſity requiſite unto Salvation. I believe verily that the confeſſion of ſins unto good Prieſts, and likewiſe to other faithful Chriſtians, is good, as witneſſeth St. James the Apoſtle, Confeſs ye your ſelves one to another, and pray ye one for another, that ye may be ſaved; for the continual prayer of the juſt availeth much. Elias was a man that ſuffered many things like unto you, and he prayed that it ſhould not rain upon the earth, and it rained not in three years and ſix months. And again he prayed, and it rained from heaven, and the earth yielded forth her fruit. This kind of confeſſion is good, profitable and expedient; for if God peradventure heareth not a mans own prayer, he is helped with the interceſſion of others. Yet nevertheleſs the prayers of the Prieſts ſeem too much to be extolled in the Decrees, where it treateth of Penitence, and that ſaying is aſcribed unto Pope Leo, Cap. multiplex miſericordia Dei, &c. And it followeth, So is it ordained by the Providence of Gods Divine Will, that the mercy of God cannot be obtained but by the prayer of the Prieſts, &c. The prayer of a good Prieſt doth much avail a ſinner, confeſſing his faults unto him. The counſel of a diſcreet Prieſt is very profitable for a ſinner, to give the ſinner counſel to beware hereafter to ſin, and to inſtruct him how he ſhall puniſh his body by faſting, by watching, and ſuch like acts of repentance, that hereafter he may be better preſerved from ſin.

Jam. 5.

De pœnit. Diſt. 1. Cap. Multiplex miſericordia Dei.

After this manner I eſteem confeſſion to Prieſts very expedient and profitable to a ſinner. But to confeſs ſins unto the Prieſt as unto a Judg, and to receive of him corporal penance for a ſatisfaction unto God for his ſins committed; I ſee not how this can be found upon the truth of the Scripture. For before the coming of Chriſt, no man was ſufficient or able to make ſatisfaction unto God for his ſins, although he ſuffered never ſo much penance for his ſins. And therefore it was needful that he that was without ſin, ſhould be puniſhed for ſins, as witneſſeth Eſay, Chapter fifty three, where he ſaith, He took our griefs upon him, and our ſorrows he bare. And again, He was wounded for our iniquities, and vexed for our wickedneſs. And again, The Lord put upon him our iniquity. And again, For the wickedneſs of my people have I ſtricken him. If therefore Chriſt through his Paſſion hath made ſatisfaction for our ſins, whereas we our ſelves were unable to do it; then through him have we grace and remiſſion of ſins. How can we ſay now that we are ſufficient to make ſatisfaction unto God by any penance injoyned unto us by mans authority, ſeeing that our ſins are more grievous after Baptiſm, than they were before the coming of Chriſt? Therefore as in Baptiſm the pain of Chriſt in his paſſion was a full ſatisfaction for our ſins; even ſo after Baptiſm, if we confeſs that we have offended, and be heartily ſorry for our ſins, and mind not to ſin again afterwards.

Eſay 53.

1 Joh. 1. Hereupon John writeth in his firſt Epiſtle, Ch. 1. If we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and the truth is not in us. If we confeſs our ſins, God is faithful and juſt, he will remit them, and cleanſe us from all our iniquities. If we ſay we have not ſinned we make him a lyer, and his word is not in us. My welbeloved children, thus I write unto you that ye ſin not; but if any man ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins, and not for our ſins only, but for the ſins of the whole world. Therefore we ought to confeſs our ſelves chiefly unto God even from the heart, for that he chiefly doth remit ſins, without whoſe abſolution little availeth the abſolution of man. This kind of confeſſion is profitable and good. The Authors of the Canons ſay, that although Auricular confeſſion made unto the Prieſt, be not expreſly taught by Chriſt, yet ſay they it is taught in that ſaying which Chriſt ſaid unto the diſeaſed of the leproſie, whom he commanded, Go your ways and ſhew your ſelves unto the Prieſts: becauſe as they ſay, the law of cleanſing Lepers, which was given by Moſes, ſignified the confeſſions of ſins unto the Prieſt. And whereas Chriſt commanded the Lepers to ſhew themſelves unto the Prieſts, they ſay, that Chriſt meant that thoſe that were unclean with the leproſie of ſin, ſhould ſhew their ſins unto the Prieſts by Auricular confeſſion. I marvel much at the Authors of the Canons; for even from the beginning of their Decrees unto the end, they ground their ſayings upon the old Law, which was the Law of ſin, and death, and not (as witneſſeth Paul) upon the words of Chriſt, which are ſpirit and life. Chriſt ſaith, The words which I ſpeak unto you, are the Spirit and Life. They ground their ſayings in the ſhadow of the Law, and not in the light of Chriſt; for every evil doer hateth the light, and cometh not unto it, that his deeds be not reproved; but he that doth the truth cometh into the light, that his works may be openly ſeen, becauſe they are done in God. Joh. 3.

Joh. 3.

Now let us paſs to the words that Chriſt ſpake to the Leper, Lord if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. And Jeſus ſtretching forth his hand touched him, ſaying, I will be thou clean; and ſtraightways he was cleanſed of his lepry. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, See thou tell no man, but go and ſhew thy ſelf to the Prieſts, and offer the gifts that Moſes commanded for a witneſs of theſe things. This Goſpel witneſſeth plainly, that the diſeaſed of the Lepers were cleanſed only by Chriſt, and not by the Prieſts, neither did Chriſt command the Leper to ſhew himſelf unto the Prieſts, for any help of cleanſing that he ſhould receive of the Prieſts; but to fulfill the Law of Moſes, in offering a ſacrifice for his cleanſing, and for a teſtimony unto the Prieſts, who always of envy accuſed Chriſt as a tranſgreſſor of the Law. For if Chriſt after he had cleanſed the Leper, had licenſed him to communicate with others that were clean, before he had ſhewed himſelf cleanſed unto the Prieſts, then might the Prieſts have accuſed Chriſt as a tranſgreſſor of the Law; becauſe it was a precept of the Law, that the Leper after he was cleanſed, ſhould ſhew himſelf unto the Prieſts. And they had ſigns in the Book of the Law, whereby they might judg whether he were truly cleanſed or no. And if he were cleanſed, then would the Prieſts offer a gift for his cleanſing: and if he were not cleanſed, then would they ſegregate him from the company of others that were clean. Seeing every figure ought to be aſſimulated unto the thing that is figured; I pray you then what agreement is there between the cleanſing of Lepers by the Law, and the confeſſion of ſins? By that Law the Prieſt knew better whether he were leprous than he himſelf that had the lepry. In confeſſion the Prieſt knew not the ſins of him that was confeſſed, but by his own confeſſion. In that Law the Prieſt did not cleanſe the leprous. How now therefore ought the Prieſts to cleanſe ſinners from their ſin, and that without them they cannot be cleanſed? In this Law the Prieſt had certain ſigns, by the which he could certainly know whether a man were cleanſed from his lepry or not. In confeſſion the Prieſt is not certain of the cleanſing of ſins, becauſe he is ignorant of his contrition. He knoweth not alſo whether he will not ſin any more; without the which contrition and granting to ſin no more, God hath not abſolved any ſinner. And if God hath not abſolved a man, without doubt then is he not made clean. And how then is confeſſion figured under that Law? Doubtleſs ſo it ſeemeth to me (under the correction of them that can judg better in the matter) that this Law beareth rather a figure of Excommunication, and reconciliation of him that hath been obſtinate in his ſin, and is reconciled again. For ſo it appeareth by the proceſs of the Goſpel, that when as the ſinner doth not amend for the private correction of his Brother, nor for the correction of two or three, neither yet for the publick correction of the whole Church; then is he to be counted as an Ethnick and a Publican, and as a certain Leper to be avoided out of the company of all men. Which ſinner notwithſtanding, if he ſhall yet repent, is then to be reconciled, becauſe he is then cleanſed from his obſtinacy.

Luk. 5.

The laws of the primitive Church pounded, for make nothing for Auricular confeſſion.

The cleanſing of the Leper, and the cleanſing of the Prieſt in Auricular confeſſion agree not.

But he which pretendeth himſelf to be the chief Vicar of Chriſt, and the high Prieſt, ſaith that he hath power to abſolve a pœna & culpa. Which I do not find how it is founded in the Scripture, but that of his own authority he injoyneth to ſinners penance for their ſins. And grant that from their ſins he may well abſolve them, yet from the pain (which they call a pœna) he doth not ſimply abſolve, as in his Indulgences he promiſeth. But if he were in charity, and had ſuch power as he pretendeth, he would ſuffer none to lie in Purgatory for ſin, forſomuch as that pain doth far exceed all other pain which here we ſuffer.

The Popes power in abſolving from ſins, not founded in Scripture. The Pope can abſolve none from puniſhment.

What

What man is there being in charity, but if he ſee his brother to be tormented in this world, if he may, he will help him and deliver him? Much more ought the Pope then to deliver out of pains of Purgatory, indifferently as well rich as poor. And if he ſell to the rich his Indulgences, doublewiſe, yea triplewiſe he ſeduceth them. Firſt, in promiſing them to deliver them out of the pain from whence he doth not, neither is able to deliver them; and ſo maketh them falſly to believe that which they ought not to believe. Secondly, he deceiveth them of their money, which he taketh for his Indulgences. Thirdly, he ſeduceth them in this, that he promiſing to deliver them from pain, doth induce them into grievous puniſhment indeed, for the hereſie of ſimony, which both of them do commit, and therefore are worthy both of great pain to fall upon them; for ſo we read that Jeſus caſt out buyers and ſellers out of his Temple. Alſo Peter ſaid unto Simon the firſt Author of this Hereſie, Thy money, ſaid he, with thee be deſtroyed, for that thou haſt thought the gift of God to be poſſeſſed for money. Moreover, whereas Chriſt ſaith, Freely you have received, freely give. And whereas contrary the Pope doth ſell that thing which he hath taken; what doubt is there, but that he doth grievouſly deſerve to be puniſhed, both he that ſelleth, and he that buyeth, for the crime of ſimony which they commit? Over and beſides, by many reaſons and authorities of the Scripture it may be proved, that he doth not abſolve a man contrite for his ſins, although he do abſolve him from the guilt.

The Pope in his Pardons deceiveth men three manner of ways.

The Pope promiſing pardons for ſins, inducеth men to ſin in ſimony.

But this marvelleth me, that he in his Indulgences promiſeth to abſolve men from all manner of deadly ſins, and yet cannot abſolve a man from debt; foraſmuch as the debt which we owe to God, is of much more greater importance than is the debt of our Brother. Wherefore if he be able to remit the debt due to God, much more it ſhould ſeem that he is able to forgive the debt of our Brother.

Deadly ſin and debt. The Pope ſaith he can remit the debt to God: and yet cannot remit the debt to man.

Another thing there is that I marvel at, for that the Pope ſheweth himſelf more ſtrait in abſolving a Prieſt for not ſaying, or negligently ſaying his Mattens, than for tranſgreſſing the Commandment of God; conſidering that the tranſgreſſion of the Commandment of God, is much more grievous than the breach of mans Commandment.

The Pope [illegible] for breaking the Commandment of God. Abſolution to be ſought at the hands of God only.

For theſe and many other errors concurring in this matter of the Popes abſolutions; bleſſed be God, and honour be unto him for the remiſſion of our ſins. And let us firmly believe and know, that he doth and will abſolve us from our ſins, if we be ſorry from the bottom of our hearts that we have offended him, having a good purpoſe and Will to offend him no more. And let us be bold to reſort [illegible] Prieſts, who with wholeſome diſcretion and ſound counſel can inſtruct us, how to avoid the corruption of ſin hereafter. And which, becauſe they are better than we, may pray to God for us; whereby we may both obtain more ſooner the remiſſion of our ſins paſt, and alſo may learn better how to avoid the danger of ſin to come. *Ex Regiſtro Latino Epiſc. And thus much concerning the judgment and doctrine of this Walter for Chriſtian patience, charity and mercy; which as they be true and infallible notes and marks of true Chriſtianity; ſo the ſaid Walter Brute, making compariſon herein between Chriſt and the Pope, goeth about purpoſely to declare and manifeſt; whereby all men may ſee what contrariety there is between the rule of Chriſts teaching, and the proceedings of the Pope, between the examples and life of the one, and the examples of the other. Of which two, as one is altogether given to peace; ſo is the other on the contrary ſide as much diſpoſed to wars, murther, and bloodſhed, as is eaſie to be ſeen; whoſo looketh not upon the outward ſhews and pretenſed words of theſe Romiſh Popes, but adviſeth and conſidereth the inward practices and ſecret works of them, ſhall eaſily eſpie under the vizour of peace, what diſcord and debate they work; who bearing outwardly the meek horns of the Lamb mentioned in the Apocalyps, within do bear the bowels of a Wolf, full of cruelty, murther, and bloodſhed. The like cruelty alſo may in their Wars appear, if we conſider how Pope Urban the Fifth, beſides the racking and murdering of ſeven or eight Cardinals, ſet up Henry Spencer Biſhop of Norwich, to fight againſt the French Pope. Innocentius the Fourth was in war himſelf againſt the Apulians. Likewiſe Alexander the Fourth his Succeſſor ſtirred up the Son of King Henry the Third to fight againſt the Son of Frederick the Second, Emperor, for Apulia. Now he proceedeth further to other matter of the Sacrament.*

Examples, declaring what Wars have been ſtirred up by Popes.

Touching the matter (ſaith he) of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, divers men have divers opinions, as the learned do know. As concerning my judgment upon the ſame, I firmly believe whatſoever the Lord Jeſus taught implicitely or expreſly to his Diſciples, and faithful people to be believed. For he is (as I believe and know) the true Bread of God which deſcended from Heaven, and giveth life to the world. Of which Bread whoſoever eateth, ſhall live for ever; as it is in the ſixth of John declared. Before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, although men did live in body, yet in ſpirit they did not live; becauſe all men were then under ſin, whoſe ſouls thereby were dead; from the which death no man by the Law, nor with the Law was juſtified: For by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified, Gal. 2. And again in the ſame Epiſtle, Chap. 3. That by the law no man is juſtified before God it is manifeſt: for the juſt man ſhall live by his faith; the law is not of faith; but whoſoever hath the works thereof, ſhall live in them. And again in the ſame Chapter, If the law had been given, which might have juſtified, then our righteouſneſs had come by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under ſin, that the promiſe might be ſure by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt to all believers. Moreover, before that faith came, they were kept and concluded all under the law, until the coming of that faith which was to be revealed. For the law was our Schoolmaſter in Chriſt Jeſus, that we ſhould be juſtified by faith. Alſo the ſaid Paul, Rom. 5. ſaith, That the law entred in the mean time, whereby that ſin might more abound. Where then ſin hath more abounded, there hath alſo grace ſuperabounded; that like as ſin hath reigned unto death, ſo that grace might alſo reign by righteouſneſs unto eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Whereby it is manifeſt that by the faith which we have in Chriſt, believing him to be the true Son of God which came down from Heaven to redeem us from ſin, we are juſtified from ſin; and ſo do live by him which is the true bread and meat of the ſoul. And the bread which Chriſt gave is his fleſh given for the life of the world, Joh. 6. For he being God, came down from Heaven, and being truly carnal man, did ſuffer in the fleſh for our ſins, which in his Divinity he could not ſuffer. Wherefore like as we believe by our Faith that he is true God: ſo muſt we alſo believe that he is a true man. And then do we eat the bread of Heaven, and the fleſh of Chriſt. And if we believe that he did voluntarily ſhed his blood for our redemption, then do we drink his blood.

Joh. 6.

True eating of Chriſt is true believing in him.

Eating of the fleſh of Chriſt, what it is.

And thus except we eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and ſhall drink his blood, we have not eternal life in us; becauſe the fleſh of Chriſt verily is meat, and his blood is drink indeed, and whoſoever eateth the fleſh of Chriſt, and drinketh his blood, abideth in Chriſt, and Chriſt in him, Joh. 6. And as in this world the ſouls of the faithful live, and are refreſhed ſpiritually with this Heavenly bread, and with the fleſh and blood of Chriſt; ſo in the world to come, the ſame ſhall live eternally in Heaven, refreſhed with the Deity of Jeſus Chriſt, as touching the moſt principal part thereof, that is to wit, Intellectum; foraſmuch as this bread of Heaven in that it is God, hath in it ſelf all delectable pleaſantneſs. And as touching the intelligible powers of the ſame (as well exterior as interior) they are refreſhed with the fleſh (that is to ſay) with the humanity of Jeſus Chriſt; which is as a Queen ſtanding on the right hand of God, decked with a Golden robe of divers colours; for this Queen of Heaven alone by the Word of God is exalted above the company of all the Angels; that by her all our corporal power intellective, may fully be refreſhed, as is our ſpiritual intelligence, with the beholding of the Deity of Jeſus Chriſt, and even as the Angels ſhall we be fully ſatisfied. And in the memory of this double refection, preſent in this world, and in the world to come, hath Chriſt given unto us (for eternal bleſſedneſs) the Sacrament of his body and blood in the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine; as it appeareth in Mat. 26. As the Diſciples ſat at Supper, Jeſus took bread and bleſſed it, brake it, and gave it unto his Diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my Body: And he took the Cup, and thanked, and gave it them, ſaying, Drink ye all of this, this is my Blood of the New Teſtament which ſhall be ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins. And Luke in his Goſpel, Chap.22. of this matter thus writeth, And after he had taken the bread, he gave thanks, he brake it, and gave it unto them, ſaying, This is my body which ſhall be given for you, do you this in my remembrance. In like manner he took the Cup after Supper, ſaying, This is the Cup of the New Teſtament in my Blood, which ſhall be ſhed for you. That Chriſt ſaid, this is my body, in ſhewing to them the bread, I firmly believe, and know that it is true: That Chriſt (forſomuch as he is God) is the very truth it ſelf, and by conſequence all that he ſaith is true. And I believe that the very ſame was his body, in ſuch wiſe as he willed it to be his body; for in that he is Almighty, he hath done whatſoever pleaſed him: And as in Cana of Galilee he changed the water into wine really, ſo that after the Tranſubſtantiation, it was wine and not water: So when he ſaid, This is my Body, if he would have had the bread really to be tranſubſtantiated into his very body, ſo that after this changing it ſhould have been his natural body, and not bread as it was before, I know that it muſt needs have been ſo. But I find not in the Scripture, that his will was to have any ſuch real Tranſubſtantiation or Mutation.

Mat. 26.

Luk. 22.

This is my body, expounded.

Note well gentle Reader.

And as the Lord God Omnipotent, in his perfection Eſſential being the Son of God, doth exceed the moſt pure Creature, and yet when it pleaſed him he took upon him our nature, remaining really God as he was before, and was really made man; ſo that after this aſſuming of our ſubſtance, he was really very God, and very man; even ſo, if he would when he ſaid, This is my body, he could make this to be his body really, the bread ſtill really remaining as it was before. For leſs is the difference of the eſſence between bread and the body of a man, than between the Deity and Humanity, becauſe that of the bread is naturally made the body of a man. Of the bread is made blood; of the blood, natural ſeed; and of natural ſeed the natural ſubſtance of man is ingendred. But in that that God became man, this is an action ſupernatural. Wherefore he that could make one man to be very God, and very man, could if he would, make one thing to be really very bread, and his very body. But I do not find it expreſly in the Scripture, that he would any ſuch Identitie or conjunction to be made. And as Chriſt ſaid, I am very bread, not changing his eſſence or being into the eſſence or ſubſtance of bread, but was the ſaid Chriſt which he was before really, and yet bread by a ſimilitude or figurative ſpeech; ſo if he would, it might be, when he ſaid, This is my body, that this ſhould really have been the bread as it was before, and Sacramentally or memorially to be his body. And this ſeemeth unto me moſt nearly to agree to the meaning of Chriſt, forſomuch as he ſaid, Do this in remembrance of me. Then foraſmuch as in the Supper it is manifeſt that Chriſt gave unto his Diſciples the bread of his body which he brake, to that intent to eat with their mouths: in which bread he gave himſelf alſo unto them, as one in whom they ſhould believe (as to be the food of the ſoul) and by that faith they ſhould believe him to be their Saviour which took his body, wherein alſo he would it to be manifeſt, that he would redeem them from death; ſo was the bread eaten with the Diſciples mouths, that he, being the true bread of the ſoul, might be in ſpirit received and eaten ſpiritually by their faith which believed in him.

{KING Ric. 2.}

Bread by ſimilitude.

Bread ſubſtantially, and the body Sacramentally.

The bread which in the Diſciples mouths was chewed, from the mouth paſſed to the ſtomach. For as Chriſt ſaith, Whatſoever cometh to the mouth, goeth into the belly, and from thence into the privy, Mat. 15. But that true and very bread of the ſoul was eaten of the ſpirit of the Diſciples, and by faith entred their minds, and abode in their intrails through love. And ſo the bread broken, ſeemeth unto me to be really the meat of the body, and the bread which it was before; but Sacramentally to be the body of Chriſt, as Paul, 1 Cor. 10. The bread which we break, is it not the participation of the body of the Lord? So the bread which we break is the participation of the Lords body. And it is manifeſt that the Heavenly bread is not broken, neither yet is ſubject to ſuch breaking. Therefore Paul calleth the material bread which is broken, body of Chriſt which the faithful are partakers of. The bread therefore changeth not his eſſence, but is bread really, and is the body of Chriſt Sacramentally. Even as Chriſt is the very Vine, abiding really and figuratively the Vine: ſo the Temple of Jeruſalem was really the material Temple, and figuratively it was the body of Chriſt; becauſe he ſaid, Deſtroy you this Temple, and in three days I will repair the ſame again. And this ſpake he of the Temple of his body; whereas others underſtood it to be the material Temple, as appeared by their anſwer. For, ſaid they, forty ſeven years hath this Temple been in building, and wilt thou build it up in three days?

The bread which the Lord gave entereth not into the bodies, but the body which he gave entereth into the minds of the Diſciples. Paul calleth it material bread.

Note Reader.

Even ſo may the conſecrated bread be really bread, as it was before, and yet figuratively the body of Chriſt. And if therefore Chriſt would this bread to be only Sacramentally his body, and would not have the ſame bread really to be tranſubſtantiated into his body, and ſo ordained his Prieſts to make this Sacrament as a memorial of his paſſion; then do the Prieſts grievouſly offend, which beſeech Chriſt in the holy Maſs, that the bread which lyeth upon the Altar may be made really the body of Chriſt, if he would not have the ſame to be but a Sacrament of his body. And then both be they greatly deceived themſelves, and alſo do greatly deceive others. But whether the bread be really Tranſubſtantiated into the body of Chriſt, or is only the body of Chriſt Sacramentally; no doubt but that the people are marvellouſly deceived. For the people believe that they ſee the body of Chriſt, nay rather Chriſt himſelf between the hands of the Prieſts (for ſo is the common Oath they ſwear) By him whom I ſaw this day between the Prieſts hands. And the people believe that they eat not the body of Chriſt but at Eaſter, or elſe when they lie upon their death-bed, and receive with their bodily mouth the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt. But the body of Chriſt (admit the bread be Tranſubſtantiated really into the body) as in the Sacrament indiviſibiliter, that is, not able to be divided; and ſo immenſurabiliter, that is, not able to be meaſured: Ergo, inviſibiliter, that is, not able to be ſeen. To believe therefore that he may be ſeen corporally in the Sacrament is erroneous. And foraſmuch as the body of Chriſt

The vain prayer of the Prieſts at the Maſs.

The people greatly deceived in the Sacrament.

Chriſt

{KING Ric. 2.}

Chriſt is the ſouls food, and not the food of the body in this world; for that whoſoever believeth, doth eat ſpiritually and really, at any time when he ſo believeth, it is manifeſt, that they do greatly erre which believe that they eat not the body of Chriſt, but when they eat with their Teeth the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt.

The Prieſts ſeek their own honor in their tranſubſtantiation.

And although it ſhould be to the great honor of Prieſts, that the Bread really were changed into the Body of Chriſt, by the vertue of the ſacramental words pronounced; yet if Chriſt would not have it to be ſo; then they deſiring to do this contrary to the will of Chriſt, and informing the people that is to be done, ſo contrary to the will of Chriſt, are in great peril, moſt dangerouſly ſeducing both themſelves and the people. And then although that thereby they get a little worldly and tranſitory honour for a ſhort time; it is to be feared leſt perpetual ſhame, finally ſhall follow and enſue upon the ſame. For Chriſt ſaith; every one that exalteth himſelf ſhall be brought low. Let them therefore take heed, leſt they extolling themſelves for this Sacrament above the company of Angels which never ſinned, for the error which they be in, for evermore be placed with the ſinful Angels under the Earth.

Mark here ye good Prieſts.

Let every man therefore think lowly of himſelf in what ſtate or degree ſoever he be; neither let him preſume to do that which he is not able to do; neither deſire to have that thing done, which God would not have done.

The makers of the Canon Law contrary to themſelves.

I greatly marvel at thoſe which were the makers of the Canons, how variably and contrary one to another they write of this Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt. In the laſt part of the Decrees where this matter is touched, not only in the text, but alſo in the proceſs of the matter, divers do diverſly write, and one contrary to another. For in the Chapter that thus beginneth, Prima inquit hæreſis, it is thus written, You ſhall not eat this Body which you ſee, nor ſhall drink this Blood which they ſhall ſhed whish ſhall crucifie me: I will commend unto you a certain Sacrament ſpiritually underſtood that quickneth you; for the fleſh profiteth you nothing at all. And in the end of the ſame Chapter it is thus written, Till the world ſhall have an end, the Lords place is in Heaven: Yet notwithſtanding the verity of the Lord is here abiding with us. For the Body wherewith he roſe ought to be in one place, but his verity is in every place diffuſed and ſpread abroad. And in the Chapter following, which thus beginneth; Omnia quæcunque voluit, &c. It is written; Although the figure of the Bread and Wine ſeem to be nothing; Yet notwithſtanding they muſt after the words of conſecration be believed, to be none other thing than the very fleſh of Chriſt, and his blood. Whereupon the verity himſelf ſaid unto his Diſciples; This is (ſaith he) my fleſh, which is given for the life of the World: and to ſpeak yet more marvelouſly, this is none other fleſh, than that which was born of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſs, and roſe out of the Sepulcher.

De conſec. 2. cap. Prima quidem inquit; De conſec. diſt. 2. cap. Omnis quæcunque voluit.

Contrariety in the Popes Canons.

See how far this Chapter differeth from the firſt. And in the Chapter which beginneth, Ego Berengarius, &c. This is the confeſſion which Berengarius himſelf confeſſed touching this Sacrament, and his confeſſion is of the Church allowed: I confeſs (ſaith Berengarius) that the Bread and Wine which is laid upon the Altar after the conſecration, is not only a Sacrament, but alſo that it is the very Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and the ſame not only ſenſually to be a Sacrament, but alſo verily to be handled with the Prieſts hands and to be broken, and chewed with the Teeth of faithful men. This confeſſion doubtleſs is heretical: For why? If the body of Chriſt be in the Sacrament, as of the Church it is ſo determined; it is there then Multiplicative, and ſo indiviſibiliter wherefore not ſenſualiter. And if it be there indiviſibiliter, that is, in ſuch ſort as it cannot be divided or ſeparated, then can it not be touched, felt, broken, nor with the Teeth of men chewed.

De conſec. diſt. 2. cap. Ego Berengarius.

The recantation of Berengarius is heretical.

The Sacrament left by the Prieſts negligence to be eaten of a Mouſe, returneth again from Body to Bread.

The Writers of this time and age do affirm, that if by the negligence of the Prieſt, the Sacrament be ſo negligently left, that a Mouſe, or any other Beaſt or Vermine eat the ſame; then they ſay, that the Sacrament returneth again into the nature and ſubſtance of Bread. Whereby they muſt needs confeſs, that a miracle is as well wrought by the negligence of the Prieſt, as firſt there was made by the conſecration of the Prieſt in making the Sacrament. For either by the eating of the Mouſe the Body of Chriſt is tranſubſtantiated into the nature of Bread, which is a tranſubſtantiation ſupernatural; or elſe of nothing by creation is this Bread produced; and therefore either of theſe operations is miraculous and to be marvelled at. Now conſidering the diſagreeing opinions of the Doctors, and for the abſurdities which follow, I believe with Paul, that the Bread which we break, is the participation of the Body of Chriſt: and as Chriſt ſaith, that the Bread is made the Body of Chriſt for a memorial and remembrance of him. And in ſuch ſort as Chriſt willed the ſame to be his Body, in the ſame manner and ſort do I believe it to be his Body.

Whether external ſigns in a Prieſt be the ſigns of Antichriſt or elſe grounded upon Chriſt.

But whether we men may make the Body of Chriſt, and Miniſter it unto the people: or whether that Prieſts be divided form the Lay people for their knowledge, preeminence, and ſanctity of life, or elſe by external ſigns only: Alſo whether the ſign of tonſure and other external ſigns of Holineſs in Prieſts, be ſigns of Antichriſt and his Characters, or elſe introduced and taught by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; conſequently it remaineth next to ſpeak thereof unto the faithful ſort (according to the proceſs of the holy Scripture) and firſt of the three kinds of the Prieſts. I remember that I have read, the firſt of them to be Aaronical, Legal, and Temporal; The ſecond to be Eternal and regal according to the Order of Melchiſedech; The third to be Chriſtian. The firſt of theſe ceaſed at the coming of Chriſt; for that as Saint Paul to the Hebrews ſaith, The Prieſthood of Aaron was tranſlated to the Prieſthood of the Order of Melchiſedech. The Legal ſort of Prieſts of Aaron, were ſeparated from the reſt of the people by Kindred, Office, and Inheritance. By Kindred, for that the children of Aaron only were Prieſts. By Office, for that it only pertained to them to offer Sacrifice for the ſins of the people, and to inſtruct the people in the precepts and ceremonies of the law. By Inheritance, becauſe the Lord was their portion of inheritance; neither had they any other inheritance amongſt their Brethren, but thoſe things which were offered unto the Lord, as the Firſt-fruits, parts of the Sacrifices, and Vows; except places for their Manſion-Houſes for them and theirs, as appeareth by the proceſs of Moſes law. The Prieſthood of Chriſt did much differ from this Prieſthood, as Paul doth witneſs to the Hebrews, Chapter, 1, 8, 9, 10.

Three Orders or ſorts of Prieſts. 1. Aaronical. 2. Eternal. 3. Chriſtian.

Levitical Prieſts divided from the people by kindred Office and inheritance.

The Prieſthood of Chriſt differeth from the Levitical Prieſthood, how and wherein. 1. In kindred. 2. In Oath taking.

Firſt in kindred, becauſe that our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, came of the Stock and Tribe of Juda: of which Tribe none had to do with the Altar, and in which Tribe nothing at all was ſpoken of the Prieſts of Moſes.

The ſecond, for that other were made Prieſts without their Oath taken: But he by an Oath, by him which ſaid, The Lord ſwore and it ſhall not repent him, Thou art a Prieſt for ever according to the Order of Melchiſedech.

3. In durability.

Thirdly, by durability, for that many of them were made Prieſts but during the term of their lives: But he for that he remaineth for ever, hath an eternal Prieſthood. Wherefore he is able to ſave us for ever, having by himſelf acceſs unto God, which ever liveth to make interceſſion for us.

The Law made alſo ſuch men Prieſts as had infirmities; but Sermo (that is the word, which according to the law is the eternal Son and perfect) by an Oath.

4. In matter of Sacrifice.

The Prieſthood of Chriſt alſo did differ from the Prieſthood of Aaron and the Law in the matter of the Sacrifice, and in the place of Sacrificing. In the matter of their Sacrifices, becauſe they did uſe in their Sacrifices ſtrange bodies, of the matter of their Sacrifices, and did ſhed ſtrange blood for the expiation of ſins: But he offering himſelf unto God his Father for us, ſhed his own Blood for the remiſſion of our ſins. In the place of Sacrificing, becauſe that they did offer their Sacrifice in the Tabernacle or Temple: But Chriſt ſuffering death without the Gates of the City, offered himſelf upon the Altar of the Croſs to God his Father, and there ſhed his precious Blood. In his ſupping Chamber alſo he bleſſed the Bread and conſecrated the ſame for his Body, and the Wine which was in the Cup he alſo conſecrated for his Blood; delivering the ſame to his Apoſtles to be done for a commemoration and remembrance of his incarnation and paſſion. Neither did Jeſus enter into the Sanctuary made with mans hands, which be examples and figures of true things, but he entred into Heaven it ſelf, that he might appear before the Majeſty of God for us. Neither doth he offer himſelf oftentimes, as the chief Prieſt in the Sanctuary did every year with ſtrange blood (for then ſhould he oftentimes have ſuffered from the beginning) but now once for all, in the latter end of the World to deſtroy ſin by his peace-offering hath he entred. And even as it is decreed, that man once ſhall die and then cometh the judgment; ſo Chriſt hath been once offered, to take away the ſins of many. The ſecond time he ſhall appear without ſin to them that look for him, to their ſalvation. For the Law having a ſhadow of good things to come, can never by the Image it ſelf of things (which every year without ceaſing they offer by ſuch Sacrifices) make thoſe perfect that come thereunto; for otherwiſe that Offering ſhould have ceaſed: Becauſe that ſuch worſhippers, being once cleanſed from their ſins, ſhould have no more conſcience of ſin. But in theſe, commemoration is made every year of ſin: For it is impoſſible that by the blood of Goats and Calves, ſins ſhould be purged and taken away. Therefore coming into the World he ſaid; Sacrifice and Oblation thou wouldſt not have, but a body haſt thou given me, peace-offerings for ſins have not pleaſed thee: Then ſaid I, behold I come: In the Volume of the Book it is written of me, that I ſhould do thy will O God: Saying as above; becauſe thou wouldeſt have no Sacrifices nor burnt Offerings for ſin, neither doſt thou take pleaſure in thoſe things that are offered according to the law. Then ſaid I, Behold I come, that I may do thy will O God. He taketh away the firſt to eſtabliſh that which followeth. In which Will we are ſanctified by the oblation of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all. And every Prieſt is ready daily miniſtring, and oftentimes offering like Sacrifices, which can never take away ſins. But this Jeſus, offering one Sacrifice for ſin, ſitteth for evermore on the right hand of God, expecting the time till his Enemies be made his footſtool. For by his own only oblation, hath he conſummated for evermore thoſe that are ſanctified. All theſe places have I recited which Paul writeth, for the better underſtanding and declaration of thoſe things I mean to ſpeak. By all which it appeareth manifeſtly, how the Prieſthood of Chriſt differeth from the legal Prieſthood of Aaron: And by the ſame alſo appeareth, how the ſame differeth from all other Prieſthood Chriſtian, that imitateth Chriſt. For the properties of the Prieſthood of Chriſt, above recited, are found in no other Prieſt, but in Chriſt alone. Of the third Prieſthood, that is, the Chriſtian Prieſthood, Chriſt by his expreſs words ſpeaketh but little, to make any difference between the Prieſts and the reſt of the people, neither yet doth uſe this name of Sacerdos or Presbyter, in the Goſpel. But ſome he calleth Diſciples, ſome Apoſtles, whom he ſent to Baptiſe and to Preach, and in his name to do miracles. He calleth them the Salt of the Earth, in which name wiſdom is meant: and he calleth them the light of the World, by which good living is ſignified. For he ſaith, Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven. And Paul ſpeaking of the Prieſts to Timothy, and Titus, ſeemeth not to me to make any diverſity, betwixt the Prieſts and the other people, but in that he would have them to ſurmount other in knowledge and perfection of life. But the fourth Prieſthood is the Roman Prieſthood, brought in by the Church of Rome; which Church maketh a diſtinction between the Clergy and the Lay-people: and after that the Clergy is divided into ſundry degrees, as appeareth in the Decretals.

The Law bringeth none to perfection.

The Prieſthood of Chriſt differeth from all other Prieſthoods.

The third Prieſthood. The name of Sacerdos or Prieſt not uſed in the New Teſtament of Chriſt.

The fourth Prieſthood, which is the Roman Prieſthood.

This diſtinction of the Clergy from the Laity, with the tonſure of Clerks, began in the time of Anacletus, as it doth appear in the Chronicles. The degrees of the Clergy were afterward invented and diſtinguiſhed by their Offices, and there was no aſcenſion to the degree of the Prieſthood, but by inferior Orders and degrees. But in the Primitive Church it was not ſo: For immediately after the converſion of ſome of them to Faith and Baptiſm received, they were made Prieſts and Biſhops; as appeareth by Ananias, whom Marcas made of a Taylor or Shoomaker to be a Biſhop. And of many other it was in like caſe done, according to the Traditions of the Church of Rome. Prieſts are ordained to offer Sacrifices, to make ſupplication and prayers, and to bleſs and ſanctifie. The oblation of the Prieſthood only to Prieſts (as they ſay) is congruent: whoſe duties are upon the Altar to offer for the ſins of the people of the Lords Body, which is conſecrated of Bread. Of which ſaying I have great marvel, conſidering S. Paul his words to the Hebrews before recited. If Chriſt, offering for our ſins one Oblation for evermore, ſitteth at the right hand of God, and with that one Oblation hath conſummated for evermore, thoſe that are ſanctified: If Chriſt evermore ſitteth at the right hand of God, to make interceſſion for us: what need he to leave here any Sacrifice for our ſins of the Prieſts to be dayly offered? I do not find in the Scriptures of God, nor of his Apoſtles, that the body of Chriſt ought to be made a Sacrifice for ſin: but only as a Sacrament and Commemoration of the Sacrifice paſſed, which Chriſt offered upon the Altar of the Croſs for our ſins. For it is an abſurdity to ſay that Chriſt is now every day really offered as a Sacrifice upon the Altar by the Prieſts; for then the Prieſts ſhould really Crucifie him upon the Altar, which is a thing of no Chriſtian to be believed. But even as in his Supper his Body and his Blood he delivered to his Diſciples, in memorial of his Body that ſhould be Crucified on the morrow for our ſins: So after this aſcenſion, did his Apoſtles uſe the ſame (when they brake Bread in every Houſe) for a Sacrament, and not for a Sacrifice, of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And by this means were they put in remembrance of the great love of Chriſt, who ſo entirely loved us, that willingly he ſuffered the death for us, and for the remiſſion of our ſins. And thus did they offer themſelves to God by love, being ready to ſuffer death for the confeſſion of his name, and for the ſaving health of his Brethren, fulfilling the new commandment of Chriſt, which ſaid unto them; A new commandment do I give unto you, that you love one another, as I have loved you. But when love began to wax cold, or rather to be Froſen for cold, through the anguiſh and anxiety of perſecution for the name of Chriſt; then Prieſts did uſe the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, inſtead of a Sacrifice. And becauſe many of them feared death, ſome of them fled into ſolitary places, not daring to give themſelves a Sacrifice by death unto God through the confeſſion of his name, and ſaving health of their Brethren: ſome other worſhipped Idols, fearing death; as did alſo the chief Biſhop of Rome, and many other more, in divers places of the World. And thus it came to paſs, that that which was ordained and conſtituted for a memorial of the one and only Sacrifice, was altered (for want of love) into the reality of the Sacrifice it ſelf.

{KING Ric. 2.} The Office of Prieſts after the Popes order.

The body of Chriſt not left to be Sacrifice for ſin, but only for Sacrament.

How the memorial of the Sacrament came to the reality of the Sacrifice it ſelf.

After theſe things thus diſcuſſed, he inferreth conſequently upon the ſame, an other brief tractation of Women and Lay-men; whether in defect of the other, they may exerciſe the action of prayer, and Adminiſtration of Sacraments belonging to Prieſts, where he declareth the uſe received in the Popes Church for Women to Baptiſe, which, ſaith he, cannot be without remiſſion of ſins; wherefore ſeeing that Women have power by the Pope to remit ſin, and to Baptiſe, why may not they as well be admitted to miniſter the Lords Supper, in like caſe of neceſſity? Wherein alſo he maketh relation of Pope Joan the Eighth, a woman Pope, moving certain Queſtions of her. All which for brevity I pretermit, proceeding to the Miniſtration of prayer, and bleſſing of ſanctification, appropriate, to the Office of Prieſts, as followeth.

Furthermore, as touching the function and office of praying and bleſſing, whereunto Prieſts ſeem to be ordained (to omit here the queſtion whether Women may pray in Churches, in lack of other meet perſons) it remaineth now alſo to proſecute. Chriſt, being deſired of his Diſciples to teach them to pray, gave them the Common-Prayer both to men and women, to the which Prayer in my Eſtimation no other is to be compared. For in that, firſt, the whole honour due unto the Deity is comprehended. Secondly, whatſoever is neceſſary for us, both for the time preſent, or paſt, or for time to come, is there deſired and prayed for. He informeth us beſides to pray ſecretly, and alſo briefly: ſecretly to enter into our cloſe Chamber,

The Order and Office of prayer. The Lords Prayer.

Chamber, and there in ſecrecy he willeth us to pray unto his Father. And ſaith moreover, when ye pray, uſe not much babling, or many words, as do the Heathen. For they think in their long and prolix praying to be heard. Therefore be you not like to them. By the which Doctrine he calleth us away from the errors of the Heathen Gentiles; from whom proceed theſe ſuperſtitious manner of Arts (or rather of ignorances) as Necromancy, the Art of Divination, and other ſpices of conjuration, not unknown to them that be learned: For theſe Necromancers believe one place to be of greater vertue than another; there to be heard ſooner, than in another. Like as Balaam being hired to Curſe the people of God by his Art of ſoothſaying or charming, when he could not accompliſh his purpoſe in one place, he removed to another; but he in the end was deceived of his deſire. For he, intending firſt to Curſe them, was not able to accurſe them whom the Lord bleſſed, ſo that his Curſe could not hurt any of all that people. After like ſort the Necromancers turn their face to the Eaſt, as to a place more apt for their prayers. Alſo the Necromancers believe that the vertue of the words of the prayer, and the curioſity thereof, cauſeth them to bring to effect that which they ſeek after; which is alſo another point of infidelity, uſed much of charmers, ſorcerers, inchanters, ſoothſayers and ſuch like. Out of the ſame Art (I fear) proceedeth the practice of exorciſing, whereby Divels and Spirits be conjured to do that, whereunto they are inforced by the exorciſt. Alſo whereby other Creatures likewiſe are exorciſed or conjured, ſo that by the vertue of their exorciſm they may have their power and ſtrength exceeding all natural operation.

The Arts of Necromancy, Soothſaying, and Witchcrafts, how and from whom they came.

Againſt exorciſing of Prieſts.

In the Church of Rome many ſuch exorciſms and conjurations be practiſed, and are called of them benedictions, or hallowings. But here I ask of theſe exorciſers, whether they believe the things and creatures ſo exorciſed and hallowed, have that operation and efficacy given them, which they pretend? If they ſo believe, every child may ſee that they are far beguiled. For holy Water being of them exorciſed or conjured, hath no ſuch power in it, neither can have, which they in their exorciſm do command. For there they injoyn and command, that whereſoever that Water is ſprinkled, all vexation or infeſtation of the unclean Spirit ſhould avoid, and not that no peſtilent Spirit there ſhould abide, &c. But moſt plain it is, that no Water, be it never ſo Holy, can have any ſuch power ſo to do, as it is commanded, to wit, to be an univerſal remedy to expel all diſeaſes.

Conjuring or hallowing in the Popiſh Church.

Holy Water conjured.

This I would ask of theſe Exorciſts; whether in their commandings they do conjure or adjure the things conjured to be of an higher vertue and operation, than their own nature doth give: Or elſe whether they in their prayers deſire of God, that he will infuſe into them that vertue, which they require? If they in their commanding do ſo believe, then do they believe that they have that power in them to the which the inferior power of the thing exorciſed muſt obey, in receiving that which is commanded. And ſo doing they are much more deceived, foraſmuch as they ſee themſelves, that they which are ſo Authoriſed to the Office of exorciſing, ſay to the Devil being conjured, Go, and he goeth not, and to another, come, and he cometh not; and many things elſe they command the inferior ſpirit their ſubject to do, and he hath not. So in like caſe, when they pray to God to make the Water to be of ſuch vertue, that it may be to them health of mind and body, and that it may be able to expulſe every unclean Spirit, and to chaſe away all manner of diſtemperature, and peſtilence of the Air (being an unreaſonable petition asked, and ſore diſpleaſing to God) it is to be feared leſt their Benediction, their hallowing and bleſſing is changed into Curſing, according to that ſaying that followeth: And now, O you Prieſts, I have a meſſage to ſay unto you; if you will not hear and bear well away in your minds, to give the glory unto my name, ſaith the Lord God of Hoſts, I will ſend ſcarcity among you, and I will curſe your bleſſings. What things and how many are bleſſed, or hallowed in the Church, that in hallowing thereof diſpleaſe God, and are accurſed? And therefore according to the ſaying of S. James, they ask and are not heard, becauſe they ask not as they ſhould, that they in their own deſires may periſh. Let a man behold the bleſſing or hallowing of their Fire, Water, Incenſe, Wax, Bread, Wine, Wine, the Church, the Altar, the Churchyard, Aſhes, Bells, Copes, Palmes, Oil, Candles, Salt, the hallowing of the Ring, the Bed, the Staffe, and of many ſuch like things; and I believe that a man ſhall find out many errors of the heathen Magicians, Witches, Soothſayers and Charmers. And notwithſtanding the ancient and old Magicians in their Books command thoſe that be conjurers, that they in any wiſe live devoutly (for otherwiſe, as they ſay, the Spirits will not obey their commandments, and conſtrations) yet the Roman conjurers do impute it to the vertue of the holy Words, becauſe they be they which work, and not the holineſs of the conjurers: How cometh it to paſs that they ſay, the things conſecrated of a Curſed and vicious Javel ſhould have ſo great vertue in pronouncing (as they ſay) the holy and myſtical words, as if they were pronounced of a Prieſt never ſo holy? But I marvel that they ſay ſo, reading this ſaying in the Acts of the Apoſtles: becauſe the Charmers pronouncing the name of Jeſus (that is above all names) would have healed thoſe that were poſſeſſed with Devils, and ſaid; In the name of Jeſus, whom Paul preacheth, go ye out of the men. And the poſſeſſed with Devils anſwered, Jeſus we know, and Paul we know, but what are ye? And they all to be beat the Conjurers.

Exorciſts.

Where was the Popes holy Water then in the great peſtilence in the time of King Edward the Third.

Jam. 4

Romiſh conjurers.

The good life of a Prieſt, a great matter to deal in Gods matters.

And now conſidering this and many ſuch like things, I marvel wherefore the vicious Prieſts do ſell their prayers and bleſſings dearer (as alſo their Maſſes and Trentals of Maſſes) than thoſe that be devout Lay-men, and holy Women: which with all their heart deſire to flee from vices, and take hold of vertue. Foraſmuch as God in divers places of the Scripture doth promiſe that he will not hear ſinners and wicked perſons. Neither ſhould he ſeem to be juſt, if he ſhould ſooner hear the prayers of his Enemies, than of his faithful Friend. How I pray you ſhall a ſinful Prieſt deliver another man from ſin by his prayers, or elſe from the puniſhment of ſin, when he is not able to deliver himſelf by his prayer from ſin? What then doth God ſo much accept in the Maſs of a vicious Prieſt, that for his Maſs, his prayer or Oblation, he might deliver any man either from ſin, or from the pain due for ſin? No, but for that that Chriſt once offered himſelf for our ſins, and now ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father, always ſhewing unto him what and how great things he hath ſuffered for us. And every Prieſt always maketh mention in his Maſs of this Oblation. Neither do we this that we might bring the ſame Oblation into the remembrance of God, becauſe that he always in his preſence ſeeth the ſame; but that we ſhould have in remembrance this ſo great love of God, that he would give his own Son to death for our ſins, that he might cleanſe and purifie us from all our ſins. What, doth it pleaſe God, that the remembrance of ſo great love is made by a Prieſt, which more loveth ſin than God? Or how can any prayer of ſuch a Prieſt pleaſe God, in what holy place ſoever he be, or what holy Veſtiments ſoever he put on, or what holy prayers ſoever he maketh? And whereas Chriſt and his Apoſtles do command the Preaching of the Word of God; the Prieſts be now more bound to celebrate the Maſs, and more ſtraitly bound to ſay the Canonical hours; whereat I cannot but greatly marvel. For why? To obey the precepts of men more than the Commandments of God, is in effect to honour man as God, and to beſtow the Sacrifice upon man which is due unto God, and this is alſo ſpiritual fornication. How therefore are Prieſts bound at the commandment of man to leave the Preaching of the Word of God, at whoſe commandment they are not bound to leave the celebration of the Maſs, or ſinging of Mattens? Therefore, as it ſeemeth, Prieſts ought not at the commandment of any man to leave the Preaching of the Word of God, unto the which they are bound both by Divine and Apoſtolical precepts. With whom agreeth the writing of Hierome upon the Decretals, ſaying in this wiſe; Let none of the Biſhops ſwell with the envy of diveliſh tentation; let none be angry, if the Prieſt do ſometimes exhort the people, if they Preach in the Church, &c. For to him that forbiddeth me theſe things I will ſay, that he is unwilling that Prieſts ſhould do thoſe things which he commanded of God. What thing is there above Chriſt? Or what may be preferred before his Body and his Blood, &c.

The Prayer of a vicious Prieſt litle availeth before God.

Remembrance of Chriſts paſſion needeth not to God but to Man.

Prieſts more bound to ſay Mas commanded by Man, than to Preaching commanded of God. Spiritual fornication.

Hieronimus

Do Prieſts therefore ſin or not, which bargain for Money to pray for the Soul of any dead Man? It is well known that Jeſus did whip thoſe that were Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple, ſaying; My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but you have made the ſame a den of thieves: Truly he caſt not out ſuch Merchants from out of the Church, but becauſe of their ſins. Whereupon Hierome upon this Text ſaith; Let the Prieſts be diligent and take good heed in this Church, that they turn not the Houſe of God into a Den of Thieves. He doubtleſs is a Thief which ſeeketh gain by Religion, and by a ſhew of Holineſs ſtudieth to find occaſion of Merchandiſe. Hereupon, the holy Canons do make accurſed Simóniacal Hereſie, and do command that thoſe ſhould be deprived of the Prieſthood, which or the paſſing or marveilous ſpiritual grace do ſeek gain or Money. Peter the Apoſtle ſaid to Simon Magus, Let thy Money and thou go both to the Devil, which thinkeſt that the gifts of God may be bought for Money. Therefore the ſpiritual gifts of God ought not to be ſold.

Whether Prieſts may bargain to ſing for Souls departed.

Mistemimus.

Verily prayer is the ſpiritual gift of God, as is alſo the Preaching of the Word of God, or the laying on of hands, or the Adminiſtration of other the Sacraments. Chriſt, ſending forth his Diſciples to Preach, ſaid unto them; Heal ye the ſick, caſt out devils, raiſe the dead, freely ye have received, freely give ye again. If the Prieſts have power by his prayers to deliver ſouls being in Purgatory form grievous pains, without doubt he hath received that power freely from God. How therefore can he ſell his Act, unleſs he reſiſt the Commandments of God, of whom he hath received that authority? This truly cannot be done without ſin, which is againſt the Commandment of God. How plainly ſpake Chriſt to the Phariſees and Prieſts, ſaying; Woe be unto you Scribes and Phariſees, Hypocrites, becauſe ye have eaten the whole houſes of ſuch as be widows by making long prayers, and therefore have you received greater damnation. Wherein I pray you do our Phariſees and Prieſts differ from them? Do not our Prieſts devour Widows houſes and poſſeſſions, that by their long prayers they might deliver the ſouls of their Husbands from the grievous pains of Purgatory? How many Lordſhips I pray you have been beſtowed upon the Religious Men and Women to pray for the dead, that they by their prayer might deliver thoſe dead men from the pain (as they ſaid) that they ſuffer in Purgatory, grievouſly tormented and vexed? If their prayers and ſpeaking of Holy words ſhall not be able to deliver themſelves from pain, unleſs they have good works; how ſhall other men be delivered from pain by their prayers, which whileſt they lived here, gave over themſelves to ſin? Yea, peradventure thoſe Lordſhips or Lands, which they gave unto the Prieſts to pray for them, they themſelves have gotten by might from other faithful men, unjuſtly, and violently: And the Canons do ſay, that ſin is not forgiven, till the thing taken away wrongfully be reſtored: How then ſhall they be able (which do unjuſtly poſſeſs ſuch Lordſhips or Lands) to deliver them by their prayers from pain, which have given to them theſe Lordſhips or Lands, ſeeing God from the beginning hath hated all extortion in his burnt Sacrifices? Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: But he which doth the will of my Father which is in Heaven. And again, Not the hearers of the Law, but the doers of the Law ſhall be juſtified.

Selling of prayer abominable.

Religious men and women devourers of widows houſes.

Praying for ſouls in Purgatory.

Evil gotten Lands, as evil beſtowed, for praying for ſouls in Purgatory.

If therefore the words of him that prayeth do not deliver himſelf from ſin, nor from the pain of ſin, how do they deliver other men from ſin or from the pain of ſin, when no man prayeth more earneſtly for another man, than for himſelf? Therefore many are deceived in buying or ſelling of prayers, as in the buying of pardons, that they might be divered from pain; when as commonly they pay dearer for the prayers of the proud and vicious Prelates, than for the prayers of devout Women and devout Men of the lay people. But out of doubt, God doth not regard the perſon of him that prayeth, neither the place in which he prayeth, nor his apparel, nor the curiouſneſs of his prayer, but the humility and godly affection of him that prayeth. Did not the Phariſee and the Publican go up into the Temple to pray? The Publicans prayer for his humility and godly affection is heard. But the Phariſees prayer for his pride and arrogancy is contemned. Conſider that neither the perſon, nor the place, nor the ſtate, nor the curiouſneſs of his prayer doth help the Phariſee: Becauſe the Publican not thinking himſelf worthy to lift up his eyes unto Heaven, for the multitude of his ſins (ſaying, O God, be merciful unto me a ſinner) is juſtified by his humility, and his prayer is heard. But the Phariſee boaſting in his righteouſneſs is deſpiſed, becauſe God thruſteth down the proud, and exalteth the humble and thoſe that be meek. The rich Glutton alſo that was clothed with Purple and Silk, and fared every day daintily, prayed unto Abraham, and is not heard, but is buried in pains and torments of Hell fire. But Lazarus, who lay begging at his Gate, (being full of Sores) is placed in the Boſom of Abraham. Behold that neither the riches of his Apparel, nor the deliciouſneſs of his Banquets, nor the gorgeouſneſs of his Eſtate, neither the abundance of his Riches, doth help any thing to prefer the prayers or petitions of the rich Glutton, nor yet diminiſh his Torments, becauſe that mighty men in their mightineſs ſhall ſuffer torments mightily. How dare any man by compoſition demand or receive any thing of another man for his prayers? If he believe that he can by his prayer deliver his Brother from grievous pain, he is bound by Charity to relieve his Brother with his prayers although he be not hired thereunto: But if he will not pray unleſs he be hired, then hath he no love at all. What therefore helpeth his prayer, which abideth not in Charity? Therefore let him firſt take compaſſion of himſelf by prayer, that he may come into Charity, and then he ſhall be the better able to help others. If he believe not, or if he ſtandeth in doubt whether he ſhall be able to deliver his Brother by his prayer, wherefore doth he make with him an aſſured bargain, and taketh his Money, and yet knoweth not whether he ſhall relieve him ever a whit the more, or not, from his pain? I fear leſt the Words of the Prophet are fulfilled, ſaying; From the leaſt to the moſt all men apply themſelves to covetouſneſs, and from the Prophet to the Prieſt all work deceitfully. For the poor Prieſts excuſe themſelves of ſuch bargaining and ſelling of their prayers, ſaying; The young Cock learneth to Crow of the old Cock. For, ſaith he, thou maiſt ſee that the Pope himſelf, in ſtalling of Biſhops and Abbats, taketh the Firſt-fruits: In the placing or beſtowing of Benefices he always taketh ſomewhat, and ſpecially if the Benefices be great. And he ſelleth pardons or bulls, and to ſpeak more plain, he taketh Money for them. Biſhops in giving Orders, in hallowing Churches and Church-yards, do take Money: In Eccleſiaſtical correction they take Money for the mitigation of penance; In the grievous offences of convict perſons Money is required, and cauſed to be payed. Abbots, Monks, and other religious men that have poſſeſſion, will receive no man into their fraternity, or make them partakers of their ſpiritual Suffrages, unleſs he beſtow ſomewhat upon them, or promiſe them ſomewhat. Curates and Vicars having ſufficient livings by the Tithes of their Pariſhioners, yet in Dirges and years minds, in hearing confeſſions, in Weddings and Buryings, do require and have Money. The Friers alſo of the four Orders of beggers, which think themſelves to be the moſt perfect men of the Church, do take Money for their prayers, confeſſions, and buryings of the dead: and when they Preach, they believe that they ſhall have either Money or ſome other thing worthy Money. Wherefore then be the poor Prieſts blamed? ought not they to be held excuſed, although they take Money for their prayers by compoſition? Truly (me thinketh) that this excuſe by other mens ſins doth not excuſe them, foraſmuch as to heap one miſchief upon anothers head, is no ſufficient diſcharge. I would to God that all the buyers and ſellers of ſpiritual Suffrages would with the eyes of their heart behold the ruine of the great City, and the fall of Babylon, and that which they ſhall ſay after that fall. Doth not the Prophet ſay; And the Merchants of the Earth ſhall weep and mourn for her, becauſe no man ſhall buy any more their Merchandiſe, that is, their Merchandiſe of Gold and Silver, and of precious Stone, and of Pearl, and of Silk and purple? And again, he ſaith; And the Merchants which were made rich by her, ſhall ſtand aloof for fear of her torments, weeping, mourning, and ſaying, Alas! Alas! that City Babylon, that great City, which was wont to wear purple, white ſilk, crimſon, gold, pearl, and precious Stone, becauſe that in one hour all thoſe riches are come to nought. and Again; *And they caſt duſt upon their heads, and cried out, weeping, and mourning, and ſaying; Alas! and mighty City Babylon, by whom all ſuch as had Ships upon the Sea, were made rich by rewards; becauſe that in one hour ſhe is become deſolate.

The City of Rome, Babylon. Apoc. 18.

This Babylon, this great City, is the City of Rome, as it appeareth by the proceſs of the Apoſtle. Becauſe the Angel which ſhewed unto Saint John the deſtruction of the mighty Harlot ſitting upon many Waters, with whom the Kings of the Earth have committed fornication, and all they which dwell upon the Earth, are made drunk with the Wine of her Whoredom, ſaid unto him; And the Woman which thou ſaweſt, is the great City which hath Dominion above Kings, &c. And indeed in the days of Saint John the whole World was ſubject to the temporal Empire of the City of Rome, and afterwards it was ſubject to the ſpiritual Empire or Dominion of the ſame. But touching the temporal Government of the City of Rome it is fallen already: and ſo that other alſo, for the multitude of her ſpiritual Fornication, ſhall fall. The Emperors of this City gave themſelves to Idolatry, and would have that men ſhould honour them as Gods, and put all thoſe to death that refuſed ſuch Idolatry, and by the cruelty of their Torments all Infidels gat the upper hand.

The temporal Dominion of the City of Rome.

The ſpiritual Dominion of the City of Rome.

Hereupon by the Image of Nabuchadonozor, the Empire of the Romans is likened to Iron, which beateth together, and hath the Maſtery of all Metals. And in the viſion of Daniel, wherein he ſaw the four Winds of Heaven to fight in the main Sea; and four very great Beaſts coming out of the Sea; the Kingdom of the Romans is likened to the fourth terrible and marvellous Beaſt, the which had great Iron Teeth; eating and deſtroying, and treading the reſt under his Feet: And this Beaſt had Ten Horns, and as Daniel ſaith, he ſhall ſpeak words againſt the moſt high, and ſhall rear with his Teeth the Saints of the moſt high: and he ſhall think that he may be able to change times and laws, and they ſhall be delivered into his power, until a time, times, and half a time. In the Apocalyps, Saint John ſaw a Beaſt coming out of the Sea, having ſeven Heads and ten Horns, and power was given to him to make Months 42. So long time endured the Empire of the Romans; that is to ſay, from the beginning of Julius Ceſar, which was the firſt Emperor of the Romans, unto the end of Fredericus, which was the laſt Emperor of the Romans. Under this Empire Chriſt ſuffered, and other Martyrs alſo ſuffered for his names ſake. And here is fallen Rome as Babylon (which is all one) according to the manner of ſpeaking in the Apocalyps, as touching the Temporal and Corporal power of governing. And thus ſhall ſhe fall alſo touching the ſpiritual power of governing, for the multitude of Iniquities and ſpiritual Fornication, and Merchandiſe that are committed by her in the Church.

The fourth Beaſt in the Prophecy of Daniel ſignifieth Rome.

The Beaſt with 7. heads in the Apoc. ſignifieth Rome.

The feet of the Image which Nabuchadonozor ſaw, did betoken the Empire of Rome, and part of them were of Iron, and part of Clay and Earth. The part that was of Iron fell, and the power thereof vanquiſhed away, becauſe the power thereof was at an end after certain Months. That part of Clay and Earth yet endureth, but it ſhall vaniſh away by the Teſtimony of the Prophets: Whereupon Saint John in the Apocalyps; After that, he ſaw the part made of Iron riſing out of the Sea, to which each people, Tribe, and Tongue ſubmitted themſelves. And he ſaw another Beaſt coming out of the Earth, which had two Horns like to the Horns of a Lamb, and he ſpake like a Dragon, and he vanquiſhed the firſt Beaſt in his ſight.

The feet of the Image in the dream of Nabuchadonozor ſignifieth Rome.

The Beaſt with two Horns like the Lamb, ſignifieth the ſpiritual Dominion of Rome.

This Beaſt as ſeemeth me, doth betoken the Clay and Earthen part of the feet of the Image, becauſe he came out of the Earth. For that by terrene help he is made the High and chief Prieſt of the Romans in the Church of Chriſt, and ſo from below he aſcended, on high. But Chriſt from Heaven deſcended, becauſe that he which was God, and Author of every Creature, became man; and he that was Lord of Lords, was made in the ſhape of a Servant. And although that in the Heavens the company of Angels Miniſter unto him, he himſelf Miniſtred or ſerved in Earth, that he might teach us Humility, by which a man aſcendeth into Heaven, even as by pride a man goeth down into the bottomleſs Pit. This Beaſt hath two Horns moſt like a Lamb, becauſe that he challengeth to himſelf both the Prieſtly and Kingly power above all other here in Earth. The Lamb, that is, Chriſt, is a King for ever upon the Kingly Seat of David, and he is a Prieſt for ever after the Order of Melchiſedech; but his Kingdom is not of this World: but the Kingdom of this Beaſt is of this World, becauſe thoſe that be under him fight for him. And as Jeſus is Chriſt two manner of ways, becauſe that Chriſtus is as much to ſay as Unctus; he verily was anointed King, and anointed Prieſt: So this Beaſt ſaith, that he is chief King and Prieſt. Wherefore doth he call himſelf Chriſt? Becauſe that Chriſt, knowing that afore, ſaid; Many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt, and ſhall deceive many. And thus becauſe that he is both King and Prieſt, he challengeth to himſelf the double Sword, that is, the corporal Sword and the ſpiritual Sword. The corporal Sword is in his right Hand, and his ſpiritual Sword is in his right Eye, by the Teſtimony of Zachery. But he ſpeaketh ſubtilly like a Dragon, becauſe that by the Teſtimony of Chriſt he ſhall deceive many, as the Apocalyps witneſſeth. He did great wonders that alſo he might make more fire to come from Heaven into the Earth in the ſight of men, that he might deceive thoſe that dwell upon the Earth, becauſe of the wonders, that are permitted him to do in the ſight of the Beaſt, and he overcame the firſt Beaſt which aſcended out of the Sea. For that Beaſt challenged unto himſelf Authority of Government of the whole World. He hath put to death and Tormented thoſe that reſiſt his Commandments, and would be honoured as a God upon the Earth. The Biſhop of Rome ſaith that the whole World ought to be in ſubjection unto him; thoſe that be diſobedient unto his Commandments he putteth in priſon, and to death if he can: If he cannot, he excommunicateth them, and commandeth them to be caſt into the Devils Dungeon. But he that hath no power over the body, much leſs hath he power over the ſoul. And truly his excommunication, or the excommunication of any Prieſt under him, ſhall at that time little hurt him that is excommunicate, ſo that the perſon of him that is excommunicate be not firſt excommunicate of God through ſin.

Jeſus is Chriſt two manner of ways, as King and Prieſt.

The double ſword of the Pope.

And thus it ſeemeth a Troth unto me, that God thus turns their Bleſſings into Curſings, becauſe they give not due Glory unto his name. So when that they unjuſtly Excommunicate and Curſe, he turneth their Curſings into Bleſſings. Alſo the Biſhop of Rome doth make men to worſhip him as God, becauſe that the ſpecial Sacrifice that God doth require of us, is to be obedient unto him in keeping of his Commandments. But now the Popes Commandments be commanded to be kept, and be kept in very Deed; but the Commandments of Chriſt are contemned and rejected. Thus ſitteth the Biſhop of Rome in the Temple of God, ſhewing himſelf as God, and extolleth himſelf above all that which is called God, or worſhipped as God. But in his fall he ſhall be revealed, becauſe that every Kingdom divided in it ſelf ſhall be made deſolate. He teaching a truth is the Head of the Church; but the Prophet teaching a lie is the Tail of the Dragon. He ſeducing the World ſhall be acknowledged to be the verity of the Doctrine of Chriſt; but after he is known, he ſhall be rejected and nought eſteemed. He giveth to ſmall and great, rich and poor, free and bond, Marks in their right Hands, and in their Foreheads; that no man ſhould buy or ſell, but thoſe that ſhall have the Marks of the name of the Beaſt, or that look to have of him ſome recompence, ſmall, mean, or great, or elſe the number of his name, which number is 300. The Pope ſaith, that in the Adminiſtration of every Sacrament he doth Imprint a certain Character or Mark into the ſoul of him that receiveth it. In Baptiſm he ſaith that he doth Imprint, into the ſoul of him that is Baptiſed, a Mark that cannot be wiped out, and ſo likewiſe in other Sacraments. And I know that in a Sacrament are two things, that is, the Sacramental Sign, and ſpiritual grace repreſented by the ſame Sign: the Sacramental Sign is given to Man of Man, but the ſpiritual grace is given of Chriſt.

The Biſhop of Rome ſeeketh to be worſhipped as God.

The Commandments of the Pope more regarded than Chriſts.

In every Sacrament two things contained.

Wherefore, although a vicious or naughty Prieſt doth Baptiſe any Man, if he that is Baptiſed or his Parents (if he be a Child) do aſk with lawful meaning Baptiſm, and do mean faithfully hereafter to obſerve the words of Baptiſm; he is as well Baptized, as if he were Baptized of never ſo vertuous a Prieſt. So alſo the ſinner which with all his heart is ſorry for his Sins, and doth aſk faithfully mercy of God, is as well abſolved of a vicious Prieſt, as of a vertuous. Becauſe the Lamb of God which taketh away the ſins of the World, wipeth away inwardly our ſins by his Grace; becauſe that he is the Biſhop and Paſtor of our Souls. All other Prieſts do outwardly work abſolution, which know not for a certainty whether they have abſolved or not. So alſo is it in the other, becauſe that the grace of the Sacrament is given of God, and the Sacramental ſign, of man. In giving of Orders the chief Biſhop doth imprint the corporal marks; but of the ſpiritual marks I know none; unleſs a man will ſay, that by receiving the Order he hath ſome belief that he may work ſome things pertaining to that Order, the which before the receiving of the Order he could not. But this one thing is certain, that none in the Church ought to ſell ſpiritual Merchandize (of which things we have ſpoken before) unleſs he have the mark of the Beaſt. My counſel is, let the buyer beware of thoſe marks; becauſe that after the fall of Babylon, If any man hath worſhipped the Beaſt and her Image, and hath received the mark upon his Forehead, and upon his Hand, he ſhall drink of the wine of Gods wrath, which is mixed with the wine in the Cup of his anger, and he ſhall be tormented in fire and brimſtone in the ſight of the holy Angels, and in the ſight of the Lamb: and the ſmoke of their torments ſhall evermore aſcend, although he look for a recompence, ſmall, mean, or great, of the Beaſt, or elſe the number of his Name. The Beaſt doubtleſs doth recompence his Friends with his ſmall reward; that is, with great Gifts and Benefices corporal; with a mean reward, that is, with great ſpiritual Gifts, in authority of bleſſing, looſing, binding, praying, and exerciſing other ſpiritual Works; and with his greateſt reward; which after that they be dead, maketh them to be honoured in Earth among the Saints. The number of his name, according to the opinion of ſome men, is, Dux Cleri, the Captain of the Clergy, becauſe by that name he is named, and maketh his name known, and that name is 666.

Caveat Emptor.

The rewards of the Beaſt.

The number the name of the Beaſt. Dux Cleri.

This is my opinion of the Beaſt aſcending out of the Earth, and ſhall be, until ſuch time as I ſhall be of the ſame Beaſt better inſtructed. And although that this Beaſt doth ſignifie the Roman Biſhops; yet the other cruel Beaſt aſcending out of the Sea, doth ſignifie the Roman Emperors. And although that the Dragon being a cruel Beaſt, and the falſe Prophet giving the mark, muſt be thrown into the lake of fire and brimſtone to be tormented for ever; I would have no man to judge, but I leave ſuch things altogether to the final Judgment of Chriſt to be determined. But Martin the Popes Confeſſor, which maketh the Chronicle of the Emperors and Popes, reciteth many Errors of the Popes, more horrible and abominable than of the Emperors. For he ſpeaketh of the Idolatrous Popes, heretical, ſimoniacal, and Popes that were Murderers, that uſed Necromancy and Witchcraft, that were Fornicators, and defiled with all kind of Vice. But I have partly declared how that the Popes Law is contrary to Chriſts Law, and how that he ſaith, That he is the chief Vicar of Chriſt in Earth; and in his deeds is contrary to Chriſt, and doth forſake both his Doctrine and Life. I cannot ſee who elſe may be ſo well Antichriſt, and a Seducer of the people. For there is not a greater Peſtilence than a familiar enemy.

Martinus panitentiarius.

More wicked Popes than Emperors.

As concerning Idols, and the worſhipping of them, I think of them, as Moſes, Solomon, Iſaias, Jeremy, and the reſt of the Prophets did, which all ſpake againſt the making of Images, as alſo the worſhipping of Images. And faithful David, full of the Spirit of God, ſaith, Let all thoſe be confounded that worſhip Images, and that rejoyce in Idols. And again he ſaith, Let them be made like unto them that make them, and all ſuch as put their truſt in them. Wherefore I pray God that this evil come not upon me, which is the Curſe of God pronounced by David the Prophet. Nor will I be, by Gods Grace, either a maker, or elſe a worſhipper of Images.

Matters of Idolatry.

Images. Oaths, how & they are tolerable.

As concerning Oaths, I believe and obey the Doctrine of the Almighty God, and my Maſter Jeſus Chriſt, which teacheth, That Chriſtian-men in affirmation of a truth ſhould paſs the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees of the Old Teſtament, or elſe he excludeth them from the Kingdom of Heaven. For he ſaith, Unleſs your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. And as concerning Oaths he ſaith, It hath been ſaid to them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſwear thy ſelf, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thoſe things which thou knoweſt. KING Ric. 2. But I ſay unto you, Thou ſhall not ſwear at all, neither by the Heaven, nor yet by the Earth, &c. But let your Communication be yea, yea, nay, nay; for whatſoever ſhall be more than this, proceedeth of evil. Therefore as the perfection of the ancient men of the Old Teſtament was not to forſwear themſelves; ſo the perfection of Chriſtian men is, not to ſwear at all, becauſe they are ſo commanded of Chriſt, whoſe Commandment muſt in no caſe be broken, although that the City of Rome is contrary to this, Doctrine of Chriſt, even as in many things ſhe is found contrary to her ſelf.

As touching the taking away of Temporal goods, from thoſe that are Eccleſiaſtical Perſons offending habitualiter, by ſuch as are Temporal Lords, I will not affirm any thing to be lawful in this matter (as in other matters before) that is not agreeable to Charity: And that becauſe it is a hard matter for a man to take another mans goods from him without breaking of Charity; becauſe peradventure he that taketh away is the more moved to ſuch manner of taking away, by reaſon of the deſire he hath to thoſe goods, which he endeavoureth to take away: or elſe, becauſe of ſome diſpleaſure or hatred to the perſon, from whom he goeth about to take away thoſe goods, more than that he, from whom thoſe goods be taken, ſhould be amended. Therefore unleſs he that taketh away be only moved of Charity to the taking away of ſuch goods, I dare not affirm that ſuch taking is lawful. And if ſuch taking away proceed of Charity, I dare not judge it unlawful: becauſe that the Biſhop of Rome which received his Temporal Dominion of the Emperor, when the Emperor rebelled and was not obedient unto him, deprived him from his Temporal Juriſdictions: How much more then may Temporal Lords do the ſame, which have beſtowed upon them many Temporal Dominions and Lordſhips, only to the intent that they might the better intend to ſerve God, and keep his Commandments? Now if they perceive that they be againſt the Laws of God, and that they be over-buſily occupied about worldly matters: I cannot ſee but that they may well enough take from them thoſe Temporal Goods, which is to a good purpoſe they gave them. But if, in time to come after this, thoſe that be Temporal Lords ſhall take from Eccleſiaſtical perſons ſuch Temporalties: let him that deſireth to underſtand this, read the Prophet Ezekiel, in the Chapter of the Shepherds of Iſrael, which fed themſelves inſtead of their flock; and alſo let him read the Apocalyps of the fall of Babylon: Let him alſo read the Popes Decretals againſt Hereticks; and in thoſe he ſhall find, that the taking away of the Temporalties from the Clergy, ſhall come to paſs for the multitude of their ſins.

Whether Temporal goods may be taken away from Eccleſiaſtical Perſons offending.

Popes take from Emperors, their Benefactors, Temporal Dominion, when they offend. Ergo, much more may Emperors take from Popes Temporal Dominion when they offend.

A Prophecie of Walter Brute, that Temporal goods ſhall be taken away from the Clergy for the multitude of their ſins.

Thus reverend Father have I made mine Anſwer to the matter whereof I am accuſed: beſeeching you that as I have been obedient to your deſire, and that even as a Son, declaring unto you the ſecrets of my heart in plain words (although rudely;) ſo I may know your opinion, and crave your fatherly Benevolence, that now your labour may be for my inſtruction and amendment, and not to accuſation and condemnation. For like as in the beginning I have promiſed you, if any man of what ſtate, ſect, or condition ſoever he be, can ſhew me any error in any of my writings by the Authority of holy Scripture, or by any probable reaſon grounded on the Scriptures; I will receive his Information willingly and humbly.

After that all the foreſaid things were exhibited and given by the foreſaid Walter Brute, unto the foreſaid Biſhop of Hereford; he further appointed to the ſame Walter, the third day of the month of October, at Hereford, with the continuance of the days following, to hear his opinion. Which third day now at hand, being Friday, in the year of our Lord God, 1393. the ſaid Walter Brute appeared before him, ſitting in Commiſſion in the Cathedral-Church of Hereford, at ſix a Clock, or thereabout; having for his Aſſiſtants in the ſame place, divers Prelates and Abbots, and twenty Bachelors of Divinity, whereof twelve were Monks, and two Doctors of the Law. Amongſt theſe was Nicholas Hereford accompanied with many other Prelates and worſhipful Men, and wiſe Graduates in ſundry faculties. Now was the foreſaid Walter appoſed of his Writings aforeſaid, and the Contents therein. Earneſt were they in picking out of thoſe Writings, his Hereſies,

Walter Brute again commanded to appear.

Biſhops and Abbots, with twenty Bachelors of Divinity, ten Monks, two Doctors of Law ſitting upon Walter Brute.

Nicholas Hereford theſe alſo preſent

ſies, and in ſhewing his Schiſms, ſundry Errors, and divers other things. Now, after that they had continued all that day, and the two days following (that is, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday) in their Informations and Examinations againſt the ſame Walter Brute; the ſame Walter Brute ſubmitted himſelf to the determination of the Church, and to the correction of the ſaid John Biſhop, as it appeareth word for word in a Scroul written in the Engliſh-Tongue: The tenour of which Scroul, is as followeth:

The writings of Walter Brute examined.

The tenour of the ſubmiſſion of Walter Brute.

I Walter Brute ſubmit my ſelf principally to the Evangely of Jeſus Chriſt, and to the determination of holy Kirk, and to the general Councils of holy Kirk. And to the Sentence and determination of the four Doctors of holy Writ; that is, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Jerome, and Gregory. And I meekly ſubmit me to your correction, as a ſubject ought to his Biſhop.

The ſubmiſſion of Walter Brute openly read at Hereford.

Which Scroul, as before is recited, in the Engliſh-Tongue, the foreſaid Walter Brute, read with a loud and intelligible Voice, at the Croſs in the Church-yard on Monday; that is to ſay, the ſixth of the ſaid month of October, before the Sermon made unto the people in preſence of the ſaid Biſhop of Hereford and other above written, as alſo other Barons, Knights, and Noblemen, and Clergy, and alſo a great multitude of people. After which reading of the Scroul, the foreſaid Thomas Crawlay, Bachelor of Divinity, made a Sermon unto the people, and took for his Theme the words of the Apoſtle to the Romans, the eleventh Chapter, that is as followeth; Be not over-wiſe in your own conceits, but ſtand in fear, &c.

¶ Out of theſe Declarations and Writings of Walter Brute, the Biſhop with the Monks and Doctos above rehearſed, did gather and draw certain Articles, to the number of 37, which they ſent to the Univerſity of Cambridge to be confuted, unto two learned men, Maſter Colwill and Maſter Newton, Bachelors of Divinity. Which Maſter Colwill and Newton did both labour in the matter, to the uttermoſt of their cunning, in replying and anſwering to the ſaid 37 Articles.

Beſides them alſo, William Woodford a Frier (who wrote likewiſe againſt the Articles of Wickliff) labouring, in the ſame Cauſe made a ſolemn and a long tractation, compiling the Articles of the ſaid Brute, to the number of nine and twenty. All which Treatiſes as I wiſh to come to the Readers hand, that the ſlenderneſs of them might be known; ſo it may happen percaſe, that the ſame being in my hand may hereafter be further publiſhed, with other like tractations more, as convenient time for the prolixity thereof may hereafter better ſerve thân now.

What after this became to this Walter Brute, or what end he had, I find it not regiſtred: but like it is, that he for this time eſcaped. Certain other writings I find moreover, which albeit they bear no name of this Walter, nor of any certain Author; yet becauſe they are in the ſame Regiſter adjoyned to the Hiſtory of him, I thought therefore moſt fit here to be inſerted. Of the which one was a Letter ſent to Nicholas Hereford a little above ſpecified: who being at the firſt a great Follower of John Wickliff, as appeareth before, page 500. was now in the number of them which ſate upon this Walter, as is in the Column above recorded. The Copy of this Letter bearing no name of any ſpecial Author, but only as ſent by a certain Lollard (as the Regiſter doth term him) is written in manner and form as followeth.

Here followeth the Copy of a Letter ſent to Maſter Nicholas Hereford, by a Lollard, as in the Regiſter it is ſaid.

A Letter ſent to Nicholas Hereford.

FOraſmuch as no man that putteth his hand to the Plough and looketh back is meet for the Kingdom of GOD, as our Saviour Chriſt ſaith: What marvel is it, although Maſter Nicholas Hereford, which at the firſt (by the Viſitation of the Spirit of God peradventure) put his hand; that is, gave his diligence unto the Plough; that is, to the ſowing of the Word of God and holy Scripture, as well in preaching as in doing good works, is now ſo blind and unskilful to expound the Scripture, that he knoweth not what is underſtood by the Kingdom of Heaven? Truly it is no marvel, O thou that art Maſter of the Nicolaitans, which, like Nicholas the moſt falſe Deacon, haſt left or forſaken the infallible knowledge of the holy Scripture. For the true knowledge of the Theological verity is ſhut up as well from thee as from all the other Nicholaitans following thy conditions, foraſmuch as thou goeſt not in by the door to expound the ſame Evangelical verity. Therefore when thou didſt recite this other day, firſt, the Phariſaical and hypocritical Woe (nothing at all to any purpoſe) thou ſhouldſt have ſaid juſtly in this ſort, both of thy ſelf, and other thy Followers and religious Antichriſts: Woe be unto us Scribes and Phariſees, which ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven; that is to ſay, the true Knowledge of the holy Scriptures, before men by our falſe Gloſſes and crooked Similitudes: and neither we our ſelves enter into the ſame Kingdom or Knowledge, nor ſuffer others to enter into it. Wherefore, it ſeemeth unto the faithful ſort, that wrongfully, falſly, and without any reverence, ye have expounded that Text of Gregory, 1. q. 1. that is to ſay, Quicunque ſtude, &c. For this is the true underſtanding of the ſame: Knowing firſt that there be ſome Prieſts after the thing, and name only; and doth ſhew that this is true, that whoſoever ſtudieth to receive the holy Order by giving of money, he is not a Prieſt, Secundum rem, & nomen. But to ſay the truth, he deſireth to be called a Prieſt; that is, to be a Prieſt Secundum nomen tantum. And ſuch a Prieſt, which is a Prieſt in name only, is no Prieſt. No more than Saint Mary painted is Saint Mary: Nor a falſe Doctor a Doctor, but no Doctor: And a man painted is not a man, but no man. And thus ſuch a Prieſt in name only is not a Prieſt: Becauſe that all faithful men do firmly believe with Saint GREGORY, that no man buying the holy Orders, may then be called a Prieſt, as he ſaith, 1. q. 1. They that buy or ſell holy Orders can be no Prieſts. Whereupon is written, Anathema dandi, & Anathema accipiendi; that is, Simoniacal Hereſie. And it followeth, How therefore, if they be accurſed and not bleſſed, can they make others bleſſed? And when that they be not in the body of Chriſt, how can they either receive or deliver the Body of CHRIST? He that is accurſed, how can he bleſs? as though he would ſay, It is unpoſſible. As Pope Urbanus ſaith, 1. q. 1. Siquis a Simoniacis, &c. Where he ſaith thus, They that willingly know and ſuffer themſelves to be conſecrated, nay rather execrated, of thoſe that are infected with Simony; we judge that their Conſecration is altogether void. Alſo Pope Leo in 2. q. 1. ſaith in this wiſe, Grace, if it be not freely given and received, is not Grace. Spiritual Uſurers do not receive freely: Therefore, they receive not the ſpiritual Grace, which ſpecially worketh in the Eccleſiaſtical Orders. If they receive it not, they have it not: if they have it not freely, they cannot give it freely. And by this it is more clear than the light, that they which know ſo much, and receive Orders by ſpiritual Uſury of Simony, are neither Prieſts nor Deacons, neither after the manner nor character. For if ſuch character or mark were otherwiſe given in giving Orders, it were requiſite always that there ſhould be a certain Grace imprinted in the man; but there is no ſuch Grace given or imprinted, as afore is manifeſt. Therefore there is no character to be fained. Therefore ſuch character or mark abideth not in him, foraſmuch as he never had nor hath the ſame. And yet furthermore in the ſame place, What then do the ſimoniacal Prelates give? And he maketh anſwer, Truly even that which they have, as the ſpirit of Lying. How prove we this? Becauſe that if it be the ſpirit of verity, as the ſame verity doth teſtifie from whom it cometh, it is freely received. And it followeth for the whole purpoſe no doubt; it is convicted to be the ſpirit of lying, which is not freely received.

Nicolaitans.

1. q. 1. cap. Quicunque ſtudet.

1. q. 1. Siquis a Simoniacis.

Ex Leone Papa, 2. q. 1.

By this it appeareth manifeſtly to the faithful ſort, that thoſe which wittingly and ſimoniacally are made Prieſts, foraſmuch as they receive not the Character of the Lord, but only the Spirit of lying and the mark of Simon Magus, and of Judas the Traytor, they be not Prieſts neither according to the mark nor manner. Nor ſuch do no more make the Sacraments of Church, than other Lay-men may in the time of neceſſity, nor yet ſo truly, during their hereticall naughtineſs. And yet indeed (Brother mine) univoce natura, but yet æquivoce in moribus; I do not write thus ſharply unto you, through anger, or any unperfect hate, but through through the perfect hate of your horrible Hereſie, and denying the Faith of Chriſt, that I may ſay with David in the Pſalms, Perfecto odio oderam, &c. And I am very ſorry for you, that you, which in times have excellently well and fruitfully preached the Goſpel in the Pulpit, do now as well fail in the Congruity of the Latin-Tongue, as in the other Science natural. For as it was heard, thrice in one Lecture you ſaid appetitis; that is to ſay, pronouncing the middle ſyllable long, which thing not only the Maſters, but alſo the young Scholars underſtood. And many other faults there were in Grammar, which for ſhame I dare not recite. I ſend unto you theſe five Concluſions.

Brother in nature: In manners no Brother.

Five Concluſions.

The firſt Concluſion, It is an infallible verity that the words of the four chief Doctors, expounding the holy Scripture according to the verity which the words do pretend, are to be holden and kept.

The ſecond, He which importeth any equivocation out of any of the Doctors expounding, for the colouring of his Text, his equivocation is always to be left.

The third, No perverſion of any Reprobate is able to turn the Congregation of the Elect from the Faith becauſe all things that ſhall come to paſs are eternally in God, deviſed and ordained for the beſt unto the Elect Chriſtians.

The fourth, Like as the myſtical Body of Chriſt is the Congregation of all the Elect; ſo Antichriſt myſtically is the Church of the wicked and of all the Reprobates.

The fifth, The Concluſions of Swinderby be agreeable to the Faith in every part.

* This Letter was thus ſubſcribed:
By the Spirit of God, ſometime viſiting you.

¶ Beſides this Epiſtle above prefixed, there is alſo found annexed with the ſame a device of another certain Letter counterfeited under the name of Lucifer Prince of Darkneſs; writing to the Pope and all Popiſh Prelates, perſecuting the true and right Church (with all might and main) to maintain their Pride and Domination in this earth, under a colourable pretence and viſor of the Catholick-Church and ſucceſſion Apoſtolical. Which Letter although it ſeemeth in ſome Authors to be aſcribed to Ocham, above mentioned; yet becauſe I find it in the ſame Regiſter of the Church of Hereford contained, and inſerted among the Tractations of Walter Brute, and deviſed (as the Regiſter ſaid) by the Lollards; I thought no meeter place than here to annex the ſame; the tenour whereof thus proceedeth in words as follow.

The device or counterfeit of a certain Letter fained under the name of Lucifer Prince of Darkneſs, writing to the perſecuting Prelates of the Popiſh Clergy.

The Epiſtle of Lucifer to the proud Prelates of the Popes Clergy.

LUcifer Prince of Darkneſs and profound heavineſs, Emperour of the myſteries of the King of Acheront, Captain of the Dungeon Erebus, King of Hell, and Controuler of the Infernal fire, To all our Children of Pride, and Companions of our Kingdom, and eſpecially to our Princes of the Church of this later age and time (of which our Adverſary Jeſus Chriſt, according to the Prophet, ſaith, I hate the Church or Congregation of the wicked) ſend greeting, and wiſh Proſperity to all that obey our Commandments, as alſo to thoſe that be obedient to the Laws of Satan already enacted, and that are diligent Obſervers of our Behеſts, and the Precepts of our Decree. Know ye that in times paſt certain Vicars or Vicegerents of Chriſt, following his ſteps in Miracles and Vertues, living and continuing in a beggerly life, converted (in a manner) the whole world from the Yoke of our Tyranny unto their Doctrine and manner of life, to the great deriſion and contempt of our Priſon-houſe and Kingdom, and alſo to the no little prejudice and hurt of our Juriſdiction and Authority, not fearing to hurt our fortified Power, and to offend the majeſty of our Eſtate. For then received we no Tribute of the world, neither did the miſerable ſort of common people ruſh at the Gates of our deep Dungeon as they were wont to do, with continual pealing and rapping, but then the eaſie, pleaſant, and broad way, which leadeth to death, lay ſtill without great noiſe of trampling Travellers, neither yet was trod with the feet of miſerable men. And when all our Courts were without Suiters, Hell then began to howl. And thus, continuing in great heavineſs and anguiſh, was robbed and ſpoiled. Which thing conſidered, the impatient rage of our ſtomach could no longer ſuffer, neither the ugly wretchleſs negligence of our great Captain-General could any longer endure. But we, ſeeking remedy for the time that ſhould come after, have provided us of a very trim ſhift. For in ſtead of theſe Apoſtles and other their Adherents which draw by the ſame line of theirs, as well in Manners as Doctrine, and are odious Enemies unto us. We have cauſed you to be their Succeſſors, and put you in their place, which be Prelates of the Church in theſe later times, by our great might and ſubtilty, as Chriſt hath ſaid of you: They have reigned, but not by me. Once we promiſed unto him all the Kingdoms of the world if he would fall down and worſhip us; but he would not, ſaying, My Kingdom is not of this world, and went his way when the multitude would have have made him a Temporal King. But to you truly which are fallen from the ſtate of Grace, and that ſerve us in the earth, is that my promiſe fulfilled: and by our means all terrene things which we have beſtowed upon you are under your Government. For he hath ſaid of us, ye know, The Prince of this world cometh, &c. and hath made us to Reign over all Children of unbelief. Therefore our Adverſaries before recited did patiently ſubmit themſelves unto the Princes of the world, and did teach, that men ſhould do ſo, ſaying, Be ye ſubject to every Creature for Gods cauſe, whether it be to the King as moſt chief. And again, Obey ye them that are made Rulers over you, &c. For ſo their Maſter commanded them, ſaying, The Kings of the Heathen have Dominion over them, &c. But I think it long till we have poured our poiſon upon the earth, and therefore fill your ſelves full. And now be ye not unlike thoſe Fathers, but alſo contrary unto them in your life and conditions, and extol your ſelves above all other men. Neither do ye give to God that which belongeth to him, nor yet to Cæſar that which is his: but exerciſe you the power of both the Swords, according to our Decrees, making your ſelves doers in worldly matters, fighting in our quarrel, intangled with ſecular labours and buſineſs. And climb ye by little and little from the miſerable ſtate of Poverty unto the higheſt Seats of all Honours, and the moſt Princely places of Dignity by your deviſed practices, and falſe and deceitful wiles and ſubtilty; that is, by Hypocriſie, Flattery, Lying, Perjury, Treaſons, Deceits, Simony, and other greater wickedneſs than which our Infernal Furies may deviſe. For after that ye have by us been advanced thither where ye would be, yet that doth not ſuffice you, but, as greedy ſhavelings more hungry than ye were before, ye ſuppreſs the poor, ſcratch and rake together all that comes to hand, perverting and turning every thing topſieturvy; ſo ſwoln that ready ye are to burſt for pride, living like Lechers in all corporal delicateneſs, and by fraud directing all your doings. You challenge to your ſelves names of Honour in the earth, calling your ſelves Lords, Holy, yea and moſt holy perſons.

Thus, either by violence ye raven, or elſe by ambition, ſubtilly ye pilfer away, and wrongfully wreſt and by falſe Title poſſeſs thoſe Goods, which for the ſuſtentation of the poor Members of Chriſt (whom from our firſt fall we have hated) were beſtowed and given, conſuming them as ye your ſelves liſt, and therewith ye cheriſh and maintain an innumerable ſort of Whores, Strumpets, and Bawds, with whom ye ride pompouſly like mighty Princes, far otherwiſe going, than thoſe poor beggerly Prieſts of the Primitive-Church. For I would ye ſhould build your ſelves rich and gorgeous Palaces: ye fare like Princes, eating and drinking the moſt daintieſt meats, and pleaſanteſt wines that may be gotten; ye hoord and heap together an infinite deal of Treaſure, not like to him that ſaid, Gold and ſilver have I none; ye ſerve and fight for us according to your wages. O moſt acceptable Society or Fellowſhip, promiſed unto us by the Prophet, and of thoſe Fathers long ago reproved: Whilſt that Chriſt called thee The Synagogue of Satan, and likened thee to the mighty Whore which committed Fornication with the Kings of the Earth, the adulterous Spouſe of Chriſt, and of a chaſt perſon made a ſtrumpet, a ſtrumpet. Thou haſt left thy firſt love and haſt cleaved unto us, O our beloved Babylon, O our Citizens, which from the tranſmigration of Jeruſalem come hither: we love you for your deſerts, we rejoyce over you which contemn the Laws of Simon Peter, and imbrace the Laws of Simon Magus our Friend, and have them at your fingers ends, and exerciſe the ſame publickly, buying and ſelling ſpiritual things in the Church of God, and againſt the Commandment of God. Ye give Benefices and Honours by petition, or elſe for money; for favour, or elſe for filthy ſervice. And refuſing to admit thoſe that be worthy to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, and preferring thoſe that are unworthy, you call unto the Inheritance of Gods Sanctuary, Bawds, Lyars, Flatterers, your Nephews, and your own Children, and to a childiſh Boy ye give many Prebends, the leaſt whereof ye deny to beſtow upon a poor good man: ye eſteem the perſon of a man, and receive gifts, ye regard money and have no regard of Souls. Ye have made the Houſe of God a Den of Thieves. All abuſe, all extortion is more exerciſed a hundred-fold in your Judgment-Seats, than with any ſecular Tyrant. Ye make Laws and keep not the ſame, and ye diſtence with your Diſpenſations as it pleaſeth you; you juſtifie the wicked for Rewards, and you take away the juſt mans deſert from him. And briefly ye perpetrate or commit all kind of miſchief, even as it is our will ye ſhould. And ye take much pain for lucres ſake in our ſervice, and eſpecially to deſtroy the Chriſtian Faith. For now the Lay-people are almoſt in doubt what they may believe, becauſe if ye preach any thing to them as ſome times (although it be but ſeldom ſeen, and that negligently enough, even as we would have it) yet notwithſtanding they believe you not, becauſe they ſee manifeſtly that ye do clean contrary to that ye ſay. Whereupon the common people, doing as ye do which have the Government of them, and ſhould be an example to them of well-doing; now many of them, leaning to your Rules, do run headlong into a whole Sea of Vices; and ſo continually a very great multitude flocketh at the ſtrong and well fenced Gates of our Dungeon. And doubtleſs ye ſend us ſo many day by day of every ſort and kind of people, that we ſhould not be able to entertain them, but that our inſatiable Chaos with her thouſand ravening jaws is ſufficient to devour an infinite number of Souls. And thus the Sovereignty of our Empire by you hath been reformed, and our intolerable loſs reſtored. Wherefore, moſt ſpecially we commend you, and give you moſt hearty thanks; exhorting you all that in any wiſe ye perſevere and continue, as hitherto ye have done: neither that you ſlack henceforth your enterprize. For why? by your helps we purpoſe to bring the whole world again under our Power and Dominion. Over and beſides this, we commit unto yo no ſmall Authority, to ſupply our places in the betraying of your Brethren; and we make and ordain you our Vicars, and the Miniſters of Antichriſt our Son, now hard at hand, for whom ye have made a very trim way and paſſage. Furthermore, we counſel you which occupy the higheſt Rooms of all other, that you work ſubtilly, and that ye fainedly procure Peace between the Princes of the world, and that ye cheriſh and procure ſecret Cauſes of diſcord. And like as craftily ye have deſtroyed and ſubverted the Roman Empire, ſo ſuffer ye no Kingdom to be overmuch inlarged or inriched by tranquility and peace; leſt perhaps in ſo great tranquility (all deſire of peace ſet aſide) they diſpoſe themſelves to view and conſider your moſt wicked works, ſuppreſſing on every ſide your Eſtate; and from your Treaſures take away ſuch ſubſtance, as we have cauſed to be reſerved and kept in your hands, until the coming of our welbeloved Son Antichriſt. We would ye ſhould do our Commendations to our entirely beloved Daughters, Pride, Deceit, Wrath, Avarice, Belly-cheer, and Lechery, and to all other my Daughters; and ſpecially to lade. Simony which hath made you men, and inriched you, and hath given you ſuck with her own breaſts, and weaned you, and therefore in no wiſe ſee that you call her ſin. And be ye lofty and proud, becauſe that the moſt high dignity of your Eſtate doth require ſuch Magnificence. And alſo be ye covetous, for whatſoever ye get and gather into your Fardel, it is for Saint Peter, for the peace of the Church, and for the defence of your Patrimony and the Crucifix; and therefore ye may lawfully do it. Ye may promote your Cardinals to the higheſt Seat of Dignities without any let in all the world, in ſtopping the mouth of our Adverſary Jeſus Chriſt, and alledging again, that he preferred his Kinſfolks (being but of poor and baſe degree) unto the Apoſtleſhip; but do not you ſo, but rather call, as ye do, thoſe that live in Arrogancy, in haughtineſs of Mind, and filthy Lechery, unto the ſtate of wealthy riches and pride; and thoſe Rewards and Promotions, which the Followers of Chriſt forſook, do ye diſtribute unto your Friends. Therefore as ye ſhall have better underſtanding, prepare ye Vices cloked under the ſimilitude of Vertues. Alledge for your ſelves the gloſſes of the holy Scripture, and wreſt them directly to ſerve for your purpoſe. And if any man preach or teach otherwiſe than ye will, oppreſs ye them violently with the Sentence of Excommunication, and by your Cenſures heaped one upon another, by the conſent of your Brethren, let him be condemned as an Heretick, and let him be kept in moſt ſtrait priſon, and there tormented till he die, for a terrible example to all ſuch as confeſs Chriſt. And ſetting all favour apart, caſt him out of your Temple, leſt peradventure the ingraffed word may ſave your Souls, which word I do abhor as I do the Souls of other faithful men. And do your endeavour, that ye may deſerve to have the place which we have prepared for you, under the moſt wicked foundation of our dwelling-place. Fare ye well, with ſuch Felicity as we deſire and intend finally to reward and recompence you with.

Ex Regiſtro Hereford.

Ex Regiſtro Herefordenſi ad verbum.

Who was the true Author of this Poeſie or Epiſtle above written, it is not evidently known; neither doth it greatly skill. The matter being well conſidered on their part, which here be noted, may miniſter unto them ſufficient occaſion of wholſome Admonition, either to remember themſelves what is amiſs, or to bethink with themſelves what is to be amended. Divers other writings of like argument, both before and ſince, have been deviſed: as one bearing the Title, Luciferi ad malos Principes Eccleſiaſticos, imprinted firſt at Paris in Latin. And under the writing thereof, bearing this date, Anno a Palatii noſtri fractione, conſortiumque noſtrorum ſubfractione, 1351. Which if ye count from the Paſſion of the Lord, reacheth well to the time of Wickliff, 1385. which was above ſix years before the examination of this Walter Brute.

There is alſo another Epiſtle of Lucifer Prince of Darkneſs, ad Prælatos, mentioned in the Epiſtle of the School of Prague, to the Univerſity of Oxford, ſet forth by Huldericus Huttenus, about the year of our Lord (as is there dated) 1370. which ſeemeth to be written before this Epiſtle.

Epiſt. Lucif. ad Prælatos.

Alſo Vincentius in Speculo Hiſt. lib. 25. cap. 89. inferreth like mention of a Letter of the Fiends Infernal unto the Clergy-men, as in a Viſion repreſented, before 400 years. In which the Devils gave thanks to the Spiritual-men, for that by their ſilence and not preaching the Goſpel, they ſent infinite Souls to Hell, &c.

Vincent. ſpec. Hiſt. lib. 25. c. 89.

Divers other Letters alſo of like device have been written, and alſo recorded in Authors. Whereunto may be added, that one, Jacobus Garthuſienſis, writing to the Biſhop of Wormace, alledged out of the Propheſie of Hildegardis, in theſe words, Ideo & Diabolus in ſemetipſo de vobis Sacerdotibus ait; Eſcas epulantium, convivia & omnes voluptates in iſtis invenio; ſed & oculi, & aures, & venter meus, & venæ meæ, de ſpumis illorum plenæ ſunt, & ubera mea plena ſunt divitiis illorum, &c. i. e. Therefore, ſaith he, the Devil may ſay of you Prieſts in himſelf; The meats of banquetting-Diſhes, and Feaſts of all kind of pleaſure, I find in theſe men; yea alſo mine Eyes, mine Ears, my Belly, and all my Veins be full of their frothing, and my Breaſts be full ſtuffed with their riches, &c. Furthermore, ſaith he, they labour every day to riſe up higher with Lucifer, but every day they fall with him more deeply.

Ex Propheſia Hildegardis.

Hereunto alſo pertaineth a ſtory written, and commonly found in many old written Books: In the year of our Lord, 1228. at Paris in a Synod of the Clergy, there there was one appointed to make a Sermon. Who being much careful in his mind, and ſolicitous what to ſay, the Devil came to him, and asking him, Why he was ſo careful for his matter what he ſhould preach to the Clergy; ſay thus, quoth he, The Princes of Hell ſalute you, O you Princes of the Church, and gladly give you thanks, becauſe through your default and negligence it cometh to paſs, that all Souls go down to Hell. Adding moreover, That he was alſo enforced by the Commandment of God to declare the ſame, yea and that a certain Token moreover was given to the ſaid Clerk for a ſign, whereby the Synod might evidently ſee that he did not lye. Ex Catal. Illyr. fol. 546.

The Devil giveth thanks to Clergy-men

The ſilence of Prieſts in not preaching the Goſpel, damneth many a Soul.

The Bull of Pope Boniface the Ninth, againſt the Lollards.

The Popes Letter to the Biſhop of Hereford.

BOnifacius Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, To the reverend Brother, John Biſhop of Hereford ſendeth greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction. We mean to write unto our wellbeloved Son in Chriſt (Richard the renowned King of England) in form incloſed within theſe preſents. Therefore we will and command your Brotherhood, that as much as ye may ye ſtudy and endeavour your ſelf to exhort and induce the ſame King to do thoſe things which we have written unto him, as it is ſaid before. And notwithſtanding that now many a day you ought to have done it of your ſelf, and not to look that we ſhould perſwade you to that effect by us written; you may proceed as well by our Authority, as by your own, foraſmuch as it was given you before: that hereafter we may know effectually by your diligence, what zeal your devotion beareth unto the Catholick Faith, and to the conſerving of the Eccleſiaſtical Honour, and alſo to the execution of your Paſtoral Office.

Given at Rome at S. Peters the 15*th Kalends* of October, the ſixth year of our Biſhop-like Dignity.

The tenour of the Bull, to the renowned Prince, Richard, by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, whereof mention is made above, as followeth, and is thus much in effect.

The Popes wild Bull let looſe againſt the Servants of Chriſt.

TO our welbeloved Son in Chriſt, Richard the noble King of England, we ſend greeting, &c. It grieveth us from the bottom of our hearts, and our holy Mother the Church in all places through Chriſtendom lamenteth. We underſtand that there be certain Hereſies ſprung, and do without any condign reſtraint range at their own liberty, to the ſeducing of the faithful people, and do every day with overmuch liberty enlarge their undiſcreet bounds. But how much the more carefully we labour for the preſervation both of you and your famous Kingdom, and alſo the ſincerity of the Faith, and do with much more ardent deſire covet that the proſperous ſtate of the ſame ſhould be preſerved and inlarged; the ſting of greater ſorrow doth ſo much the more penetrate and moleſt us, foraſmuch as we ſee (alas the while) in our time, and under the regal preſidence of your moſt Chriſtian Government, a certain crafty and hairbrain Sect of falſe Chriſtians, in the ſame your Kingdom to grow and increaſe; which call themſelves, The poor men of the treaſury of Chriſt and his Diſciples, and whom the common people by a more ſounder name call Lollards (as a man would ſay, withered Darnel) according as their ſins require; and perceive that they may wax ſtrong, and as it were prevail againſt the Dioceſans of ſome places, and other Governors, as they meet together, not courageouſly addreſſing themſelves againſt them as they ought to do (whereof chiefly and not undeſervedly I give them admonition) for that they take thereby the more bolder preſumption and ſtomach among the unlearned people. And foraſmuch as thoſe whom we cannot call men, but the damnable ſhadows or ghoſts of men, do riſe up againſt the ſound Faith, and holy univerſal Church of Rome; and that very many of them being indifferently learned, which (to the confuſion and eternal damnation of ſome of them) they got ſitting upon their Mothers lap the ſaid Church of Rome, do riſe up or inveigh againſt the determination of the holy Fathers, with too much preſumptuous boldneſs, to the ſubverſion of the whole Eccleſiaſtical Order and Eſtate; and have not been afraid, nor are yet afraid, publickly to preach very many erroneous, deteſtable, and heretical Articles, for that they are not put to ſilence, reproved, driven out, rooted out, or otherwiſe puniſhed by any that hath authority and the fear and love of God. And alſo they are not afraid openly to write the ſame Articles, and ſo being written to deliver them to your Kingly Parliament, and obſtinately to affirm the ſame. The venemous and diſdainful recital of which Articles, upon good adviſement, at this preſent we paſs over, leſt the ſufferance of ſuch ſenſuality might fortune to renew the wound that reaſon may heal. Yet notwithſtanding, leſt ſo great and contagious an evil ſhould eſcape unpuniſhed, and that without deſerved vexation; and alſo that it might not get more heart, and wax more ſtrong, We therefore (according to that our office and duty is, where is ſuch negligence and ſluggiſhneſs of our Prelates being preſent where this thing is) do commit and give in commandment to our reverend Brethren, Canterbury and York Archbiſhops, by other our Letters; that they ſtand up in the power of God againſt this peſtilent and contagious Sect, and that they lively perſecute the ſame in form of Law; root out and deſtroy thoſe, that adviſedly and obſtinately refuſe to withdraw their foot from the ſame ſtumbling-block, any reſtraint to the contrary notwithſtanding. But becauſe the aſſiſtance, counſel, favour, and aid of your Kingly Eſtate and Highneſs are requiſite to the execution of the premiſſes; we require, exhort, and beſeech the ſame your Princely highneſs by the bowels of the mercy of Jeſus Chriſt, by his holy Faith, by your own Salvation, by the benefit that to all men is common, and by the proſperity aſſured to every man and woman, that not only your Kingly ſeverity may readily ſhew, and cauſe to be ſhewed unto our Archbiſhops and their Commiſſaries (in this behalf requiring the foreſaid due execution) convenient aid and favour, as otherwiſe alſo to cauſe them to be aſſiſted: but that alſo you will injoyn your Magiſtrates and Juſtices of Aſſize and Peace, more ſtraitly, that of their own good wills they execute the authority committed unto men, with all ſeverity againſt ſuch damned men, according as they are bound by the Office which they are put in truſt with; againſt thoſe, I mean, which have determined obſtinately to defile themſelves in their malice and ſins, thoſe to expel, baniſh, and impriſon, and there ſo long to keep them, till condign Sentence ſhall pronounce them worthy to ſuffer puniſhment. For your Kingly wiſdom ſeeth that ſuch as they be do not only deceive poor ſimple Souls (or at the leaſt do what they can to deceive them) but alſo bring their bodies to deſtruction, and further prepare confuſion and ruinous fall unto their Temporal Lords. Go too therefore, my ſweet Son, and endeavour your ſelf to work ſo in this matter, as undoubtedly we truſt you will: that as this Firebrand (burning and flaming overſore) began under your Preſidence or Government: ſo under your ſevere judgment and vertuous diligence, might, favour, and aid, there may not one ſpark remain hid under the aſhes, but that it be utterly extinguiſhed, and ſpeedily put out.

Given at our Palace of S. Peter at Rome, the 15*th Calends* of October, in the ſixth year of our Pontificality.

Alack good heart, what ſorrow the Pope taketh.

The Kings Commiſſion.

RIchard by the Grace of God, King of England, and of France, and Lord of Ireland, To all thoſe unto whom theſe preſent Letters ſhall come, greeting. Know ye, that whereas lately at the inſtance of the reverend Father, William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolical See, We for the redreſs and amendment of all thoſe which would obſtinately preach or maintain, publickly or privily, any Concluſions of the holy Scripture, repugnant to the determination of our holy Mother the Church, and notoriouſly redounding to the ſubverſion of the Catholick Faith, or containing any Hereſie or Error, within the Province or Biſhoprick of Canterbury, have by our ſpecial Letters Patents, in the zeal of the Faith, given Authority and Licence unto the foreſaid Archbiſhop, and to all and ſigular his Suffragans, to arreſt all and every of them that will preach or maintain any ſuch Concluſions,

KING Ric. 2.

Concluſions, whereſoever they may be found, and to commit them either to their own Priſons, or any other at their own pleaſure, and to keep them in the ſame, until they repent them of the errors and pravities of thoſe Hereſies; or till that, of ſuch manner of arreſts, by us or by our Council it ſhould be otherwiſe determined; that is to ſay, to every one of them and their Miniſters throughout their Cities and Dioceſs. And now the reverend Father in God, John Biſhop of Hereford, hath for a certainty informed us; that although the ſame Biſhop hath according to juſtice convinced a certain Fellow named William Swinderby, pretending himſelf to be a Chaplain, and one Stephen Bell, a learned man, and hath pronounced them Hereticks, and Excommunicate, and falſe Informers among the common people, and hath declared the ſame by the definitive Sentence of the aforeſaid Biſhop, for that they have preſumed to affirm and preach openly, in divers places within the Dioceſs of Hereford, many Concluſions or naughty Opinions notoriouſly redounding to the ſubverſion of the Catholick ſound Faith, and tranquility of our Kingdom: The ſame Biſhip notwithſtanding, neither by the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, neither by the force and ſtrength of our Commiſſion, was able to revoke the foreſaid William and Stephen, nor yet to bridle the malice and indurate contumacy of them; for that they, after that they were upon ſuch heretical pravity convict by the ſame Biſhop (to the intent they might delude his judgment and juſtice) conveighed themſelves by and by unto the borders of Wales, with ſuch as were their Fautors and Accomplices, keeping themſelves cloſe, unto whom the force of our ſaid Letters doth in no wiſe extend. Whereupon the ſaid Biſhop hath made ſupplication unto us, that we will vouchſafe to provide a ſufficient remedy in that behalf. We therefore, which always (by the help of Almighty God) are Defenders of the Faith, willing to withſtand ſuch preſumptuous and perverſe Enterprizes by the moſt ſafe way and means we may, give and commit full power and authority to the foreſaid Biſhop and to his Miniſters, by the tenour of theſe preſents, to arreſt or take, or cauſe to be arreſted or taken, the foreſaid William and Stephen, in any place within the City and Dioceſs of Hereford and our Dominion of Wales, with all the ſpeed that may be; and to commit them thither to our priſon, or elſe to the priſon of the ſame Biſhop, or any other priſon at their pleaſure, if ſuch need be, and there to keep them ſafe. And afterwards, unleſs they will obey the commandments of the Church, with diligence to bring them before us and our Council, or elſe cauſe them to be brought; that we may determine for their further puniſhment, as we ſhall think it requiſite and convenient to be done by the advice of our Council, for the defence and preſervation of the Catholick Faith. And that the foreſaid William and Stephen, being ſuccoured by the aid of their Fatours or Favourers, ſhould not be able to fly or eſcape to their accuſtomed ſtarting holes, and that the ſharpneſs of their pains ſo aggravated, may give them ſufficient cauſe to return to the lap again of their holy Mother the Church; we ſtraitly charge and command all and ſingular our Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Barons, and all other our Officers in the City and Dioceſs of Hereford, and in any other places being within our Dominion of Wales, by the tenour of theſe preſents; that from time to time (where they think it moſt meet) they cauſe it openly to be proclaimed in our Name, that none of what ſtate, degree, preheminence, kind, or other condition he ſhall be, do cheriſh openly or ſecretly the foreſaid William and Stephen, until the time that they repent them of their Hereſies and Errors, and ſhall be reconciled unto the holy Church of God: Neither that any perſon or perſons, be Believers, Favourers, or Receivers, Defenders, or in any caſe wittingly Inſtructors of the ſaid William or Stephen or any other of the reſidue of the Hereticks that are to be convinced, upon the forfeiture of all that ever they have. And that alſo they giving their attendance be obedient and anſwerable to the foreſaid Biſhop and his Deputies in this behalf for the execution of the premiſſes: and that they certifie us and our Council diſtinctly and plainly, from time to time, of the names of all and ſingular perſons, which ſhall fortune to be found culpable in this behalf, under their Seals. In witneſs whereof, we have cauſed theſe our Letters Patents to be made.

Another Letter of the ſaid King againſt Walter Brute.

Another Letter of King Richard againſt Walter Brute.

RIchard by the Grace of God King of England, and of France, and Lord of Ireland, to his beloved and faithful John Chaundos Knight, John Eynſore Knight, Renold de la Bere Knight, Walter Deveros Knight, Thomas de la Bare Knight, William Lucy Knight, Leonard Hakelute Knight, and to the Mayor of the City of Hereford, to Thomas Oldcaſtle, Richard Naſh, Roger Wygmore, Thomas Waylwayne, John Skydmore, John Up-Harry, Henry Morton, and to the Sheriff of Hereford, ſendeth Salutations.

Walter Brute.

Foraſmuch as it is adverti ſed us, that one Walter Brute, and other ſuch Children of Iniquity, have damnably holden, affirmed, and preached, certain Articles and Concluſions, being notoriouſly repugnant againſt the holy Scripture (of the which ſome of them as Hereſies, and the reſt as errors are finally by the Church condemned) and that in divers places within the Dioceſs of Hereford, and parts near adjoyning, both privily, openly, and obſtinately; which thing we perceive not only to redound to the ſubverſion (in a manner) of the Catholick Faith, which as well we as other Catholick Princes ought of duty to maintain, but alſo to forewarn us of the ſubverſion of our faithful Dioceſans; And that the ſaid Biſhop, upon the good deliberation and adviſement of a great number of Doctors in Divinity, and other learned and skilful men in the Scriptures, of ſpecial devotion, according to his bounden duty, purpoſed to begin and make divers and ſundry Proceſſes by Law to be ſent unto the foreſaid Walter and his Accomplices to appear perſonally before him and other the Doctors aforeſaid in the Cathedral-Church of Hereford, the morrow after the tranſlation of S. Thomas of Hereford next enſuing, and to proceed in the ſame place againſt the ſame Walter, in the foreſaid Articles and Concluſions, for the amendment of his Soul: and that they now afreſh (becauſe that the ſaid Walter *and others of their Retinue, cleaving and confederating with him, might not ſuffer condign pains according to their demerits) endeavour themſelves to make void and fruſtrate the ſaid godly purpoſe of the ſame Biſhop, in ſuch correction and execution as ſhould have been done, and with force do reſiſt and let the ſame with all the power they may, to the great contempt of us and of our Crown, and to the breaking and hurting of our peace, and pernicious example of others: we do appoint you, and every of you, immediately as ſoon as this our Commiſſion ſhall be delivered unto you, in our behalf and name, to make open Proclamation in the Dioceſs and parts aforeſaid, where ye ſhall think it moſt meet and convenient: That no man be ſo hardy henceforth, of what ſtate or condition ſoever he ſhall be, within the Dioceſs and parts aforeſaid, upon pain of forfeiture of all that ever he hath, to make or levy any Conventicles, Aſſemblies, or Confederacies, by any colour; or that they preſume to attempt or procure any other thing, whereby our peace may be hurt or broken, or that the ſame Biſhops and Doctors aforeſaid may be by any means moleſted or let in the execution of ſuch correction as is to be done, according to the Canonical Sanctions; and to arreſt all thoſe which ye ſhall find, or take offending in this behalf, or that keep themſelves in any ſuch Conventicles; And that they, being committed to priſon, be there kept, till you ſhall have other Commandment from us and from our Council for their deliverance; and that ye diſtinctly and plainly certifie us, and our ſaid Council, of all your doing in this behalf under your Seals, or elſe the Seals of ſome of you. And therefore we ſtraitly charge and command you, and every of you, that ye diligently attend upon the premiſſes, and that in your deeds ye execute the ſame with all diligence and careful indeavour in the form and manner aforeſaid. And further we give ſtrait charge and commandment to all and ſingular Sheriffs, Majors, Bailiffs, Conſtables, and other our faithful Subjects, by the tenour of theſe preſents; that they be attending upon you, counſelling and aiding you and every of you, as is meet and convenient in the doing and execution of the premiſſes. Thus

K. Rich. 2. ſet againſt the Goſpellers by the Archbiſhop and the Prelates.

Thus King Richard by the ſetting on of W. Courtney, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his Fellows taking part with the Pope and Romiſh Prelates, waxed ſomewhat ſtrait and hard to the poor Chriſtians of the contrary ſide, of Wickliff, as by theſe Letters above prefixed may appear. Albeit, during all the life of the ſaid King I find of none expreſly by name that ſuffered burning. Notwithſtanding ſome there were which by the foreſaid Archbiſhop W. Courtney, and other Biſhops, had been condemned, and divers alſo abjured, and did Penance as well in other places, as chiefly about the Town of Leiceſter, as followeth here to be declared out of the Archbiſhops Regiſter and Records.

Reg. Regiſt. W. Courtney, Archi. Cant.

At what time the ſaid Archbiſhop William Courtney was in his Viſitation at the Town of Leiceſter, certain there were accuſed and detected to him, by the Monks and other Prieſts in the ſaid Town. The names of which perſons there detected were, one Roger Dexter, Nicholas Taylor, Richard Wagſtaff, Michael Scrivener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parchmentar, and Roger Goldſmith, Inhabitants of the ſame Town of Leiceſter. Theſe with other more were denounced to the Archbiſhop for holding the opinion of the Sacrament of the Altar, of auricular Confeſſion, and other Sacraments, contrary to that which the Church of Rome doth preach and obſerve. All which parties above named, and many other more, whoſe names are not known, did hold theſe Hereſies and Errors here under-written, and are of the Romiſh-Church condemned.

Roger Dexter, Nicholas Tayl r. Richard Wagſtaff, Michael Scrivener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parchmentar, Roger Goldſmith accuſed.

1. That the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, there remaineth the Body of Chriſt with the material Bread.

2. That Images ought not to be worſhipped in any caſe, and that no man ought to ſet any Candle before them.

3. That no Croſs ought to be worſhipped.

4. The Maſſes and Mattens ought not with an high and loud voice to be ſaid in the Church.

5. Item, That no Curate or Prieſt, taken in any Crime can Conſecrate, hear Confeſſions, or miniſter any of the Sacraments of the Church.

6. That the Pope and all Prelates of the Church cannot bind any man with the Sentence of Excommunication, unleſs they know him to be firſt Excommunicated of God.

7. That no Prelate of the Church can grant any Pardons.

8. That every Lay-man may in every place preach and teach the Goſpel.

9. That it is ſin to give any Alms or Charity to the Friers, Preachers, Minorites, Auguſtines, or Carmelites.

10. That no Oblation ought to be uſed at the Funerals of the dead.

11. That it is not neceſſary to make confeſſion of our ſins to the Prieſt.

12. That every good man, although he be unlearned is a Prieſt.

Roger, Nicholas, Richard, Michael, William and Roger accurſed with Book, Bell, and Candle.

Theſe Articles they taught, preached, and affirmed manifeſtly in the Town of Leiceſter, and other places adjoyning. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop moniſhed the ſaid Roger and Nicholas, with the reſt, on the next day to make anſwer unto him in the ſaid Monaſtery to the foreſaid Articles. But the foreſaid Roger and Nicholas, with the reſt, hid themſelves out of the way, and appeared not. Whereupon the Archbiſhop upon Allhallow-day, being the firſt day of November, celebrating the high Maſs at the high Altar in the ſaid Monaſtery, being attired in his Pontificalibus, denounced the ſaid parties with all their Adherents, Fautors, Favourers, and Counſellers, excommunicate and accurſed, which either held, taught or maintained the foreſaid Concluſions heretical and erroneous, and that in ſolemn wiſe, by ringing the Bells, lighting the Candles, and putting out the ſame again, and throwing them down to the ground, with other circumſtances thereunto belonging. Upon the morrow after (being All-Soulne-day) he ſent for all the Curates and other Lay-men of the Town of Leiceſter, to inquire more diligently of the verity of ſuch matter as they knew, and were able to ſay againſt any perſons whatſoever, concerning the foreſaid Articles; as alſo againſt the parties before named and ſpecified upon their Oaths, denouncing every one of them ſeverally by their names to be excommunicated and accurſed; and cauſed them alſo in divers Pariſh Churches in Leiceſter alſo to be excommunicate. And further the ſaid Archbiſhop interdicted the whole Town of Leiceſter, and all the Churches in the ſame, ſo long as any of the foreſaid excommunicate perſons ſhould remain or be within the ſame, and till that all the Lollards of the Town ſhould return and amend from ſuch Hereſies and Errors, obtaining at the ſaid Archbiſhop his hands the benefit of abſolution.

{ KING } { Ric. 2. }

The whole Town of Leiceſter interdicted.

At length it was declared and ſhewed to the ſaid Archbiſhop, that there was a certain Anchoreſs, whoſe name was Matilde, incloſed within the Church-yard of Saint Peters Church of the ſaid Town of Leiceſter, infected (as they ſaid) with the peſtiferous contagion of the foreſaid Hereticks and Lollards: whereupon, after that the ſaid Archbiſhop had examined the foreſaid Matilde, touching the foreſaid Concluſions, Hereſies, and Errors, and found her not to anſwer plainly and directly to the ſame, but ſophiſtically and ſubtilly; he gave and aſſigned unto her a day peremptory, perſonally to appear before him in the Monaſtery of Saint James at Northampton, more fully to anſwer to the ſaid Articles, Hereſies, and Errors, which was the ſixth day of the ſaid month of November; commanding the Abbot of the Monaſtery of Pratis aforeſaid, that the door of the Recluſe, in which the ſaid Matilde was, ſhould be opened, and that till his return he ſhould cauſe her to be put in ſafe Cuſtody. That done, he ſent forth his Mandate againſt the Lollards, under this form:

Matilde, an Anchoreſs, cited to appear.

The Kings proceſs ſent by the Biſhop to arreſt the eight aforenamed.

William by the permiſſion of God, &c. To his well-beloved Sons, the Mayor and Bailiffs of the Town of Leiceſter Dioceſs, greeting. We have lately received the Kings Letters, graciouſly granted us for the defence of the Catholick Faith, in theſe words following, Richard by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, &c. We on the behalf of our holy Mother the Church, by the King's Authority aforeſaid, do require you, that you cauſe the ſame Richard, William, Roger, and the reſt, to be arreſted, and ſent unto us; that they with their pernicious Doctrine do not infect the people of God, &c. Given under our Seal, &c.

Margaret Caily, a Nun, conſtrained againſt her will to take again her habit.

By another Inſtrument alſo in the ſame Regiſter is mention made of one Margarite Caily Nun, which forſaking her Order was by the ſaid Archbiſhop conſtrained, againſt her will, again to enter the ſame, as by this Inſtrument here-under enſuing may appear.

William by the Grace of God, &c. To our reverend Brother of God, John, by the Grace of God Biſhop of Ely, greeting, &c. In the Viſitation of our Dioceſs of Lincoln according to our Office amongſt other Enormities worthy Reformation, we found one Sheep out of our Fold ſtrayed, and amongſt the Bryers tangled; to wit, Margaret Caily, Nun profeſſed, in the Monaſtery of S. Radegond within your Dioceſs: who caſting off the habit of her Religion, was found in ſecular attire, many years being an Apoſtata, and leading a diſſolute life. And leſt her blood ſhould be required at our hands, we have cauſed her to be taken and brought unto you being her Paſtor; and ſtraightly injoyning you, by theſe preſents we do command, that you admit the ſame Margaret again into her foreſaid Monaſtery (although returned againſt her will) or elſe into ſome other place, where for her Souls health you ſhall think moſt convenient; and that from henceforth ſhe be ſafely kept, as in the ſtrait Examination of the ſame you will yield an account. Given under our Seal, &c.

Matilde recanteth.

By ſundry other Inſtruments alſo in the ſame Regiſter recorded I find, that the foreſaid Matilde the Anchoreſs, upon the ſtrait examination and handling of the foreſaid Archbiſhop, before whom peremptorily ſhe was injoyned to appear, and till that day of appearance taken out of the Recluſe, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody, as you heard, retracted and recanted her foreſaid Articles and Opinions. For the which ſhe, being injoyned forty days Penance, was again

{KING Ric. 2.} again admitted into her foreſaid recluſe in Leiceſter. The Biſhops Letter to the Magiſtrates of the Town thus beginneth: Willielmus permiſſione divina, &c. Dilectis filiis, &c.

Will. Smith, Roger Dexter, and Alice his Wife abjure.

Alſo by another Letter of the foreſaid Archbiſhop to the Dean of the Cathedral Church of our Lady of Leiceſter being regiſtred, I find that of the number of thoſe eight perſons before recited, whom the Archbiſhop himſelf at high Maſs did in his Pontificalibus ſo ſolemnly curſe with Book, Bell, and Candle: after certain proceſs being ſent out againſt them, or elſe in the mean time they being apprehended and taken, two of them recanted their opinions; to wit, William Smith, and Roger Dexter. But in the mean time Alice the wife of the ſaid Roger Dexter, taking hold of the foreſaid Articles with her Husband alſo, together with the ſaid William Smith, abjured the ſame. For theſe be the words of the inſtrument: Subſequenter vero præfati Willielmus, Rogerus, & Alicia reatus ſuos reſpicientes, ſe noſtro conſpectu præſentarunt, &c. Notwithſtanding, whether they preſented themſelves willingly, or elſe were brought againſt their wills (as moſt like it was) hard penance was enjoyned them before they were abſolved. Theſe be the words of the Inſtrument.

Sancta mater Eccleſia, &c. i.e. Seeing our Holy Mother the Church denieth not her Lap to any penitent child returning to the unity of her, but rather profereth to them the ſame: We therefore do receive again the ſaid William, Roger and Alice to Grace. And further have cauſed them to abjure all and ſingular the foreſaid Articles and opinions, before they received of us the benefit of Abſolution, and were looſed from the ſentence of Excommunication, wherein they were ſnarled, injoyning unto them penance, according to the quantity of the crime, in form as followeth: that is to ſay, That the Sunday next after their returning to their proper goods, they the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, holding every of them an Image of the Crucifix in their hands, and in their left hands every one of them a Taper of Wax, weighing half a pound weight, in their ſhirts (having none other Apparel upon them) do go before the Croſs three times, during the Proceſſion of the Cathedral Church of our Lady of Leiceſter; that is to ſay, in the beginning of the Proceſſion, in the middle of the Proceſſion, and in the later end of the Proceſſion; to the honour of him that was Crucified, in the memorial of his Paſſion, and to the honour of the Virgin his Mother; who alſo devoutly bowing their knees and kneeling, ſhall kiſs the ſame Crucifix, ſo held in their hands. And ſo with the ſame Proceſſion they entring again into the Church, ſhall ſtand during all the time of the holy Maſs, before the Image of the Croſs, with their Tapers and Croſſes in their hands. And when the Maſs is ended, the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, ſhall offer to him that celebrated that day the Maſs. Then upon the Saturday next enſuing, the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, ſhall in the full and publick Market, within the Town of Leiceſter, ſtand in like manner in their ſhirts, without any more clothes upon their bodies, holding the foreſaid Croſſes in their right hands; which Croſſes three times they ſhall (during the Market devoutly kiſs reverently kneeling upon their knees; that is, in the beginning of the Market, in the middle of the Market, and in the end of the Market. And the ſaid William (for that he ſomewhat underſtandeth the Latin Tongue) ſhall ſay this Antheme with the Collect, Sancta Katharina; and the foreſaid Roger and Alice, being unlearned, ſhall ſay devoutly a Pater Noſter, and an Ave Maria. And thirdly, the Sunday next immediately after the ſame, the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice in their Pariſh-Church of the ſaid Town of Leiceſter ſhall ſtand and do, as upon the Sunday before they ſtood and did in the Cathedral Church of our Lady aforeſaid in all things. Which done, the foreſaid William, Roger, and Alice after Maſs, ſhall offer to the Prieſt or Chaplain that celebrated the ſame, with all humility and reverence the Wax-tapers, which they ſhall carry in their hands. And becauſe of the cold weather that now is, leſt the foreſaid Penitents might peradventure take ſome bodily hurt ſtanding ſo long naked (being mindful to moderate partly the ſaid our rigour) we give leave, that after their entrance into the Churches aboveſaid, whileſt they ſhall be in hearing the foreſaid Maſſes, they may put on neceſſary garments to keep them from cold, ſo that their heads and feet notwithſtanding be bare and uncovered. We therefore will and command you together and apart, that you denounce the ſaid William Roger and Alice to be abſolved and reſtored again to the unity of our holy Mother the Church, and that you call them forth to do their penance in manner and form aforeſaid. Given at Dorcheſter the ſeventeenth day of November, in the year of our Lord God 1389, and the ninth year of our Tranſlation.

Peter Pateſhul againſt the Friers.

Unto the Narration of theſe aboveſaid we will adjoyn the Story of one Peter Pateſhul, an Auſtin Frier, who obtaining by the Popes priviledg (through the means of Walter Dis Confeſſor to the Duke of Lancaſter) liberty to change his Coat and Religion, and hearing the Doctrine of John Wickliff, and other of the ſame ſort, began at length to preach openly, and to detect the vices of his Order, in ſuch ſort as all men wondred to hear the horrible reciting thereof. This being brought to the ears of his Order, they to the number of twelve (coming out of their houſes to the place where he was Preaching) thought to have withſtood him perforce. Among whom one eſpecially for the zeal of his Religion, ſtood up openly in his Preaching, and contraried that which he ſaid, who then was Preaching in the Church of St. Chriſtopher in London. This when the faithful Londoners did ſee, taking grief hereat, they were moved with great ire againſt the ſaid Frier, thruſting him with his other brethren out of the Church, whom they not only had beaten and ſore wounded, but alſo followed them home to their houſe, minding to have deſtroyed their Manſion with fire alſo; and ſo would have done, had not one of the Sheriffs of London, with two of the Friers of the ſaid Houſe, well known and reported amongſt the Londoners, with gentle words mitigated their rage and violence. After this, Peter Pateſhul thus diſturbed, as is aforeſaid, was deſired by the Londoners (forſomuch as he could not well preach amongſt them) to put in writing that which he had ſaid before, and other things more that he knew by the Friers: who then at their requeſt writing the ſame, accuſed the Friers of murther committed againſt divers of their brethren. And to make the matter more apparent and credible, he declared the names of them that were murthered, with the names alſo of their tormentors: and named moreover time and place, where and when they were murthered, and where they were buried. He affirmed further that they were Sodomites and Traytors both to the King and the Realm; with many other crimes, which mine Author for tedioufneſs leaveth off to recite. And for the more confutation of the ſaid Friers, the Londoners cauſed the ſaid Bill to be openly ſet up at St. Pauls Church-door in London, which was there read and copied out of very many. This was done in the year of our Lord 1387, and in the tenth year of King Richard the Second. Ex Chron. Monachi Albanenſis. Cujus eſt exordium, Anno gratiæ milleſimo, &c.

Peter Pateſhul.

The Friers accuſed with horrible crimes.

{Ann. 1387} Ex Chron. D. Albanis

Thus it may appear by this and other above recited, how the Goſpel of Chriſt, preached by John Wickliff and others, began to ſpread and fructifie abroad in London, and other places of the Realm: and more would have done no doubt, had not William Courtney the Archbiſhop, and other Prelates with the King, ſet them ſo forcibly with might and main to gainſtand the courſe thereof. Albeit, as is ſaid before, I find none which yet were put to death therefore, during the raign of this King Richard the Second. Whereby it is to be thought of this King, that although he cannot utterly be excuſed for moleſting the godly and innocent Preachers of that time, (as by his Briefs and Letters afore mentioned may appear) yet neither was he ſo cruel againſt them, as other that came after him: and that which he did, ſeemed to proceed by the inſtigation of the Pope and other Biſhops, rather than either by the conſent of his Parliament, or advice of his Council about him, or elſe by his own nature. For as the Decrees of the Parliament in all his time were conſtant in ſtopping out the Popes proviſions, and in bridling his authority, as we ſhall ſee (Chriſt willing) anon: ſo the nature of the King was not altogether ſo fiercely ſet, if that he following the guiding thereof had not ſtood ſo much in fear of the Biſhop of Rome and his Prelates, by whoſe importunate Letters and calling on he was continually urged to do contrary to that which both Right required, and Will perhaps in him deſired. But howſoever the doings of this King are to be excuſed, or not, undoubted it is, that Queen Anne his Wife moſt rightly rightly deſerveth ſingular commendation; who at the ſame time living with the King, had the Goſpels of Chriſt in Engliſh, with four Doctors upon the ſame. This Anne was a Bohemian born, and Siſter to Wencelaus King of Boheme before: who was married to King Richard about the fifth (ſome ſay the ſixth) year of his reign, and continued with him the ſpace of eleven years. By the occaſion whereof it may ſeem not unprobable, that the Bohemians coming in with her, or reſorting into this Realm after her, peruſed and received here the Books of John Wickliff, which afterward they conveyed into Bohemia, whereof partly mention is made before.

{Anno 1391.} The Marriage of Qu. Anne to K. Richard.

The occaſion how the Doctrine of Wickliff came to Bohemia.

The ſaid vertuous Queen Anne, after ſhe had lived with King Richard about eleven years, in the ſeventeenth year of his Reign changed this mortal life, and was buried at Weſtminſter. At whoſe Funeral Thomas Arundel, then Archbiſhop of York, and Lord Chancellor, made the Sermon. In which Sermon (as remaineth in the Library of Worceſter recorded) he intreating of the commendation of her, ſaid theſe words, That it was more joy of her than of any woman that ever he knew. For notwithſtanding that ſhe was an alien born, ſhe had in Engliſh all the Four Goſpels, with the Doctors upon them: affirming moreover and teſtifying, that ſhe had ſent the ſame unto him to examine. And he ſaid they were good and true. And further, with many words of praiſe he did greatly commend her, in that ſhe being ſo great a Lady, and alſo an alien, would ſtudy ſo lowly ſo vertuous Books. And he blamed in that Sermon ſharply the negligence of the Prelates and other men. Inſomuch that ſome ſaid, He would on the morrow leave up the office of Chancellor, and forſake the world, and give him to fulfill his Paſtoral office, for that he had ſeen and read in thoſe Books. And then it had been the beſt Sermon that ever they heard. Hæc ex libro Wigo. In the which Sermon of Thomas Arundel, three points are to be conſidered: Firſt, the laudable uſe of thoſe old times received, to have the Scripture and Doctors in our Vulgar Engliſh Tongue. Secondly, the vertuous exerciſe and alſo example of this godly Lady, who had theſe Books not for a ſhew hanging at her Girdle; but alſo ſeemed by this Sermon to be a ſtudious occupier of the ſame. The third thing to be noted is, what fruit the ſaid Thomas Archbiſhop declared alſo himſelf to receive at the hearing and reading of the ſame Books of hers in the Engliſh Tongue. Notwithſtanding, the ſame Thomas Arundel, after this Sermon and promiſe made, became the moſt cruel enemy that might be againſt Engliſh Books, and the Authors thereof, as followeth after in his Story to be ſeen.

For ſhortly after the death of Queen Anne, the ſame year (the King being then in Ireland) this Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of York, and Robert Brayhrocke the Biſhop of London, (whether ſent by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Clergy, or whether going of their own accord) croſſed the Seas to Ireland, to deſire the King in all ſpeedy wiſe to return and help the Faith and Church of Chriſt, againſt ſuch as holding of Wickliffs teaching, went about (as they ſaid) to ſubvert all their proceedings, and to deſtroy the Canonical ſanctions of their holy Mother-Church. At whoſe complaint the King hearing the one part ſpeak, and not adviſing the other, was in ſuch ſort incenſed; that incontinently leaving all his affairs uncompleat, he ſped his return toward England. Where he kept his Chriſtmas at Dublin; in the which mean time, in the beginning of the next year following, which was Anno 1395, a Parliament was called at Weſtminſter by the Commandment of the King. In which Parliament certain Articles or Concluſions were put up by them of the Goſpels ſide, to the number of twelve. Which Concluſions moreover were faſtned up upon the Church-door of St. Paul in London, and alſo at Weſtminſter: the Copy of which Concluſions, with the words and contents thereof here under enſue.

{Anno 1395.} Concluſions offered up in the Parliament-Houſe.

{KING Ric. 2.}

The Book of Concluſions or Reformations, exhibited to the Parliament holden at London, and ſet up at Pauls door, and other places, in the eighteenth year of the Reign of King Richard the Second, and in the year of our Lord 1395.

Concluſions exhibited to the Parliament.

THE firſt Concluſion: When as the Church of England began firſt to dote in Temporalties after her ſtepmother the great Church of Rome, and the Churches were authoriſed by Appropriations, Faith, Hope, and Charity began in divers places to vaniſh and fly away from our Church, forſomuch as pride with her moſt lamentable and dolorous genealogy of mortal and deadly ſins, did challenge that place by title of heritage. And this Concluſion is general, and approved by experience, cuſtom, and manner, as ye ſhall after hear.

Paſtoral Prieſthood.

The ſecond Concluſion: That our uſual Prieſthood, which took his original at Rome, and is ſained to be a power higher than Angels, is not that Prieſthood which Chriſt ordained unto his Diſciples. This Concluſion is thus proved, Forſomuch as the Romiſh Prieſthood is done with ſigns and Pontifical Rites and Ceremonies, and Benedictions, of no force and effect, neither having any ground in Scripture, forſomuch as the Biſhops Ordinal and the New Teſtament do nothing at all agree; neither do we ſee that the Holy Ghoſt doth give any good gift through any ſuch ſigns or ceremonies; becauſe that he, together with all noble and good gifts, cannot conſiſt and be in any perſon with deadly ſin. The corolary or effect of this Concluſion is, that it is a lamentable and dolorous mockery unto wiſe men, and ſee the Biſhops mock and play with the Holy Ghoſt in the giving of their Orders; becauſe they give Crowns for their characters and marks, inſtead of white hearts, and this character is the mark of Antichriſt, brought into the holy Church to cloak and colour their idleneſs.

The ſingle life of Prieſts.

The third Concluſion: That the Law of Chaſtity enjoyned unto Prieſthood, the which was firſt ordained to the prejudice of women, induceth Sodomy into the Churches but we do excuſe us by the Bible, becauſe the ſuſpect Decree doth ſay, that we ſhould not name it. Both reaſon and experience proveth this Concluſion. Reaſon thus, Forſomuch as the delicate feeding and fare of the Clergy will have either a natural purgation, or ſome worſe. Experience thus, forſomuch as the ſecret trial and proof of ſuch men is, that they do delight in women. And whenſoever thou doſt prove or ſee ſuch a man, mark him well, for he is one of that number. The Corolary of this Concluſion is, that theſe private Religions with the beginners thereof, ought moſt chiefly to be be diſannulled, as the original of that ſin and offence. But God of his might doth of privy ſins ſend open vengeance.

He doth very excellently paint out the lecherous Clergy.

He Propheſieth againſt Monkery.

The fained miracle of Tranſubſtantiation.

The fourth Concluſion that moſt harmeth the innocent people, is this: That the fained miracle of the Sacrament of Bread induceth all men, except it be a very few, unto Idolatry: forſomuch as they think that the body which ſhall never be out of Heaven, is by the vertue of the Prieſts words eſſentially included in the little bread, the which they do ſhew unto the people. But would to God they would believe that which the Evangelical Doctor teacheth us in his Trialogue, Quod panis altaris eſt aſſidentaliter Corpus Chriſti: i.e. That the Bread of the Altar is the Body of Chriſt accidentally: forſomuch as we ſuppoſe that by that means every faithful man and woman in the Law of God may make the Sacrament of that Bread without any ſuch miracle. The Corolary of this Concluſion is, That albeit the Body of Chriſt be endowed with the eternal joy; the ſervice of Corpus Chriſti, made by Frier Thomas, is not true, but painted full of falſe miracles; neither is it any marvel, forſomuch as Frier Thomas, at that time taking part with the Pope, would have made a miracle of a Hens Egg; and we know it very well, that every Lie openly preached and taught, doth turn to the rebuke and opprobry of him, which is always true without any lack.

He meaneth here Wickliff.

The Feaſt of Corpus Chriſti invented by Thomas Aquinas.

The fifth Concluſion is this: That the Exorciſms and Hallowings, Conſecrations, and Bleſſings over the Wine, Bread, Wax, Water, Oyl, Salt, Incenſe, the Altar-ſtone, and about the Church-Walls, over the Veſtiment, Chalice, Miter, Croſs, and Pilgrim-ſtaves, are the very Practices of Necromancy, rather than of Sacred Divinity. This Con-

The Exorciſms and Bleſſings of Prieſts.

KING Ric. 2.

Concluſion is thus proved: Becauſe that by ſuch Exorciſms the Creatures are honoured to be of more force and power than by their own proper nature; for we do not ſee any alteration or change in any Creature ſo Exorciſed, except it be by falſe faith, which is the principal point of Diveliſh art. The Corolary of this is, That if the Book of Exorciſation or conjuring of Holy water, which is ſprinkled in the Church, were altogether faithful and true; we think certainly that Holy water uſed in the Church, were the beſt Medicine for all kind of ſickneſs and ſores: Cujus contrarium experimur: i.e. the contrary whereof daily experience doth teach us.

The difference between the Eccleſiaſtical and Politick ſtate.

The ſixth Concluſion, which maintaineth much pride is, That a King and Biſhop both in one perſon, a Prelate and Juſtice in Temporal cauſes, a Curate and Officer in worldly office, doth make every Kingdom out of good order. This Concluſion is manifeſt, becauſe the Temporalty and the Spiritualty are two parts of the Holy Univerſal Church; and therefore he which addicteth himſelf to the one part, let him not intermeddle with the other, Quia nemo poteſt duobus Dominis ſervire: wherefore to be called Amphroditæ, which are men of both kinds, or Ambodextri, which is ſuch as can play with both hands, were good names for ſuch men of double eſtates. The Corolary of this Concluſion is, That thereupon we the Procurators of God in this caſe do ſue unto the Parliament, that it may be Enacted, that all ſuch as be of the Clergy (as well of the higheſt degree as of the loweſt) ſhould be fully excuſed, and occupy themſelves with their own Cure and Charge, and not with others.

The foundation of Maſſes for the Dead.

The ſeventh Concluſion that we mightily affirm is, That ſpiritual prayers made in the Church for the ſouls of the Dead (preferring any one by name more than another) is a falſe foundation of Alms, whereupon all the Houſes of Alms in England are falſely founded. This Concluſion is proved by two reaſons: The one is, that a meritorious prayer (of any force or effect) ought to be a work proceeding from meer charity: and perfect charity excepteth no perſon, becauſe thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf. Whereby it appeareth that the benefit of any temporal gift, beſtowed and given unto Prieſts, and Houſes of Alms, is the principal cauſe of any ſpecial prayers, the which is not far different from Simony. The other reaſon is, that every ſpecial prayer, made for men condemned to eternal puniſhment, is very diſpleaſant before God. And albeit it be doubtful, yet it is very likely unto the faithful Chriſtian people, that the founders of every ſuch Houſe of Alms, for their wicked endowing of the ſame, are for the moſt part paſſed by the broad-way. The Corolary is, That every prayer of force and effect, proceeding of perfect charity, would comprehend generally all ſuch whom God would have ſaved, and to live. The merchandize of ſpecial prayers now uſed for the Dead maketh Mendicant poſſeſſioners and other hireling Prieſts, which otherwiſe were ſtrong enough to work and to ſerve the whole Realm, and maintaineth the ſame in idleneſs, to the great charge of the Realm, becauſe it was proved in a certain Book which the King hath, that a hundred Houſes of Alms are ſufficient for the whole Realm. And thereby might peradventure greater increaſe and profit come unto the Temporalty.

A hundred Houſes of Alms ſufficient for England.

Pilgrimages and Oblations.

The eighth Concluſion, needful to tell to the people beguiled is, That Pilgrimages, Prayers, and Oblations made unto blind Croſſes or Roods, or to deaf Images made either of wood or ſtone, are very near of kin unto Idolatry, and far different from Alms. And albeit that theſe things which are forbidden and imagined are the Book of errors unto the common people; notwithſtanding the uſual and common Image of the Trinity is moſt eſpecially abominable. This Concluſion God himſelf doth openly manifeſt, commanding Alms to be given to the poor and needy man, for he is the image of God in a more perfect ſimilitude and likeneſs than any block or ſtone. For God did not ſay, let us make a block or ſtone unto our likeneſs and image, but let us make man; forſomuch as the ſupreme and higheſt honour, which the Clergy calleth Latria, pertaineth only to the Godhead, and the inferior honour which the Clergy call Dulia, pertaineth unto men and Angels, and to none other inferior creature. The Corolary is, That the ſervice of the Croſs, celebrate twice every year in our Church is full of Idolatry: for if Rood, Tree, Nails, and Spear ought ſo profoundly to be honoured and worſhipped, then were Juda's lips (if any man could get them) a marvellous goodly Relick. But thou Pilgrim, we pray thee tell us when thou doſt offer to the bones of the Saints, and holy men which are laid up in any place; whether doſt thou relieve thereby the holy man which is already in joy, or that Alms-houſe which is ſo well endowed, whereas they are Canoniſed (the Lord knoweth how) and to ſpeak more plain, every faithful Chriſtian may well judg and ſuppoſe that the ſtrokes of that ſame man, whom they call Saint Thomas, were no cauſe of Martyrdom, nor yet be.

The Image of the Trinity an abominable thing.

A poor man the perfect Image of God.

Latria, Dulia.

Judas lips.

The death of T. Becket of Cant. is not to be counted for Martyrdom

The ninth Concluſion, that keepeth the people low is, That Auricular confeſſion which is ſaid to be ſo neceſſary for ſalvation, and the fained power of Abſolution, exalteth and ſetteth up the pride of Prieſts, and giveth them opportunity of other ſecret talks, which we will not at this time talk of; forſomuch as both Lords and Ladies do witneſs, that for fear of their Confeſſors they dare not ſpeak the truth: and in time of confeſſion is good opportunity miniſtred of wooing, or to play the Bawds, or to make other ſecret conventions to deadly ſin. They affirm and ſay, that they are Commiſſaries ſent of God to judg and diſcern of all manner of ſin, to pardon and cleanſe whatſoever pleaſe them. They ſay alſo, that they have alſo the Keys of Heaven and Hell, and that they can excommunicate, curſe and bleſs, bind and looſe at their own will and pleaſure: inſomuch that for a ſmall reward, or for twelve pence, they will ſell the bleſſing of Heaven by charter and clauſe of warrantiſe, ſealed by their common ſeal. This Concluſion is ſo common in uſe, that it needeth not any probation. The Corolary hereof is, that the Pope of Rome which fained himſelf to be the profound Treaſurer of the whole Church, having that ſame worthy jewel which is the treaſure of the Paſſion of Chriſt in his own keeping and cuſtody, together with the merits of all the Saints in Heaven, whereby he giveth fained Indulgences and Pardons a pœna & culpa, is a Treaſurer almoſt baniſhed out of charity, whereby he may deliver all captives being in Purgatory at his pleaſure, and make them not to come there. But here every faithful Chriſtian may eaſily perceive that there is much falſhood hid in our Church.

Auricular confeſſion, Confeſſion the miniſter of luſt.

The impudent boldneſs of Prieſts.

The Pope treaſurer of the Church, inſtead of treaſure lay-eth up coals

The Tenth, That Man-ſlaughter (either by war or by any pretenſed law of juſtice for any temporal cauſe or ſpiritual revelation) is expreſly contrary unto the New Teſtament, which is the Law of Grace, full of mercy. This Concluſion is evidently proved by the examples of the preaching of Chriſt here in earth, who chiefly teacheth every man to love his enemies, and have compaſſion upon them, and not to kill and murther them. The reaſon is this, that for the moſt part when as men do fight, after the firſt ſtroke, charity is broken; and whoſoever dieth without charity goeth the right way to Hell. And beſides that, we do well underſtand and know, that none of the Clergy, by any lawful reaſon, can deliver any from the puniſhment of death for one deadly ſin, and not for another: but the law of mercy, which is the New Teſtament, forbiddeth all manner of murther. For in the Goſpel it is ſpoken unto our forefathers, Thou ſhalt not kill. The Corolary is, It is a very robbing of the people, when Lords purchaſe Indulgences and Pardons a pœna & culpa, unto ſuch as do help their Armies to kill and murther the Chriſtian people in foreign Countries for temporal gain; as we do ſee certain Souldiers which do run among the heathen people, to get themſelves fame and renown by the murther and ſlaughter of men. Much more do they deſerve evil thanks at the hands of the King of Peace, forſomuch as by humility and peace our faith is multiplied and increaſed; for murtherers and manquellers Chriſt doth hate and menaceth, He that ſtriketh with the ſword ſhall periſh with the ſword.

How War is lawful, the proof by experience.

The eleventh Concluſion is, which is ſhame to tell, That the vow of Chaſtity, made in our Church by women that are frail and unperfect in nature, is the cauſe of bringing in many great and horrible offences and vices, incident unto the nature of man. For albeit the murther of their children born before their time, and before they are Chriſtened, and the deſtruction of their nature by Medicine, are filthy and foul ſins; yet they accompanying among themſelves, or with unreaſonable beaſts, or with any creature not having life, do paſs to ſuch an unſeemlineſs, that they ought to be puniſhed by infernal torments. The Corolary is, That Widdows and ſuch as take the Mantle and the Nuns and Widows which vow ſingle life.

Ring deliciously fed, we would that they were married, because that we cannot excuse them from private offence of sin.

The twelfth, that the multitude of Arts not necessary (used in this our Church) causeth much sin and offence in wast, curiosity, and disguising in curious Apparel: experience and reason partly doth shew the same, forsomuch as nature, with a few Arts, is sufficient for mans use and necessity.

This is the whole tenor of our Ambassage, which Christ hath commanded us to prosecute at this time, most fit and convenient for many causes. And albeit that these matters be here briefly noted and touched: yet notwithstanding they are more at large declared in another Book, with many other more in our own proper tongue, which we would should be common to all Christian people. Wherefore we earnestly desire and beseech God for his great goodness sake, that he will wholly reform our Church (now altogether out of frame) unto the perfection of her first beginning and original. Ex Archivis Regiis.

The Verses following were annexed unto the Conclusions.

Plangunt Anglorum gentes crimen Sodomorum,
Paulus fert, horum sunt idola causa malorum:
Surgunt ingrati Gierzitæ Simone nati,
Nomine prælati, hoc defensare parati.
Qui Reges estis, populis quicunque præestis,
Qualiter, his gestis, gladios prohibere potestis?

The which Verses are thus Englished:

The English Nation doth lament of Sodomites their sin.
Which Paul doth plainly signifie by Idols to begin.
But Gierstites full ingrate, from sinful Simon strong,

Ye Princes therefore which to rule the people God hath placed,
With justice sword, why see ye not this evil great defaced?

After these Conclusions were thus proposed in the Parliament, the King not long after returned home from Dublin into England, toward the later end of the Parliament. Who at his return called certain of his Nobles unto him, Richard Sturie, Lewes Clifford, Thomas Latimer, John Mountacute, &c. whom he did sharply rebuke, and did terribly threaten for that he heard them to be favourers of that side; charging them straightly never to hold, maintain, nor favour any more those opinions and Conclusions. And namely of Richard Stury he took an Oath, that he should never from that day favour or defend any such opinions; which Oath being taken, the King then answered, And I swear (saith he) again to thee, that if thou dost ever break thine Oath, thou shalt die for it a shameful death, &c. Ex Chron. D. Alban.

R. Sturry, Lewis Clifford, T. Latimer, John Montacute, good favourers.

All this while W. Courtney Archbishop of Canterbury was yet alive, who was a great stirer in these matters. But yet Pope Urban the great Master of the Catholick Sect was dead and buried six years before. After whom succeeded in the schismatical See of Rome Pope Boniface the Ninth, who nothing inferior to his Predecessor in all kind of cruelties, left no diligence unattempted to set forward that which Urban had begun, in suppressing them that were the setters forth of the light of the Gospel: and had written sundry times to King Richard, as well for the repealing of the Acts of Parliament against his provisions, Quare impedit, & premunire facies: as also that he should assist the Prelates of England in the cause of God (as he pretended) against such, whom he falsly suggested to be Lollards and Traytors to the Church, to the King, and the Realm, &c. Thus the courteous Pope, whom he could not reach with his sword, at least with cruel slander of his malicious tongue would work his poyson against them; which Letter he wrote to the King in the year of our Lord 1396, which was the year before the death of William Courtney Archbishop of Canterbury. After whom succeeded in that See Thomas Arundel, Brother to the Earl of Arundel, being first Bishop of Ely, afterward Archbishop of York, and Lord Chancellor of England, and at last made Archbishop of Canterbury about the year of our Lord 1397. The next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1398, and the ninth year of the Pope, I find in certain Records of the Bishop of Duresme a certain Letter of King Richard the Second, written to the said Pope Boniface, which because I judged not unworthy to be seen, I thought here to annex the same, proceeding in form as followeth.

A Letter of K. R. 2. to Pope Boniface the 9th.

WHO will give my head water, and mine eyes streaming tears, that I may bewail the decay, and manifold troubles of our Mother, which have chanced to her by her own children in the distress of this present schism and division. For the sheep have forgotten the proper voice of their shepherds, and hirelings have thrust in themselves to feed the Lords flock, who are clothed with the apparel of the true shepherd, challenging the name of honour and dignity, resembling so the true shepherd, that the poor sheep can scarce know whom they ought to follow, or what Pastour as a stranger they ought to flee, and whom they should shun as an hireling. Wherefore we are afraid lest the holy standard of the Lord be forsaken of his host, and so that City, being full of riches, become solitary and desolate, and lest the land or people which was wont to say (flourishing in her prosperities) I sat as a Queen, and am not a widow, be destitute of the presence of her husband, and as it were so bewitched that she shall not be able to discern his face, and so wrapped in amazes, that she shall not know where to turn her, that she might more easily find him, and that she shall with weeping speak that saying of the Spouse, I sought him whom my soul loveth, I sought him and found him not. For now we are compelled so to wander, that if any man say, Behold here is Christ, or there, we may not believe him so saying; and so many shepherds have destroyed the Lords Vineyard, and made his amiable portion a wast wilderness.

This multitude of shepherds is become very burdenous to the Lords flock. For when two strive to be chief, the state of both their dignities stands in doubt, and in so doing they give occasion to all the faithful of Christ, of a schism and division of the Church. And although both parties go about to subdue unto their power the whole Church militant, yet contrary to both their purpose, by working this way, there beginneth to rise now a division in the body of the Church, like as when the division of the quick innocent body was naked, when the two harlots did strive afore Solomon; like as the Ten Tribes of Israel followed Jeroboam the Intruder, and were withdrawn from the Kingdom for Solomons sin: even so of old time the desire of ruling hath drawn the great power of the world from the unity of the Church. Let your selves remember, we beseech you, how that all Greece did fall from the obedience of the Romish Church in the time of the faction of the Primarch of Constantinople; and how Mahomet with his fellows, by occasion of Supremacy in Ecclesiastical dignity, deceived a great part of Christians, and withdrew them from the Empire and ruling of Christ. And now in these days, where the same Supremacy is, hath withdrawn it self from the obedience of it, insomuch that now in very few Realms the Candle that burns before the Lord remaineth, and that for Davids sake his servant. And although now remain few Countries professing the obedience of Christs true Vicar: yet peradventure if every man were left to his own liberty, he would doubt of the preferring of your dignity, or that is worse, would utterly refuse it by such doubtful evidence alledged on both sides: and this is the subtil craft of the crooked Serpent, that is to say, under the pretence of unity to procure schisms, as the Spider of a wholsome flower gathers poyson, and Judas learned of peace to make war

'war. Wherefore it is lively believed of wiſe men, that except this peſtilent ſchiſm be withſtood by and by, the Keys 'of the Church will be deſpiſed, and they ſhall bind the 'conſcience but of a few: and when either none dare be 'bold to correct this fault, or to reform things contrary to 'Gods law, ſo by this means at length Temporal Lords 'will take away the Liberties of the Church, and peradventure the Romans will come and take away their place, 'people, and lands: they will ſpoil their poſſeſſions, and 'bring the men of the Church into bondage, and they ſhall 'be contemned, reviled, and deſpiſed, becauſe the obedience 'of the people, and devotions towards them will almoſt 'be taken away, when the greater part of the Church, left to 'their own liberty, ſhall wax prouder than they be wont, 'leaving a wicked example to them that do ſee it. For when 'they ſee the Prelates ſtudy more for covetouſneſs than they 'were wont, to purſe up money, to oppreſs the ſubjects, in 'their puniſhings to ſeek for gain, to confound laws, to ſtir 'up ſtrife, to ſuppreſs truth, to vex poor ſubjects with wrong 'corrections, in meat and drink intemperate, in feaſtings 'paſt ſhame: what marvel is it if the people deſpiſe them 'as the fouleſt forſakers of Gods Law? but all theſe things 'do follow if the Church ſhould be left long in this doubtfulneſs of a ſchiſm, and then ſhould that old ſaying be verified; In thoſe days there was no King in Iſrael, but every 'one did that that ſeemed right and ſtraight to himſelf. Micheas did ſee the people of the Lord ſcattered in the mountains, as they had been ſheep without a ſhepherd: for when 'the ſhepherd is ſmitten, the ſheep of the flock ſhall be ſcattered, the great ſtroke of the ſhepherd is the miniſhing of 'his juriſdiction, by which the ſubjects are drawn from his 'obedience. When Jaſon had the office of the higheſt Prieſt, 'he changed the ordinance of God, and brought in the cuſtoms of the heathen, the Prieſts leaving the ſervice of the 'holy Altar, and applying themſelves to Wreſtling, and other 'Exerciſes of the Grecians, and deſpiſing thoſe things that 'belonged to the Prieſts, did labour with all their might to 'learn ſuch things of the Grecians; and by that means the 'place, people, and holy ointing of Prieſts, which in times paſt 'were had in great reverence of Kings, were trodden under 'foot of all men, and robbed by the Kings power, and was 'prophaned by thruſting in for money. Therefore let the 'higheſt Vicar of Chriſt look unto this with a diligent eye, 'and let him be the follower of him by whom he hath got'ten authority above others.

The King ſeemeth here to Propheſie.

Biſhops taught by Chriſt not to play the Lords.

'If you mark well, moſt holy Father, you ſhall find that 'Chriſt rebuked ſharply two brethren, coveting the ſeat of 'honour: he taught them not to play the Lords over the 'people, but the more grace they were prevented with, to be 'ſo much more humble than other, and more lowly to ſerve 'their brethren. To him that aſked his coat, to give the 'cloak, to him that ſmote him on the one cheek, to turn the 'other to him. For the ſheep that are given to his keeping 'he muſt forſake all earthly things, and to ſhed his own 'blood, yea and if need required, to die. Theſe things, I ſay, be 'thoſe that adorn the higheſt Biſhop, if they be in him, not 'his white horſe, not his Imperial Crown, becauſe he among 'all men is moſt bound to all the ſheep of Chriſt. For the fear 'of God therefore, and for the love of the flock which ye 'guide, conſider theſe things diligently, and do them wiſely, 'and ſuffer us no longer to waver betwixt two: although 'not for your own cauſe, to whom peradventure the fulneſs 'of your own power is known; yet in pitying our weakneſs, 'if thou be he, tell us openly, and ſhew thy ſelf to the world, 'that all we may follow one. Be not to us a bloody Biſhop, 'leſt by your occaſion mans blood be ſhed, leſt Hell ſwallow 'ſuch a number of ſouls, and leſt the name of Chriſt be evil 'ſpoken of by Infidels, through ſuch a worthy perſonage.

The right ornament of a true Biſhop.

A bald anſwer.

'But peradventure ye will ſay, for our righteouſneſs it is 'manifeſt enough, and we will not put it to other mens diſputation. If this bald anſwer ſhould be admitted, the ſchiſm 'ſhould continue ſtill: ſeeing neither part is willing to agree 'to the other, and where the world is as it were equally divided betwixt them, neither part can be compelled to give 'place to the other without much bloodſhed. The Incarnation 'of Chriſt and his Reſurrection was well enough known to 'himſelf and his Diſciples; yet he asked of his Father to be 'made known to the world. He made alſo the Goſpel to be 'written, and the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, and ſent his Apoſtles into all the world, to do the office of preaching, that the 'ſame thing might be known to all men. The foreſaid reaſon is the ſubtilty of Mahomet, the which knowing himſelf guilty of his ſect, utterly forbad diſputations. If ye 'have ſo full truſt of your righteouſneſs, put it to the examinations of worthy perſons in a General Council, to the 'which it belongeth by right to define ſuch doubts, or elſe 'commit it unto able perſons, and give them full power to 'determine all things concerning that matter, or at the leaſt, 'by forſaking the office on both parties, leave the Church of 'God free, ſpeedily to provide for a new ſhepherd.

Publick reſpect to be preferred before private.

'We find Kings have forſaken their Temporal Kingdoms, only upon reſpect of devotion; and have taken the 'apparel of Monks profeſſion. Therefore let Chriſts Vicar 'being a profeſſor of moſt high holineſs) be aſhamed to 'continue in his ſeat of honour to the offence of all people, 'and the prejudice and hurt of the Romiſh Church, and the 'devotion of it, and cutting away Kingdoms from it.

'But if you ſay, It is not requiſite that the cauſe of Gods 'Church ſhould be called in controverſie, and therefore we 'cannot ſo eaſily go from it, ſeeing our conſcience gain-ſay'eth it.

Anſwer to a Popiſh objection.

'To the which we anſwer, If it be the cauſe of God and 'the Church, let the General Council judge of it: but if it 'be a perſonal cauſe (as almoſt all the world probably think'eth) if ye were the followers of Chriſt, ye would rather 'chuſe a temporal death, than to ſuffer ſuch a wavering. I 'ſay not, to the hurt of ſo many, but to the endleſs deſtruction of ſouls, to the offence of the whole world, and to an 'everlaſting ſhame of the Apoſtolical dignity. Did not Clement named, or (that I may more truly ſpeak) ordained of 'St. Peter to the Apoſtolick dignity, and to be Biſhop, reſign 'his right, that his deed might be taken of his Succeſſors for 'an example? Alſo Pope Siricius gave over his Popedom to 'be a comfort of the 11000 Virgins. Therefore much more 'ought you (if need require) give over your Popedom, that 'you might gather together the children of God which be 'ſcattered abroad. For as it is thought a glorious thing to 'defend the common right, even to bloodſhed: ſo is it ſome'times neceſſary for a man to wink at his own cauſe, and to 'forſake it for a greater profit, and by that means better to 'procure peace. Should not he be thought a Devil, and Chriſts 'enemy of all men, that would agree to an Election made of 'him for the Apoſtolical dignity and Popedom, if it ſhould 'be to the deſtruction of Chriſtians, diviſion of the Church, 'the offence and loſs of all faithful people? If ſuch miſchiefs 'ſhould be known to all the world by Gods revelation, to 'come to paſs by ſuch receiving of the Popedom and Apoſtolical dignity: then by the like reaſon why ſhould he 'not be judged of all men an Apoſtata, and forſaker of his 'faith, which chuſeth dignity, or worldly honour, rather than 'the unity of the Church? Chriſt died that he might gather together the children of God, which are ſcattered 'abroad: but ſuch an enemy of God and the Church 'wiſheth his ſubjects bodily to die in battel, and the more 'part of the world to periſh in ſoul, rather than forſaking 'to be Pope to live in a lower ſtate, although it were honourable. If the fear of God, the deſire of the heavenly Kingdom, and the earneſt love of the unity of the Church do 'move your heart, ſhew indeed that your works may bear re'cord to the truth. Clement and Siricius moſt holy Popes, 'not only are not reproved, but rather are reverenced of all 'men, becauſe they gave over their right for profitable cauſes, and for the ſame cauſe all the Church of holy men ſhew 'forth their praiſe. Likewiſe your name ſhould live for ever 'and ever, if ye would do the like for a neceſſary cauſe, that 'is to ſay, for the unity of Gods Church. Give no heed to the 'unmeaſurable crying of them that ſay, that the right chuſing of Popes is loſt, except ye defend your parts manfully: 'but be afraid, leſt ſuch ſtirers up of miſchief look for their 'own commodity or honour, that is to ſay, that under your 'wing they might be promoted to riches and honour. After 'this ſort Achitophel was joyned with Abſalom in perſecuting his own Father, and falſe uſurping of his Kingdom.

Hard counſel for the Pope.

Unity of the Church to be preferred before worldly dignity.

The Pope will not loſe his dignity, for any publick tranquility.

Wicked flatterers about the Pope.

'Furthermore, there ſhould be no jeopardy to that Election, becauſe both parties ſtick ſtifly to the old faſhion of Election, and either of them covet the preeminence of the Romiſh Church, counſelling all Chriſtians to obey them. And 'although through their giving over the faſhion of chuſing 'the Pope ſhould be changed for a time, it were to be born, rather than to ſuffer any longer this diviſion in Gods Church. 'For that faſhion in chuſing is not ſo neceſſarily required to the 'ſtate of a Pope, but the ſucceſſor of the Apoſtle, as neceſſary cauſe Better that the order of the Popes Election ſhould ceaſe, than the Church ſhould ſuffer any diviſion.

'required, might come in at the door by another faſhion 'of chuſing, and that Canonical enough. And this we are 'taught manifeſtly by examples of the Fathers; for Peter Biſhops of Rome appointed their ſucceſſors, to the time of Pope Hilary. 'the Apoſtle appointed after him Clement, and that not by 'falſe uſurping of power, as we ſuppoſe. And it was thought 'that that faſhion of appointing Popes was lawful unto the 'time of Pope Hilary; which decreed that no Pope ſhould 'appoint his Succeſſor.

Election of the Pope not as was before. 'Afterward the Election of the Pope went by the Cler- 'gy and people of Rome, and the Emperors Council agree- 'ing thereto, as it appeareth in the Election of the bleſſed 'Gregory. But Martinus Pope, with the conſent of the 'holy Synod, granted Charles the Power to chuſe the Pope. 'But of late Nicolas the ſecond was the firſt whom Martin 'makes mention of in his Councils to be choſen by the 'Cardinals. But all the Biſhops of Lumbardy (for the moſt 'part) withſtood this Election, and choſe Cadulus to be 'Pope, ſaying, That the Pope ought not to be choſen but 'of the Precinct of Italy. Wherefore we think it not a ſafe 'way ſo earneſtly to ſtick to the Traditions of men, in the 'faſhion of chuſing the Pope, and ſo oft to change, leſt 'we be thought to break Gods Traditions concerning the 'unity of the Church. Yea rather it were better yet to or- 'dain a new faſhion of his Election, and meeter for him 'as it hath been afore. But all things concerning the ſame Good counſel loſt. 'Election might be kept ſafe, if Gods honour were looked 'for afore your own, and the peace of the Church were 'uprightly ſought: for ſuch a diſhonouring ſhould be moſt 'honour unto you, and that giving place ſhould be the 'getting of a greater dignity, and the willing depoſing of 'your honour ſhould obtain you the entry of everlaſting 'honour, and ſhould procure the love of the whole world 'toward you, and you ſhould deſerve to be exalted con- 'tinually, as David was in humbling himſelf. O how 'monſtrous a ſight, and how foul a monſter is a mans body 'disfigured with two heads? So if it were poſſible, the 'Spouſe of Chriſt ſhould be made ſo monſtrous, if ſhe 'were ruled with two ſuch heads: but that is not poſſible, 'ſhe is ever altogether fair, in whom no ſpot is found; 'therefore we muſt caſt away that rotten member, and 'thruſter in of his ſecond head. We cannot ſuffer any lon- Chriſts ſeamleſs Coat broken. 'ger ſo great a wickedneſs in Gods houſe, that we ſhould 'ſuffer Gods coat that wants a ſeam, by any means to be 'torn by the hands of two, that violently draw it in ſun- 'der. For if theſe two ſhould be ſuffered to reign together, 'they would ſo betwixt them tear in pieces that little coat The Popes compared to the Soldiers that crucified Chriſt. 'of the Lord, that ſcarce one piece would hang to another. 'They paſs the wickedneſs of the Souldiers that crucified 'Chriſt: for they willing to have the Coat whole, ſaid, 'Let us not cut it, but let us caſt lots for it whoſe it ſhall be. 'But theſe two Popes ſuffering their right and title to be 'tried by no lot nor way (although not in words yet in 'deeds) they pronounce this ſentence, It ſhall neither be 'thine nor mine, but let it be divided; for they choſe rather 'as it appeareth, to be Lords (though it be but in a little 'part, and that to the confuſion of the unity of the Church) 'than in leaving that Lording, to ſeek for the peace of the 'Church. We do not affirm this, but we ſhew almoſt the 'whole judgment of the world of them, being moved ſo to 'think by likely conjectures. We looked for amendment of 'this intolerable contuſion, by the ſpace that theſe two in- 'venters of this miſchief lived. But we looked for peace, 'and behold trouble: for neither in their lives nor in their 'deaths they procured any comfort, but rather dying as it 'were in a doubt betwixt two ways, left to their Succeſſors 'matter of contention continual. But now for the ſpace of 'ſeven years, whereas of their Succeſſors we deſired and loo- 'ked for that they ſhould bear good grapes, and they bring 'forth wild grapes: in this matter we fall into a deep deſpair. 'But inaſmuch as we hear the comfort of the Lord, which 'promiſed that miſerably he would deſtroy thoſe wicked 'men, and let his Vineyard to other Husbandmen which 'will bring him fruit at their times appointed, and hath pro- 'miſed faithfully that he will help his Spouſe in her need 'to the end of the world: we leaning on the ſure hope of 'this promiſe, and in hope contrary to hope believing, by 'Gods grace will put our helping hands to the eaſing of this 'miſery, when a convenient time ſhall ſerve, as much as our godly purpoſe if it had been put in execution. 'Kingly power is able; and although our wit doth not per- 'ceive how theſe things afore rehearſed may be amended, 'yet we being encouraged to this by the hope of Gods pro- 'miſe, will do our endeavour: like as Abraham believed, 'his Son being ſlain by ſacrifice, that the multitude of his 'ſeed ſhould encreaſe to the number of the Stars, accor- 'ding to Gods promiſe. Now therefore the times draw 'near to make an end of this ſchiſm, leſt a third election of 'a Schiſmatick againſt the Apoſtles Succeſſor make a mu- 'ſtom of the doing, and ſo the Pope of Avinion ſhall be 'double Romiſh Pope, and he ſhall ſay with his partakers, 'as the Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſaid unto Chriſts Vicar 'when he forſook him: The Lord be with thee, for the Lord 'is with us. And is much to be feared of all Chriſtian men: 'For that Phariſee begins now to be called the Pope of 'Avinion among the people. But peradventure it would be 'thought of ſome men, that it belongeth not to ſecular Prin- 'ces to bridle outrages of the Pope. To whom we anſwer, Secular Princes are to bridle the outrages of the Pope. 'that naturally the members put themſelves in jeopardy to 'ſave the head, and the parts labour to ſave the whole. 'Chriſt ſo decked his Spouſe, that her ſides ſhould cleave to- 'gether, and ſhould uphold themſelves, and by courſe of time 'and occaſion of things they ſhould correct one another, and 'cleave together tunably. Did not Moſes put down Aaron, 'becauſe he was unfaithful? Solomon put down Abiathar, 'who came by lineal deſcent from Anatoth, and removed 'his Prieſthood from his kindred to the ſtock of Eleazar 'in the perſon of Sadock which had his beginning from Popes put down by Princes. 'Eli the Prieſt? 3 Reg. 2. Otho Emperor depoſed Pope 'John the 12. becauſe he was lecherous. Henry the Em- 'peror put down Gratianus, becauſe he uſed Simony in 'buying and ſelling ſpiritual livings. And Otho depoſed 'Pope Bennet the firſt, becauſe he thruſt in himſelf. There- 'fore by like reaſon, why may not Kings and Princes bridle 'the Romiſh Pope in default of the Church; if the quality 'of his fault require it, or the neceſſity of the Church by 'this compell to help the Church oppreſſed by tyranny? 'In old time ſchiſms, which roſe about making the Pope, 'were determined by the power of Secular Princes, as the 'ſchiſm betwixt Symmachus and Laurence was ended in 'a Council before Theodoricus King of Italy. Henry the 'Emperor when two did ſtrive to be Pope, depoſed them 'both, and received the third being choſen at Rome to be 'Pope, that is to ſay, Clement the ſecond, which Crowned 'him with the Imperial Crown. And the Romans promi- 'ſed him that from thenceforth they would promote none 'to be Pope without his conſent. Alexander alſo overcame 'four Popes ſchiſmaticks, all which Frederick the Emperor 'corrected.

'Thus look on the Regiſter of Popes and their deeds, 'and ye ſhall find that ſchiſms moſt commonly have been 'decided by the power of ſecular Princes, the ſchiſmaticks 'caſt out, and ſometimes new Popes made, and ſometimes 'the old ones caſt out of their dignities, and reſtored to their 'old dignities again. If it were not lawful for ſecular Prin- Law. Princes ſhould withſtand the tyranny of the Pope 'ces to bridle the outrages of ſuch a Pope lawfully made, 'and afterward becoming a Tyrant: in ſuch a caſe he 'might oppreſs overmuch the Church, he might change 'Chriſtendom into Heathens, and make the labour of Chriſt 'crucified to be in vain: or elſe truly God ſhould not have 'provided for his Spouſe in earth by all means as much as is 'poſſible by ſervice of men to withſtand dangers. There- 'fore we counſel you, with ſuch a loving affection as be- 'comes children, that ye conſider in your heart well, leſt in 'working by this means ye prepare a way to Antichriſt 'through your deſire to bear rule, and ſo by this means as 'we fear the one of theſe two ſhall chance; either ye ſhall 'cauſe all the Princes of the world to riſe againſt you to 'bring in a true follower of Chriſt to have the ſtate of the 'Apoſtolical dignity, or that is worſe, the whole world, de- 'ſpiling the ruling of one ſhepherd, ſhall leave the Romiſh 'Church deſolate. But God keep this from the world, that 'the deſire of honour of two men ſhould bring ſuch a de- 'ſolation into the Church of God: for them that depart- 'ing away, which the Apoſtle propheſied, ſhould come be- The King ſeemeth here to propheſie of the deſolation of the Roman Pope. 'fore the coming of Antichriſt were at hand: which ſhould 'be the laſt diſpoſition of the world, peaceably to receive 'Antichriſt with honour. Conſider therefore the ſtate of your 'moſt excellent Holineſs, how ye received the power from 'God to the building of the Church, and not to the de- 'ſtruction of it; that Chriſt hath given you wine and 'oyl to heal the wounded; and hath appointed you 'his Vicar in theſe things which pertain to gentleneſs, 'and hath given us theſe things which ſerve to rigour.

The Pope and the Phariſees new Crucifie Chriſt.

¶ This Epiſtle of King Richard the ſecond, written to Pope Boniface the ninth, in the time of the ſchiſm, about the year as appeared 1397. as it contained much good matter of wholeſome counſel to be followed, ſo how little it wrought with the Pope the ſequel afterward declared. For the ſchiſm notwithſtanding continued long after, in which neither of the Popes would give over their hold, or yield any thing to good counſel given them, for any reſpect of publick wealth. Such a ſtroke beareth Ambition in the Apoſtolical See, which we are wont ſo greatly to magnifie. But of this enough, which I leave and refer to the conſideration of the Lord, ſeeing Men will not look upon it.

Drawing now toward the later end of King Richard's Reign, it remaineth, that as we did before in the time of King Edward the third, ſo here alſo we ſhew forth a ſummary recapitulation of ſuch Parliamental Notes and Proceedings, as then were practiſed by publick Parliament in this Kings time, againſt the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome; to the intent that ſuch, (if any ſuch be) that think, or have thought the receiving of the Popes double authority to be ſuch an ancient thing within this Realm, may diminiſh their opinion as evidently may appear by divers arguments heretofore touched, concerning the election and inveſting of Biſhops by the King. As where King Oſwin commanded Cedde to be ordained Archbiſhop of York. Alſo where King Egfride cauſed Cuthbert to be brought to King Canute, and at his commandment was inſtituted Biſhop of the ſame See. Ex lib. Malmesb. de geſtis Pontif. Anglorum. And likewiſe Mat. Pariſ. teſtifieth, that King Henry the Third gave the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury to Radulphus then Biſhop of London, and inveſted him with Staff and Ring. And the ſame King gave the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter to William Gifford; and moreover, following the ſteps both of his Father and Brother before him, endowed him with the poſſeſſions pertaining to the ſaid Biſhoprick (the contrary Statute of Pope Urban, forbidding that Clerks ſhould receive any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity at the hand of Princes, or of any lay perſon, to the contrary notwithſtanding, &c.) Innumerable examples of like ſort are to be ſeen in ancient Hiſtories of this our Realm. As alſo out of the Parliament Rolls in the time of King Edward the Third, hath ſufficiently been touched a little before. Whereunto alſo may be added the Notes of ſuch Parliaments as have been holden in the Reign of this preſent King Richard the Second, the collection whereof in part here followeth.

The Popes uſurped Juriſdiction never received in England before late years.

¶ Notes of certain Parliaments holden in the Reign of King Richard the Second, making againſt the Pope.

Ex Archivis Parliament. An. 1. Reg. R. 2. tit. 66.

IN the firſt year of King Richard the Second, in the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, it was requeſted and granted, That the Popes Collector be willed no longer to gather the firſt fruits of Benefices within this Realm, being a very novelty, and that no perſon do any longer pay them.

Tit. 27. Item, That no man do procure any Benefice by proviſion from Rome, on pain to be out of the Kings protection.

Item, That no Engliſhman do take to farm of any Alien any Eccleſiaſtical Benefice or Prebend, on the like pain. In which Bill was rehearſed, that the Frenchmen had ſix thouſand pounds yearly of ſuch Livings in England.

Item, That remedy might be had againſt the Popes reſervations to dignities elective, the ſame being done againſt the Treaty of the Pope, taken with King Edward the 3d. Tit. 57.

In the ſecond year of the ſaid King Richard the Second, it was by Petition requeſted, that ſome order might be taken touching Aliens, having the greateſt part of the Church Dignities in their hands. Whereunto the King anſwered, That by advice of the Lords he would provide therefore. Ex Anno 2. Tit. 70.

Item, It was Enacted, That all the Benefices of Cardinals, and other Rebels, to Pope Urban that now is, ſhall be ſeized into the Kings hands. Tit. 72.

An Act that Pope Urban was true and lawful Pope, and that the Livings of all Cardinals, and other Rebels to the ſaid Pope, ſhould be ſeized into the Kings hands, and the King be anſwered of the profits thereof: And that whoſoever within this Realm ſhall procure or obtain any proviſion or other inſtrument from any other Pope than the ſame Urban, ſhall be out of the Kings protection. Tit. 78.

Moreover, in the third year of King Richard the Second, the Prelates and Clergy made their proteſtation in this Parliament, expreſly againſt a certain new Graht, to wit, their Extortions: That the ſame never ſhould paſs with their aſſent and good will to the blemiſhing of the liberties of the Church, if by that word extortion they meant any thing largely to proceed againſt Ordinaries and others of the Church. But if they meant none otherwiſe to deal hereafter therein, than before that time had been done, then would they conſent. Whereunto it was replied for the King, That neither for the ſame their ſaid Proteſtation, or other words in that behalf, the King would ſtay to grant to his Juſtices in that caſe, and all other caſes, as was uſed to be done in times paſt, and he was bound to do by vertue of his Oath taken at his Coronation. Ex 3. Anno Reg. Ric. 2. Here note well a ſtrange proceeding. But mark the ſtrange event.

Furthermore, in the fourth year of the ſaid King Richard the Second, it was requeſted, That proviſion might be had againſt the Popes Collectors, for levying of the firſt fruits of Eccleſiaſtical Dignities within the Realm. Tit. 44.

Item, That all Priors Aliens might be removed out of their Houſes, and licenſed to depart, and never to revert. And that Engliſhmen may be placed in their Livings, anſwering the King as they did. Tit. 46.

And in the 9th year of the foreſaid King, touching matter of the Staple, the Speaker of the Parliament pronounced, that he thought beſt the ſame were planted within the Realm, conſidering that Calis, Burges, and other Towns beyond the Seas grew very rich thereby, and good Towns here very much decayed; and ſo it was much for the common profit. Touching the King, he affirmed that the Subſidy and Cuſtom of Wooll yielded more to the King when the Staple was kept in England by one thouſand Marks yearly, than it did now being holden beyond the Seas. Ex 9. Anno ejuſdem Regis. Tit. 4.

Item, That inquiſition and redreſs might be had againſt ſuch religious perſons, as under the licence to purchaſe 10 l. yearly, do purchaſe 80 l. or 100 l. Tit. 36.

Item, That all Clerks, advanced to any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity or Living by the King, will grant to the King the firſt fruits of their Livings, none otherwiſe than they would have done to the Pope, being advanced by him. Tit. 48.

In the 11th year of King Richard the Second, it was put up by the Petitions of the Commons, That ſuch Impoſitions as are gathered by the Popes Bulls of volumus and imponimus of the Tranſlations of B. B. and ſuch like, might be imployed on the Kings Wars againſt the Schiſmaticks of Scotland. And that ſuch as bring into the Realm the like Bulls and Novelties may be reputed for Traitors. Tit. 26.

In the 13th year of his Reign followed another Parliament, in which although the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and York, for them and the whole Clergy of their Provinces, made their ſolemn Proteſtations in open Parliament, That they in no wiſe meant, or would aſſent to any Statute or Law made in reſtraint of the Popes authority, but utterly withſtood the ſame, willing this Proteſtation of theirs to be enrolled; yet the ſaid Proteſtation of theirs at that time took no great effect. An. 13. Regis Richi. 2. Tit. 24.

Item, In the ſame Parliament it was put up by publick Petition, That the Popes Collector ſhould be commanded to avoid the Realm within 40 days, or elſe to be taken as the Kings enemy, and that every ſuch Collector from henceforth Tit. 34.

may

may be an Engliſhman, and ſworn to execute the ſtatutes made in this Parliament.

Ex Tit. 9. Moreover, in the ſaid Parliament, the year aboveſaid of the King, the 26th of January, Mr. John Mandoure Clerk, was charged openly in the Parliament, That he ſhould not paſs, ne ſend over to Rome, ne attempt or do any thing there touching the Archdeaconry of Durham, in prejudice of the King, or of his laws, or of the party preſented thereto by the King, on peril that might enſue.

Ex Stat. 14. Reg. Ric. 2. tit. 6. The next year following, which was the 14th of this Kings Reign, it was Enacted firſt touching the Staplers, That, after the Feaſt of Epiphany next enſuing, the Staple ſhould be removed from Calis into England, in ſuch places as are contained in the Statute made in 27 Edw. 3. the which Statute ſhould be fully executed: And further, That every Alien, that bringeth Merchandiſe into the Realm, ſhould find ſufficient ſurety to buy and carry away Commodities of the Realm, to half the value of the ſaid Merchandiſe.

Tit. 24. Againſt uſury. Item, In the ſame Parliament Petition was made, That againſt the horrible vice of Uſury, then termed ſhifts, practiſed as well by the Clergy as Laity, the Order made by John Notte, late Mayor of London, might be executed throughout the Realm.

Ex tit. 29. Moreover, in the 15*th* year of the Reign of the foreſaid King, it was accorded, for that Sir William Brian Knight, had purchaſed from Rome a Bull directed from the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, to Excommunicate ſuch as had broken up his Houſe, and had taken away divers Letters, Priviledges and Charters; the ſame Bull, being read in the Parliament Houſe, was adjudged prejudicial to the Kings Crown, and in derogation of the Laws; for the which he was by the King, and aſſent of the Lords, committed to the Tower, there to remain at the Kings will and pleaſure.

Vide articulum tit. 29. In the ſaid Parliament alſo, William Archbiſhop of Canterbury maketh his Proteſtation in the open Parliament, ſaying, That the Pope ought not to excommunicate any Biſhop, or to intermeddle, for, or touching any preſentment to any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity recorded in any the Kings Courts. He further proteſted, that the Pope ought to make no tranſlation to any Biſhoprick within the Realm againſt the Kings will; for that the ſame was to the deſtruction of the Realm and Crown of England, which hath alway been ſo free, as the ſame hath had none earthly Sovereign, but hath been ſubject to God only, in all things touching regalities, and to none other. The which Proteſtation he prayed might be entred.

Ex An. 17. Reg. Ric. 2. Tit. 33. In the 17*th* year of the Reign of the King aforeſaid, it was deſired that remedy might be had againſt ſuch religious perſons as cauſed their villains or underlings to marry free women inheritable, whereby the Lands came to thoſe religious mens hands by colluſion.

Item, That ſufficient perſons might be preſented to Benefices, who may do well on the ſame, ſo as their ſtock for want thereof do not periſh.

Item, That remedy might be had againſt the Abbots of Colcheſter and Abington, who in the Towns of Colcheſter and Colnham claim to have Sanctuary.

Ex An. 20. Reg. Ric. 2. Tit. 22. To come to the Parliament holden in the 20th year of this Kings Reign; we find moreover in the ſaid Rolls, how that the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York for themſelves, and the Clergy of their Provinces, declared to the King in open Parliament, That (foraſmuch as they were ſworn to the Pope and See of Rome) if any thing were in the Parliament attempted in reſtraint of the ſame, they would in no wiſe aſſent thereto, but verily withſtand the ſame, the which their Proteſtation they require to be enrolled.

Here the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſpeeth contrary to himſelf.

Tit. 32. Upon the Petition of the begging Friers, there at large it was Enacted, That none of that Order ſhould paſs over the Seas without licence of his Sovereign, nor that he ſhould take upon him any order of Mr. of Divinity, unleſs he were firſt appoſed in his Chapter provincial, on pain to be put out of the King's protection.

Tit. 36. Item, That the Kings Officers, for making Arreſts or Attachments in Churchyards, are therefore excommunicated, whereof remedy was required.

Ex 21. An. Reg. Ric. 2. pl. 15. In the 21ſt year of the ſame Kings Reign the Parliament being holden at Weſtminſter, we find how the Commons in full Parliament, accuſed Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for that he as Chancellor procured, and as chief doer executed the ſame Commiſſion, made traiterouſly in the tenth year of the King. And alſo, That he the ſaid Archbiſhop procured the Duke of Glocester, and the Earls of Arundel and Warwick, to incroach to themſelves Royal Power, and to judge to death Simon de Burley, and Sir John Berners without the Kings aſſent. Whereupon the Commons required that the ſame Archbiſhop might reſt under ſafe keeping; whereunto, for that the ſame Impeachments touched ſo great a perſon, they would be adviſed. {KING Ric. 2.}

Item, The 25th day of September, the Commons prayed Ex the King to give Judgment againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, according to his deſerts. The King anſwered, that privately the ſaid Archbiſhop had confeſſed to him, how he miſtook himſelf in the ſaid Commiſſion, and therefore ſubmitted himſelf to the Kings mercy: Wherefore the Kings, Lords, and Sir Thomas Percy, Proctor for the Clergy, adjudged the fact of the ſaid Archbiſhop to be Treaſon, and himſelf a Traitor; and therefore it was ordered, that the ſaid Archbiſhop ſhould be baniſhed, his Temporalties ſeized, his Lands and Goods forfeited, as well in uſe, as in poſſeſſion. Tho. Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury proved a Traitor by Parliament.

The King further preſcribed, that the ſaid Archbiſhop Ex tit. 17 ſhould take his paſſing on Friday, within ſix Weeks of Michaelmas, at Dover, towards the parts of France.

Thus having hitherto ſufficiently touched and comprehended ſuch things as have happened in the Reign of this King, neceſſary for the Church to know, by courſe of ſtory; we come now to the 22d year of K. Richard's Reign which is the year of our Lord 1399. In the which year happened the ſtrange and alſo lamentable depoſing of this K. Richard the 2d aforeſaid from his Kingly Scepter. Strange, for that the like example hath not often been ſeen in Seats Royal. Lamentable, for that it cannot be but grievous to any good mans heart, to ſee him either ſo to deſerve, if he were juſtly depoſed, or if he were unjuſtly deprived, to ſee the Kingly Title there not able to hold his right, where by force it is compelled to give place to might. {Ann. 1399} The depoſing of K. Richard the ſecond. The ſtory ſtrange and lamentable.

As concerning the order and proceſs of whoſe depoſing, for that it neither is greatly pertinent to my argument, and is ſufficiently contained in Robert Fabian, and in the Kings Records in the Chronicle of St. Albans, and in other Hiſtories at large, it were here tedious and ſuperfluous to intermeddle with repeating thereof. What were the conditions and properties of this King, partly before hath been touched. In whom as ſome good vertues may be noted, ſo alſo ſome vices may ſeem to be mixed withal. But eſpecially this, that he ſtarting out of the ſteps of his Progenitors, ceaſed to take part with them, which took part with the Goſpel: Whereupon it ſo fell, not by the blind Wheel of Fortune, but by the ſecret hand of him which directeth all eſtates, that as he firſt began to forſake the maintaining of the Goſpel of God, ſo the Lord began to forſake him. And where the protection of God beginneth to fail, there can lack no cauſes to be charged withal, whom God once giveth over to mans puniſhment. So that to me, conſidering the whole life and trade of this Prince, among all other cauſes alledged in ſtories againſt him, none ſeemeth ſo much to be weighed of us, or more hurtful to him than this forſaking of the Lord and his Word. Although to ſuch as liſt more to be certified in other cauſes concurring withal, many and ſundry defects in that King may appear in ſtories, to the number of thirty three Articles alledged, or forced rather againſt him. Vices and vertues mixt in K. Richard. What it is to forſake the maintenance of the Goſ

In which as I cannot deny, but that he was worthy of much blame; ſo to be diſplaced therefore from his Regal Seat, and rightful ſtate of the Crown, it may be thought perhaps the cauſes not to be ſo rare, or ſo material in a Prince, which either could or elſe would have ſerved; had not he given over before to ſerve the Lord and his Word, chuſing rather to ſerve the humor of the Pope and bloudy Prelates, than to further the Lords proceedings in preaching of his Word. And then, as I ſaid, how can enemies lack where God ſtandeth not to friend? or what cauſe can be ſo little, which is not able enough to caſt down, where the Lords arm is ſhortned to ſuſtain? Wherefore it is a point of principal wiſdom in a Prince, not to forget, that as he ſtandeth always in need of Gods helping hand, ſo, always he have the diſcipline and fear of him before his eyes, according to the counſel of the godly King David, Pſal. 2. Articles 33. laid againſt K. Richard. Gods ſpecial favour neceſſary for Princes. Pſalm 2.

KING Ric.2.

And thus much touching the time and race of this King Richard, with the tragical ſtory of his depoſing. The order and manner whereof purpoſely I pretermit, only contented briefly to lay together a few ſpecial things done before his fall, ſuch as may be ſufficient, in a brief ſumm, both to ſatisfie the Reader inquiſitive of ſuch ſtories, and alſo to forewarn other Princes to beware of the like dangers. In ſuch as write the life and acts of this Prince, thus I read of him reported, that he was much inclined to the favouring and advancing of certain perſons about him, and ruled all by their counſel, which were then greatly abhorred and hated in the Realm: The Names of whom were Robert Vere Earl of Oxford, whom the King made Duke of Ireland, Alexander Nevil Archbiſhop of York, Michael de la Pool Earl of Suffolk, Robert Triſilian Lord Chief Juſtice, Nicholas Brembre, with other.

The King led with evil counſel.

Theſe men, being hated and diſdained of divers of the Nobles, and of the Commons, the King alſo by favouring them, was leſs favoured himſelf. Inſomuch, that the Duke of Gloceſter, named Thomas Woodſtock the Kings Uncle, with the Earl of Warwick, and Earl of Darby, ſtood up in Arms againſt thoſe counſellers and abuſers (as they named them) of the King. Inſomuch that the King for fear was conſtrained againſt his mind to remove out of his Court, Alexander Nevil Archbiſhop of York, John Ford Biſhop of Dureſme, Frier Thomas Ruſhoke Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Kings Confeſſor, with the Lord Haringworth, Lord Burnel, and Bemond, Lord Vere, and divers other.

The Nobles up in arms againſt certain of the Kings Counſellers.

And furthermore, in the Parliament the ſame year following, Robert Triſilian the Juſtice was hanged and drawn. Alſo Nicholas Brembre Knight, James Salisbury alſo; and James Barneſe both Knights, John Bewcamp the Kings Steward, and John Blake Eſquire in like manner: All theſe by the counſel of the Lords being caſt in the Parliament againſt the Kings mind, did ſuffer, which was in the 11th of his Reign, he being yet under governours; but conſequently after the ſame, the King claiming his own liberty, being come to the age of twenty, began to take more upon him. And this was one thing that ſtirred up the Kings ſtomach againſt the Nobles. Ex Chron. Alban.

Ex Chron. D. Alban.

The ſecond preparative to the Kings depoſing.

2. Another thing that ſtirred him up as much againſt the Londoners, was this, for that he would have borrowed of them a Thouſand pound, and they denied him, to their double and treble diſadvantage, as after enſued upon it. Ibidem. Another occaſion, beſides this between the King and the Londoners happened thus, by reaſon of one of the Biſhop of Saliſburys ſervants, named Roman, and a Bakers man; who then carrying a Basket of Horſebread in in Fleetſtreet, the foreſaid Roman took a Horſe-loaf out of the Basket. The Baker asking him why he did ſo, the Biſhops luſty Yeoman turned back again and brake his head; whereupon the neighbours came out, and would have arreſted this Roman, but he eſcaped away unto the Biſhops Houſe. Then the Conſtable would have had him out; but the Biſhops men ſhut faſt the Gates, that they ſhould not approach, thus much people gathered together, threatning to burſt open the gates, and fire the houſe, unleſs they had the foreſaid party to them brought out. Whereby much ado there was, till at length the Mayor and Sheriffs came and quieted the rage of the Commons, and ſent every man home to his houſe, charging them to keep peace. Here as yet was no great harm done, but if the Biſhop for his part had been quiet, and had not ſtirred the coals of debate, which were well ſlacked already, all had been ended without further perturbation. But the ſtomach of the Biſhop not yet digeſted (although his man had done the wrong) having no great cauſe ſo to do, whoſe name was John Waltam, being then Treaſurer of England, went to Thomas Arundel, Archbiſhop the ſame time of York, and Lord Chancellor of England, to complain of the Londoners. Where is to be noted, or rather revealed, by the way, a privy myſtery, which although it be not in this ſtory touched of the Writers, yet it touched the hearts of the Biſhops not a little. For the Londoners at that time were notoriouſly known to be favourers of Wickliff's ſide, as partly before this is to be ſeen, and in the ſtory of S. Albans more plainly doth appear: Where the Author of the ſaid Hiſtory, writing upon the 15th year of Kings Richard's Reign, reporteth in theſe words of the Londoners, that they were Male creduli in Deum & traditiones

Joh. Waltam Biſhop of Saliſbury Makebate.

Tho. Arundel Archbiſhop of York.

Londoners favourers of Wickliffs Doctrine.

Ex hiſtor. D. Albani, cujus ſic habet initium Anno gratiæ, &c.

avitæ, Lollardorum ſuſtentatores, religioſorum detractatores, decimarum detentores, & communis vulgi depauperatores, &c. i. Not right believers in God, nor in the traditions of their forefathers, ſuſtainers of the Lollards, depravers of religious men, withholders of Tithes, and impoveriſhers of the common people, &c.

Thus the Londoners, being noted and ſuſpected of the Biſhops, were the more maliced (no doubt therefore) of the ſaid Biſhops which were the more ready to find and take all occaſions to work againſt them, as by their doing herein may well appear. For the Biſhop of Saliſbury, and Archbiſhop of York, having no greater matter againſt them, than was declared, with a grievous complaint went to the King, complaining of the Mayor and Sheriffs of London. What treſpaſs the Mayor and Sheriffs had done, as ye have heard before, ſo may you judge. Now what followed after let us hear. The King, incenſed not a little, with the complaint of the Biſhops, conceived eſtſoons againſt the Mayor and Sheriffs, and againſt the whole City of London, a great ſtomach: Inſomuch, that the Mayor and both the Sheriffs were ſent for, and removed from their Office. Sir Edward Darlington then was made Warden and Governour of the City; who alſo, for his gentleneſs ſhewed to the Citizens, was alſo depoſed, and another named Sir Baldwin Radington, placed in that room. Moreover, ſo much grew the Kings diſpleaſure againſt the City, that he alſo removed from London the Courts, and Terms to be kept at York, that is to ſay, the Chancery, the Eſchequer, the Kings-Bench, the Hamper, and the Common Pleas; where the ſame continued from Midſummer till Chriſtmas, to the great decay of the City of London; which was Anno 1393.

Londoners complained of to the King by the Biſhops. Brati pacifici.

The Court removed from London to York.

3. Another great cauſe, which purchaſed the King much evil will amongſt his Subjects, was the ſecret murthering of his own Uncle named Thomas Woodſtock, Duke of Gloceſter, of whom mention was made before; where was declared, how the ſaid Duke, with the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Warwick, and the Earl of Darby, with other, were up in Armour againſt certain wicked Counſellors about the King. Whereupon the King, watching afterward his time, came into Chelmsford, and ſo to the place near by, where the Duke lay; where with his own hands he arreſted the ſaid Duke his Uncle, and ſent him down by water immediately to Calis; and there, through the Kings commandment, by ſecret mans he was put to death, being ſtrangled under a Featherbed, the Earl Marſhal being then the Keeper of Calis, whereby great indignation roſe in many mens hearts againſt the King.

The 3d preparative to the Kings depoſing.

The King arreſting his own Uncle, cauſed him to be put wrongfully to death.

With the ſame Duke of Gloceſter alſo, about the ſame time, was arreſted and impriſoned the Earl of Warwick, and the Earl of Arundel, who, being condemned by Parliament, were then executed, whereby great grudge and great indignation roſe in the hearts of many againſt the King. An. 1397.

Fourthly, to omit here the blank Charts ſent over all the Land by the King; and how the King was ſaid to let out his Realm to farm: Over and beſide all theſe above premiſed, fell another matter, which was the principal occaſion of this miſchief; The baniſhment, I mean, of Henry Earl of Darby, made Duke of Hereford a little before, being Son of John of Gaunt the Duke of Lancaſter (who died ſhortly after the baniſhment of his Son, and lieth buried in the Church of S. Paul in London) and the Duke of Northfolk; who was before Earl of Nottingham, and after by this King made Duke of Northfolk the year before. At which time the King made five Dukes, a Marqueſs, and four Earls, to wit, Duke of Hereford, which was before Earl of Darby; Duke of Awmerle, which was before Earl of Rutland; Duke of Southrey, who was before Earl of Kent; Duke of Exeter, which was before Earl of Huntington; and this Duke of Northfolk, being before Earl of Nottingham, as is aforeſaid, &c. The occaſion of baniſhing theſe foreſaid Dukes was this.

Earl of Nottingham made Duke of Northfolk.

About this preſent time the Duke of Hereford did appeach the Duke of Northfolk upon certain words to be ſpoken againſt the King: whereupon caſting their Gloves one againſt the other, they appointed to fight out the quarrel, a day being for the ſame appointed at Coventry. But the King took up the matter in his own hands, baniſhing the Duke of Northfolk for ever, which after died at Venice;

The Duke of Northfolk and Duke of Hereford baniſhed.

Venice; and the other Duke, which was the Duke of Hereford, for 10 years. Beſide theſe, alſo was exiled into France Tho. Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury by Act of Parliament, in the ſame year, for points of Treaſon, as ye have heard before expreſſed, pag. 583. col. 2. All which turned to the great inconvenience of this King, as in the event following may appear.

Tho. Arundel baniſhed as a Traitor by Parliament.

Theſe cauſes and preparatives thus premiſed, it followed the year after, which was Anno 1399. and laſt year of this King, that the King, upon certain affairs to be done, took his Voyage into Ireland. In which mean time Henry of Bollingbroke, Earl of Darby, and Duke of Hereford, and with him the foreſaid Archbiſhop Thomas Arundel (which before were both exiled) returning out of France to Calis, came into England, challenging the Dukedom of Lancaſter, after the death of his Father. With them alſo came the Son and Heir of the Earl of Arundel, being yet but young. Theſe together ſetting out of Calis, arrived at Ravenſpur in the North. At the knowledge whereof much people gathered unto them.

{Anno 1399.}

In this mean time, as the Duke was hovering on the Sea to enter the Land, Lord Edmund Duke of York, the Kings Uncle, to whom the King committed the cuſtody of this Realm (having intelligence thereof) called to him the Biſhop of Chicheſter, named Edmund Stafford, Chancellor of the Realm, and William Scrope, Earl of Wilſhire Lord Treaſurer, alſo John Buſhey, William Bagot, Henry Grene, and John Ruſchel, with divers other, conſulting with them what was beſt in that caſe to be done. Who then gave their advice (whether wilful or unskilful, it is not known, but very unfruitful) that he ſhould leave London, and go to St. Albans, there to wait for more ſtrength, able to encounter with the Duke. But as the people out of divers quarters reſorted thither, many of them proteſted that they would do nothing to the harm and prejudice of the Duke of Lancaſter, who, they ſaid, was unjuſtly expulſed. The reſt of the Council John Buſhey, William Bagot, Henry Grene, William Scrope Treaſurer, hearing and underſtanding how the Commons were minded to joyn with the Duke of Hereford, left the Duke of York, and the Lord Chancellor, and fled to the Caſtle of Briſtow. Where it is to be underſtood, that theſe four were they, to whom the common fame ran, that the King had let out his Realm to farm; and were ſo hated of the people, that it is to be thought, that for the hatred of them more than for the King, this commotion was among the people.

What evil company doth about a King.

As this broil was in England, the noiſe thereof ſounding to the Kings ears, being then in Ireland, for haſty ſpeed of returning into England, he left in Ireland both his buſineſs, and moſt of his Ordinance alſo behind him; And ſo paſſing the Seas, landed at Milford Haven, not daring, as it ſeemed, to come to London.

K. Richard returneth from Ireland to Milford haven.

On the contrary ſide, unto Henry Duke of Hereford, being landed, as is ſaid, in the North, came the Earl of Northumberland, Lord Henry Percy, and Henry his Son, the Earl of Weſtmerland, Lord Radulph Nevil, and other Lords more to a great number, ſo that the multitude roſe to 60000 able Soldiers. Who, firſt making toward the Caſtle of Briſtow, took the foreſaid Buſhey, Grene, Scrope and Bagot; of whom three incontinently were beheaded, Bagot eſcaped away, and fled away to Ireland.

K. Richard forſaken of his Subjects. What it is for a Prince to be beloved of his Subjects.

The King in this mean while, lying about Wales, deſtitute and deſolate, without comfort or counſel; who neither durſt come to London, neither would any man come to him; and perceiving moreover, the Commons, that were up in ſuch a great power againſt him, would rather die, than give over that they had begun, for fear of themſelves; ſeeing therefore no other remedy, called to him Lord T. Percy Earl of Worceſter, and Steward of his Houſhold, willing him, with other of his Family, to provide for themſelves in time. Who then openly in the Hall brake his white Rod before them all, commanding every Man to ſhift for himſelf. Although Fabian and ſome other ſay, that he did this of his own accord, contrary to his Allegiance. The King, compaſſed on every ſide with miſeries, ſhifted from place to place, the Duke ſtill following him; till at length, being at the Caſtle of Coneway, the King deſired to talk with Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop, and the Earl of Northumberland; to whom he declared, That he would reſign up his Crown, in condition that an honourable living might be for him provided, and life promiſed to eight perſons, ſuch as he would name. Which being granted and ratified, but not performed, he came to the Caſtle of Flint, where (after talk had with the Duke of Lancaſter) he was brought the ſame night by the Duke and his Army to Cheſter, and from thence was conveyed ſecretly into the Tower, there to be kept till the next Parliament. By the way as he came near to London, divers evil diſpoſed men of the City being warned thereof, gathered themſelves, thinking to have ſlain him, for the great cruelty he had uſed before toward the City; but by the policies of the Mayor and Rulers of the City, the madneſs of the people was ſtayed. Not long after followed the Duke, and alſo began the Parliament. In which Parliament the Earl of Northumberland, with many other Earls and Lords were ſent to the King in the Tower, to take of him a full reſignation, according to his former promiſe, and ſo they did. This done, divers Accuſations and Articles were laid and engroſſed againſt the ſaid King, to the number of thirty three, ſome ſay thirty eight, which for the matter not greatly material in them contained, I overpaſs. And the next year after he was had to Pomfret Caſtle, and there famiſhed to death.

{KING Hen. 4.}

The King committed to the Tower.

King HENRY the Fourth.

AND thus King Richard by common aſſent being depoſed from his rightful Crown, the Duke of Lancaſter was led by Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop to the Seat Royal; who there ſtanding up, and croſſing himſelf on the forehead and the breaſt, ſpake in words as followeth:

The words of Henry Duke, claiming the Crown.

In the Name of God, Amen. I Henry of Lancaſter, claim the Realm of England and the Crown, with all the appurtenances, as I that am deſcended by right line of the blood, coming from that good Lord King Henry the Third. And through the right that God of his grace hath ſent to me, with the help of my kin and of my friends to recover the ſame, which was in point to be undone for default of good governance, and due juſtice, &c.

¶ After which words the Archbiſhop, asking the aſſent of the people, being joyful of their new King, took the Duke by the hand, and placed him in the Kingly Throne, which was An. 1399. and ſhortly after, by the foreſaid Archbiſhop, he was Crowned alſo for King of England. Ex Chron. D. Alban.

King Henry the fourth, inthroned and crowned.

The next year after followed a Parliament holden at Weſtminſter; in which Parliament one William Sautre, a good man and a faithful Prieſt, inflamed with zeal of true Religion, required he might be heard for the commodity of the whole Realm. But the matter being ſmelt before by the Biſhop, they obtained that the matter ſhould be referred to the Convocation; where the ſaid William Sautre being brought before the Biſhops and Notaries thereunto appointed, the Convocation was deferred to the Saturday next enſuing.

{Ann. 1400.} W. Sautre Martyr.

W. Sautre brought before the Biſhops in the Convocation.

When Saturday was come, that is to ſay, the 12*th* day of February, Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the preſence of his Council Provincial, being aſſembled in the ſaid Chapter-houſe, againſt one Sir William Sautre, otherwiſe called Chatris Chaplain, perſonally then and there appearing by the commandment of the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury objected; that the ſaid Sir William before the Biſhop of Norwich had once renounced and abjured divers and ſundry Concluſions heretical and erroneous; and that after ſuch Abjuration made, he publickly and privily held, taught and preached the ſame Concluſions, or elſe ſuch like, diſagreeing to the Catholick faith, and to the great peril, and pernicious example of others. And after this he cauſed ſuch like Concluſions, holden and preached, as is ſaid, by the ſaid Sir William without renunciation, then and there to be read unto the ſaid Archbiſhop, by Mr. Robert Hall, Chancellor unto the ſaid Biſhop, in a certain Scrole written, in tenor of words as followeth.

K. Richard agreed to reſign his Crown.

Sir William Chatris, otherwiſe called Sautre, Pariſh Prieſt of the Church St. Scithe the Virgin in London, publickly and privily doth hold theſe Concluſions under written.

¶ Imprimis,

KING Hen. 4 The Articles of W. Sautre.

¶ Imprimis, He ſaith, That he will not worſhip the Croſs on which Chriſt ſuffered, but only Chriſt that ſuffered upon the Croſs.

2. Item, That he would ſooner worſhip a temporal King, than the foreſaid woodden Croſs.

3. Item, That he would rather worſhip the bodies of the Saints, than the very Croſs of Chriſt on which he hung, if it were before him.

4. Item, That he would rather worſhip a man truly contrite, than the Croſs of Chriſt.

5. Item, That he is bound rather to worſhip a Man that is predeſtinate, than an Angel of God.

6. Item, That if any Man would viſit the Monuments of Peter and Paul, or go on pilgrimage to the Tomb of Saint Thomas, or elſe any whither elſe, for the obtaining of any temporal benefit; he is not bound to keep his vow, but he may diſtribute the expences of his Vow, upon the alms of the poor.

7. Item, That every Prieſt and Deacon is more bound to preach the Word of God, than to ſay the Canonical hours.

8. Item, That after the pronouncing of the Sacramental words of the body of Chriſt, the bread remaineth of the ſame nature that it was before, neither doth it ceaſe to be bread.

To which Concluſions or Articles being thus read, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury required the ſame Sir William to anſwer. And then the ſaid William asked a Copy of ſuch Articles or Concluſions, and a competent ſpace to anſwer unto the ſame. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop commanded a Copy of ſuch Articles or Concluſions to be delivered then and there unto the ſaid Sir William, aſſigning the Thurſday then next enſuing to him to deliberate and make anſwer in. When Thurſday the ſaid day of appearance was come, Maſter Nicholas Riſhton, auditor of the cauſes and buſineſs belonging to the ſaid Archbiſhop (then being in the Parliament Houſe at Weſtminſter, otherwiſe let) continued the ſaid Convocation with all matters riſing, depending, and appertinent thereunto, by commandment of the ſaid Biſhop, until the next morrow at eight of the Clock. When the morrow came, being Friday, the foreſaid Sir William Sautre, in the Chapter-houſe before the ſaid Biſhop and his Council Provincial then and there aſſembled, making his perſonal appearance, exhibited a certain Scrole, containing the Anſwers unto certain Articles or Concluſions given unto him, as is aforeſaid, by the ſaid Biſhop; and ſaid, that unto the foreſaid Archbiſhop he delivered the ſame as his anſwer in that behalf, under the tenor of ſuch words as follow.

The anſwer of W. Sautre given in, in Writing.

I William Sautre, Prieſt unworthy, ſay and anſwer, that I will not, nor intend not to worſhip the Croſs whereon Chriſt was crucified, but only Chriſt that ſuffered upon the Croſs; ſo underſtanding me, That I will not worſhip the material Croſs, or the groſs corporal matter: yet notwithſtanding I will worſhip the ſame as a ſign, token and memorial of the Paſſion of Chriſt, Adoratione vicaria. And that I will rather worſhip a temporal King, than the foreſaid woodden Croſs, and the material ſubſtance of the ſame. And that, I will rather worſhip the bodies of Saints, than the very Croſs of Chriſt whereon he hung; with this addition, that if the very ſame Croſs were afore me, as touching the material ſubſtance. And alſo that I will rather worſhip a man truly confeſſed and penitent, than the Croſs on which Chriſt hung, as touching the material ſubſtance.

The Croſs materially, not to be worſhipped

And that alſo I am bound, and will rather worſhip him whom I know to be predeſtinate, truly confeſſed and contrite than an Angel of God; for that the one is a man of the ſame nature with the humanity of Chriſt, and ſo is not a bleſſed Angel. Notwithſtanding I will worſhip both of them, according as the will of God is I ſhould.

A man predeſtinate rather to be worſhipped than an Angel: that is to ſay, neither can be worſhipped without idolatry.

Alſo, That if any Man hath made a Vow to viſit the Shrines of the Apoſtles Peter and Paul, or to go on Pilgrimage unto S. Thomas Tomb, or any whither elſe, to obtain any temporal benefit or commodity; he is not bound ſimply to keep his Vow upon the neceſſity of Salvation; but he may give the expences of his Vow in alms amongſt the poor, by the prudent counſel of his ſuperiour, as I ſuppoſe.

And alſo I ſay, that every Deacon and Prieſt is more bound to preach the Word of God, than to ſay the Canonical hours, according to the primitive order of the Church.

Alſo, Touching the interrogation of the Sacrament of the Altar, I ſay, that after the pronouncing of the Sacramental words of the body of Chriſt, there ceaſeth not to be very bread ſimply, but remains bread, holy, true, and the bread of life; and I believe the ſaid Sacrament to be the very body of Chriſt, after the pronouncing of the Sacramental words.

How he reſteth in the Sacrament.

When all theſe anſwers were throughly by Maſter Robert Hall directly and publickly there read the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury inquired of the ſaid Sir William, whether he had abjured the foreſaid Hereſies and Errors objected againſt him, as before is ſaid, before the Biſhop of Norwich, or not; or elſe had revoked and renounced the ſaid or ſuch like Concluſions or Articles, or not? To which he anſwered and affirmed that he had not. And then conſequently (all other Articles, Concluſions and Anſwers above written immediately omitted) the ſaid Archbiſhop examined the ſame Sir William Sautre, eſpecially upon the Sacrament of the Altar.

Firſt, Whether in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the pronouncing of the Sacramental words, remaineth very material bread or not? Unto which interrogation, the ſame Sir William ſomewhat waveringly ſaid, and anſwered, that he knew not that. Notwithſtanding he ſaid, that there was very bread, becauſe it was the bread of life which came down from Heaven.

After that the ſaid Archbiſhop demanded of him, whether in the Sacrament after the ſacramental words, rightly pronounced of the Prieſt, the ſame bread remaineth, which did before the words pronounced, or not. And to this queſtion the foreſaid William anſwered in like manner as before, ſaying, that there was bread, holy, true, and the bread of life, &c.

After that, the foreſaid Archbiſhop asked him, whether the ſame material bread before Conſecration, by the ſacramental words of the Prieſt rightly pronounced, be tranſubſtantiated from the nature of bread into the very body of Chriſt, or not? Whereunto Sir William ſaid, that he knew not what that matter meant.

The Convocation continued. W. Sautre again examined.

And then the ſaid Archbiſhop aſſigned unto the ſaid Sir William time to deliberate, and more fully to make his anſwer till the next day; and continued this Convocation then and there till the morrow. Which morrow, to wit, the 19th day of February, being come, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the ſaid Chapter-houſe of Saint Paul in London, before his Council Provincial then and there aſſembled, eſpecially asked and examined the ſame Sir W. Sautre there perſonally preſent upon the Sacrament of the Altar, as before. And the ſame Sir William, again, in like manner, as before, anſwered.

After this, amongſt other things, the ſaid Biſhop demanded of the ſame William, if the ſame material bread being upon the Altar, after the ſacramental words being of the Prieſt rightly pronounced, is tranſubſtantiated into the very body of Chriſt or not? And the ſaid Sir William ſaid, he underſtood not what he meant.

Then the ſaid Archbiſhop demanded, whether that material bread being round and white, prepared and diſpoſed for the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt upon the Altar, wanting nothing that is meet and requiſite thereunto, by the vertue of the ſacramental words being of the Prieſt rightly pronounced, be altered and changed into the very body of Chriſt, and ceaſeth any more to be material and very bread or not? Then the ſaid Sir William, deridingly anſwering, ſaid, he could not tell.

Then conſequently, the ſaid Archb. demanded, whether he would ſtand to the determination of the holy Church or not, which affirmeth, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration being rightly pronounced of the Prieſt, the ſame bread, which before in nature was bread, ceaſeth any more to be bread? To this interrogation the ſaid Sir William ſaid, That he would ſtand to the determination of the Church, where ſuch determination was not contrary to the will of God.

Determination of the Church ſo to be followed as it is joyned to the will of God.

This done he demanded of him again, what his judgment was concerning the Sacrament of the Altar: Who ſaid and affirmed, That after the words of Conſecration, by the Prieſt duly pronounced, remained very bread, and the ſame bread which was before the words ſpoken. And this

Examination

Examination about the Sacrament, laſted from 8 of the Clock of the ſame day, until 11 of the Clock, or thereabouts; inſomuch that during all this time the foreſaid William would no otherwiſe anſwer, neither yet touching the ſame Sacrament receive Catholick information, according to the inſtitution of the Popes Church, and his Chriſtian Faith. Wherefore the ſaid Canterbury, by the counſel and aſſent of his whole Covent then and there preſent, did promulgate and give ſentence, by the mouth of Robert Hall, againſt the ſame Sir William Sautre (being perſonally preſent, and refuſing to revoke his Hereſies, that is to ſay, his true Doctrine, but conſtantly defended the ſame) under the tenor of words as followeth:

The ſentence againſt Will. Sautre.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas by the grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of England, and Legate of the See Apoſtolical, by the authority of God Almighty, and bleſſed St. Peter and Paul, and of holy Church, and by our own authority, ſitting for Tribunal or chief Judge, having God alone before our eyes, by the counſel and conſent of the whole Clergy our fellow brethren and Suffragans, aſſiſtants unto us in this preſent Council Provincial, by this our ſentence definitive do pronounce, decree and declare by theſe preſents, thee William Sautre, otherwiſe called Chawtrey, Pariſh Prieſt pretenſed, perſonally appearing before us, in and upon the crime of Hereſie, judicially and lawfully convict, as an Heretick, and as an Hertick to be puniſhed.

Which ſentence definitive being thus read, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury continued in the ſame Provincial Council till Wedneſday next and immediately enſuing, to wit, the 24*th* day of the ſame Month of February, which being expired, the Biſhop of Norwich, according to the commandment of the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, preſented unto the foreſaid William Sautre by a certain friend of his, being preſent at the ſame Council, a certain Proceſs incloſed and ſealed with his Seal, giving the names of credible witneſſes ſealed with their ſeals, the tenor whereof followeth in this wiſe:

A certain proceſs againſt Will. Sautre preſented by the Biſhop of Norwich.

Memorandum, That upon the laſt day of April, in the year of our Lord 1399. in the 7. Indiction, and 10 year of the Papacy of Pope Boniface the 2. in a certain Chamber within the Manor Houſe of the ſaid Biſhop of Norwich, at South Helingham (where the Regiſter of the ſaid Biſhop is kept) before the 9*th* hour, in a certain Chappel within the ſaid Manor ſituate, and the firſt day of May then next and immediately inſuing, in the foreſaid Chamber Sir W. Chawtris, Pariſh Prieſt of the Church of S. Margaret in the Town of Lin, appeared before the Biſhop of Norwich, in the preſence of John de Derlington, Archdeacon of Norwich, Doctor of the Decrees, Frier Walter Diſſe, and John Rikinghal, Profeſſors in Divinity, William Carlton, Doctor of both Laws, and William Friſeby, with Hugh Bridham, Publick Notaries, and there publickly affirmed and held the Concluſions, as before is ſpecified.

All and ſingular the premiſſes the foreſaid William affirmeth upon mature deliberation. And afterwards, to wit, the 19*th* day of May in the year, Indiction and Papacy aforeſaid, in the Chappel within the Manor houſe of the ſaid Henry Biſhop of Norwich ſituate at South Helingham, the foreſaid Sir William revoked and renounced all and ſingular the foreſaid his Concluſions; abjuring and correcting all ſuch Hereſies and Errors, taking his Oath upon a Book before the foreſaid Henry the Biſhop of Norwich, that from that time forward he would never preach, affirm nor hold, privily nor apertly, the foreſaid Concluſions; and that he would pronounce, according to the appointment of the ſaid Biſhop, the foreſaid Concluſions to be erroneous and hereſies in the Pariſh Churches of Lin, and Timey, and in other places at the aſſignment of the ſaid Biſhop; and further ſware, that he would ſtand to the ordinance of the ſaid Biſhop touching the premiſſes, in the preſence of the diſcreet and worſhipful men afore-recited, with divers other more.

As concerning the firſt Concluſion, that he ſaid he would not worſhip the Croſs, &c. he confeſſed himſelf to have erred, and that the Article was erroneous, and ſubmitted himſelf. And as touching the ſecond Article, that he ſaid he would rather worſhip a King, &c. he confeſſed himſelf to have erred, and the Article to be erroneous, and ſubmitted himſelf, and ſo forth of all the reſt.

Then next after this, upon the 25*th* day of May in the year of our Lord aforeſaid, in the Church-yard of the Chappel of St. James within the Town of Lin, the foreſaid William, in preſence of the foreſaid Biſhop and Clergy, and the people of the ſaid Town of Lin ſtanding round about, publickly declared in the Engliſh Tongue, the foreſaid Concluſions to be erroneous and Hereſies, as was contained in a certain Scrole. And after this, the 26*th* day of May in the year aboveſaid, in the Church of the Hoſpital of S. Johns in the Town of Lin, the ſaid Sir William, before the ſaid Biſhop ſitting as judge, ſware and took his Oath upon the holy Evangeliſts, that he would never after that time preach openly and publickly the foreſaid Concluſions, nor would hear the confeſſions of any of the Subjects of his Dioceſs of Norwich, without the ſpecial licence of the ſaid Biſhop, &c. In the preſence of Frier John Smermen, Mr. John Rikinghal Doctor of Divinity, William Carlton Doctor of both Laws, and Thomas Bulton Officer of the liberty of Lin aforeſaid, with divers others.

The tenor of the Scrole and Recantation.

IMprimis, Touching the firſt and ſecond, where I ſaid, That I would adore rather a temporal Prince, and the lively bodies of the Saints, than the woodden Croſs whereupon the Lord did hang, I do revoke and recant the ſame, as being therein deceived.

To this I ſay, that the Article is falſe and erroneous, and by falſe information I held it; the which I renounce and ask forgiveneſs thereof, and ſay, that it is a precious Relick, and that I ſhall hold it while I live, and that I ſwear here.

I know well that I erred wrongfully by falſe information; for I wot well, that a Deacon or a Prieſt is more bound to ſay his Mattens and hours, than to preach; for thereto he is bounden by right; wherefore I ſubmit me, &c.

Touching that Article, I know right well that I erred by falſe information. Wherefore I ask forgiveneſs.

As concerning Vows, I ſay that opinion is falſe and erroneous, and by falſe information I held it; for a man is holden to hold his Vow, &c.

To the 7th Article I ſay, that I did it by authority of Prieſthood, wherethrough I knowledge well that I gave guilt and treſpaſſed; wherefore I ſubmit me to God and to holy Church, and to you father, ſwearing that I ſhall never hold it more.

To the 8th I ſay, that I held it by falſe and wrong information. But now I know well that it is Hereſie, and that bread, anon as the word of the Sacrament is ſaid, is no longer bread material, but that it is turned into very Chriſts body; and that I ſwear here.

I ſay, that this is falſe and erroneous, &c.

I ſay as I ſaid, &c.

This being done the 22d of February aforeſaid, in the year of our Lord 1400. in the Chapter houſe of S. Paul in London aforeſaid; the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the Convocation of his Prelates, and Clergy, and ſuch like men there being preſent, cauſed the fore-recited proceſs of the Biſhop of Norwich, to be read openly and publickly to Sir William Sautre, otherwiſe called Chautris. And afterward he asked the ſaid Sir William, whether he plainly underſtood and knew ſuch Proceſs and the contents within the ſame; and he ſaid, yea. And further he demanded of him, if he would or could ſay or object any thing againſt the Proceſs, and he ſaid, No. And after that incontinent, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury demanded and objected againſt the ſaid Sir William, as divers others more did; That after he had before the Biſhop of Norwich revoked and abjured judicially divers errors and hereſies, among other errors and hereſies by him taught, holden, and preached, he affirmed, That in the ſame Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration made by the Prieſt, as he taught, there remained material bread; which hereſie amongſt others as errors alſo he abjured before the foreſaid Biſhop of Norwich. Hereunto the foreſaid William anſwered ſmiling, or in mocking wiſe, ſaying, and denying that he knew of the premiſſes. Notwithſtanding, he publickly Proceſs againſt W. Sautre.

Ex Regiſt. Cantuar.

{KING Hen. 4.} lickly affirmed, That he held and taught the foreſaid things after the date of the ſaid Proceſs made by the ſaid Biſhop of Norwich, and that in the ſame Council alſo he held the ſame. Then finally it was demanded of the ſaid Sir William, why he ought not to be pronounced as a man fallen into Hereſie, and why they ſhould not further proceed unto his degradation according to the Canonical Sanctions: whereunto he anſwered nothing, neither could he alledge any cauſe to the contrary.

Whereupon the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury by the counſel and aſſent of the whole Council, and eſpecially by the counſel and aſſent of the Reverend Fathers and Biſhops, as alſo Priors, Deans, Archdeacons, and other worſhipful Doctors and Clerks then and there preſent in the Council, fully determined to proceed to the degradation, and actual depoſing of the ſaid William Sautre, as refallen into Hereſie and as incorrigible, according to the Sentence definitive put in writing, the tenor whereof is in words as followeth.

In the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas by the Grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Legate of the See Apoſtolical, and Metropolitan of all England, do find and declare, That thou William Sautre, otherwiſe called Chautris Prieſt, by us with the counſel and aſſent of all and ſingular our fellow brethren and whole Clergy, by this our Sentence definitive declared in writing, haſt been for Hereſie convict and condemned, and art (being again fallen into Hereſie) to be depoſed and degraded by theſe preſents.

And from that day being Wedneſday, there was in the ſaid Council Provincial nothing further proſecuted, but was continued with all dependents till the Friday next enſuing. Which Friday approaching, Maſter Nicholas Riſhton, by the commandment of the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being then buſied, as he ſaid, in the Parliament Houſe, continued this Council and Convocation with all incidents, dependents, and occaſions, growing and annexed thereunto the next day, to wit, Saturday next and immediately after enſuing. Upon Saturday, being the 26*th* of the ſaid month of February, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſate in the Biſhops Seat of the foreſaid Church of S. Paul in London, and ſolemnly apparelled in his Pontifical attire, ſitting with him as his aſſiſtants theſe Reverend Fathers and Biſhops, of London, Lincoln, Hereford, Exeter, Menevenſis & Roffenſis Epiſcopi, above mentioned, commanded and cauſed the ſaid Sir William Sautre, apparelled in Prieſtly Veſtments, to be brought and appear before him. That done, he declared and expounded in Engliſh to all the Clergy and people there in great multitude aſſembled; That all Proceſs was finiſhed and ended againſt the ſaid Sir William Sautre. Which thing finiſhed, before the pronuncing of the ſaid Sentence of Relapſe againſt the ſaid Sir William, as is premiſed, he often then and there recited and read. And for that he ſaw the ſaid William in that behalf nothing abaſhed; he proceeded to his degradation and actual depoſition in form as followeth.

Sentence of degradation.

IN Nomine patris, & filii, & ſpiritus ſancti. We Thomas by Gods permiſſion Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, do denounce thee William Sautre, otherwiſe called Chautris, Chaplain fained, in the habit and apparel of a Prieſt, as an Heretick, and one re-fallen into Hereſie, by this our Sentence definitive, by counſel, aſſent, and authority to be condemned; and by concluſion of all our fellow Brethren, fellow Biſhops, Prelates, Council Provincial, and of the whole Clergy, do degrade and deprive thee of thy Prieſtly Order. And in ſign of degradation and actual depoſition from thy Prieſtly Dignity, for thine incorrigibility and want of amendment, we take from thee the Patent and Chalice, and do deprive thee of all power and authority of celebrating the Maſs, and alſo we pull from thy back the Caſule, and take from thee the Veſtment, and deprive thee of all manner of Prieſtly honour.

The Patent and Chalice taken from him.

Alſo, we Thomas the aforeſaid Archbiſhop by authority, counſel, and aſſent, which upon the foreſaid William we have, being Deacon pretenſed, in the habit and apparel of a Deacon, having the New Teſtament in thy hands, being an Heretick, and twice fallen, condemned by Sentence as is aforeſaid, do degrade and put thee from the Order of a Deacon. And in token of this thy degradation and actual depoſition, we take from thee the Book of the New Teſtament, and the Stole, and do deprive thee of all authority in reading of the Goſpel, and of all and all manner of Dignity of a Deacon.

The Book of the New Teſtament taken from him.

Item, We Thomas Archbiſhop aforeſaid, by authority, counſel, and aſſent, which over thee the foreſaid William we have, being a Sub-deacon pretenſed, in the habit and Veſtiment of a Sub-deacon, an Heretick, and twice fallen, condemned by ſentence, as is aforeſaid, do degrade and put thee from the Order of a Sub-deacon; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depoſition, we take from thee the Albe and Maniple, and do deprive thee of all manner of Sub-diaconical Dignity.

The Albe taken from him.

Alſo, we Thomas Archbiſhop aforeſaid, by counſel aſſent, and authority which we have over thee the foreſaid William, an Acolyte pretenſed, wearing the habit of an Acolyte, and Heretick, twice fallen, by our ſentence, as is aforeſaid, condemned, do degrade and put from thee all Order of an Acolyte; and in ſign and token of this thy degradation, and actual depoſition, we take from thee the Candleſtick and Taper, and alſo Urceolum, and do deprive thee of all and all manner dignity of an Acolyte.

The Candleſtick and Taper taken from him.

Alſo we Thomas Archbiſhop aforeſaid, by aſſent, counſel, and authority, which upon thee the foreſaid William we have, an Exorciſt pretenſed, in the habit of an Exorciſt or Holy-water Clerk, being an Heretick, twice fallen, and by our ſentence as is aforeſaid, condemned, do degrade and depoſe thee from the Order of an Exorciſt; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depoſition, we take from thee the Book of Conjurations, and do deprive thee of all and ſingular dignity of an Exorciſt.

The Holy-water Book conjured from him.

Alſo, we Thomas Archbiſhop aforeſaid, by aſſent, counſel, and authority, as is aboveſaid, do degrade and depoſe thee the foreſaid William, Reader pretenſed, clothed in the habit of a Reader, an Heretick, twice fallen, and by our ſentence as is aforeſaid, condemned from the order of a Reader; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depoſition, we take from thee the Book of the Divine Lections (that is, the Book of the Church Legend) and do deprive thee of all and ſingular manner of dignity of ſuch a Reader.

He meaneth the Legend Book, as ſaith the Regiſter.

Item, We Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury aforeſaid, by authority, counſel and aſſent, the which we have, as is aforeſaid, do degrade and put thee the foreſaid William Sautre, Sexton pretenſed, in the habit of a Sexton, and wearing a Surplice, being an Heretick twice fallen, by our ſentence definitive condemned, as aforeſaid from the Order of a Sexton; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depoſition, for the cauſes aforeſaid, we take from thee the Keys of the Church-door, and thy Surplice and do deprive thee of all and ſingular manner of commodities of a Door-keeper.

The Surplice taken from him.

The Church door Keys taken from him.

And alſo, by the authority of Omnipotent God the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and by our authority, counſel, and aſſent, of our whole Council Provincial above written, we do degrade thee, and depoſe thee, being here perſonally preſent before us, from Orders, Benefices, Priviledges and Habit in the Church; and for thy pertinency incorrigible we do degrade thee before the ſecular Court of the High Conſtable and Marſhal of England, being perſonally preſent; and do depoſe thee from all and ſingular Clerkly honours and dignities whatſoever, by theſe writings. Alſo, in token of thy degradation and depoſition, here actually we have cauſed thy Crown and Eccleſiaſtical Tonſure in our preſence to be raſed away, and utterly to be aboliſhed, like unto the form of a ſecular Lay-man; and here we do put upon the head of thee the foreſaid William the Cap of a Lay ſecular perſon; beſeeching the Court aforeſaid, that they will receive favourably the ſaid William unto them thus recommitted.

Priviledge of the Clergy taken from him.

The Prieſts Cap taken from his head, maketh up all in all.

Thus William Sautre the ſervant of Chriſt, being utterly thruſt out of the Popes Kingdom, and metamorphoſed from a Clerk to a ſecular Lay-man, was committed (as ye have heard) unto the ſecular power. Which ſo done, the Biſhops, yet not herewith contented, ceaſe not to call upon the King, to cauſe him to be brought forth to ſpeedy Execution. Whereupon the King, ready enough and too much to gratifie the Clergy, and to retain their favours, directeth out a terrible Decree againſt the ſaid William Sautre, and ſent it to the Major and Sheriffs of London to be put in execution; the tenour whereof hereunder enſueth.

The Decree of the King againſt William Sawtre.

The cruel decree of the King againſt Sawtre.

THE Decree of our Soveraign Lord the King and his Council in the Parliament, againſt a certain new ſprung up Heretick. To the Major and Sheriffs of London, &c. Whereas the Reverend Father Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, by the aſſent, conſent, and counſel of other Biſhops, and his Brethren Suffragans, and alſo of all the whole Clergy within his Province or Dioceſs, gathered together in his Provincial Council, the due order of the Law being obſerved in all points in this behalf, hath pronounced and declared, by his definitive ſentence, William Sawtre ſometime Chaplain fallen again into his moſt damnable Hereſie, the which before time the ſaid William had abjured, thereupon to be a moſt manifeſt Heretick, and therefore hath decreed that he ſhould be degraded, and hath for the ſame cauſe really degraded him from all prerogative and priviledge of the Clergy, decreeing to leave him unto the ſecular power; and hath really ſo left him, according to the Laws and Canonical Sanctions ſet forth in this behalf, and alſo that our Holy Mother the Church hath no further to do in the premiſſes: we therefore being zealous in Religion, and reverend lovers of the Catholick Faith, willing and minding to maintain and defend the Holy Church, and the Laws and the Liberties of the ſame, to root all ſuch Errors and Hereſies out of our Kingdom of England, and with condigne puniſhment to correct and puniſh all Hereticks or ſuch as be convict; provided always that both according to the Law of God and Man, and the Canonical inſtitutions in this behalf accuſtomed, ſuch Hereticks convict and condemned in form aforeſaid ought to be burned with fire: We command you, as ſtraitly as we may, or can, firmly enjoyning you that you do cauſe the ſaid William, being in your cuſtody, in ſome publick oropen place within the liberties of your City aforeſaid (the cauſe aforeſaid being publiſhed unto the people) to beput into the fire, and there in the ſame fire really to be burned, to the great horror of his offence, and the manifeſt example of other Chriſtians. Fail not in the execution thereof, upon the peril that will fall thereupon: Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm. 26. Febr. An. Regni ſui.

KING Hen. 4.

Prepoſterous zeal without knowledge

The burning of William Sawtre.

Admoniſtion to Princes.

Thus it may appear how Kings and Princes have been blinded and abuſed by the falſe Prelates of the Church, inſomuch that they have been their ſlaves and butchers, to ſlay Chriſts poor innocent members. See therefore what danger it is for Princes not to have knowledge and underſtanding themſelves, but to be led by other Mens eyes, and ſpecially truſting to ſuch guids, who through hypocritie both deceive them, and through cruelty devour the people.

King Henry the firſt of Engliſh Kings that tormented the Chriſtians with fire.

As King Henry the Fourth, who was the depoſer of King Richard, was the firſt of all Engliſh Kings that began the unmerciful burning of Chriſts Saints for ſtanding againſt the Pope: ſo was this William Sawtre, the true and faithful Martyr of Chriſt, the firſt of all them in Wickliffs time, which I find to be burned in the Reign of the foreſaid King, which was in the year of our Lord, 1400.

After the Martyrdom of this godly Man, the reſt of the ſame Company began to keep themſelves more cloſely for fear of the King, who was altogether bent to hold with the Popes Prelacy. Such was the Reign of this Prince, that to the godly he was ever terrible, in his actions immeaſurable, of few Men heartily beloved; but Princes never lack flatterers about them. Neither was the time of his Reign very quiet, but full of trouble, of blood and miſery. Such was their deſire of King Richard again in the Reign of this King, that many years after he was rumored to be alive (of them which deſired belike that to be true which they knew to be falſe) for the which divers were executed. For the ſpace of ſix or ſeven years together almoſt no year paſſed without ſome conſpiracy againſt the King. Long it were here to recite the blood of all ſuch Nobles and others, which was ſpilt in the Reign of this King, as the Earl of * Kent, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Huntington, named John Holland, &c. as writeth the ſtory of S. Albans. But the Engliſh writers differ ſomthing in their names, and make mention of four Earls, of Surrey, of Exceſter, of Salisbury, and Lord Spencer Earl of Gloceſter. Ex lib. cui tit. Calendarium Bruti.

Much murder and beheading in the time of King Henry the Fourth.

* It is to be doubted.

And the next year following Sir John Clarendon Knight, with two of his ſervants, the Prior of Lhund, with eight Friers, were hanged and quartered. And after theſe Henry Percy the younger, the Earl of Worceſter, named Thomas Percy his Uncle, Lord of Kinderton, and Lord Richard de Vernova. The Earl of Northumberland ſcarce eſcaped with his pardon, An. 1403. In the which year the priſon in Cornhil called the Tun, was turned into the Conduit there now ſtanding.

KING Hen. 4.

Winterſel Eſquire; Alſo the ſame year was taken and Executed Sir Bernard Brookes Knight, Sir John Shilley Knight, Sir John Mandelin and William Frierby. After all theſe Lord Henry Earl of Northumberland, and Lord Bardolf, conſpiring the Kings death, were taken in the North and beheaded, which was in the eighth year of this King Henry.

Archbiſhop Lord Mowbrey againſt King Henry the Fourth.

This civil Rebellion of ſo many Nobles, and other, againſt the King, declared what grudging hearts the people then bare toward this King Henry. Among whom I cannot pretermit here alſo the Archbiſhop of York named Richard Scrope, who with the Lord Moubrey, Marſhal of England, gathered a great company in the North Country againſt the foreſaid King, to whom alſo was adjoyned the help of Lord Bardolf, and Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland. Ex Chron. D. Albani. And to ſtir up the people more willingly to take their parts, they collected certain Articles againſt the ſaid King, to the number of ten, and faſtned them upon the doors of the Churches and Monaſteries, to be read of all Men in Engliſh. Which Articles if any be diſpoſed to underſtand, forſomuch as the ſame alſo contain a great part of the doings between King Henry and King Richard aforeſaid, I thought, for the better opening of the matter hereunder to inſert the ſame, in ſuch form as I found them in the ſtory of Scala mundi expreſſed.

Articles ſet upon Church Doors againſt King Henry the Fourth.

Anno 1401.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Before the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, judge of the quick and dead, &c. We A. B. C. D. &c. not long ſithence became bound by oath upon the Sacred Evangelical Book, unto our Soveraign Lord Richard, late King of England and France, in the preſence of many Prelates, Potentates and Nobility of the Realm; that we, ſo long as we lived, ſhould bear true allegiance and fidelity toward him and his heirs ſucceeding him in the Kingdom by juſt title, right, and line, according to the ſtatutes and cuſtom of this Realm of England: By vertue whereof we are bound to foreſee that no vices, or hainous offences ariſing in the Common-weal, do take effect or wiſhed end, and we ought to give our ſelves and our goods to withſtand the ſame, without fear of the ſword or death whatſoever, upon pain of perjury, which pain is Everlaſting Damnation. Wherefore we ſeeing and perceiving divers horrible crimes, and great enormities daily without ceaſing to be committed by the Children of the Divel and Satans Souldiers againſt the ſupremacy of the Church of Rome, the liberty of the Church of England, and the Laws of the Realm, againſt the perſon of King Richard and his heirs, againſt the Prelates, Noble-men, Religion, and Commonalty, and finally againſt the whole Weal publick of the Realm England, to the great offence of the Majeſty of Almighty God, and to the provocation of his juſt wrath and vengeance toward the Realm and people of the ſame. And fearing alſo the deſtruction both of the Church of Rome and England, and the ruine of our Country to be at hand, having before our eyes the juſtice and the Kingdom of God, calling always on the name of Jeſus, having an aſſured confidence in his Clemency, Mercy and Power; Have here taken unto us certain Articles, ſubſcribed in form following, to be propounded, tried, and heard before the juſt Judge, Jeſus Chriſt, and the whole world, to his honor, the delivery of the Church, the Clergy, and Commonalty, and to the utility and profit of the Weal Publick. But if (which God forbid) by force, fear, or violence of wicked perſons we ſhall be caſt in priſon, or by violent death prevented, ſo as in this world we ſhall not be able to prove the ſaid Articles as we would wiſh, then do we appeal to the high Celeſtial Judge, that he may judge and diſcern the ſame, in the day of his ſupreme judgment.

A Bill of Articles ſet up againſt King Henry the Fourth.

1. Firſt, We depoſe, ſay, except, and intend to prove againſt the Lord Henry Darby, Son of the Lord John of Gaunt, late Duke of Lancaſter, and commonly called King of England (himſelf pretending the ſame, although without all right and title thereunto) and againſt his adherents, fautours, and complices; that ever they have been, are, and will be Traitors, invaders, and deſtroyers of Gods Church in Rome, England, Wales, and Ireland, and of our Soveraign Lord Richard late King of England, his heirs, his Kingdom, and Common-wealth, as ſhall hereafter manifeſtly appear.

2. Secondarily, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, for that he had conceived, deviſed, and conſpired certain hainous crimes and traiterous offences againſt his ſaid Soveraign Lord Richard his State and Dignity, as manifeſtly did appear in the contention between the ſaid Lord Henry, and the Lord Thomas Duke of Northfolk begun at Coventry, but not finiſhed throughly. Afterwards he was ſent into exile by ſentence of the ſaid King Richard, by the agreement of his Father the Lord John Duke of Lancaſter, by the voice of divers of the Lords Temporal, and Nobility of the Realm, and alſo by his own conſent; there to remain for a certain time appointed unto him by the ſaid Lords, and withal he was bound by oath not to return into England before he had obtained favour and grace of the King. Not long after, when the King was departed into Ireland for reformation of that Country appertaining to the Crown of England, but as then rebelling againſt the ſame; the ſaid Lord Henry in the mean time contrary to his oath and fidelity, and long before the time limited unto him was expired, with all his fautours and invaders ſecretly entred into the Realm, ſwearing and proteſting before the face of the people, that his coming into the Realm in the abſence of the King was for none other cauſe, but that he might in humble ſort with the love and favour of the King, and all the Lords Spiritual, and Temporal, have and enjoy his lawful inheritance deſcending unto him of right after the death of his Father: which thing as it pleaſed all Men, ſo cryed they, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. But how this bleſſing afterward turned into curſing, ſhall appear in that which followeth: and alſo ye ſhall underſtand his horrible and wicked conſpiracy againſt his Soveraign Lord King Richard, and divers other Lords as well ſpiritual as temporal; beſides that his manifeſt perjury ſhall well be known, and that he remaineth not only forſworn and perjured, but alſo Excommunicate, for that he conſpired againſt his Soveraign Lord our King. Wherefore we pronounce him by theſe preſents aſwel perjured, as Excommunicate.

King Henry perjured.

3. Thirdly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the Lord Henry, that he the ſaid Lord Henry, immediately after his entry into England, by crafty and ſubtil policy cauſed to be proclaimed openly throughout the Realm, that no tenths of the Clergy, fifteens of the people, ſealing up of Cloth, diminution of Wool, impoſt of Wine, nor other extortions or exactions whatſoever, ſhould hereafter be required or exacted; hoping by this means to purchaſe unto him the voice and favour of the Prelates Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, the Merchants, and Commonalty of the whole Realm. After this he took by force the Kings Caſtles and Fortreſſes, ſpoiled and devoured his goods whereſoever he found it, crying, Havock, Havock. The Kings Majeſties ſubjects as well Spiritual as Temporal, he ſpoiled and robbed, ſome he took Captive and Impriſoned them, and ſome he ſlew and put to miſerable death, whereof many were Biſhops, Prelates, Prieſts, and Religious Men. Whereby it is manifeſt, That the ſaid Lord Henry is not only perjured, in promiſing and ſwearing that there ſhould be hereafter no more exactions, paiments, or extortions within the Realm, but alſo Excommunicate for the violence and injury done to Prelates and Prieſts. Wherefore by theſe preſents we pronounce him, as afore, as well perjured, as Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with untruth.

4. Fourthly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, That he, hearing of the Kings return from Ireland into Wales, roſe up againſt his Soveraign Lord the King with many thouſands of armed Men, marching forward with all his power towards the Caſtle of Flint in Wales, where he took the King and held him priſoner, and ſo led him Captive as a Traitor unto Leiceſter: from whence he took his journey towards London, miſuſing the King by the way, both he and his, with many injuries and opprobrious contumelies and ſcoffs. And in the end committed him to the Tower of London, and held a Parliament, the King being abſent and in priſon: wherein for fear of death he compelled the King to yield and reſign unto him all his right and title of the Kingdom and Crown of England. After which reſignation being made, the ſaid Lord

King Henry charged with Treaſon againſt his Soveraign.

Henry ſtanding up in the Parliament Houſe, ſtoutly and proudly before them all, ſaid and affirmed, That the Kingdom of England and Crown of the ſame, with all thereunto belonging, did pertain unto him at that preſent, as of very right, and to no other; for that the ſaid King Richard by his own Deed was deprived for ever of all the right, title, and intereſt that ever he had, hath, or may have in the ſame. And thus at length by right and wrong he exalted himſelf unto the Throne of the Kingdom: ſince which time, our Common-weal never flouriſhed nor proſpered, but altogether hath been void of vertue, for that the ſpiritualty was ſo oppreſſed, exerciſe and war-like practices have not been maintained, Charity is waxed cold, and covetouſneſs and miſery hath taken place, and finally mercy is taken away and vengeance ſupplieth the room. Whereby it doth appear (as before is ſaid) That the ſaid Lord Henry is not only perjured and falſe by uſurping the Kingdom and Dominion belonging to another, but alſo Excommunicate for the apprehending, unjuſt impriſoning, and depriving his Soveraign Lord the King of his Royal Crown and Dignity. Wherefore, as in the Articles before, we pronounce the ſaid Lord Henry to be Excommunicate.

5. Fifthly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, that he the ſame Lord Henry with the reſt of his favourers and complices, heaping miſchief upon miſchief, have committed and brought to paſs a moſt wicked and miſchievous fact, yea, ſuch as hath not been heard of at any time before. For after that they had taken and impriſoned the King, and depoſed him by open injury againſt all humane nature; yet, not content with this, they brought him to Pomfret Caſtle, and there impriſoned him, where fifteen days and nights they vexed him with continual hunger, thirſt, and cold, and finally bereft him of life with ſuch a kind of death as never before that time was known in England, but by Gods Providence it is come to light. Who ever heard of ſuch a deed, or who ever ſaw the like of him? Wherefore, O England, ariſe, ſtand up, avenge the cauſe, the death and injury of thy King and Prince: which if thou do not, take this for certain, that the Righteous God will deſtroy thee by ſtrange invaſions and foreign power, and avenge himſelf on thee for this ſo horrible an act. Whereby doth appear not only his perjury, but alſo his Excommunication moſt execrable; ſo that, as before, we pronounce the ſaid Henry not only perjured, but alſo Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with murdering of his Prince.

6. Sixthly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, That after he had attained to the Crown and Scepter of the Kingdom, he cauſed forthwith to be apprehended divers Lords Spiritual, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Religious Men of all Orders, whom he arreſted, impriſoned, and bound, and againſt all order brought them before the ſecular Judges to be examined; not ſparing the Biſhops whoſe bodies were annointed with Sacred Oyl, nor Prieſts nor Religious Men, but commanded them to be condemned, hanged, and beheaded by the Temporal Law and judgment, notwithſtanding the priviledge of the Church and Holy Orders, which he ought to have reverenced and worſhipped, if he had been a true and lawful King: for the firſt and chiefeſt Oath in the Coronation of a lawful King is, to defend and keep inviolate the liberties and rights of the Church, and not to deliver any Prieſt or Religious Man into the hands of the Secular Power, except for Hereſie only, and that after his degradation, according to the order of the Church. Contrary unto all this hath he done; ſo that it is manifeſt by this Article as afore in the reſt, that he is both perjured, and Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with the orders of the Church.

7. Seventhly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, That not only he cauſed to be put to death the Lords Spiritual and other Religious Men, but alſo divers of the Lords Temporal and Nobility of the Realm, and chiefly thoſe that ſtudied for the preſervation of the Common-weal, not ceaſing as yet to continue his miſchievous enterpriſe, if by Gods Providence it be not prevented, and that with ſpeed: Amongſt all other of the Nobility, theſe firſt he put to death; the Earl of Salisbury, the Earl of Huntington, the Earl of Glouceſter, the Lord Roger Clarenden the Kings Brother, with divers other Knights and Eſquires; and afterwards, the Lord Thamas Percy Earl of Worceſter, and the Lord Henry Percy Son and Heir to the Earl of Northumberland; the which Lord Henry he not only ſlew, but to the uttermoſt of his power again and again he cauſed him to be ſlain. For after that he was once put to death, and delivered to the Lord of Furnile to be buried (who committed his body to Holy Sepulture, with as much honor as might be, commending his ſoul to Almighty God with the Suffrages of bleſſed Maſs and other Prayers) the ſaid Lord Henry, moſt like a cruel beaſt ſtill thirſting his blood, cauſed his body to be exhumate and brought forth again, and to be repoſed between two Mil-ſtones in the Town of Shrewsbury, there to be kept with armed men; and afterwards to be beheaded and quartered, commanding his head and quarters to be carried into divers Cities of the Kingdom. Wherefore, for ſo deteſtable a fact never heard of in any age before, we pronounce him, as in the former Articles, Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with ſeveral

8. Eighthly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, For that after his attaining to the Crown he willingly ratified, allowed, and approved a moſt wicked Statute ſet forth and renewed in the Parliament holden at Wincheſter. The which Statute is directly againſt the Church of Rome, and the power, and principality thereof given by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto bleſſed S. Peter and his ſucceſſors Biſhops of Rome; unto whom belongeth by full authority the free diſpoſing of all ſpiritual promotions as well ſuperior as inferior: which wicked Statute is the cauſe of many miſchiefs, viz. of Simony, Perjury, Adultery, Inceſt, Miſorder, and Diſobedience; for that many Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Prelates (we will not ſay by vertue, but rather by error of this Statute) have beſtowed the Benefices vacant upon young Men, rude and unworthy perſons, which have compacted with them for the ſame, ſo that ſcarce one Prelate is found that hath not covenanted with the party promoted for the half yearly, or, at the leaſt, the third part of the ſaid Benefice ſo beſtowed. And by this means the ſaid Statute is the deſtruction of the right of S. Peter, the Church of Rome and England, the Clergy and Univerſities, the whole Common-weal, and maintenance of Wars, &c.

The King charged with evil

9. Ninthly, We ſay and depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, That after he had Tyrannouſly taken upon him the Government of the Realm, England never flouriſhed ſince, nor proſpered, by reaſon of his continual exactions of money, and oppreſſions yearly of the Clergy and Commonalty: neither is it known how this money ſo extorted is beſtowed, when as neither his Souldiers, nor his Gentlemen are payed as yet their wages and fees for their charges, and wonderful toil and labor, neither yet the poor Country people are ſatisfied for the victual taken of them: And nevertheleſs the miſerable Clergy, and more miſerable Commonalty, are forced ſtill to pay by menaces and ſharp threatnings. Notwithſtanding he ſware, when he firſt uſurped the Crown, that hereafter there ſhould be no ſuch exactions nor vexations, neither of the Clergy nor Laity. Wherefore, as afore, we pronounce him Perjured, &c.

King Henry charged with oppreſſion and perjury.

10. In the tenth and laſt Article we depoſe, ſay, and openly proteſt by theſe preſents, for our ſelves, and all our aſſiſtants in the cauſe of the Church of Rome and England, and in the cauſe of King Richard, his Heirs, the Clergy and Commonalty of the whole Realm; that neither our intention is, was, nor ſhall be, in word or deed to offend any ſtate either of the Prelates Spiritual, Lords Temporal, or Commons of the Realm; but rather, foreſeeing the perdition and deſtruction of this Realm to approach, we have here brought before you certain Articles concerning the deſtruction of the ſame, to be circumſpectly conſidered of the whole Aſſembly, as well of the Lords Spiritual as Temporal, and the faithful Commons of England: beſeeching you all in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous Judge, and for the merits of our bleſſed Lady the Mother of God, and of Saint George our Defender, under whoſe diſplayed Banner we wiſh to live and die, and under pain of Damnation, that ye will be favourable to us, and to our cauſes which are three in number. Whereof the firſt is, That we exalt unto the Kingdom the true and Lawful Heir, and him to Crown in Kingly Throne with the Diadem of England. And ſecondly, That we revoke the Welſh-men, the Iriſh-men, and all other our Enemies unto perpetual peace and amity. Thirdly, and finally, That we deliver and make free our Native Country from all Exactions,

Earl of Weſtmerland againſt the Archbiſhop.

Theſe Articles being ſeen and read, much concourſe of people daily reſorted more and more to the Archbiſhop. The Earl of Weſtmorland (being then not far off, with John the Kings Son) hearing of this, muſtred his Souldiers with all the power he was able to make, and bent toward the Archbiſhop: but ſeeing his part too weak to encounter with him, he uſeth practice of policy, where ſtrength would not ſerve. And firſt coming to him under colour of friendſhip diſſembled, he laboured to ſeek out the cauſes of that great ſtir. To whom the Archbiſhop again anſwering no hurt to be intended thereby, but profit rather to the King and Common-wealth, and maintenance of publick peace: but forſomuch as he ſtood in great fear and danger of the King, he was therefore compelled ſo to do. And withal he ſhewed unto him the contents of the Articles aforeſaid; which when the Earl had read, ſetting a fair face upon it, he ſeemed highly to commend the purpoſe and doings of the Biſhop: promiſing moreover, that he would help alſo forward in that quarrel to the uttermoſt of his power. And he required upon the ſame a day to be ſet, when they with equal number of Men might meet together, in ſome place appointed, to have further talk of the matter. The Archbiſhop eaſily perſwaded, was content, although much againſt the counſel of the Earl Marſhal, and came. Where the Articles being openly publiſhed and read, the Earl of Weſtmerland with his Company pretended well to like the ſame, and to joyn their aſſents together. Which done, he exhorted the Archbiſhop, that forſomuch as his Gariſon had been now long in Armor and from home, he would therefore diſcharge the needleſs multitude of his Souldiers, and diſmiſs them home to their works and buſineſs, and they would together drink and joyn hands in the ſight of the whole Company. Thus they ſhaking hands together, the Archbiſhop ſendeth away his Souldiers in peace, not knowing himſelf to be circumvented, before he was immediately arreſted by the hands of the aforeſaid Earl of Weſtmerland; and ſhortly after the King coming with his power to York, he was there beheaded the Monday in Whitſon-week, and with him alſo Lord Thomas Moubray Marſhal, with divers other moreover of the City of York, which had taken their parts. After whoſe ſlaughter the King proceedeth farther to perſecute the Earl of Northumberland, and Lord Thomas Bardolph; who then did flie to Barwick. From thence they removed to Wales. At length within two years after, fighting againſt the Kings part, they were ſlain in the field, An. 1408. In the which year divers other alſo in the North parts, for favouring the foreſaid Lords, were likewiſe condemned by the King, and put to death. The King after the ſhedding of ſo much blood, ſeeing himſelf ſo hardly beloved of his Subjects, thought to keep in yet with the Clergy, and with the Biſhop of Rome, ſeeking always his chiefeſt ſtay at their hands. And therefore he was compelled in all things to ſerve their humor, as did appear as well in condemning William Sautre before, as alſo in other which conſequently we have now to intreat of. In the number of whom cometh now by the courſe of time to write of one John Badby a Taylor and a Layman; who by the cruelty of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop, and other Prelates, was brought to his Condemnation in this Kings Reign, Anno. 1409. according as by their own Regiſters appeareth, and followeth by his Narration to be ſeen.

John Badby Artificer.

John Badby Martyr. Ex Regiſt. T. Arundel.

IN the year of our Lord, 1409. on Sunday being the firſt day of March, in the Afternoon, the examination following of one John Badby Taylor, being a Lay-man, was made in a certain Houſe or Hall within the Precinct of the preaching Friers of London, in an utter Cloiſter, upon the crime of Hereſie, and other Articles repugnant to the determination of the erroneous Church of Rome, before Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury and other his aſſiſtants, as the Archbiſhop of York, of London, of Wincheſter, of Oxford, of Norwich, of Salisbury, of Bath, of Bangor, Et Menevenſis Epiſcopi, and alſo Edmund Duke of York, Thomas Bewford the Chancellor of England, Lord de Roos the Clerk of the Rolls, and a great number of other Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, being then at the ſelf ſame time preſent: Maſter Morgan read the Articles of his opinions to the hearers, according as it is contained in the inſtrument read by the foreſaid Maſter Morgan, the tenor whereof followeth, and in effect is ſuch.

The Articles read.

In the name of God, Amen. Be it manifeſt to all Men by this preſent publick Inſtrument, that in the year after the Incarnation of our Lord, according to the courſe and computation of the Church of England, otherwiſe in the year 1409. in the ſecond Indiction, in the third year of the Popedom of the moſt Holy Father in Chriſt and Lord, Lord Gregory the 11*th*. by the Divine permiſſion Pope, the ſecond day of January, in the Chappel Carvariæ, of Saint Thomas Martyr, nigh unto the Cathedral Church of Worceſter, being ſituate in the ſaid Dioceſs, in the preſence of me the Publick Notary, and of the witneſſes under written, the foreſaid John Badby a Lay-man, of the ſaid Dioceſs of Worceſter, appearing perſonally before the Reverend Father in Chriſt and Lord, Lord Thomas, by the Grace of God Biſhop of Worceſter, ſitting in the ſaid Chappel for chief Judge, was detected of and upon the crime of Hereſie being Heretically taught, and openly maintained by the foreſaid John Badby: That is, That the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, Conſecrated by the Prieſt upon the Altar, is not the true body of Chriſt by the vertue of the words of the Sacrament. But that after the Sacramental words ſpoken by the Prieſts to make the body of Chriſt, the material bread doth remain upon the Altar as in the beginning, neither is it turned into the very body of Chriſt after the Sacramental words ſpoken of the Prieſts. Which John Badby being examined, and diligently demanded by the foreſaid Reverend Father concerning the premiſes, in the end did anſwer, That it was impoſſible that any Prieſt ſhould make the body of Chriſt, and that he believed firmly that no Prieſt could make the body of Chriſt by ſuch words Sacramentally ſpoken in ſuch ſort. And alſo he ſaid expreſly that he would never while he lived believe that any Prieſt could make the body of Chriſt Sacramentally, unleſs that firſt he ſaw manifeſtly the like body of Chriſt to be handled in the hands of the Prieſt upon the Altar, in his corporal form. And furthermore he ſaid, That John Baker of Briſtol had as much power and authority to make the like body of Chriſt, as any Prieſt had. Moreover he ſaid; That when Chriſt ſate at Supper with his Diſciples, he had not his body in his hand, to the intent to diſtribute it to his Diſciples; and he ſaid expreſly, that he did not this thing. And alſo he ſpake many other words teaching and fortifying the Hereſie in the ſame place, both grievous, and alſo out of order, and horrible to the ears of the hearers, ſounding againſt the Catholick Faith.

The Sacrament of hriſts body.

Upon which occaſion the ſame Reverend Father admoniſhed and requeſted the ſaid John Badby oftentimes, and very inſtantly to Charity; forſomuch as he would willingly that he ſhould have forſaken ſuch Hereſie and opinion holden, taught and maintained by him, in ſuch ſuit againſt the Sacrament, to renounce, and utterly abjure them, and to believe other things which the Holy Mother the Church doth believe. And he informed the ſaid John on that behalf both gently, and yet laudably. Yet the ſaid John Badby, although he were admoniſhed and requeſted both often and inſtantly by the ſaid Reverend Father, ſaid and anſwered expreſsly, That he would never believe otherwiſe than before he had ſaid, taught, and anſwered. Whereupon, the foreſaid Reverend Father Biſhop of Worceſter ſeeing, underſtanding, and perceiving the foreſaid John Badby to maintain and fortifie the ſame Hereſie, being ſtubborn and proceeding in the ſame ſtubbornneſs, pronounced the ſaid John to be before this time convicted of ſuch an Hereſie, and that he hath been and is an Heretick, and in the end declared it in theſe words.

I cannot blame ye that ye are ſo angry, for it was not for your profit.

The ſentence of the Biſhop of Worceſter againſt John Badby.

In the name of God, Amen. We Thomas Biſhop of Worceſter do accuſe thee John Badby, being a lay-man of our Dioceſs, of and upon the crime of Hereſie, before us ſitting for Chief Judge, being oftentimes confeſſed and convicted of and upon that, That thou haſt taught, and openly affirmed, as hitherto thou doſt teach, boldly affirm, and defend; that the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, Conſecrated upon the Altar by the Prieſt, is not the true Body of Chriſt; But after the Sacramental words, to make the Body of Chriſt, by vertue of the ſaid Sacramental words pronounced, to have been in the crime of Hereſie; and we do pronounce thee both to have been and to be an Heretick, and do declare it finally by theſe writings.

Theſe things were done accordingly as is above written, and are recited in the Year, Indiction, Popedom, Month, Day, and Place aforeſaid, being preſent the ſame time John Malune, Prior of the Cathedral Church of Worceſter, John Dudle Monk, and Haul the ſub-Prior of the ſaid Church, Thomas Penings of the order of the Carmelites, Thomas Fekenham of the order of the preaching Friers, William Pomfret of the order of the Minorites, being Profeſſors and Maſters of Divinity; William Hailes, Gualter of London, John Swippedew, being publick Notaries, and William Beuchampe and Thomas Gerbis being Knights, Richard Wiſh of Tredington, Thomas Wilbe of Hembury, John Weſton of Yewley, being Parſons of Churches, and Thomas Baleinges, the Maſter of St. Wolſton in Worceſter, and alſo Henry Haggely, John Penerel, Thomas Trogmorton and William Waſteborn Eſquires, of the Dioceſs of Worceſter and Norwich, and many other worſhipful and honeſt men being Witneſſes and called ſpecially to the hings aforeſaid.

A rabble of Monks and Friers about the condemnation of John Badby.

Quare fremuerunt gentes? Pſal. 2.

Scribes with Phariſees.

And I John Chew, Clerk of the Dioceſs of Bath and Wells, and by the authority Apoſtolical, publick Notary of the ſaid Biſhop, have in Teſtimony of the Premiſſes put my Hand and Seal to the Examination, Interrogation, Monition, and Anſwer of the ſame John Badby, and to his obſtinacy, and alſo to the proceedings of all and ſingular other doings as is aforeſaid, which againſt him before the ſaid Biſhop were handled and done, in the Year, Indiction, Popedom, Month, Day, and Place aforeſaid, which with the fore-named Witneſſes was perſonally preſent: and the ſame, even as I heard them and ſaw them to be done (being occupied with other matters) I cauſed to be written and publiſhed, and into this publick form have compiled the ſame. I the foreſaid Notary am alſo privy unto the words and examinations interlined between ſeven or eight lines of the beginning of this Inſtrument; which lines I alſo the foreſaid Notary do approve and make good.

The anſwer of John Badby to the Articles

And I Walter London, Clerk of the Dioceſs of Worceſter, and by the Authority Apoſtolical, publick Notary, to all and ſingular the foreſaid things as afore by the foreſaid Notary is recited, and in the Year, Indiction, Popedom, Month, Day and Place aforeſaid handled and done, being with other the fore-recited Witneſſes perſonally preſent, and to all and every of the ſame (as I ſaw and heard them to be done, being thereunto faithfully deſired and required:) In Teſtimony of the Premiſſes have ſigned and ſubſcribed according to the acuſtomed manner. Hæc ex Reg. Cant.

And when the Articles, in the foreſaid Inſtrument contained, were by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury publickly and vulgarly read and approved; he publickly confeſſed and affirmed, that he had both ſaid and maintained the ſame. And then the Archbiſhop to convince the conſtant purpoſe of the ſaid John Badby, commanded the ſame Articles again to be read, often inſtructing him both by words and examples, informing and exhorting him that thereby he might be brought the ſooner to the Religion that he was of. And furthermore, the ſaid Archbiſhop ſaid and affirmed there openly to the ſame John, That he would (if he would live according to the Doctrine of Chriſt) gage his Soul for him at the Judgment day. And after that again he cauſed thoſe Articles in the ſaid Inſtrument expreſſed to be read by the foreſaid Philip Morgan, and the ſaid Archbiſhop himſelf expounded the ſame in Engliſh as before; whereunto John Badby anſwered: As touching the firſt Article concerning the Body of Chriſt, he expreſly ſaid, That after the Conſecration at the Altar, there remaineth material Bread, and the ſame Bread which was before: notwithſtanding (ſaid he) it is a Sign or Sacrament of the living God.

The ſubſtance of Bread not changed in the Sacrament.

Alſo, when the ſecond Article was expounded unto him, That it is impoſſible for any Prieſt, &c. To this Article he anſwered and ſaid, That it could not ſink into his mind that the words are to be taken as they literally lie, unleſs he ſhould deny the Incarnation of Chriſt.

Alſo being examined of the third Article concerning Jack Raker, he ſaid, That if Jack Raker were a man of good living, and did love and fear God, he hath as much power ſo to do, as hath the Prieſt: and ſaid further, That he hath heard it ſpoken of ſome Doctors of Divinity, that if he ſhould receive any ſuch Conſecrated Bread, he were worthy to be damned, and were damned in ſo doing.

Furthermore he ſaid, That he would believe the Omnipotent God in Trinity; and ſaid moreover, That if every Hoſt being Conſecrated at the Altar were the Lords Body, that then there be 20000 gods in England. But he believed (he ſaid) in one God Omnipotent, which thing the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury denied not.

And when the other concluſion was expounded, That Chriſt ſitting with his Diſciples at Supper, &c. To this he anſwered and ſaid, That he would greatly marvel, that if any man had a Loaf of Bread, and ſhould break the ſame and give to every man a mouthful, that the ſame Loaf ſhould afterwards be whole.

When all theſe things were thus finiſhed, and all the ſaid concluſions were often read in the vulgar Tongue; the foreſaid Archbiſhop demanded of him, whether he would renounce and forſake his Opinions and ſuch like concluſions or not, and adhere to the Doctrine of Chriſt and Catholick Faith? He anſwered, That, according to that he had ſaid before, he would adhere and ſtand to thoſe words, which before he had made anſwer unto. Then the Archbiſhop oftentimes required the ſaid John, in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, that he would forſake thoſe Opinions and concluſions, and that henceforth he would cleave to the Chriſtian Faith; which thing to do in the audience of all the Lords and others that were preſent, he expreſly denied and refuſed.

The conſtancy of John Badby before the Archbiſhop.

After all this, when the foreſaid Arbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London had conſulted together, to what ſafe keeping the ſaid John Badby (until the Wedneſday next) might be committed; it was concluded, that he ſhould be put into a certain Chamber or ſafe Houſe within the Manſion of the Friers preachers, and ſo he was: and then the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſaid, That he himſelf would keep the Key thereof in the mean time. And when the foreſaid Wedneſday was expired, being the 15th day of March, and that the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with his fellow Brethren and Suffragans, were aſſembled in the Church of St. Paul in London; the Archbiſhop of Canterbury taking the Epiſcopal Seat, called unto him the Archbiſhop of York, Richard London, Henry Wincheſter, Robert Chicheſter, Alexander Norwich, and the Noble Prince Edmund the Duke of York, Ralph Earl of Weſtmerland, Thomas Beaufort Knight, Lord Chancellor of England, and the Lord Beamond, with other Noble men as well Spiritual, as Temporal, that ſtood, and ſate by, whom to name it would be long. Before whom the ſaid John Badby was called perſonally to anſwer unto the Articles premiſed in the foreſaid Inſtrument. Who when he came perſonally before them, the Articles were read by the Official of the Court of Canterbury, and by the Archbiſhop (in the vulgar Tongue) expounded publickly and expreſly: and the ſame Articles, as he had before ſpoken and depoſed, he ſtill held and defended, and ſaid, that whilſt he lived, he would never retract the ſame. And furthermore he ſaid ſpecially to be noted, That the Lord Duke of York, perſonally there preſent, as is aforeſaid, and every man elſe for the time being, is of more eſtimation and reputation, than the Sacrament of the Altar, by the Prieſt in due form Conſecrated. And whilſt they were thus in his examination, the Archbiſhop conſidering and weighing that he would in no wiſe be altered, and ſeeing moreover his countenance ſtout and heart confirmed, ſo that he began to perſwade other as it appeared in the ſame: theſe things conſidered, the Archprelate, when he ſaw that by his allurements it was not in his power, either by Exhortations, Reaſons, or Arguments, to bring the ſaid John Badby from his conſtant truth to his Catholick Faith (executing and doing the office of his Great Maſter) proceeded to confirm confirm and ratify the former Sentence given before by the Biſhop of Worceſter againſt the ſaid John Badby, pronouncing him for an open and publick Heretick. And thus ſhifting their hands of him, they delivered him to the Secular Power; and deſired the ſaid Temporal Lords, then and there preſent very inſtantly, that they would not put the ſame John Badby to death for that his offence, nor deliver him to be puniſhed or put to death, in the preſence of all the Lords above recited.

Note here murdering Wolves in Sheeps clothing.

Theſe things thus done and concluded by the Biſhops in the forenoon: in the afternoon, the Kings Writ was not far behind. By the force whereof John Badby, ſtill perſevering in his conſtancy unto the death, was brought into Smithfield, and there being put in an empty Barrel, was bound with Iron Chains faſtened to a Stake having dry Wood put about him.

And as he was thus ſtanding in the Pipe or Tun (for as yet Perillus Bull was not in uſe among the Biſhops) it happened that the Prince, the Kings eldeſt Son, was there preſent; who, ſhewing ſome part of the good Samaritan, began to endeavour and aſſay how to ſave the life of him, whom the hypocritical Levites and Phariſees ſought to put to death. He admoniſhed and counſelled him, that having reſpect unto himſelf he ſhould ſpeedily withdraw himſelf out of theſe dangerous Labirinths of Opinions, adding oftentimes threatnings, the which might have daunted any mans ſtomach. Alſo Courtney, at that time Chancellor of Oxford, preached unto him, and enformed him of the Faith of holy Church.

The Prince admoniſheth Badby. The Sacrament Solemnly brought to Smithfield at the burning of Badby.

In this mean ſeaſon the Prior of St. Bartholomews in Smithfield brought with all Solemnity the Sacrament of Gods Body, with twelve Torches born before, and ſo ſhewed the Sacrament to the poor man being at the Stake. And then they demanding of him how he believed in it? He anſwered, That he knew well it was hallowed Bread, and not Gods Body. And then was the Tun put over him, and fire put unto him. And when he felt the fire, he cried, Mercy (calling belike upon the Lord) and ſo the Prince immediately commanded to take away the Tun, and quench the fire. The Prince, his commandment being done, asked him if he would forſake Hereſie to take him to the Faith of holy Church? which thing if he would do, he ſhould have Goods enough, promiſing alſo unto him a yearly ſtipend out of the Kings Treaſury, ſo much as ſhould ſuffice his contentation.

John Badby conſtant to the end.

But this valiant Champion of Chriſt, neglecting the Princes fair words, as alſo contemning all mens devices, refuſed the offer of worldly promiſes, being no doubt more vehemently inflamed with the Spirit of God, than with any earthly deſire. Wherefore, when as yet he continued unmovable in his former mind, the Prince commanded him ſtraight to be put again into the Pipe or Tun, and that he ſhould not afterward look for any grace or favour. But as he could be allured by no rewards, even ſo was he nothing at all abaſhed at their torments, but, as a valiant Champion of Chriſt, he perſevered invincible to the end. Not without a great and moſt cruel Battel, but with much more greater triumph of victory; the Spirit of Chriſt having always the upper hand in his members, maugre the fury, rage, and power of the whole World. For the manifeſtation of which torment, we have here ſet forth the Picture of his burning, in ſuch manner as it was done.

The deſcription of the horrible Burning of Iohn Badby, and how he was uſed at his death

And the Power of Rome ſet againſt the Goſpel.

This godly Martyr John Badby having thus conſummate his Teſtimony and Martyrdom in fire, the perſecuting Biſhops yet not herewith contented, and thinking themſelves as yet either not ſtrong enough, or elſe not ſharp enough againſt the poor innocent flock of Chriſt, to make all things ſure and ſubſtantial on their ſide, in ſuch ſort, as this Doctrine of the Goſpel now ſpringing ſhould be ſuppreſſed for ever, laid their conſpiring heads together; and having now a King for their own purpoſe, ready to ſerve their turn in all points, during the time of the ſame Parliament above-recited (yet continuing) the foreſaid Biſhops and Clergy of the Realm exhibited a Bill to the Kings Majeſty; ſubtily declaring, what quietneſs had been maintained within this Realm by his moſt Progenitors; who always defended the ancient Rites and Cuſtoms of the Church, and enriched the ſame with large gifts, to the honour of God and the Realm: and contrariwiſe, what trouble and diſquietneſs was now riſen by divers, as they termed them, wicked and perverſe men, teaching and preaching openly and privily a certain new, wicked, and heretical kind of Doctrine, contrary to the Catholick Faith and determination of holy Church. Whereupon the King, always oppreſſed with blind ignorance, by the crafty means and ſubtil pretences of the Clergy granted in the ſaid Parliament (by conſent of the Nobility aſſembled) a Statute to be obſerved, called Ex Officio, as followeth:

The Goſpel of Chriſt counted as wicked and Hereticall.

The cruel Statute. Ex Officio.

That is to ſay, That no man within this Realm, or other the Kings Majeſties Dominions, preſume to take upon him to preach privily or apertly, without ſpecial Licenſe firſt obtained of the Ordinary of the ſame place (Curates in their own Pariſh Churches, and perſons heretofore priviledged, and others admitted by the Canon Law, only excepted.) Nor that any hereafter do preach, maintain, teach, inform openly or in ſecret, or make or write any Book contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of the holy Church. Nor that any hereafter make any Conventicles or Aſſemblies, or keep and exerciſe any manner of Schools touching this Sect, wicked Doctrine and Opinion. And further, That no man hereafter ſhall by any means favour any ſuch preacher, any ſuch maker of unlawful Aſſemblies, or any ſuch Book-maker or writer; and finally any ſuch Teacher, Informer, or ſtirrer up of the people. And that all and ſingular perſons having any the ſaid Books, Writings, Schedules containing the ſaid wicked Doctrines and Opinions, ſhall within forty days after this preſent Proclamation and Statute, really and effectually deliver, or cauſe to be delivered all and ſingular the ſaid Books and Writings unto the Ordinary of the ſame place. And if it ſhall happen any perſon or perſons, of what kind, ſtate or condition ſoever he or they be, to do or attempt any manner of thing contrary to this preſent Proclamation and Statute, or not to deliver the ſame Books in form aforeſaid: That then the Ordinary of the ſame place in his own Dioceſs, by Authority of the ſaid Proclamation and Statute ſhall cauſe to be Arreſted and detained under ſafe cuſtody the ſaid perſon or perſons in this caſe defamed and evidently ſuſpected, or any of them, until he or they ſo offending have by order of Law purged him or themſelves as touching the Articles laid to his or their charge in this behalf; or until he or they have denied and recanted (according to the Laws Eccleſiaſtical) the ſaid wicked Sect, Preachings, Teachings, and Heretical and Erroneous Opinions. And that the ſaid Ordinary by himſelf or his Commiſſaries proceed openly and judicially to all the effect of Law againſt the ſaid perſons ſo Arreſted and remaining under ſafe cuſtody, and that he end and determine the matter within three months after the ſaid Arreſt (all delaies and excuſes ſet apart) according to the order and cuſtom of the Canon Law. And if any perſon, in any cauſe above-mentioned, ſhall be Lawfully convicted before the Ordinary of the Dioceſs or his Commiſſaries; that then the ſaid Ordinary may Lawfully cauſe the ſaid perſon ſo convicted (according to the manner and quality of his fact) to be laid in any of his own Priſons and there to be kept ſo long as his diſcretion ſhall be thought expedient.

And further, The ſaid Ordinary (except in caſes by the which according to the Canon Law the party offending ought to be delivered unto the Secular power) ſhall charge the ſaid perſon with ſuch a Fine of mony to be paid unto the Kings Majeſty, as he ſhall think competent for the manner and quality of his offence. And the ſaid Dioceſan ſhall be bound to give notice of the ſaid Fine, into the Kings Majeſties Exchequer, by his Letters Patent under his Seal; to the intent that the ſaid Fine may be Levied to the Kings Majeſties uſe of the Goods of the perſon ſo convict.

And further, If any perſon within this Realm and other the Kings Majeſties Dominions ſhall be convicted before the Ordinary of the place, or his Commiſſaries, of the ſaid wicked Preachings, Doctrines, Opinions, Schools, and Heretical and Erroneous Informations or any of them; and will refuſe to abjure and recant the ſaid wicked Sect, Preachings, Teachings, Opinions, Schools and Informations; or if, after his abjuration once made, the relapſe be pronounced againſt him by the Dioceſan of the place, or his Commiſſaries (for ſo by the Canon Law he ought to be left to the Secular Power, upon credit given to the Ordinary or his Commiſſaries) that then the Sheriff of the ſame County, the Mayor, Sheriffs, or Sheriff, or the Mayor, or Bayliffs of the ſame City, Village, or Borough of the ſame County, and neareſt inhabiting to the ſaid Ordinary, or his ſaid Commiſſaries, ſhall perſonally be preſent, as oft as they ſhall be required, to confer with the ſaid Ordinary or his Commiſſaries in giving Sentence againſt the ſaid perſons offending or any of them: And, after the ſaid Sentence ſo pronounced, ſhall take unto them the ſaid perſons ſo offending, and any of them, and cauſe them openly to be burned in the ſight of all the people; to the intent that this kind of puniſhment may be a terror unto others, that the like wicked Doctrines and Heretical Opinions, or Authors and favourers thereof be no more maintained within this Realm and Dominions, to the great hurt (which God forbid) of Chriſtian Religion, and Decrees of holy Church. In all which and ſingular the Premiſſes, concerning the Statute aforeſaid, let the Sheriff, Mayors, and Bailiffs of the ſaid Counties, Cities, Villages and Boroughs be attendant, aiding and favouring the ſaid Ordinaries and their Commiſſaries.

KING Hen. 4. A bloody Statute.

By this bloody Statute ſo ſeverely and ſharply enacted againſt theſe ſimple men, here halt thou (gentle Reader) a little to ſtay with thy ſelf, and to conſider the nature and condition of this preſent World, how it hath been ſet and bent ever from the beginning, by all might, counſel, and ways poſſible to ſtrive againſt the ways of God, and to overthrow that which he will have ſet up. And although the World may ſee by infinite ſtories and examples, that it is but in vain to ſtrive againſt him; yet ſuch is the nature of this World (all ſet in malignity) that it will not ceaſe ſtill to be like it ſelf.

The like Law and Statute in the time of Diocleſian and Maximinus was attempted, as before appeareth, and for the more ſtrength was written alſo in Tables of Braſs, to the intent that the Name of Chriſt ſhould utterly be extinguiſhed for ever. And yet the Name of Chriſt remaineth, where that Brazen Law remained not three years. The which Law written then in Braſs, although it differ in manner and form from this our Statute Ex Officio, yet to the ſame end and cruelty, to ſpill the Blood of Saints there is no difference between the one and the other. Neither is there any diverſity touching the firſt Original doer, and worker of them both. For the ſame Satan which then wrought his uttermoſt againſt Chriſt, before he was bound up; the ſame alſo, now after his looſing out, doth what he can, though not after the ſame way, yet to the ſame intent. For then with outward violence, as an open Enemy, he did what he could: Now by a more covert way, under the title of the Church, he impugneth the Church of Chriſt, uſing a more ſubtile way to deceive, under gay pretenced titles; but no leſs pernicious in the end whereto he ſhooteth, as well appeareth by this bloody Statute Ex Officio, the ſequel whereof coſt afterward many a Chriſtian mans life. As in proceſs of ſtory remaineth more hereafter (Chriſt willing) to be declared.

The Laws Maximini and the Statute Ex Officio compared.

Furthermore, for the more fortification of this Statute of the King aforeſaid, concurreth alſo another conſtitution made much about the ſame time by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Arundel. So that no induſtry nor policy of man here did lack to ſet the matter forward, but ſpecially on the Biſhops parts, who left no means unattempted, how to ſubvert the right ways of the Lord.

Firſt, In moſt diligent and exquiſite execution of the Kings Statute ſet forth; the execution whereof they did ſo exactly apply, that marvel it is to conſider, all other Laws of Kings (commonly, be they never ſo good) to be ſo coldly kept, and this only among all the reſt ſo nearly followed. But herein is to be ſeen the diligence of the Romiſh Prelates, which never let any thing fall, that maketh for the dignity of their Eſtate.

Secondly, Beſide their vigilant care in ſeeing the Kings Statute to be executed, no leſs induſtrious alſo were they in adding thereunto more conſtitutions of their own, as from time to time appeareth as well by other Archbiſhops hereafter, and by Pope Martine, as alſo by this conſtitution here preſent made by Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop.

But before we enter to the relation of theſe aforeſaid conſtitutions of the Clergy-men, here cometh in more to be ſaid and noted touching the foreſaid Statute Ex Officio, to prove the ſame not only to be cruel and impious, but alſo to be of it ſelf of no force and validity for the burning of any perſon for cauſe of Religion: for the diſproof of which Statute we have ſufficient Authority remaining as yet in the Parliament Rolls to be ſeen in her Majeſties Court of Records; which here were to be debated at large, but that upon ſpecial occaſion we have deferred the ample

KING Hen. 4. ample diſcourſe thereof to the cruel perſecution of the Lord Cobham hereafter enſuing, as may appear in the defence of the Lord Cobham againſt Nicolas Harpesfield, under the title and name of Alanus Copus. And thus referring them for the examination of this Statute to the place aforeſaid, let us now return to Thomas Arundel, and his bloody conſtitutions above-mentioned. The ſtyle and tenor whereof, to the intent the rigor of the ſame may appear to all men, I thought here-under to adjoyn, in words as followeth:

The conſtitution of Thomas Arundel againſt the followers of Gods Truth.

A cruel Conſtitution by the Archbiſhop againſt the Goſpellers, with thirteen Articles.

THomas by the permiſſion of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the See Apoſtolick; To all and ſingular our Reverend Brethren fellow-Biſhops, and our Suffragans; and to Abbots, Priors, Deans of Cathedral Churches, Archdeacons, Provoſts and Canons; alſo to all Parſons, Vicars, Chaplains, and Clerks in Pariſh-Churches, and to all Lay-men, whom and whereſoever dwelling within our Province of Canterbury, greeting, and grace to ſtand firmly in the Doctrine of the holy Mother-Church. It is a manifeſt and plain caſe, that he doth wrong and injury to the moſt reverend Counſel, who ſo revolteth from the things being in the ſaid Counſel once diſcuſſed and decided. And whoſoever dare preſume to diſpute of the Supreme or Principal Judgment here in Earth, in ſo doing incurreth the pain of Sacriledge, according to the Authority of civil wiſdom and manifold tradition of humane Law. Much more then they, who truſting to their own wits are ſo bold to violate and with contrary Doctrine to reſiſt, and in word and deed to contemn the Precepts of Laws and Canons, rightly made and proceeding from the Key-bearer and Porter of Eternal Life and Death; bearing the room and perſon not of pure man, but of True God here in Earth: which alſo have been obſerved hitherto of the holy Fathers our predeceſſors unto the glorious effuſion of their blood, and voluntary ſprinkling out of their brains, are worthy of greater puniſhment, deſerving quickly to be cut off, as rotten members from the body of the Church Militant. For ſuch ought to conſider what is in the Old Teſtament written; Moſes and Aaron among his prieſts, that is, were chief Heads amonſt them. And in the New Teſtament, among the Apoſtles there was a certain difference. And though they were all Apoſtles, yet was it granted of the Lord to Peter, that he ſhould bear preeminence above the other Apoſtles; and alſo the Apoſtles themſelves would the ſame, that he ſhould be the Chieftain over all the reſt. And being called Cephas; that is, Head, ſhould be a Prince over the Apoſtles. Unto whom it was ſaid, Thou being once converted, confirm thy Brethren: as though he would ſay, If there happen any doubt among them, or if any of them chance to err and ſtray out of the way of Faith, of juſt Living, or right Converſation, do thou confirm and reduce him in the right way again. Which thing no doubt the Lord would never have ſaid unto him, if he had not ſo minded, that the reſt ſhould be obedient unto him. And yet all this notwithſtanding, we know and daily prove that we are ſorry to ſpeak, how the old Sophiſter, the Enemy of mankind foreſeeing and fearing leſt the ſound Doctrine of the Church, determined from ancient times by the Holy fore-Fathers ſhould withſtand his malice, if it might keep the people of God in Unity of Faith under one Head of the Church) doth therefore endeavour by all means poſſible to extirpe the ſaid Doctrine, faining vices to be vertues. And ſo, under falſe pretences of verity diſſimuled, he ſoweth diſcord in Catholick people, to the intent that ſome going one way, ſome another, he in the mean time may gather to himſelf a Church of the malignant, differing wickedly from the univerſal Mother holy Church. In the which, Satan transforming himſelf into an Angel of Light, bearing a lying and deceitful ballance in his hand, pretendeth great Righteouſneſs, in contrarying the ancient Doctrine of the holy Mother-Church, and refuſing the Traditions of the ſame determined and appointed by holy Fathers; perſwading men (by fained forgeries) the ſame to be naught, and ſo inducing other new kinds of Doctrine, leading to more goodneſs, as he by his lying perſwaſions pretendeth, although he in very truth neither willeth nor mindeth any goodneſs, but rather that he may ſow Schiſms, whereby divers Opinions, and contrary to themſelves, being raiſed in the Church, Faith thereby may be diminiſhed, and alſo the Reverend Holy Myſteries through the ſame contention of words may be prophaned with Pagans, Jews, and other Infidels, and wicked Miſcreants. And ſo that Figure in Apoc. 6. is well verified, ſpeaking of him that ſate on the black Horſe, bearing a pair of Ballance in his hand, by the which Hereticks are underſtood. Who at the firſt appearance, like to Weights or Ballance, make as though they would ſet forth right and juſt things, to allure the hearts of the hearers. But afterward appeareth the black Horſe, that is to ſay, their intention, full of curſed ſpeaking. For they under a divers ſhew and colour of a juſt Ballance, with the Tail of a black Horſe ſprinkling abroad Hereſies and Errors, do ſtrike. And being Poiſoned themſelves, under colour of good, raiſe up infinite ſlanders, and by certain perſons fit to do miſchief do publiſh abroad as it were the ſugred taſte of Hony mixt with Poyſon, thereby the ſooner to be taken: working and cauſing through their ſlight and ſubtilties, that error ſhould be taken for verity, wickedneſs for holineſs and for the true will of Chriſt: Yea and moreover the foreſaid perſons thus pricked out do preach before they be ſent, and preſume to ſow the Seed, before the Seed diſcreetly be ſeparate from the Chaff. Who not pondering the Conſtitutions and Decrees of the Canons, provided for the ſame purpoſe againſt ſuch Peſtilent ſowers, do prefer ſacrifice Diabolical (ſo to term it) before obedience to be given to the holy Church Militant.

Apoc. 6.

The Figure of the black Horſe in the Apoc. Doorly expounded.

We therefore conſidering, and weighing, that error which is not reſiſted ſeemeth to be allowed, and that he openeth his boſom too wide, which reſiſteth not the Viper thinking there to thruſt out her Venom; And willing moreover to ſhake off the duſt from our feet, and to ſee to the honour of our holy Mother-Church, whereby one uniform holy Doctrine may be ſowen and planted in the Church of God (namely in this our Province of Canterbury) ſo much as in us doth lie, to the increaſe of Faith and Service of God, firſt rooting out the evil weeds and offendicles which by the means of perverſe Preaching and Doctrine have ſprung up hitherto, and are like more hereafter to grow; purpoſing by ſome convenient way with all diligence poſſible to withſtand them in time, and to provide for the peril of Souls, which we ſee to riſe under pretence of the Premiſſes; alſo to remove all ſuch Obſtacles, by which the ſaid our purpoſe may be ſtopped; by the advice and aſſent of all our Suffragans and other Prelates, being preſent in this our Convocation of the Clergy, as alſo of the Procurators of them that be abſent, and at inſtant the Petition of the Procurators of the whole Clergy within this our Province of Canterbury, for the more fortification of the Common Law in this part, adding thereunto puniſhment and penalties condign as be here under written, we will and Command, Ordain, and Decree:

Behold the true Image of Wolves under Sheeps clothing.

That no manner of perſon, Secular or Regular, being Authorized to preach by the Laws now preſcribed, or Licenſed by ſpecial priviledge, ſhall take upon him the Office of preaching the Word of God, or by any means preach unto the Clergy or Laity, either within the Church or without, in Engliſh, except he firſt preſent himſelf, and be examined of the Ordinary of the place, where he preacheth. And ſo being found a fit perſon, as well in manners as knowledge, he ſhall be ſent by the ſaid Ordinary to ſome one Church or more, as ſhall be thought expedient by the ſaid Ordinary, according to the quality of the perſon. Nor any perſon aforeſaid ſhall preſume to preach, except firſt he give faithful ſignification in due form of his ſending and Authority, that is, that he that is Authorized do come in form appointed him in that behalf; and thoſe, that affirm they come by ſpecial priviledge do ſhew their priviledge unto the Parſon or Vicar of the place where they preach. And thoſe, that pretend themſelves to be ſent by the Ordinary of the place, ſhall likewiſe ſhew the Ordinaries Letters made unto him for that purpoſe, under his Great Seal. Let us always underſtand, the Curate (having the perpetuity) to be ſent of right unto the people of his own Cure. But if any perſon aforeſaid ſhall be forbidden by the Ordinary of the place, or any other Superior, to preach by reaſon of his Errors or Hereſies which before peradventure he hath preached and taught; that then and from thenceforth

The firſt Conſtitution.

No prieſts to preach but by limitation of the Prelates.

Blaſphemy not of pure man, but of true God. He meaneth here of Tho. Becket his predeceſſor, who had his brains beat out in the time of King Henry the ſecond. Scripture clerkly applied. This jeer hangeth together like Germans lips.

Rome Lord of Supremacie. Mark this you Grammarians. Mark well the Popes Divinity. An argument far fet that true Doctrine conſiſteth in maketh one Head of the Church.

How aptly he painteth the proceedings of his own Popiſh Church.

forth he abſtain from preaching within our Province, until he have purged himſelf, and be Lawfully admitted again to preach by the juſt arbitrement of him that ſuſpended and forbade him. And ſhall always after that carry with him, to all places whereſoever he ſhall preach, the Letters Teſtimonial of him that reſtored him.

Moreover the Pariſh-Prieſts or Vicars Temporal, not having perpetuities, nor being ſent in form aforeſaid, ſhall ſimply preach in the Churches where they have charge, only thoſe things which are expreſly contained in the Provincial conſtitution ſet forth by John our predeceſſor, of good memory, to help the ignorance of the Prieſts, which beginneth, Ignorantia Sacerdotum. Which Book of Conſtitutions we would ſhould be had in every Pariſh-Church in our Province of Canterbury, within three months next after the publication of theſe Preſents, and (as therein is required) that it be effectually declared by the Prieſts themſelves yearly, and at the times appointed. And leſt this wholſom Statute might be thought hurtful to ſome, by reaſon of payment of mony, or ſome other difficulty: we therefore Will and Ordain, That the Examinations of the perſons aforeſaid, and the making of their Letters by the Ordinary be done gratis and freely, without any exaction of mony at all by thoſe to whom it ſhall appertain: And if any man ſhall willingly preſume to violate this our Statute grounded upon the old Law; after the publication of the ſame he ſhall incur the ſentence of greater Excommunication ipſo facto: whoſe Abſolution we ſpecially reſerve by Tenor of theſe Preſents to us and our ſucceſſors. But if any ſuch preacher deſpiſing this wholſom Statute, and not weighing the ſentence of greater Excommunication, do the ſecond time take upon him to preach; ſaying and alledging, and ſtoutly affirming, that the ſentence of greater Excommunication aforeſaid cannot be appointed by the Church in the perſons of the Prelates of the ſame; That then Superiors of the place do worthily rebuke him, and forbid him from the Communion of all Faithful Chriſtians.

A jolly mean to bring the World into ſuch darkneſs.

And that the ſaid perſon hereupon Lawfully convicted (except he recant and abjure after the manner of the Church) be pronounced an Heretick by the Ordinary of the place. And that from thenceforth he be reputed and taken for an Heretick and Schiſmatick, and that he incur (ipſo facto) the penalties of Hereſie and Schiſmatic, expreſſed in the Law; And chiefly that his goods be adjudged confiſcate by the Law, and apprehended, and kept by them to whom it ſhall appertain. And that his fautors, receivers, and defenders being convicted, in all caſes be likewiſe puniſhed, if they ceaſe not off within one month being lawfully warned thereof by their Superiors.

Conſtit. 2. Furthermore, no Clergy-man, or Parochians of any Pariſh or Place within our Province of Canterbury ſhall admit any man to preach within their Churches, Church-yards, or other places whatſoever, except firſt there be manifeſt knowledge had of his Authority, Priviledge, or ſending thither, according to the order aforeſaid: Otherwiſe the Church, Church-yard, or what place ſoever, in which it was ſo preached, ſhall ipſo facto receive the Eccleſiaſtical Interdict, and ſo ſhall remain Interdicted, until they that ſo admitted and ſuffered him to preach, have reformed themſelves, and obtained the place ſo Interdicted to be releaſed in due form of Law, either from the Ordinary of the place, or elſe his Superior.

Conſtit. 3. Moreover, like as a Houſholder caſteth Wheat into the Ground (well ordered for that purpoſe) thereby to get the more increaſe: even ſo we will and command, That the preacher of Gods Word, coming in form aforeſaid, preaching either unto the Clergy or Laity, according to his matter proponed, ſhall be of good behavior, ſowing ſuch ſeed as ſhall be convenient for his Auditory. And chiefly preaching to the Clergy, he ſhall touch the vices commonly uſed amongſt them, and to the Laity he ſhall declare the vices commonly uſed among them, and not otherwiſe. But if he preach contrary to this order, then ſhall he be ſharply puniſhed by the Ordinary of that place, according to the quality of that offence.

What tyranny is this to bind the preachers mouth what to ſay?

Conſtit. 4. Item, Foraſmuch as the part is vile, that agreeth not with the whole; we do Decree and Ordain, That no preacher aforeſaid, or any other perſon whatſoever, ſhall otherwiſe teach or preach concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, Matrimony, confeſſion of Sins, or any other Sacrament of the Church, or Article of the Faith, than that already is diſcuſſed by the holy Mother-Church, nor ſhall bring any thing in doubt that is determined by the Church, nor ſhall to his knowledge privily or apertly pronounce Blaſphemous words concerning the ſame; nor ſhall teach, preach, or obſerve any Sect, or kind of Hereſie whatſoever, contrary to the wholſom Doctrine of the Church. He that ſhall wittingly and obſtinately attempt the contrary, after the publication of theſe Preſents, ſhall incur the ſentence of Excommunication ipſo facto. From the which (except in point of death) he ſhall not be Abſolved, until he hath reformed himſelf by abjuration of his Hereſie, at the diſcretion of the Ordinary in whoſe Territory he ſo offended, and hath received wholſom Penitence for his offences. But if the ſecond time he ſhall ſo offend, being Lawfully convicted, he ſhall be pronounced an Heretick, and his Goods confiſcate, and apprehended, and kept by them to whom it ſhall appertain. The Penance before-mentioned, ſhall be after this manner: If any man contrary to the determination of the Church, that is, in the Decrees, Decretals, or our Conſtitutions Provincial, do openly or privily teach or preach any kind of Hereſie or Sect; he ſhall in the Pariſh-Church of the ſame place, where he ſo preached, upon one Sunday or other Solemn day, or more, at the diſcretion of the Ordinary, and as his offence is more or leſs, expreſly revoke that he ſo preached, taught or affirmed, even at the time of the Solemnity of the Maſs, when the people are moſt aſſembled, and there ſhall effectually and without fraud preach, and teach the very truth determined by the Church: and further ſhall be puniſhed after the quality of his offence, as ſhall be thought expedient to the diſcretion of the Ordinary.

Conſtit. 5. Item, Foraſmuch as a new Veſſel, being long uſed, ſavoureth after the head, we Decree and Ordain, That no School-maſters and Teachers whatſoever, that inſtruct Children in Grammar, or others whoſoever in Primitive Sciences, ſhall in teaching them intermingle any thing concerning the Catholick Faith, the Sacrament of the Altar, or other Sacraments of the Church, contrary to the determination of the Church. Nor ſhall ſuffer their Scholars to expound the Holy Scriptures, (except the Text aſhath been uſed in ancient time) nor ſhall permit them to diſpute openly or privily concerning the Catholick Faith, or Sacraments of the Church. Contrariwiſe, the offender herein ſhall be grivouſly puniſhed by the Ordinary of the place, as a favourer of Errors and Schiſms.

A Caveat for School-maſters.

Conſtit. 6. Item, For that a new way doth more frequently lead aſtray, than an old way: we Will and Command, That no Book or Treatiſe made by John Wickliff, or other whomſoever, about that time or ſithence, or hereafter to be made, be from henceforth read in Schools, Halls, Hoſpitals, or other places whatſoever, within our Province. of Canterbury aforeſaid, except the ſame be firſt examined by the Univerſity of Oxford or Cambridge, or at the leaſt by twelve perſons, whom the ſaid Univerſities or one of them ſhall appoint to be choſen at our diſcretion, or the laudable diſcretion of our predeceſſors: and the ſame being examined, as aforeſaid, to be expreſly approved and allowed by us or our ſucceſſors, and in the name and authority of the Univerſity, to be delivered unto the Stationers to be Copied out, and the ſame to be ſold at a reaſonable price, the Original thereof always after to remain in ſome Cheſt of the Univerſity. But if any man ſhall read any ſuch kind of Book in Schools or otherwiſe, as aforeſaid, he ſhall be puniſhed as a ſower of Schiſm, and a favourer of Hereſie, as the quality of the fault ſhall require.

Books of John Wickliff forbidden.

Conſtit. 7. Item, It is a dangerous thing (as witneſſeth bleſſed St. Hierom) to Tranſlate the Text of the Holy Scripture out of one Tongue into another: for in the Tranſlation the ſame ſenſe is not always eaſily kept, as the ſame St. Hierom confeſſeth, that although he were inſpired, yet ofttentimes in this he erred: We therefore Decree and Ordain, That no man hereafter by his own Authority Tranſlate any Text of the Scripture into Engliſh, or any other Tongue, by way of a Book, Libel or Treatiſe, and that no man read any ſuch Book, Libel or Treatiſe, now lately ſet forth in the time of John Wickliff, or ſithence, or hereafter to be ſet forth, in part or in whole, privily, or apertly, upon pain of greater Excommunication, until the ſaid Tranſlation be allowed by the Ordinary of the place, or (if the caſe ſo require) by the Counſel Provincial. He that ſhall

He confeſſeth that St. Hierom erred in his tranſlation. And yet the ſaid Archbiſhop commendeth Queen Anne, for having the Scripture in Engliſh.

A bar for the preachers.

do

KING 1 Hen. 4.

do contrary to this, ſhall likewiſe be puniſhed as a favourer of error and hereſie.

Conſtit. 8.

Item, For that Almighty God cannot be expreſſed with any Philoſophical terms, or otherwiſe invented of man: And St. Auguſtine ſaith, That he hath oftentimes revoked ſuch concluſions as have been moſt true, becauſe they have been offenſive to the ears of the Religious: We do ordain and ſpecially command, that no manner of perſon of what ſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he be, do alledge or propone any Concluſions or Propoſitions contrary to the Catholick Faith, or repugnant to good manners, (except neceſſary Doctrine pertaining to their faculty of teaching or diſputing in their ſchools or otherwiſe) although they defend the ſame with never ſo curious terms and words. For as ſaith bleſſed St. Hugh of the Sacraments, That which oftentimes is well ſpoken is not well underſtood. If any man therefore, after the publication of theſe preſents, ſhall be convict wittingly to have proponed ſuch Concluſions or Propoſitions, except (being moniſhed) he reform himſelf in one month by vertue of this preſent conſtitution, he ſhall incur the ſentence of greater Excommunication ipſo facto, and ſhall be openly pronounced an Excommunicate, until he hath confeſſed his fault openly in the ſame place where he offended, and hath preached the true meaning of the ſaid Concluſion or Propoſition in one Church or more, as ſhall be thought expedient to the Ordinary.

Terms and Propoſitions not to be obſerved.

Conſtit. 9.

Item, No manner of perſon ſhall preſume to diſpute upon the Articles determined by the Church, as is contained in the Decrees, Decretals, or Conſtitutions Provincial, or in the general Councils: But only to ſeek out the true meaning thereof, and that expreſly, whether it be openly or in ſecret: nor ſhall call in doubt the Authority of the ſaid Decretals or Conſtitutions, or the authority of him that made them, nor teach any thing contrary to the determination thereof: And chiefly concerning the adoration of the Holy Croſs, the worſhipping of Images, of Saints, going on Pilgrimage to certain places, or to the relicks of Saints, or againſt the Oaths, in caſes accuſtomed to be given in both common places, that is to ſay, Spiritual and Temporal. But of all it ſhall be commonly taught and preached, that the Croſs and Image of the Crucifix, and other Images of Saints, in the honour of them whom they repreſent, are to be worſhipped with Proceſſion, bowing of Knees, offering of Frankincenſe, Kiſſing, Oblations, lighting of Candles, and Pilgrimages, * and with all other kind of ceremonies and manners that have been uſed in the time of our predeceſſors, and that giving of Oaths in caſes expreſſed in the Law, and uſed of all men to whom it belongeth in both common places, ought to be done upon the Book of the Goſpel of Chriſt. Contrary unto this whoſoever doth preach, teach, or obſtinately affirm (except he recant in manner and form aforeſaid) ſhall forthwith incur the penalty of Hereſie, and ſhall be pronounced an Heretick, in all effect of Law.

Authority of the Popes Decretal not to be doubted under pain of Hereſie.

Adoration of the Croſs.

* With all abomination.

Conſtit. 10.

Item, We do Decree and Ordain, That no Chaplain be admitted to celebrate in any Dioceſs within our Province of Canterbury, where he was not born, or received not Orders; except he bring with him his Letters of Orders, and Letters commendatory from his Ordinary, and alſo from other Biſhops in whoſe Dioceſs of a long time he hath been converſant, whereby his converſation and manners may appear; ſo that it may be known, whether he hath been defamed with any new Opinions touching the Catholick Faith, or whether he be free from the ſame: otherwiſe, as well he that celebrateth, as he that ſuffereth him to Celebrate, ſhall be ſharply puniſhed at the diſcretion of the Ordinary.

No Prieſts to Celebrate without their Letters of orders.

Conſtit. 11.

Finally, Becauſe thoſe things which newly and unaccuſtomably creep up, ſtand in need of new and ſpeedy help: and where more danger is, there ought to be more wary circumſpection and ſtronger reſiſtance; and not without good cauſe, the leſs noble ought diſcreetly to be cut away that the more noble may the more perfectly be nouriſhed: Conſidering therefore, and in lamentable wiſe ſhewing unto you how the ancient Univerſity of Oxford, which as a fruitful Vine was wont to extend forth her fruitful branches to the honour of God, the great perfection and defence of the Church; now partly being become wild, bringeth forth bitter Grapes, which being undiſcreetly eaten of ancient Fathers, that thought themſelves skilful in the Law of God, hath ſet on edg the Teeth of their Children: and our Province is infected with divers and unfruitful Doctrines, and defiled with a new and damnable name of Lollardy, to the great reproof and offence of the ſaid Univerſity being known in Foreign Countries, and to the great irkſomneſs of the Students there, and to the great damage and loſs of the Church of England, which in times paſt by her vertue as with a ſtrong Wall, was wont to be defended; and now is like to run into ruin not to be recovered: At the ſupplication therefore of the whole Clergy of our Province of Canterbury, and by the conſent and aſſent of all our Brethren and Suffragans, and other the Prelates in this Convocation aſſembled, and the Proctors of them that are abſent, leſt the River being cleanſed, the Fountain ſhould remain corrupt, and ſo the Water coming from thence ſhould not be pure, intending moſt wholſomly to provide for the honour and utility of the holy Mother the Church and the Univerſity aforeſaid; We do Ordain and Decree, that every Warden, Provoſt, or Maſter of every Colledge, or Principal of every Hall within the Univerſity aforeſaid, ſhall once every month at the leaſt diligently inquire in the ſaid Colledge, Hall, or other place where he hath Authority, whether any Scholar or inhabitant of ſuch Colledge or Hall, &c. have holden, alledged, or defended, or by any means proponed any concluſion, propoſition or opinion concerning the Catholick Faith, ſounding contrary to good manners, or contrary to the determination of the Church otherwiſe than appertaineth to neceſſary Doctrine. And if he ſhall find any ſuſpected or defamed herein, he ſhall according to his office admoniſh him to deſiſt. And if after ſuch monition given, the ſaid party offend again in the ſame or ſuch like, he ſhall incur ipſo facto (beſides the penalties aforeſaid) the ſentence of greater Excommunication. And nevertheleſs, if it be a Scholar that ſo offendeth the ſecond time, whatſoever he ſhall afterward do in the ſaid Univerſity, ſhall not ſtand in effect. And if he be a Doctor, a Maſter, or Bachellor, he ſhall forthwith be ſuſpended from any Scholars Act, and in both caſes ſhall loſe the right that he hath in the ſaid Colledge or Hall, whereof he is, ipſo facto; and by the Warden, Provoſt, Maſter, Principal, or other to whom it appertaineth, he ſhall be expelled, and a Catholick by Lawful means forthwith placed in his place. And if the ſaid Wardens, Provoſts, or Maſters of Colledges, or Principals of Halls ſhall be negligent concerning the inquiſition and execution of ſuch perſons ſuſpected and defamed by the ſpace of ten days, from the time of the true or ſuppoſed knowledge of the publication of theſe preſents: that then they ſhall incur the ſentence of greater Excommunication, and nevertheleſs ſhall be deprived ipſo facto, of all the right which they pretend to have in the Colledges, Halls, &c. and the ſaid Colledges and Halls, to be effectually vacant. And after Lawful declaration hereof made by them to whom it ſhall appertain, new Wardens, Provoſts, Maſters, or Principals, ſhall be placed in their places as hath been actuſtomed in Colledges and Halls, being vacant in the ſaid Univerſity. But if the Wardens themſelves, Provoſts, Maſters, or Principals aforeſaid, be ſuſpected and defamed of and concerning the ſaid Concluſions or Propoſitions, or be favourers and defenders of ſuch as do therein offend, and do not ceaſe, being thereof warned by us, or by our Authority, or by the Ordinary of the place: that then by Law they be deprived as well of all ſuch priviledge Scholaſtical within the Univerſity aforeſaid, as alſo of their Right and Authority in ſuch Colledge, Hall, &c. Beſides other penalties aforementioned, and that they incur the ſaid ſentence of greater Excommunication.

Oxford famous for ſincere Religion.

Inquiſition to be made through Colledges and Halls of Oxford.

I would the like were uſed now for the baniſhing of Papiſtry.

But if any man in any caſe of this preſent Conſtitution, or any other above-expreſſed, do raſhly and wilfully preſume to violate theſe our Statutes in any part thereof (although there be another penalty expreſly there limited) yet ſhall he be made altogether unable and unworthy by the ſpace of three years after (without hope of pardon) to obtain any Eccleſiaſtical Benefice within our Province of Canterbury: and nevertheleſs according to all his demerits and the quality of his exceſs, at the diſcretion of his Superior, he ſhall be Lawfully puniſhed. Conſtit. 12.

And

Conſtit. 13. And further, that the manner of proceeding herein be not thought uncertain, conſidering with our ſelves, that although there be a kind of equality in the crime of Hereſie and offending the Prince, as is avouched in divers Laws; yet the fault is much unlike, and to offend the Divine Majeſty requireth greater puniſhment, than to offend the Princes Majeſty; And where it is ſufficient (for fear of danger that might enſue by delaies) to convince by judgment the offender of the Princes Majeſty, proceeding againſt him fully and wholly, with a Citation ſent by Meſſenger, by Letters, or Edict not admitting proof by Witneſſes, and Sentence definitive to be: We do ordain, will, and declare, for the eaſier puniſhment of the offenders in the premiſes, and for the better Reformation of the Church divided and hurt, that all ſuch as are defamed, openly known, or vehemently ſuſpected in any of the caſes aforeſaid, or in Article of the Catholick Faith, ſounding contrary to good manners, by the Authority of the Ordinary of the place or other Superior, be cited perſonally to appear either by Letters, publick Meſſenger being Sworn, or by Edict openly ſet at that place where the ſaid offender commonly remaineth, or in his Pariſh-Church, if he have any certain dwelling-Houſe; Otherwiſe, in the Cathedral Church of the place where he was born, and in the Pariſh-Church of the ſame place where he ſo preached and taught: And afterwards certificate being given, that the Citation was formerly executed againſt the party cited being abſent and neglecting his appearance, it ſhall be proceeded againſt him fully and plainly without ſound or ſhew of Judgment, and without admitting proof by Witneſſes and other Canonical probations. And alſo after Lawful information had, the ſaid Ordinary (all delaies ſet apart) ſhall ſignify, declare, and puniſh the ſaid offender, according to the quality of his offence, and in form aforeſaid; and further, ſhall do according to Juſtice, the abſence of the offender notwithſtanding.

Faſter to offend againſt the Princes Law than againſt the Biſhops.

Given at Oxford.

Who would thought by theſe Laws and Conſtitutions ſo ſubſtantially founded, ſo circumſpectly provided, ſo diligently executed, but that the name and memory of this perſecuted ſort, ſhould utterly have been rooted up, and never could have ſtood? And yet ſuch be the works of the Lord, paſſing all mens admiration, all this notwithſtanding ſo far was it off, that the number and courage of theſe good men was vanquiſhed, that rather they multiplied daily and increaſed. For ſo I find in Regiſters Recorded, that theſe foreſaid perſons, whom the King and the Catholick Fathers did ſo greatly deteſt for Hereticks, were in divers Countries of this Realm diſperſed and increaſed; eſpecially at London, in Lincolnſhire, in Norfolk, in Hereford-ſhire, in Shrewesbury, in Calice, and divers other quarters mo, with whom the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Arundel the ſame time had much ado, as by his own Regiſters doth appear. Albeit ſome there were that did ſhrink, many did revolt and renounce, for danger of the Law. Among whom was John Purvey, which recanted at Paul's-Croſs, of whom more followeth (the Lord willing,) to be ſaid in the Year 1421. Alſo John Edward, Prieſt of the Dioceſs of Lincoln, who revoked in the Greenyard at Norwich, Richard Herbert, and Emmot Willy of London, alſo John Becket, who recanted at London. Item, John Seynons of Lincolnſhire, who was cauſed to revoke at Canterbury. The Articles of whom, which commonly they did hold, and which they were conſtrained to abjure, moſt eſpecially were theſe which follow:

John Purvey, John Edward. John Becket. John Seynons. abjured.

Their Articles.

The Articles.

Firſt, That the Office of the Holy Croſs (ordained by the whole Church) celebrated doth contain Idolatry.

Item, They ſaid and affirmed, That all they which do reverence and worſhip the ſign of the Croſs, do commit Idolatry, and are reputed as Idolaters.

Item, They ſaid and affirmed that the true Fleſh and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is not in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt truly pronounced.

Item, They ſaid and affirmed the Sacrament of the Altar to be Sacramental Bread, not having Life, but only Inſtituted for a memorial of Chriſts Paſſion.

Item, They ſaid and affirmed, That the Body of Chriſt, which is taken on the Altar, is a Figure of the Body of Chriſt as long as we ſee the Bread and Wine. { KING { Hen. 4.

Item, They ſaid and affirmed, That the Decree of the Prelates and Clergy in the Province of Canterbury, in their laſt Convocation, with the conſent of the King and the Nobles in the laſt Parliament againſt him that was burnt lately in the City of London, was not ſufficient to change the purpoſe of the ſaid John, when the ſubſtance of material Bread is even as before in the Sacrament of the Altar it was, no change being made in the nature of Bread.

Item*. That any Lay-man may preach the Goſpel in every place, and may teach it by his own Authority, without the Licenſe of his Ordinary.

* Their Article commonly was thus. That who ſoever teacheth that him the office of a Prieſt, though he have no cure of ſouls nor licenſe of his Ordinary, is bound to preach the Goſpel.

Item, That it is ſin to give any thing to the preaching Friers, to the Minorites, to the Auguſtines, to the Carmelites.

Item, That we ought not to offer at the Funerals of the Dead.

Item, That the confeſſion of ſins to the Prieſt is unneedful.

Item, That every good man (though he be unlearned) is a Prieſt.

Item, That the Infant (though he die unbaptized) ſhall be ſaved.

Item, That neither the Pope, nor the Prelate, neither any Ordinary can compel any man to Swear by any Creature of God, or by the Bible-Book

Item, That the Biſhop, the ſimple man, the Prieſt and Lay-man be of like Authority (as long as they live well.)

Item, That no man is bound to give bodily reverence to any Prelate.

The Examination of the conſtant ſervant of God, William Thorpe.

THus much briefly being ſignified by the way, touching theſe which have been forced in time of this King, to open abjuration: Next coming to our hands the worthy Hiſtory of Maſter William Thorpe, a valiant Warrier, under the Triumphant banner of Chriſt, with the proceſs of his examinations before the foreſaid Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, written by the ſaid Thorpe, and ſtoried by his own Pen, at the requeſt of his Friends, as by his own words in the proceſs hereof may appear. In whoſe Examination (which ſeemeth firſt to begin, Anno 1407) thou ſhalt have good Reader, both to learn and to marvel. To learn, in that thou ſhalt hear truth diſcourſed and diſcuſſed, with the contrary reaſons of the adverſary diſſolved. To marvel, for thou ſhalt behold here in this man the marvellous force and ſtrength of the Lords Might, Spirit, and Grace, working and fighting in his Soldiers, and alſo ſpeaking in their mouths, according to the Word of his promiſe, Luke 21. To the Text of the Story we have neither added nor diminiſhed: but as we have received copied out, and corrected by Maſter William Tindal (who had his own hand writing) ſo we have here ſent it, and ſet it out abroad. Although for the more credit of the matter, I rather wiſhed it in his own natural ſpeech, wherein it was firſt written. Notwithſtanding, to put away all doubt and ſcruple herein, this I thought before to pre-moniſh and teſtify to the Reader, touching the certainty hereof, that they be yet alive which have ſeen the ſelf-ſame Copy in his own old Engliſh, reſembling the true antiquity both of the ſpeech and of the time. The name of whom, as for Record of the ſame, to avouch, is M. Whitehead; who as he hath ſeen the true ancient Copy in the hands of George Conſtantine, ſo hath he given credible relation of the ſame, both to the Printer and to me. Furthermore, the ſaid Maſter Tindal (albeit he did ſomewhat alter and amend the Engliſh thereof, and frame it after our manner) yet not fully in all words but that ſomething doth remain, ſavouring of the old ſpeech of that time. What the cauſes were why this good man and ſervant of Chriſt, W. Thorpe, did write it, and pen it out himſelf, it is ſufficiently declared in his own Preface, ſet before his Book, which here is prefixed in manner as followeth:

This Hiſtory firſt ſet forth and corrected by M. Will. Tindal.

The Preface of William Thorpe.

The Preface.

THe Lord God that knoweth all things, wotteth well that I am right ſorrowful to write to make known this ſentence beneath written: whereby of mine even Chriſtian, ſet in high ſtate and dignity, ſo great blindneſs and malice malice may be known; that they which do preſume of themſelves to deſtroy Vices, and to plant in Men vertues, neither dread to offend God, nor luſt to pleaſe him, as their works do ſhew. For Certes the bidding of God and his Law, which in the praiſing of his moſt Holy name he commandeth to be known and kept of all Men and Women, Young and Old, after the cunning and power that he hath given to them, the Prelates of this Land and their Miniſters, with the covent of Prieſts chiefly conſenting to them, enforce them moſt buſily to withſtand, and deſtroy the Holy Ordinance of God. And there through God is greatly wroth and moved to take hard vengeance, not only upon them that do the evil, but alſo on them that conſent to theſe Antichriſts Limms: which know; or might know their malice and falſhood, and dreſs them not to withſtand their malice and their great pride. Nevertheleſs, four things move me to write this ſentence beneath.

Gods Law muſt be known and followed.

Four cauſes of ſetting forth his examination.

The firſt thing that moveth me hereto is this, That whereas it was known to certain Friends, that I came from the Priſon of Shrewsbury, and as it befel indeed that I ſhould to the Priſon of Canterbury, then divers Friends in divers places ſpake to me full heartily and full tenderly, and counſelled me then if it ſo were that I ſhould be examined before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that if I might in any wiſe, I ſhould write mine appoſing, and mine anſwering. And I promiſed to my ſpecial Friends, that if I might, I would gladly do their bidding as I might.

The ſecond cauſe.

The ſecond thing that moveth me to write this ſentence is this: Divers Friends, which have heard that I have been examined before the Archbiſhop, have come to me in Priſon, and counſelled me buſily and coveted greatly that I ſhould do the ſame thing. And other Brethren have ſent to me, and required on Gods behalf, that I ſhould write but and make known both mine appoſing and mine anſwering, for the profit that (as they ſay) upon my knowledging may come thereof. But this they bad me, that I ſhould be buſie in all my wits, to go as near the ſentence and the words as I could, both that were ſpoken to me, and that I ſpake: peradventure this writing may come another time before the Archbiſhop and his Council. And of this Counſelling I was right glad: for in my conſcience I was moved to do this thing, and to ask hitherto the ſpecial help of God. And ſo then I conſidering the great deſire of divers Friends of ſundry places, according all in one, I occupied all my mind and my wits ſo buſily, that through Gods grace I perceived, by their meaning and their charitable deſire, ſome profit might come there through. For ſoothfaſtneſs and truth hath theſe conditions: whereſoever it is impugned, it hath a ſweet ſmell, and thereof cometh a ſweet ſavour. And the more violently the Enemies dreſs themſelves to oppreſs and to withſtand the truth, the greater and the ſweeter ſmell cometh thereof. And therefore this Heavenly ſmell of Gods Word, will not as a ſmoke paſs away with the Wind: but it will deſcend and reſt in ſome clean ſoul that thirſteth thereafter. And thus ſome deal by this writing may be perceived through Gods grace, how that the Enemies of the truth (ſtanding boldly in their malice) inforce them to withſtand the Freedom of Chriſts Goſpel, for which Freedom Chriſt became Man and ſhed his heart blood. And therefore it is great pity and ſorrow, that many Men and Women do their own wayward will, and buſie them not to know nor to do the pleaſant will of God.

Truth liſteth always a ſweet ſmell behind it.

The Men and Women that hear the truth and ſoothfaſtneſs, and hear or know of this (perceiving what is now in the Church) ought herethrough to be the more moved in all their wits to able them to grace, and to ſet leſſer price by themſelves, that they without tarrying forſake wilfully and bodily all the wretchedneſs of this life, ſince they know not how ſoon, nor when, nor where, nor by whom God will teach them and aſſay their patience. For no doubt, who ever will live piteouſly, that is charitably in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer now here in this life perſecution, in one wiſe or another: that is, if we ſhall be ſaved, it behooveth us to imagin full buſily the vility and foulneſs of ſin, and how the Lord God is diſpleaſed therefore: and ſo of this vility and hideouſneſs of ſin, it behooveth us to buſie us in all our wits, to abhor and hold in our mind a great ſhame of ſin ever, and ſo then we ought to ſorrow heartily therefore, and ever fleeing all occaſion thereof. And then it behooveth us to take upon us ſharp penance, continuing therein, to obtain of the Lord forgiveneſs of our foredone ſins, and grace to abſtain us hereafter from ſin. And if we inforce us not to do this wilfully, and in convenient time, the Lord (if he will not utterly deſtroy and caſt us away) will in divers manners move Tyrants againſt us, to conſtrain us violently to do penance, which we would not do wilfully. And truſt that this doing is a ſpecial grace of the Lord, and a great token of life and mercy. And no doubt who ever will not apply himſelf (as is ſaid before) to puniſh himſelf wilfully, neither will ſuffer patiently, meekly, and gladly the Rod of the Lord, howſoever that he will puniſh him: their wayward wills and their impatiency are unto them earneſt of everlaſting damnation. But becauſe there are but few in number that do able them thus faithfully to grace, to live here ſo ſimply and purely, and without Gall of malice and of Grudging; therefore the lovers of this World hate and purſue them that they know patient, meek, chaſte, and wilfully poor, hating and fleeing all Worldly vanities and Fleſhly luſts. For ſurely their vertuous conditions are even contrary to the manners of this World.

Godly counſel given, if it may be followed.

Perſecution followeth the true Church.

The cauſe why perſecution is ſuffered to come.

The third cauſe.

The third thing that moveth me to write this ſentence is this, I thought I ſhall buſie me in my ſelf to do faithfully, that all Men and Women (occupying all their buſineſs in knowing and in keeping of Gods Commandments) able them ſo to grace, that they might underſtand truly the truth, and have and uſe vertue and prudence, and ſo deſerve to be lightned from above with Heavenly Wiſdom: ſo that all their words and their works may be hereby made pleaſant Sacrifices unto the Lord God; and not only for help of their own ſouls, but alſo for edification of Holy Church. For I doubt not, but all they that will apply them to have this foreſaid buſineſs, ſhall profit full meekly both to Friends and Foes. For ſome Enemies of the truth, through the grace of God, ſhall through Charitable folks be made aſtoniſhed in their conſcience, and peradventure converted from Vices to Vertues: and alſo, they that labour to know and to keep faithfully the biddings of God, and to ſuffer patiently all adverſities, ſhall hereby comfort many friends.

Edification of others neceſſary to be conſidered.

The fourth cauſe.

And the fourth thing that moveth me to write this ſentence is this: I know by my ſudden and unwarned appoſing and anſwering, that all they that will of good heart without faining able themſelves wilfully and gladly, after their cunning and their power, to follow Chriſt patiently, travelling buſily, privily and apertly in work and in word, to withdraw whomſoever that they may from Vices, planting in them (if they may) Vertues comforting them and furthering them that ſtand in grace; ſo that therewith they be born up in vain-glory through preſumption of their wiſdom, nor inflamed with any worldly proſperity, but ever meek and patient; purpoſing to continue ſtedfaſtly in the will of God, ſuffering wilfully and gladly without any grudging whatſoever Rod the Lord will chaſtiſe them with; that then this good Lord will not forget to comfort all ſuch Men and Women in all their Tribulations, and at every point of Temptation that any Enemy purpoſed for to do againſt them. To ſuch faithful Lovers ſpecially, and patient Followers of Chriſt, the Lord ſendeth by his wiſdom from above them which the adverſaries of the truth may not know nor underſtand. But through their old and new unſhamefaſt ſins, thoſe Tyrants and Enemies of ſoothfaſtneſs ſhall be ſo blinded, and obſtinate in evil, that they ſhall ween themſelves to do pleaſant Sacrifices unto the Lord God in their malicious and wrongful purſuing and deſtroying of innocent Mens and Womens bodies; which Men and Women, for their vertuous living, and for their true knowledging of the truth, and their patient, wilful and glad ſuffering of perſecution for righteouſneſs, deſerve through the grace of God, to be Heirs of the endleſs bliſs of Heaven. And for the fervent deſire and great love that theſe men have, as to ſtand in ſoothfaſtneſs and witneſs of it, though they be ſuddenly and unwarnedly brought forth to be appoſed of their Adverſaries; the Holy Ghoſt yet, that moveth and ruleth them through his charity, will in that hour of their anſwering ſpeak in them, and ſhew his wiſdom, that all their Enemies ſhall not gainſay, nor againſtand, lawfully.

The aſſiſtance of God never faileth them that are perſecuted.

And therefore all they that are stedfast in the Faith of God, yea, which through diligent keeping of his Commandments, and for their patient suffering of whatsoever adversity that cometh to them, hope surely in his mercy, purposing to stand continually in perfect charity; For those Men and Women dread not so the adversities of this life, that they will fear (after their cunning and their power) to knowledge prudently the truth of Gods Word, when, where, and to whom they think their knowledging may profit. Yea, and though therefore persecution come to them in one wise or another, Certes they patiently take it, knowing their conversation to be in Heaven. It is an high reward and a special grace of God to have and injoy the everlasting Inheritance of Heaven, for the suffering of one persecution in so short time as is the term of this life. For lo, this Heavenly Heritage and endless reward, is the Lord God himself, which is the best thing that may be. This sentence witnesseth the Lord God himself, whereas he said to Abraham, I am thy meed: And as the Lord said, he was and is the meed of Abraham, so he is of all other his Saints. This most blessed and best meed, he grant to us all for his holy Name, that made us of nought, and sent his only most dear worthy Son, our Lord Jesus Christ to redeem us with his most precious Heart Blood. Amen.

The Examination of William Thorp, Penned with his own Hand Examination of William Thorp before Thomas Arundel Archbishop.

KNown be it to all Men that read or hear this writing, that on the Sunday next after the Feast of S. Peter, that we call Lammas, in the year of our Lord 1407. I William Thorp, being in prison in the Castle of Saltwood, was brought before Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, and Chancellor then of England. And when that I came to him, he stood in a great Chamber and much people about him: and when that he saw me, he went fast into a Closet, bidding all secular Men that followed him to go forth from him soon, so that no man was left then in that Closet but the Archbishop himself: and a Physitian that was called Masveren, Parson of Saint Dunstans in London, and two other Persons unknown to me, which were Ministers of the Law. And I standing before them, by and by the Archbishop said to me; William I know well that thou hast this twenty Winters and more, Travelled about busily in the North Country, and in divers other Countries of England, sowing about false Doctrine, having great business if thou might, with thine untrue teaching and shrewd Will to infect and poison all this Land. But through the Grace of God thou art now withstanded and brought into my ward, so that I shall now Sequester thee from thine evil purpose, and let thee to invenom the sheep of my province. Nevertheless, S. Paul saith: If it may be, as much as in us is, we ought to have peace with all men. Therefore William, if thou wilt now meekly and of good heart, without any feigning kneel down, and lay thy hand upon a Book and kiss it, promising faithfully as I shall here charge thee, that thou wilt submit thee to my correction, and stand to mine Ordinance, and fulfil it duly by all thy cunning and power, thou shalt yet find me gratious unto thee. Then said I to the Archbishop: Sir, Since ye deem me an Heretick, and out of belief, will you give me here audience to tell my believe? And he said, Yea, tell on. And I said, I believe that there is not but one God Almighty, and in this Godhead, and of this Godhead are three Persons, that is; the Father, the Son, and the soothfast Holy Ghost. And I believe that all these three Persons are even in power and in cunning, and in might, full of grace of all goodness. For whatsoever that the Father doth, or can, or will, that thing also the Son doth and can and will; and in all their power, cunning and will, the Holy Ghost is equal to the Father, and to the Son.

Loytering Prelates cannot abide travelling Preachers.

The grace of God and of my Lord of Canterbury be two things.

Your ordinance, and why not Gods ordinance, if it please your grace?

Over this I believe that through counsel of this most blessed Trinity in most convenient time before ordained for the salvation of mankind, the second person of this Trinity was ordained to take the form of Man, that is, the kind of man. And I believe, that this second person, our Lord Jesus Christ, was conceived through the Holy Ghost in the Womb of the Blessed Virgin Mary, without mans seed. And I believe that after nine months Christ was Born of this most Blessed Virgin, without any pain or breaking of the Cloister of her Womb and without filth of her Virginity. KING Hen. 4.

And I believe, that Christ our Saviour was Circumcised in the Eighth day after his Birth, in fulfilling of the Law, and his name was called Jesus, which was so called of the the Angel, before that he was conceived in the Womb of Mary his Mother.

And I believe that Christ, as he was about xxx. years old, was Baptised in the Flood of Jordane of John Baptist: and in the likeness of a Dove the Holy Ghost descended there upon him, a voice heard from Heaven, saying; Thou art my welbeloved Son, in thee I am full pleased.

And I believe that Christ was moved then by the Holy Ghost to go into the Desart, and their he fasted 40. days and 40. nights without bodily Meat and Drink. And I believe that by and by after this fasting, when the manhood of God hungred, the Fiend came to him, and tempted him in Gluttony, in vain glory, and in covetise: But in all those temptations Christ concluded the Fiend, and withstood him. And then without tarrying Jesus began to Preach, and to say unto the people; Do ye penance, for the Realm of Heaven is now at hand.

I believe that Christ in all his time here lived most holily, and taught the Will of his Father most truly: And I believe that he suffered therefore most wronfully greatest reproofs and despitings.

This is under the ceatures of Bread and Wine.

And after this, when Christ would make an end here of this temporal Life, I believe that in the day next before that he would suffer passion in the morn, in form of Bread and of Wine he ordained the Sacrament of his Flesh and his Blood; that is, his own precious Body, and gave it to his Apostles to eat: commanding them, and by them all their after-comers, that they should do it in this form that he shewed to them, use themselves, and teach and commune forth to other Men and Women this most worshipful and holiest Sacrament, in mindfulness of his holiest living, and of his most true Preaching, and of his wilful and patient suffering of the most painful passion.

And I believe that this Christ our Saviour, after that he had ordained this most worthy Sacrament of his own precious Body, went forth wilfully against his Enemies, and he suffered them most patiently to lay their hands most violently upon him, and to bind him, and to lead him forth as a Thief, and to scorn him and buffet him, and all to blow or file him with their spittings. Over this, I believe that Christ suffered most meekly and patiently his Enemies, to ding out with sharp scourges the Blood that was between his skin and his flesh: Yea without grudging Christ suffered the cruel Jews to Crown him with most sharp thorns, and to strike him with a reed. And after, Christ suffered wicked Jews to draw him out upon the Cross, and to nail him thereupon Hand and Foot. And so through his pitiful nailing, Christ shed out wilfully for mans Blood, the Blood that was in the Veins. And then Christ gave wilfully his Spirit into the hands or power of his Father, and so, as he would, and when he would, Christ died wilfully for Mans sake upon the Cross. And notwithstanding that Christ was wilfully, painfully, and most shamefully put to death, as to the World, there was left Blood and Water in his heart, as before ordained, that he would shed out this Blood and this Water for Mans salvation. And therefore he suffered the Jews to make a blind Knight to thrust him in the heart with a Spear, and this Blood and Water that was in his heart, Christ would shed out for Mans love: And after this, I believe that Christ was taken down from the Cross and Buryed. And I believe that on the third day by the power of his Godhead. Christ rose again from death to life. And the Fortieth day thereafter, I believe that Christ ascended up into Heaven, and that he there sitteth on the right hand of the Father Almighty. And the Fiftieth day after his up-going, he sent to his Apostles the Holy Ghost, that he had promised them before; and I believe that Christ shall come and judge all mankind, some to everlasting peace, and some to everlasting pains.

And

KING Hen. 4.

And as I believe in the Father, and in the Son, that they are one God Almighty, so I believe in the Holy Ghost that he is also with them the same God Almighty.

What is the Holy Church.

And I believe in Holy Church, that is, all they that have been, and that now are, and always to the end of the World shall be, a people the which shall endeavour them to know and to keep the Commandments of God, dreading over all things to offend God, and loving and seeking to please him: and I believe, that all they that have had, and yet have, and all they that yet shall have the foresaid vertues, surely standing in the belief of God, hoping stedfastly in his merciful doings, continuing to their end in perfect charity, wilfully, patiently, and gladly suffering persecutions, by the example of Christ, chiefly and his Apostles, all these have their names written in the Book of Life.

The true notes of the true Church.

Therefore I believe, that the gathering together of this people, living now here in this life, is the Holy Church of God; fighting here on Earth against the Fiend, the prosperity of the World, and their filthy lusts. Wherefore, seeing that all the gathering together of this Church before said, and every part thereof, neither coveteth; nor willeth, nor loveth, nor seeketh any thing but to eschew the offence of God, and to do his pleasing will meekly, gladly, wilfully, with all mine heart, I submit my self unto this Holy Church of Christ, to be ever buxom and obedient to the ordinance of it, and of every member thereof, after my knowledge and power by the help of God. Therefore I knowledge now and evermore shall, if God will, that with all my heart, and will all my might, I will submit me only to the rule and governance of them, whom after my knowledge I may perceive by the having and using of the beforesaid vertues, to be Members of the Holy Church. Wherefore these Articles of belief and all other (both of the Old Law, and of the New, which after the Commandment of God any man ought to believe,) and believe verily in my soul, as a sinful deadly wretch, of my cunning and power, ought to believe: praying the Lord God for his holy name to increase my belief, and to help my unbelief.

What Heresie in this belief, I pray you my Lord?

And because to the praising of Gods name, I desire above all things to be a faithful Member of Holy Church, I make this protestation before you all four that are now here present, coveting that all Men and Women that now be absent knew the same: That is, what thing soever before this time I have said or done, or what thing here I shall do or say at any time hereafter, I believe, that all the Old Law and New Law, given and ordained by council of the three Persons of the Trinity, were given and written to the salvation of mankind. And I believe, that these Laws are sufficient for Mans salvation. And I believe every Article of these Laws, to the intent that these Articles ordained and commanded of these three Persons of the most blessed Trinity are to be believed.

The Old Testament and New.

And therefore to the rule and the ordinance of these Gods Laws, meekly, gladly, and wilfully, I submit me with all mine heart; that whosoever can or will by authority of Gods Law, or by open reason, tell me that I have erred or now erre, or any time hereafter shall erre in any Article of belief (from which inconvenience God keep me for his goodness) I submit me to be reconciled, and to be buxsome and obedient unto those Laws of God, and to every Article of them. For by authority specially of these Laws I will, through the Grace of God be united charitably unto these Laws. Yea Sir, and over: this, I believe and admit all the sentences, authorities and reasons of the Saints and Doctors according unto the Holy Scripture, and declaring it truly.

Doctors so to be followed, as they followe the word.

I submit me wilfully and meekly to be ever obedient, after my cunning and power, to all these Saints and Doctors, as they are obedient in work and in Word to God and to his Law, and further not (to my knowledge) nor for any earthly power, Dignity or State, through the help of God. But Sir I pray you tell me, if after your bidding I shall lay my hand upon the Book, to what intent; to swear thereby? And the Archbishop said to me, yea wherefore else? And I said to him; Sir, a Book is nothing else but a thing coupled together of divers creatures, and to swear by any creature, both Gods Law and Mans Law is against it.

To swear by a Book whether it be lawful.

But Sir, this thing I say here to you before these your Clerks, with my foresaid protestation, that how, where, when, and to whom men are bound to swear or to obey in any wise after Gods Law, and Saints, and true Doctors, according with Gods Law; I will through Gods grace be ever ready thereto, with all my cunning and power. But I pray you Sir for the Charity of God, that ye will before that I swear (as I have here rehearsed to you) tell me how or whereto that I shall submit me: and shew me that whereof ye will correct me, and what is the ordinance that ye will thus oblige me to fulfil.

How, where, and when to swear.

And the Archbishop said unto me: I will shortly that now thou swear here to me, that thou shalt forsake all the opinions which the Sect of Lollards hold, and is slandred with: So that after this time, neither privily nor apertly, thou hold any opinion which I shall (after thou hast sworn) rehearse to thee here. Nor shalt thou favour any Man or Woman, young or old, that holdeth any these aforesaid opinions: But after thy knowledge and power thou shalt force thee to withstand all such disstroublers of Holy Church in every Dioces that thou comest in; and them that will not leave their false and damnable opinions, thou shalt put them up, publishing them and their names, and make them known to the Bishop of the Dioces that they are in, or to the Bishops Ministers. And over this I will that thou Preach no more unto the time that I know by good witness and true, that thy conversation be such, that thy heart and thy mouth accord truly in one, contrarying all the lewd learning that thou hast taught here before.

And I hearing these words thought in my heart that this was an unlawful asking; and deemed my self Cursed of God, if I consented hereto, and I thought how Susan said: Anguish is to me on every side. And in that I stood still and spake not, the Archbishop said to me; Answer one way or other: and I said; Sir, if I consented to you thus as ye have herebefore rehearsed to me, I should become an appealer, or every Bishops espie, Somoner of all England. For if I should thus put up and publish the names of Men and Women, I should herein deceive full many persons: Yea Sir, as it is likely by the doom of my conscience, I should herein be cause of the death both of Men and Women, yea both Bodily and Ghostly. For many Men and Women that stand now in the way of Salvation, if I should for the learning and reading or their belief publish them therefore up to the Bishops or to their unpiteous Ministers, I know some deal by experience that they should be so disstroubled and diseased with persecution or otherwise, that many of them (I think) would rather chuse to forsake the way of truth than to be travelled, scorned, slandred or punished, as Bishops and their Ministers now use to constrain Men and Women to consent to them.

Behold the Popish proceedings whereto they tend.

But I find in no place in Holy Scripture, that this Office, that ye would now inseoffe me with, accordeth to any Priest of Christs Sect, nor to any other Christian Man: and therefore to do this were to me a full noyous bond to be bounden with, and over grievour charge. For I suppose, that if I thus did, many Men and Women would, yea Sir, might justly to my confusion say to me, that I wer a Traytor to God and to them: since (as I think in mine heart) many Men and Women trust so mickle in this case, that I would not for saving of my life do thus to them. For if I thus should do, full many Men and Women would (as they might full truly) say that I had falsly and cowardly forsaken the truth, and slandered shamefully the Word of God. For if I consented to you to do here after your will, for bonchief or mischief that may befal unto me in this life, I deem in my conscience, that I were worthy heretofore to be Cursed of God and also of all his Saints: from which inconvenience keep me and all Christian people, Almighty God, now and ever for his Holy Name. And then the Archbishop said unto me: Oh, thine heart is full hard indurate, as was the heart of Pharao, and the Devil hath overcomen thee, and perverted thee, and he hath so blinded thee in all thy wit, that thou hast no grace to know the truth, nor the measure of mercy that I have profered to thee. Therefore, as I perceive now by thy foolish answer, thou hast no will to leave thine old errors.

No marvel why: for Christ and Antichrist how can they agree?

It is pretty when Pharao judged Moses hard hearted. Where learned you my Lord to call your Brother Racha?

But I say to thee lewd lossel, either quickly consent thou to mine ordinance, and submit thee to stand to my decrees, or by Saint Thomas thou shalt be degraded, and follow thy Fellow into Smithfield. And at this saying I stood still and spake not, but I thought in mine heart, that God did to me great grace, if he would of his great mercy bring me to ſuch an end. And in mine heart I was nothing afraid with this menacing of the Archbiſhop. And I conſidered there two things in him. One, that he was not yet ſorrowful that he had made William Sautre wrongfully to be burnt: and as I conſidered, that the Archbiſhop thirſted yet after more ſhedding out of innocent Blood: And faſt therefore I was moved in all my wits, to hold the Archbiſhop neither for Prelate nor for Prieſt of God: And for that mine inward Man was thus altogether departed from the Archbiſhop, me thought I ſhould not have any dread of him. But I was right heavy and ſorrowfull, for that there was no audience of ſecular Men by; but in my heart I prayed the Lord God to comfort me and ſtrength me againſt them that there were againſt the ſoothfaſtneſs. And I ſuppoſe to ſpeak no more to the Archbiſhop and his Clerks than me need behooved: and all thus I prayed God for his goodneſs to give me then and alway grace to ſpeak with a meek and an eaſie Spirit: and whatſoever thing that I ſhould ſpeak, that I might thereto have true authorities of the Scriptures or open reaſon. And for that I ſtood thus ſtill and nothing ſpake, one of the Archbiſhops Clerks ſaid unto me; What thing muſeſt thou? Do thou as my Lord hath now commanded to thee here.

He meaneth Gods Martyrs, Wil. Sautre.

The order and manner of his bringing up.

And yet I ſtood ſtill and anſwered him not: and then ſoon after the Archbiſhop ſaid to me: Art thou not yet bethought, whether thou wilt do as I have ſaid to thee? And I ſaid then to him; Sir, my Father and my Mother, on whoſe ſouls God have mercy (if it be his will) ſpent mickle Money in divers places about my learning, for the intent to have made me a Prieſt to God. But when I came to years of Diſcretion, I had no will to be Prieſt, and therefore my Friends were right heavy to me, and then me thought their grudging againſt me was ſo painful to me, that I purpoſed therefore to have left their company. And when they perceived this in me, they ſpake ſometime full fair and pleaſant words to me: But for that they might not make me to conſent of good heart to be a Prieſt, they ſpake to me full oftentimes very grievous words, and menaced me in divers manners, ſhewing to me full heavy cheer. And thus one while in fair manner, another while in grievous, they were long time (as me thought) full buſie about me, ere I conſented to them to be a Prieſt.

But at the laſt, when in this matter they would no longer ſuffer mine excuſations, but either I ſhould conſent to them, or I ſhould ever bear their indignation, yea their Curſe (as they ſaid) then I ſeeing this, prayed them that they would give me licence to go to them that were named wiſe Prieſts, and of vertuous converſation, to have their counſel, and to know of them the office and the charge of Prieſthood. And hereto my Father and my Mother conſented full gladly, and gave me their bleſſing and good leave to go, and alſo Money to ſpend in this Journey. And ſo I went to thoſe Prieſts whom I heard to be of beſt name, and of moſt holy living, and beſt learned, and moſt wiſe of Heavenly wiſdom; and ſo I communed with them unto the time, that I perceived by their vertuous and continual occupations, that their honeſt and charitable works paſſed their fame which I had heard before of them.

Wherefore Sir, by the example of the Doctrine of them, and ſpecially for the godly and innocent works which I perceived then of them, and in them, after my cunning and power, I have exerciſed me then and in this time, to know perfectly Gods Laws, having a will and deſire to live thereafter, which willeth that all Men and Women ſhould exerciſe themſelves faithfully thereabout. If then Sir, either for pleaſure of them that are neither ſo wiſe, nor of ſo vertuous converſation to my knowledge, nor by common fame to any other mens knowledge in this Land, as theſe men were of whom I took my counſel and information, I ſhould now forſake thus ſuddenly and ſhortly, and unwarned, all the learning that I have exerciſed my ſelf in theſe thirty winters and more, my conſcience ſhould ever be herewith out of meaſure unquieted: and Sir, I know well, that many Men and Women ſhould be therethrough greatly troubled and ſlandered. And as I ſaid, Sir, to you before, for mine untruth and falſe cowardneſs, many a one ſhould be put into full great reproof: Yea Sir, I dread that many one (as they might then juſtly) would Curſe me full bitterly; and Sir I fear not, but the Curſe of God, which I ſhould deſerve herein, would bring me to a full evil end, if I continued thus. And if through remorſe of conſcience I repented me any time, returning into the way, which you do your diligence to conſtrain me now to forſake: Yea Sir, all the Biſhops of this Land, with full many other Prieſts, would defame me, and purſue me as a relapſe: and they that now have (though I be unworthy) ſome confidence in me, hereafter would never truſt to me, though I could teach and live never ſo vertuouſly, more than I can or may. For if after your counſel I left utterly all my learning, I ſhould hereby firſt wound and defile mine own ſoul, and alſo I ſhould herethrough give occaſion to many Men and Women of full ſore hurting; Yea Sir, as it is likely to me, if I conſented to your will, I ſhould herein by mine evil example in it, as far as in me were, ſlea many folk Ghoſtly, that ſhould never deſerve to have grace of God to the edifying of his Church, neither of my ſelf, nor of any other Mans life, and ſhould be undone both before God and Man.

{KING Hen. 4.}

But Sir, by example chiefly of ſome, whoſe names I will not now rehearſe, of H. of J. P. and B. and alſo by the preſent doing of Philip Rampington, that now is become Biſhop of Lincoln, I am now learned (as many more hereafter through Gods grace ſhall be learned) to hate and to flee all ſuch ſlander that theſe foreſaid men chiefly have defiled principally themſelves with. And in it that in them is, they have invenomed all the Church of God, for the ſlandrous revoking at the Croſs of Pauls, of H. P. and of B. and how now Philip Rampington purſueth Chriſts people. And the feigning that theſe men diſſembled by worldly prudence, keeping them cowardly in their Preaching and communing within the bonds and terms (which without blame may be ſpoken and ſhewed out of the moſt Worldly lives) will not be unpuniſhed of God. For to the point of truth, that theſe men ſhewed out ſometime, they will not now ſtretch forth their lives but by example each one of them as their words and their works ſhew, buſie them through their feigning to ſlander and to purſue Chriſt in his Members, rather than they will be purſued.

Philip Rampington made Biſhop, and a perſecutor.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me: Theſe men, the which thou ſpeakeſt of now, were Fools and Hereticks, when they were counted wiſe men of thee and other ſuch Loſels. But now they are wiſe men, though thou and other ſuch deem them unwiſe. Nevertheleſs, I never wiſt any that right ſaid, that any while were invenomed with your contagiouſneſs, that is, contaminated and ſpotted Doctrine.

Happy be they that continue to the end.

And I ſaid to the Archbiſhop: Sir, I think well that theſe men and ſuch other are now wiſe as to this World: But as their words ſounded ſometime, and their works ſhewed outwardly, it was like to move me that they had earneſt of the wiſdom of God, and that they ſhould have deſerved mickle grace of God to have ſaved their own ſouls and many other mens, if they had continued faithfully in wilful poverty, and in other ſimple vertuous living: and ſpecially if they had with theſe foreſaid vertues continued in their buſie fruitful ſowing of Gods Word: as to many mens knowledge they occupied them a ſeaſon in all their wits; full buſily to know the pleaſant will of God, travelling all their Members full buſily to do thereafter, purely and chiefly to the praiſing of the moſt holy name of God, and for grace of edification and ſalvation of Chriſtian people. But woe worth falſe covetiſe, and evil Counſel and Tyranny, by which they and many Men and Women are led blindly into an evil end.

Woe worth falſe covetiſe.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me; Thou and ſuch other Loſels of thy Sect, would ſhave your heads full near to have a Benefice. For by Jeſus I know none more covetous ſhrews than ye are, when that ye have a Benefice. For loe, I gave to John Purvy a Benefice but a Mile out of this Caſtle, and I heard more complaints about his covetouſneſs for Tithes, and other miſdoings, than I did of all men that were advanced within my Dioceſs.

It is pity the Prelates cannot ſwear. Covetouſneſs joyned with Poliſhneſs.

And I ſaid to the Archbiſhop; Sir, Purvy is neither with you now for the Benefice that you gave him, nor holdeth he faithfully with the learning that he taught and writ before time: and thus he ſheweth himſelf neither to be hot nor cold, and therefore he and his Fellows may ſow fore dread, that if they turn not haſtily to the way that they have forſaken, peradventure they be put out of the number of Chriſts choſen people.

KING Hen 4.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid: Though Purvey be now a falſe Harlot, I quit me now to him: But come he more for ſuch cauſe before me (ere we part) I ſhall know with whom he holdeth. But I ſay to thee: which are theſe holy men and wiſe, of whom thou haſt taken thine information?

A worthy commendation of M. John Wickliff.

And I ſaid: Sir, Maſter John Wickliff was holden of full many Men the greateſt Clerk that they knew then living, and therewith he was named a paſſing ruly Man and an innocent in his living: and therefore great men communed oft with him, and they loved ſo his learning, that they writ it, and buſily inforced them to rule themſelves thereafter. Therefore Sir, this foreſaid learning of M. John Wickliff is yet holden, of full many Men and Women, the moſt agreeable learning unto the living and teaching of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles, and moſt openly ſhewing and declaring how the Church of Chriſt hath been and yet ſhould be ruled and governed. Therefore ſo many Men and Women covet this learning, and purpoſe through Gods grace, to conform their living like to this learning of Wickliff. M. John Aſhton taught and writ accordingly and full buſily, where, and when, and to whom that he might, and he uſed it himſelf right perfectly unto his lives end. And alſo Philip of Rampington, while he was a Canon of Leiceſter, Nicholas Herford, Davy Gotray of Pakring, Monk of Byland, and a Maſter of Divinity, and John Purvey, and many other which were holden right wiſe men and prudent, taught and writ buſily this foreſaid learning, and conformed them thereto. And with all theſe men I was right homely, and communed with them long time and oft: and ſo before all other men I choſe willingly to be informed of them and by them, and ſpecially of Wickliff himſelf, as of the moſt vertuous and godly wiſe man that I heard of or knew. And therefore of him ſpecially, and of theſe men I took the learning that I have taught; and purpoſed to live thereafter (if God will) to my lives end. For though ſome of thoſe men be contrary to the learning that they taught before, I wot well that their learning was true which they taught: and therefore with the help of God I purpoſe to hold and to uſe the learning which I heard of them, while they ſate on Moſes Chair, and ſpecially while that they ſate on the Chair of Chriſt. But after the works that they now do, I will not do with Gods help. For they feign and hide, and contrary the truth, which before they taught out plainly and truly. For as I know well, when ſome of thoſe men have been blamed for their ſlandrous doing: they grant not that they have taught amiſs or erred before time, but that they were conſtrained by pain to leave to tell out the ſooth, and thus they chuſe now rather to blaſpheme God, than to ſuffer a while here perſecution bodily, for ſoothfaſtneſs that Chriſt ſhed out his heart-blood for.

M. John Aſhton, M. Philip Rampington, Nicholas Herford, Davy Gotray, John Purvey.

The Teſtamony for Wickliff out of the mouth of his own adverſary.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid; That learning, that thou calleſt truth and ſoothfaſtneſs, is open ſlander to Holy Church, as it is proved of Holy Church. For albeit that Wickliff your Author was a great Clerk, and though that many men held him a perfect liver: yet his Doctrine is not approved of Holy Church, but many ſentences of his learning are damned as they well worthy are. But as touching Philip of Rampington, that was firſt Canon, and after Abbot of Leiceſter, which is now Biſhop of Lincoln, I tell thee, that the day is commen, for which he faſted the even. For neither he holdeth now, nor will hold the learning that he taught, when he was a Canon of Leiceſter. For no Biſhop of this Land purſueth now more ſharpely them that hold thy way, than he doth.

Many ſuch vigils have our Popiſh Kalenders. Repington became a perſecutor, after he was made Biſhop.

And I ſaid: Sir, full many Men and Women wondreth upon him, and ſpeaketh him mickle ſhame, and holdeth him for a curſed Enemy of the truth.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me: Wherefore taryeſt thou me thus here with ſuch Fables, wilt thou ſhortly (as I have ſaid to thee) ſubmit thee to me or no?

And I ſaid: Sir, I tell you at one word; I dare not for the dread of God ſubmit me to you, after the tenor and ſentence that ye have above rehearſed to me.

And thus as if he had been wroth, he ſaid to one of his Clerks; Fetch hither quickly the certification that came to me from Shrewsbury under the Bailiffs ſeal, witneſſing the Errors and Hereſies, which this Loſel hath venemouſly ſown there.

Then haſtily the Clerk took out, and laid forth on a Cupboord divers Rolls and Writings, among which there was a little one, which the Clerk delivered to the Archbiſhop. And by and by the Archbiſhop read this Roll containing this ſentence.

The third Sunday after Eaſter, the year of our Lord 1407. William Thorp came unto the Town of Shrewsbury, and through leave granted unto him to Preach, he ſaid openly in S. Chads Church in his Sermon, that the Sacrament of the Altar, after the conſecration, was material Bread. And that Images ſhould in no wiſe be worſhipped. And that men ſhould not go on Pilgrimages. And that Prieſts have no Title to Tithes. And that it is not lawful to Swear in any wiſe.

The Sacrament after conſecration, material bread. Articles objected againſt Wil. Thorp.

And when the Archbiſhop had Read thus this Roll, he rolled it up again, and ſaid to me. Is this wholeſome learning to be among the people?

Wholeſome enough for mans ſoul, though not for your kitchin.

And I ſaid: Sir, I am both aſhamed on their behalf, and right ſorrowful for them that have certified you theſe things thus untruly: for I never Preached, nor taught thus privily nor apertly.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I will give credence to theſe worſhipful men which have written to me, and witneſſed under their Seals there among them. Though now thou denieſt this, weeneſt thou that I will give credence to thee? Thou Loſel haſt troubled the worſhipful Communalty of Shrewsbury, ſo that the Bailiffs and Communalty of that Town have written to me, praying me that am Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate and Chancellor of England, that I will vouchſafe to grant them, that if thou ſhalt be made (as thou art worthy) to ſuffer open joureſs for thine Hereſies, that thou may have thy joureſs openly there among them; So that all they whom thou and ſuch other Loſels have there perverted, may through fear of thy deed be reconciled again to the unity of Holy Church. And alſo they that ſtand in true Faith of Holy Church, may through thy deed be more eſtabliſhed therein. And as if this asking well pleaſed the Archbiſhop, he ſaid; By my thrift this hearty prayer and fervent requeſt ſhall be thought on.

O Shrewsbury, thou haſt a cauſe to repent thee in that thou wouldeſt not receive the truth when it was offered thee.

The Romiſh Church muſt be ſtabliſhed by perſecuting of true Preachers.

But certainly, neither the prayer of the men of Shrewsbury, nor the menacing of the Archbiſhop made me any thing afraid. But in rehearſing of this malice, and in the hearing of it, my heart greatly rejoyced, and yet doth. I thank God for the grace that I then thought, and yet think ſhall come to all the Church of God herethrough, by the ſpecial merciful doing of the Lord. And as having no dread of the malice of Tyrants, by truſting ſtedfaſtly in the help of the Lord, with full purpoſe to knowledge the ſoothfaſtneſs, and to ſtand thereby after my cunning and power, I ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, if the truth of Gods word might now be accepted as it ſhould be, I doubt not to prove by likely evidence, that they that are feigned to be out of the Faith of Holy Church in Shrewsbury, and in other places alſo, are in the true Faith of Holy Church. For as their words ſound, and their works ſhew to Mans judgment (dreading and loving faithfully God) their deſire, their will, their love, and their buſineſs are moſt ſet to dread to offend God, and to love to pleaſe him in true and faithful keeping of his commandments. And again, they that are ſaid to be in the Faith of Holy Church in Shrewsbury and in other places, by open evidence of their proud, envious, malicious, covetous, lecherous, and other foul words and works, neither know, nor have will to know, nor to occupy their wits, truly and effectuouſly in the right Faith of Holy Church. Wherefore neither all theſe, nor any that follow their manners, ſhall any time come verily in the Faith of Holy Church, except they inforce them more truly to come in the way which now they deſpiſe. For theſe Men and Women, that are now called faithful and holden juſt, neither know, nor will exerciſe themſelves to know (of faithfulneſs) commandment of God.

A ſure truſt in Gods truth confoundeth the malice of Tyrants.

If the touch-ſtone might try, truth ſhould be known.

The deſcription of the right Chriſtians in Shrewsbury. The Catholicks of Shrewsbury, Shrewsbury, except thou turn from thy wicked ways, thou canſt not receive the truth.

And thus full many Men and Women now, and ſpecially men that are named to be principal Limbs of Holy Church, ſtir God to great wrath, and deſerve his Curſe for that they call or hold them juſt men, which are full unjuſt, as their vicious words, their great cuſtomable ſwearing, and their ſlandrous and ſhameful works ſhew openly and witneſs. And therefore ſuch vicious men and unjuſt in their own confeſſion call them unjuſt men and women, which after their power and cunning buſie themſelves to live juſtly after the commandment of God. And where, Sir, ye ſay that I have diſtroubled the Communalty of Shrewſbury, and many other men and women with my teaching: If it thus be, it is not to be wondred of wiſe men, ſince all the Communalty of the City of Jeruſalem was diſtroubled of Chriſts own perſon, that was very God and Man, and the moſt prudent Preacher that ever was or ſhall be. And alſo all the Synagogue of Nazareth was moved againſt Chriſt, and ſo fulfilled with ire towards him for his preaching, that the men of the Synagogue roſe up and caſt Chriſt out of their City, and led him up to the top of a Mountain to caſt him down there headlong: alſo accordingly hereto the Lord witneſſeth by Moſes, that he ſhall put diſſention betwixt his people, and the people that contrarieth and purſueth his people. Who, Sir, is he that ſhall preach the truth of Gods Word to the unfaithful people, and ſhall let the ſoothfaſtneſs of the Goſpel, and the Propheſie of God Almighty to be fulfilled?

Jeruſalem troubled by the preaching of Chriſt

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, It followeth of theſe thy words, that thou and ſuch other thinkeſt, that ye do right well to preach and teach as ye do, without authority of any Biſhop. For you preſume that the Lord hath choſen you only to preach, as faithful Diſciples and ſpecial Followers of Chriſt.

And I ſaid, Sir, by authority of Gods Law, and alſo of Saints and Doctors I am learned to deem, that it is every Prieſts office and duty to preach buſily, freely, and truly the Word of God. For no doubt every Prieſt ſhould purpoſe firſt in his Soul, and covet to take the Order of Prieſthood, chiefly to make known to the people the word of God, after his cunning and power; approving his words ever to be true by his vertuous works: and for this intent we ſuppoſe that Biſhops and other Prelates of holy Church ſhould chiefly take and uſe their Prelacy, and for the ſame cauſe Biſhops ſhould give to Prieſts their Orders. For Biſhops ſhould accept no man to Prieſthood, except that he had good will and full purpoſe, and were well diſpoſed, and well learned to preach. Wherefore Sir, by the bidding of Chriſt, and by the example of his moſt holy living, and alſo by the witneſſing of his holy Apoſtles and Prophets, we are bound under full great pain, to exerciſe us after our cunning and power (as every Prieſt is likewiſe charged of God) to fulfil duly the Office of Prieſthood. We preſume not here of our ſelves to be eſteemed (neither in our own reputation, nor in none other mans) faithful Diſciples, and ſpecial Followers of Chriſt. But Sir, as I ſaid to you before, we deem this by authority chiefly of Gods Word that it is the chief duty of every Prieſt to buſie him faithfully to make the Law of God known to his people; and ſo to commune the Commandment of God charitably, how that we may beſt, where, when, and to whom that ever we may, is our very duty: and for the will and buſineſs that we owe of due debt to do juſtly our Office through the ſtirring and ſpecial help (as we truſt) of God, hoping ſtedfaſtly in his mercy, we deſire to be the faithful Diſciples of Chriſt, and we pray this gracious Lord for his holy Name, that he make us able to pleaſe him with devout prayers, and charitable Prieſtly works, that we may obtain of him to follow him thankfully.

The word of God ought truly to be preached.

If this Leſſon had been well followed, the world had not been brought to ſuch darkneſs by blind and dumb Prieſts.

An effectuous prayer, God grant in all Miniſters.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Lewd Loſſel, whereto makeſt thou ſuch vain reaſons to me? Asketh not S. Paul, How ſhould Prieſts preach except they be ſent? But I ſent thee never to preach. For thy venomous Doctrine is known throughout England, that no Biſhop will admit thee to preach by witneſſing of their Letters. Why then lewd Idiot, wilt thou preſume to preach, ſince thou art not ſent nor licenſed of thy Soveraign to preach? Saith S. Paul, That Subjects ought to obey their Sovereigns, and not only good and vertuous, but alſo Tyrants that are vicious.

Why he preached without the Biſhops Licence.

He anſwereth to the queſtion concerning the Letter of Licence.

And I ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, as touching your Letter of Licence, or other Biſhops, which, ye ſay, we ſhould have to witneſs that we are able to be ſent to preach: we know well that neither you Sir, nor any other Biſhop of this Land will grant to us any ſuch Letters of Licence, but if we ſhould oblige us to you, and to other Biſhops by unleful Oaths, not to paſs the bounds and terms which ye, Sir, or other Biſhops will limit to us. And ſince in this matter your terms be ſome too large, and ſome too ſtrait; we dare not oblige us thus to be bounden to you to keep the terms, which you will limit to us, as you do to Friers and ſuch other Preachers: and therefore, though we have not your Letter Sir, nor Letters of any other Biſhops written with ink upon Parchment, we dare not therefore leave the Office of preaching (to which preaching all Prieſts after their cunning and power are bound, by divers Teſtimonies of Gods Law, and great Doctors) without any mention making of Biſhops Letters. For as mikle as we have taken upon us the Office of Prieſthood (though we are unworthy thereto) we came and purpoſe to fulfil it with the help of God, by authority of his own Law, and by witneſs of great Doctors and Saints, accordingly hereto truſting ſtedfaſtly in the mercy of God. For that he commandeth us to do the Office of Prieſthood, he will be our ſufficient Letters and Witneſs, if we by example of his holy living and teaching, ſpecially occupy us faithfully to do our Office juſtly; yea the people to whom we preach (be they faithful or unfaithful) ſhall be our Letters; that is, our witneſs-bearers: for the truth where it is ſown may not be unwitneſſed. For all that are converted and ſaved by learning of Gods Word, and by working thereafter, are witneſs-bearers, that the truth and ſoothfaſtneſs, which they heard and did after, is cauſe of their ſalvation. And again, all unfaithful men and women which heard the truth told out to them, and would not do thereafter: alſo all they that might have heard the truth, and would not hear it, becauſe that they would not do thereafter, all theſe ſhall bear witneſs againſt themſelves, and the truth which they would not hear, or elſe heard it and deſpiſed to do thereafter through their unfaithfulneſs, is and ſhall be cauſe of their damnation. Therefore Sir, ſince this aforeſaid witneſſing of God, and of divers Saints and Doctors, and of all the people good and evil, ſufficeth to all true Preachers; we think that we do not the Office of Prieſthood, if that we leave our preaching, becauſe that we have not, or may not have duly Biſhops Letters, to witneſs that we are ſent of them to preach. This ſentence approveth S. Paul, where he ſpeaketh of himſelf and of faithful Apoſtles and Diſciples, ſaying thus, We need no Letters of Commendations as ſome Preachers do, which preach for covetouſneſs of Temporal goods, and for mens praiſing. And where ye ſay Sir, that Paul biddeth Subjects obey their Sovereigns, that is ſooth, and may not be denied. But there be two manner of Sovereigns, vertuous Sovereigns, and vicious Tyrants. Therefore to theſe laſt Sovereigns neither men nor women, that be ſubject, owe to obey in two manners. To vertuous Sovereigns and charitable Subjects they owe to obey wilfully and gladly, in hearing of their good counſel, in conſenting to their charitable biddings, and in working after their fruitful works.

KING Hen. 4.

The inconveniences of feeing of the Biſhops Letter or Licence.

The witneſs of the Preachers is the good life of the followers.

Two manner of Sovereigns.

He meaneth Prelates that be unvertuous.

This ſentence Paul approveth, where he ſaith to Subjects, Be ye mindful of your Sovereigns, that ſpeak to you the word of God, and follow you the Faith of them, whoſe Converſation you know to be vertuous. For as Paul ſaith after, theſe Sovereigns to whom Subjects ought to obey in following of their manners, work buſily in holy ſtudying, how they may withſtand and deſtroy vices, firſt in themſelves, and after in all their Subjects, and how they may beſt plant in them vertues. Alſo their Sovereigns make devout and fervent Prayers to purchaſe Grace of God, that they and their Subjects may over all things dread to offend him, and to love to pleaſe him. Alſo theſe Sovereigns to whom Paul biddeth us obey, as it is ſaid before, live ſo vertuouſly, that all they that will live well, may take of them good example, to know and to keep the Commandments of God. But in this foreſaid wiſe, Subjects ought not to obey nor to be obedient to Tyrants, while they are vicious Tyrants, ſince their will, their counſel, their biddings and their works are ſo vicious, that they ought to be hated and left. And though ſuch Tyrants be maſterful and cruel in boaſting and menacing, in oppreſſions and divers puniſhings: S. Peter biddeth the ſervants of ſuch Tyrants, to obey meekly ſuch Tyrants, ſuffering patiently their malicious crueſneſs. But Peter counſelleth not any ſervant or ſubject to obey any Lord, or Prince, or Sovereign, in any thing that is not pleaſing to God.

Two manners of obeying. 1. In following their doings and examples. 2. In ſuffering their wrongs. Wicked Rulers are not to be followed in evil.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me, If a Sovereign bid his ſubject do that thing that is vicious, this Sovereign herein is to blame: but the ſubject for this Obedience deſerveth

Well reaſoned my Lord, and like a Clerk.

{KING Hen. 4.} deſerveth meed of God. For Obedience more pleaſeth God, than any Sacrifice.

And I ſaid, Samuel the Prophet ſaid to Saul the wicked King, That God was more pleaſed with the Obedience of his Commandments, than with any Sacrifice of Beaſts. But David ſaith, and S. Paul, and S. Gregory accordingly together, That not only they that do evil, are worthy of death and damnation, but alſo they that conſent to evil doers. And Sir, the Law of the holy Church teacheth in the Decrees, That no Servant to his Lord, nor Child to the Father or Mother, nor Wife to her Husband, nor Monk to his Abbot ought to obey, except in leful things, and lawful.

Obedience not to be given but in things leful and lawful.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, All theſe alledgings that thou bringeſt forth, are not elſe but proud preſumptuouſneſs. For hereby thou inforceſt thee to prove, that thou and ſuch other are ſo juſt, that ye ought not to obey to Prelates. And thus againſt the learning of Saint Paul, that teacheth you not to Preach, but if ye were ſent; of your own authority, ye will go forth and Preach, and do what ye liſt.

All is preſumption that ſtandeth againſt your maſterful ambition.

And I ſaid, Sir, preſenteth not every Prieſt the Office of the Apoſtles, or the Office of the Diſciples of Chriſt? And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Yea. And I ſaid, Sir, as the tenth Chapter of Matthew and the laſt Chapter of Mark witneſſeth, Chriſt ſent his Apoſtles to preach. And the tenth Chapter of Luke witneſſeth, That Chriſt ſent his two and ſeventy Diſciples to preach in every place that Chriſt was to come to: and S. Gregory in the Common Law ſaith, That every man that goeth to Prieſthood, taketh upon him the Office of Preaching: For as he ſaith, That Prieſt ſtirreth God to great wrath, of whoſe mouth is not heard the voice of preaching. And as other more gloſſes upon Ezekiel, witneſs, That the Prieſt that preacheth not buſily to the people, ſhall be partaker of their damnation that periſh through his default. And though the people be ſaved by other ſpecial Grace of God, than by the Prieſts preaching, yet the Prieſts, in that they are ordained to preach and preach not, as before God they are Manſlayers. For as far as on them is, ſuch Prieſts as preach not buſily and truly, ſlay all the people ghoſtly: in that they withhold from them the Word of God, that is the life and ſubſtance of mens ſouls. And S. Iſidore ſaid, Prieſts ſhall be damned for wickedneſs of the people, if they teach not them that are ignorant, or blame not them that are ſinners. For all the work or buſineſs of Prieſts ſtandeth in preaching and teaching, that they edifie all men as well by cunning of Faith, as by diſcipline of Works; that is, Vertuous teaching: And as the Goſpel witneſſeth, Chriſt ſaid in his teaching, I am born and comen into this World, to bear witneſs to the Truth, and he that is of the Truth heareth my voice.

Prieſts in that they take Prieſthood, they are ſent to preach. Mat. 10. Mar. ult. Luk. 10.

The Office of Prieſthood is the Office of preaching.

Prieſts that preach not, be ſlayers of the people. Iſidor.

Doctrine of Faith. Diſcipline of Works.

Then Sir, ſince by the word of Chriſt ſpecially, that is, his Voice, Prieſts are commanded to preach; whatſoever Prieſt that it be, that hath not good will and full purpoſe to do thus, and ableth not himſelf after his cunning and power to do his Office by the Example of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles, whatſoever other thing that he doth, diſpleaſeth God. For lo, S. Gregory ſaith, That thing left that a man is bound chiefly to do, whatſoever other thing that a man doth, it is unthankful to the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore ſaith Lincoln, The Prieſt that preacheth not the Word of God, though he be ſeen to have none other default, he is Antichriſt and Satans, a night-Thief, and a day-Thief, a Slayer of Souls, and an Angel of Light turned into Darkneſs. Wherefore Sir, theſe Authorities and other well conſidered, I deem my ſelf damnable, if I either for pleaſure or diſpleaſure of any Creature apply me not diligently to preach the Word of God. And in the ſame damnation I deem all thoſe Prieſts, which of good purpoſe and will enforce them not buſily to do thus, and alſo all them that have purpoſe or will to let any Prieſt of this buſineſs.

Prieſts not only ſent to preach, but commanded to preach. Gregorius. Lincolnienſ. Whatſoever a man doth, leaving that undone which he is chiefly bound to do, is ſin. Yet this Biſhop plucketh him not by the beard, nor burneth not off his hand, as Bonner did.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to thoſe three Clerks that ſtood before him, Lo Sirs, this is the manner and buſineſs of this Loſſel and ſuch other, to pick out ſuch ſharp ſentences of holy Scripture and Doctors, to maintain their Sect, and lore againſt the Ordinance of holy Church. And therefore Loſſel, it is thou that coveteſt to have again the Pſalter that I made to be taken from thee at Canterbury, to record ſharp Verſes againſt us. But thou ſhall never have that Pſalter, nor any other Book, till that I know that thy heart and thy mouth accord fully to be governed by holy Church.

Holy Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, all my will and power is, and ever ſhall be (I truſt to God) to be governed by holy Church.

And the Archbiſhop asked me, What was holy Church?

And I ſaid, Sir, I told you before what was holy Church. But ſince ye ask me this demand; I call Chriſt and his Saints holy Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me; I wot well that Chriſt and his Saints are holy Church in Heaven, but what is holy Church in Earth?

And I ſaid, Sir, though holy Church be every one in Charity, yet it hath two parts. The firſt and principal part hath overcomen perfectly all the wretchedneſs of this life, and reigneth joyfully in Heaven with Chriſt. And the other part is here yet in Earth, buſily and continually fighting day and night againſt temptations of the Fiend; forſaking and hating the Proſperity of this World, deſpiſing and withſtanding their fleſhly luſts, which only are the Pilgrims of Chriſt, waudering towards Heaven by ſtedfaſt Faith, and grounded Hope, and by perfect Charity. For theſe heavenly Pilgrims may not, nor will not be letted of their good purpoſe, by the reaſon of any Doctors diſcording from holy Scripture, nor by the floods of any Tribulation Temporal, nor by the wind of any pride, of boaſt, or of menacing of any Creature: For they are all faſt grounded upon the ſure Stone Chriſt, hearing his Word and loving it, exerciſing them faithfully and continually in all their wits to do thereafter.

Two parts of the Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to his Clerks, See ye not how his heart is indurate, and how he is travelled with the Devil, occupying him thus buſily to inedge ſuch Sentences to maintain his Errors and Hereſies. Certain, thus he would occupy us here all day, if we would ſuffer him.

One of the Clerks anſwered, Sir, he ſaid right now, that this Certification, that came to you from Shrewsbury, is untruly forged againſt him. Therefore Sir, appoſe you him now here in all the points which are certified againſt him, and ſo we ſhall hear of his own mouth his anſwers, and witneſs them.

Well helpt forward M. Clerk.

And the Archbiſhop took the Certification in his hand, and looked thereon a while, and then he ſaid to me:

Lo here it is certified againſt thee by worthy men and faithful of Shrewsbury, that thou preachedſt there openly in S. Chads Church, that the Sacrament of the Altar was material Bread after the Conſecration; what ſayeſt thou? Was this truly preached?

The foreſaid Articles renewed againſt Thorp.

And I ſaid, Sir, I tell you truly that I touched nothing there of the Sacrament of the Altar, but in this wiſe as I will with Gods Grace tell you here. As I ſtood there in the Pulpit, buſying me to teach the Commandment of God, there knelled a ſacred Bell, and therefore mickle people turned away haſtily, and with noiſe ran fro towards me. And I ſeeing this, ſaid to them thus, Good men, ye were better to ſtand here ſtill and to hear Gods Word. For certes the vertue and the meed of the moſt holy Sacrament of the Altar ſtandeth mickle more in the belief thereof that you ought to have in your Soul, than it doth in the outward ſight thereof. And therefore ye were better to ſtand ſtill quietly to hear Gods Word, becauſe that through the hearing thereof, men come to very true belief. And otherwiſe Sir, I am certain I ſpake not there of the worthy Sacrament of the Altar.

The vertue of the Sacrament ſtandeth in the belief, more than in the outward ſign.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I believe thee not whatſoever thou ſayeſt, ſince ſo worſhipful men have witneſſed thus againſt thee. But ſince thou denieſt that thou ſaidſt thus there, what ſayeſt thou now? Reſteth there after the Conſecration in the Hoſt, material Bread or no?

Material Bread.

And I ſaid, Sir, I know in no place in holy Scripture where this term material Bread is written: and therefore Sir, when I ſpeak of this matter, I uſe not to ſpeak of material Bread.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, How teacheſt thou men to believe in this Sacrament?

And I ſaid, Sir, as I believe my ſelf, ſo I teach other men.

He ſaid, Tell out plainly thy belief thereof.

And

And I ſaid with my proteſtation, Sir, I believe that the night before that Chriſt Jeſus would ſuffer (wilfully) paſſion for Mankind on the morn after, he took Bread in his holy and moſt worſhipful hands, lifting up his eyes, and giving thanks to God his Father, bleſſed this Bread, and brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, ſaying to them; Take and eat of this all you, this is my Body. And that this is and ought to be all mens belief, Matthew, Mark, Luke and Paul witneſſeth. Other belief Sir I have none, nor will have, nor teach: for I believe, that this ſufficeth in this matter. For in this belief, with Gods Grace, I purpoſe to live and die, knowledging as I believe and teach other men to believe, that the worſhipful Sacrament of the Altar is the Sacrament of Chriſts fleſh and blood in the form of Bread and Wine.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, It is ſooth that this Sacrament is very Chriſts Body in form of Bread. But thou and thy Sect teacheſt it to be ſubſtance of Bread. Think you this true teaching?

And I ſaid, Neither I, nor any other of the Sect that ye damn, teach any otherwiſe than I have told you, nor believe otherwiſe to my knowing. Nevertheleſs Sir, I ask of you for Charity, that you will tell me plainly, how ye ſhall underſtand the text of S. Paul, where he ſaith thus, This thing feel you in your ſelf, that is in Chriſt Jeſus, while he was in the form of God. Sir, calleth not Paul here the form of God, the ſubſtance or kind of God? Alſo Sir, ſaith not the Church in the hours of the moſt bleſſed Virgin accordingly hereto, where it is written thus? Thou Author of Health remember, that ſometime thou took of the undefiled Virgin the form of our body. Tell me for charity therefore, whether the form of our bodies be called here the kind of our body or no?

The Papiſts have none other defence for them, but only the Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Wouldſt thou make me to declare this Text after thy purpoſe, ſince the Church now hath determined, that there abideth no ſubſtance of Bread, after the Conſecration, in the Sacrament of the Altar? Believeſt thou not this Ordinance of the Church?

Every Ordinance of Churchmen bindeth not our faith.

And I ſaid, Sir, whatſoever Prelates have ordained in the Church, our belief ſtandeth ever whole, I have not heard, that the Ordinance of men under belief ſhould be put into belief.

The greateſt Doctors of the Church be Apoſtles. S. Paul calleth it Bread.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, If thou haſt not learned this before, learn now to know that thou art out of belief, if in this matter and other thou believeſt not as the holy Church believeth. What ſay Doctors treating of this Sacrament?

And I ſaid, Sir, Saint Paul that was a great Doctor of holy Church, ſpeaking to the people, and teaching them in the right belief of this moſt holy Sacrament, calleth it Bread that we break. And alſo in the Canon of the Maſs after the Conſecration, this moſt worthy Sacrament is called holy Bread. And every Prieſt in this Land, after that he hath received this Sacrament, ſaith in this wiſe, That thing that we have taken with our mouth, we pray God that we may take it with a pure and clean mind; That is, as I underſtand, we pray God that we may receive, through very belief, this holy Sacrament worthily. And Sir, Saint Auguſtine ſaith, That thing that is ſeen is Bread; but that mens faith asketh to be informed of is very Chriſts Body. And alſo Fulgence an ententive Doctor ſaith, As it were an Error to ſay that Chriſt was but a Subſtance; that is, very Man, and not very God; or to ſay that Chriſt was very God, and not very Man: So is it (this Doctor ſaith) an Error to ſay, that the Sacrament of the Altar is but a Subſtance: And alſo Sir, accordingly hereto, in the ſecret of the mid Maſs on Chriſtmas-day, it is written thus, Idem refulſit Deus, ſic terrena ſubſtantia nobis conferat quod divinum eſt; which ſentence Sir, with the ſecret of the fourth Ferie, quatuor temporum Septembris, I pray you Sir declare here openly in Engliſh.

S. Auguſtine calleth it Bread.

The ſecret of the Maſs on Chriſtmas-day nameth it a terrene ſubſtance.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I perceive well enough whereabout thou art, and how the Devil blindeth thee, that thou may not underſtand the Ordinance of holy Church, nor conſent thereto. But I command thee now, anſwer me ſhortly; Believeſt thou, that, after the Conſecration of this foreſaid Sacrament, there abideth ſubſtance of Bread, or not?

My Lord can revile apace, he can declare but a little. Choke him up my Lord

And I ſaid, Sir, as I underſtand, it is all one to grant or believe that there dwelleth ſubſtance of Bread, and to grant and to believe, that this moſt worthy Sacrament of Chriſts own Body is accident without ſubject. But Sir, for as mikle as your asking paſſeth my underſtanding, I dare neither deny it, nor grant it; for it is a School-matter, about which I buſied me never to know: and therefore I commit this term, accidens ſine ſubjecto, to thoſe Clerks which delight them ſo in curious and ſubtil ſophiſtry, becauſe they determine oft ſo difficult and ſtrange matters, and wade and wander ſo in them from argument to argument, with pro & contra, till that they wot not where they are, and underſtand not themſelves. But the ſhame that theſe proud Sophiſters have to yield them to men, and before men, maketh them oft fools, and to be concluded ſhamefully before God.

KING Hen. 4.

To grant the real being of the Body without Bread, is as much as to grant the accident to be without the ſubject.

Againſt proud Sophiſters. Templum Domini, Templum Domini.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I purpoſe not to oblige thee to the ſubtil arguments of Clerks, ſince thou art unable hereto; but I purpoſe to make thee obey to the determination of holy Church.

The Church ſtood ſound till the fiend broke looſe.

And I ſaid, Sir, by open evidence and great witneſs, a M. year after the Incarnation of Chriſt, the determination, which I have here before you rehearſed, was accept of holy Church as ſufficient to the ſalvation of all them that would believe it faithfully, and work thereafter charitably. But Sir, the determination of this matter was brought in, ſince the Fiend was looſed, by Frier Thomas again, eſpecially calling the moſt worſhipful Sacrament of Chriſts own Body an accident without ſubject: which term, ſince I know not that Gods Law approveth it in this matter, I dare not grant, but utterly I deny to make this Friers ſentence, or any ſuch other, my belief; do with me God what thou wilt.

Tranſubſtantiation brought in by Frier Tho. Aquine.

It is happy he did not fly in his face, as Bonner did.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Well, well, thou ſhalt ſay otherwiſe ere that I leave thee. But what ſayeſt thou to this ſecond point that is recorded againſt thee by worthy men of Shrewsbury, ſaying, That thou preachedſt there, that Images ought not to be worſhipped in any wiſe?

The ſecond point touching Images. Thorp charged with untruth. Man a worſhipful Image of God.

And I ſaid, Sir, I preached never thus, nor through Gods Grace will I at any time conſent to think, or to ſay thus, either privily or apertly. For ſo, the Lord witneſſeth by Moſes, That the things which he made were right good; and ſo then they were, and yet they are and ſhall be good and worſhipful in their kind. And therefore, to the end that God made them ſo, they are all praiſeable and worſhipful, and ſpecially man, that was made after the Image and likeneſs of God, is full worſhipful in his kind, yea, this holy Image, that is man, God worſhippeth. And therefore every man ſhould worſhip other, in kind, and alſo for heavenly Vertues that men uſe charitably. And alſo I ſay, Wood, Tin, Gold, Silver, or any other matter that Images are made of, all theſe Creatures are worſhipful in their kind, and to the end that God made them for. But the carving, caſting, and painting of an imagery, made within mans hand, albeit that this doing be accept of man of higheſt ſtate and dignity, and ordained of them to be a Calendar to lewd men, that neither can, nor will be learned to know God in his Word, neither by his Creatures, nor by his wonderful and divers workings; yet this imagery ought not to be worſhipped in form, nor in the likeneſs of mans craft. Nevertheleſs, that every matter the Painters paint with, ſince it is Gods Creature, ought to be worſhipped in the kind, and to that end that God made and ordained it to ſerve man.

Though men accept the painting or carving of Images, yet is it not the right way to learn to ſerve God.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I grant well that no body ought to do worſhip to any ſuch Images for themſelves. But a Crucifix ought to be worſhipped for the paſſion of Chriſt that is painted therein, and ſo brought there through to mans mind: and thus the Images of the bleſſed Trinity, and of the Virgin Mary Chriſts Mother, and other Images of Saints ought to be worſhipped. For lo, earthly Kings and Lords, which uſe to ſend their Letters enſealed with their Arms, or with their privy Signet to them that are with them, are worſhipped of theſe men. For when theſe men receive their Lords Letters, in which they ſee and know the wills and biddings of the Lords in worſhip of their Lords, they do off their Caps to theſe Letters. Why not then, ſince in Images made with mans hand, we may read and know many and divers things of God, and of his Saints, ſhall we not worſhip their Images?

The Image of the Trinity. A ſimilitude of the Kings Seal or Letters prove the worſhip of Images.

And

{KING Hen.4.}

No ſimilitude to be made between earthly things and ſpiritual, namely when Gods word doth expreſs to the contrary.

So you ſay my Lord, God ſaith contrary in his commandements.

Painters devotion and the Popes Divinity do well agree.

Preparation of the painters to make a fair and a devout Image.

And I ſaid, within my foreſaid proteſtation I ſay, That theſe worldly uſages of Temporal Laws that ye ſpeak now of, may be done in caſe without ſin. But this is no ſimilitude to worſhip Images, made by mans hand, ſince that Moſes, David, Solomon, Baruch, and other Saints in the Bible forbid ſo plainly the worſhipping of ſuch Images.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Lewd Loſſel, in the Old Law before that Chriſt took Mankind, was no likeneſs of any perſon of the Trinity neither ſhewed to man, nor known of man: But now ſince Chriſt became man, it is leful to have Images to ſhew his Manhood, yea, though many men which are right great Clerks, and other alſo, held it an Error to paint the Trinity; I ſay, it is well done to make and to paint the Trinity in Images. For it is great moving of devotion to men, to have and to behold the Trinity and other Images of Saints carved, caſt, and painted. For beyond the Sea are the beſt Painters that ever I ſaw. And Sirs, I tell you, this is their manner, and it is a good manner: when that an Image-maker ſhall carve, caſt in mold, or paint any Images, he ſhall go to a Prieſt, and ſhrive him as clean, as if he ſhould then die; and take Penance, and make ſome certain vow of Faſting or of Praying, or Pilgrimages doing, praying the Prieſt ſpecially to pray for him, that he may have Grace to make fair and a devout Image.

And I ſaid, Sir, I doubt not if theſe Painters that ye ſpeak of, or any other Painters, underſtood truly the text of Moſes, of David, of the Wiſeman, of Baruch, and of other Saints and Doctors; theſe Painters ſhould be moved to ſhrive them to God with full inward ſorrow of heart, taking upon them to do right ſharpe Penance for the ſinful and vain craft of painting, carving, or caſting they had uſed: promiſing God faithfully never to do ſo after, knowledging openly before all men their reproveable learning. And alſo Sir, theſe Prieſts that ſhrive (as you do ſay) Painters, and enjoyn them to do Penance, and pray for their ſpeed, promiſing to them help of their prayers to be curious in their ſinful crafts, ſin herein more grievouſly than the Painters. For theſe Prieſts do comfort and give them counſel to do that thing, which of great pain, yea under the pain of Gods curſe, they ſhould utterly forbid them. For certes Sir, if the wonderful working of God, and the holy living and teaching of Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles and Prophets, were made known to the people by holy living, and true, and buſie teaching of Prieſts; theſe things (Sir) were ſufficient Books and Kalenders to know God by, and his Saints, without any Images made with mans hand. But certes, the vicious living of Prieſts and their covetouſneſs, are chief cauſe of this Error; and all other vicioûneſs that reigneth among the people.

The true books and kalenders to know God.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me, I hold thee a vicious Prieſt and accurſt, and all they that are of thy Sect; for all Prieſts of holy Church, and all Images that move men to devotion, thou and ſuch other go about to deſtroy. Loſſel, were it a fair thing to come into the Church, and ſee therein none Image?

A better ſight my Lord than to ſee blind ſtocks there to be worſhipped.

And I ſaid, Sir, they that come to the Church, to pray devoutly to the Lord God, may in their inward wits be the more fervent, that all their outward wits be cloſe from all outward ſeeing and hearing, and from all diſturbance and lettings. And ſince Chriſt bleſſed them that ſaw him not bodily, and have believed faithfully in him; it ſufficeth then to all men (through hearing and knowing Gods word, and doing thereafter) to believe in God, though they never ſee Images made with mans hand after any perſon of the Trinity, or of any other Saint.

The right ſervice of a Chriſtian.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me with a fervent Spirit: I ſay to thee Loſſel, that it is right well done to make and to have an Image of the Trinity: Yea, what ſayeſt thou? is it not a ſtirring thing to behold ſuch an Image?

My Lord, your yea will not anſwer Gods nay.

And I ſaid, Sir, ye ſaid right now that in the Old Law, ere Chriſt took Mankind, no likeneſs of any Perſon of the Trinity was ſhewed to men: wherefore Sir, ye ſaid it was not then leful to have Images, but now ye ſay, ſince Chriſt is becomen man, it is leful to have and to make an Image of the Trinity, and alſo of other Saints. But Sir, this thing would I learn of you: ſince the Father of Heaven, yea and every perſon of Trinity was without beginning God Almighty, and many holy Prophets that were deadly men, were martyred violently in the Old Law, and alſo many men and women then died Confeſſors; Why was it not then as leful and neceſſary as now, to have made an Image of the Father of Heaven, and to have made and had other Images of Martyrs, Prophets, and holy Confeſſors, to have been Kalendars to adviſe men and move them to devotion, as ye ſay that Images now do?

Note this ye worſhippers and maintainers of Images.

The Synagogue of Antichriſt will have authority.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, The Synagogue of the Jews had not authority to approve thoſe things as the Church of Chriſt hath now.

And I ſaid, Sir, S. Gregory was a great man in the new Law, and of great Dignity, and as the Common Law witneſſeth, he commended greatly a Biſhop, in that he forbad utterly the Images made with mans hand ſhould be worſhipped.

Great miracles done by images, but my Lord doth not tell by whoſe power.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Ungracious Loſſel, thou ſavoureſt no more truth than an Hound. Since at the Rood at the Northdoor at London, at our Lady at Walſingham, and many other places in England, are many great and praiſeable Miracles done: ſhould not the Images of ſuch holy Saints and places at the reverence of God, and of our Lady, and other Saints, be more worſhipped than other places and Images, where no Miracles are done?

And I ſaid, Sir, there is no ſuch vertue in any Imagery, that any Image ſhould heretofore be worſhipped; wherefore I am certain that there is no Miracle done of God in any place in Earth, becauſe that any Images made with mans hand ſhould be worſhipped. And therefore Sir, as I preached openly at Shrewsbury and other places; I ſay now here before you, That no body ſhould truſt that there were any vertue in imagery made with mans hand; and therefore no body ſhould vow to them, nor ſeek them, nor kneel to them, nor bow to them, nor pray to them, nor offer any thing to them, nor kiſs them, nor incenſe them. For ſo the moſt worthy of ſuch Images, the brazen Serpent (by Moſes made, at Gods bidding) the good King Ezechias deſtroyed worthily and thankfully, and all becauſe it was incenſed. Therefore Sir, if men take good heed to the writing and the learning of Saint Auguſtine, of Saint Gregory, and of Saint John Chryſoſtome, and of other Saints and Doctors, how they ſpake and wrote of Miracles, that ſhall be done now in the laſt end of the world: It is to be dread, that for the unfaithfulneſs of men and women, the Fiend hath great power to work many of the Miracles that now are done in ſuch places. For both men and women delight now more to hear and know Miracles, than they do to know Gods word, or to hear it effectuouſly. Wherefore, to the great confuſion of all them that thus do, Chriſt ſaith, The Generation of Adulterers requireth Tokens, Miracles, and Wonders. Nevertheleſs, as divers Saints ſay, Now when the Faith of God is publiſhed in Chriſtendom, the Word of God ſufficeth to mans ſalvation, without ſuch Miracles: And thus alſo the Word of God ſufficeth to all faithful men and women without any ſuch Images. But good Sir, ſince the Father of Heaven, that is, God in his Godhead, is the moſt unknown thing that may be, and the moſt wonderful Spirit, having in it no ſhape nor likeneſs, and members of any deadly Creature; in what likeneſs or what Image may God the Father be ſhewed or painted?

Miracles importing worſhip to be done to Images may well be ſuſpected not to come of God.

A Chriſtian man ought not to vow, ſeek, nor bow, nor pray, nor offer, nor kiſs an Image.

For the unfaithfulneſs of men, the divel may work miracles.

The word of God ſufficeth us to ſalvation, without miracles.

That which is of nature unknown, cannot be reſembled by any viſible creature known.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, as holy Church hath ſuffered the Images of the Trinity, and all other Images to be painted and ſhewed; it ſufficeth to them that are Members of holy Church. But ſince thou art a rotten Member, cut away from holy Church; thou ſavoureſt not the Ordinance thereof. But ſince the day paſſeth, leave we this matter.

Holy Church of your own building.

AND then he ſaid to me, What ſayeſt thou to the third point that is certified againſt thee, preaching openly in Shrewsbury, that Pilgrimage is not leful? And over this thou ſaidſt that thoſe men and women that go on Pilgrimages to Canterbury, to Beverly, to Karlington, to Walſingham, and to any other ſuch places, are accurſed and made fooliſh, ſpending their goods in waſte.

The 13th Article.

Pilgrimage.

And I ſaid, Sir, by this Certification I am accuſed to you that I ſhould teach, that no Pilgrimage is leful. But I ſaid never thus. For I know that there be true Pilgrimages and leful, and full pleaſant to God: and therefore Sir, howſoever mine Enemies have certified you of me, I told at Shrewsbury of two manner of Pilgrimages.

Two manner of pilgrimages.

And

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Whom calleſt thou true Pilgrims?

The true pilgrimage is to travel in heavenly things.

And I ſaid, Sir, with my proteſtation I call them true Pilgrims travelling toward the bliſs of Heaven, which in the ſtate, degree, or order that God calleth them to, do buſie them faithfully to occupy all their wits bodily and ghoſtly, to know truly, and to keep faithfully the biddings of God, hating and fleeing all the ſeven deadly ſins, and every branch of them: Ruling them vertuouſly (as it is ſaid before) with all their wits, doing diſcreetly, wilfully, and gladly, all the Works of Mercy, bodily and ghoſtly, after their cunning and power, abling them to the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, diſpoſing them to receive them in their Souls, and to hold them in the right bleſſings of Chriſt; buſying them to know and to keep the ſeven principal Vertues, and ſo then they ſhall obtain here through Grace, to uſe thankfully to God all the conditions of Charity. And then they ſhall be moved with the good Spirit of God, to examine oft and diligently their conſcience, that neither wilfully nor wittingly they err in any Article of Belief, having continually (as frailty will ſuffer) all their buſneſs, to dread and to fly the offence of God, and to love over all, and to ſeek ever to do his pleaſant will. Of Every good work is a good ſtep to Heaven.

theſe Pilgrimages I ſaid, whatſoever good thought that they at any time think, what vertuous work that they ſpeak, and what fruitful work that they work; Every ſuch thought, word, and work is a ſtep numbred of God toward him into Heaven. Theſe foreſaid Prilgrims of God,

The manner and examples of Saints.

delight ſore when they hear of Saints or of vertuous men and women, how they forſook wilfully the proſperity of this life, how they withſtood the ſuggeſtion of the Fiend, how they reſtrained their fleſhly luſts, how diſcreet they were in their penance doing, how patient they were in all their Adverſities, how prudent they were in counſelling of men and women; moving them to hate all ſins, and to fly them, and to ſhame ever greatly thereof, and to love all vertues, and to draw to them, imagining how Chriſt and his Followers by example of him ſuffered ſcorns and ſlanders, and how patiently they abode and took the wrongful menacing of Tyrants: How homely they were, and ſerviceable to poor men to relieve and comfort them bodily and ghoſtly, after their power and cunning, and how devout they were in prayers, how fervent they were in heavenly deſires, and how they abſented them from Spectacles of vain ſayings and hearings, and how ſtable they were to let and deſtroy all Vices, and how laborious and joyful they were to ſow and to plant Vertues? Theſe heavenly conditions, and ſuch other have Pilgrims, or endeavour to have them, whoſe pilgrimage God acceteth.

And again, I ſaid, As their Works ſhew, the moſt part of men and women, that go now on Pilgrimages, have not theſe foreſaid conditions, nor love to buſie them faithfully to have. For as I well know, ſince I have full oft aſſaid, examine whoſoever will 20 of theſe Pilgrims, and he ſhall not find three men or women that know ſurely a Commandment of God, nor can ſay their Pater noſter and Ave Maria, nor their Creed readily in any manner of Language. And as I have learned and alſo know ſomewhat by experience of theſe ſame Pilgrims, telling the cauſe why that many men and women go hither and thither now on pilgrimage, it is more for the health of their bodies, than of their Souls: more to have riches and proſperity of this World, than to be inriched with vertues in their Souls: more to have here worldly and fleſhly friendſhip, than to have friendſhip of God and of his Saints in Heaven: for whatſoever thing man or woman doth, the friendſhip of God, or of any other Saint, cannot be had, without keeping of Gods Commandments. Further with my proteſtation, I ſay now, as I ſaid in Shrewsbury, though they that have fleſhly Wills, travel far their bodies, and ſpend mikle-money, to ſeek and to viſit the Bones or Images (as they ſay they do) of this Saint or of that: ſuch Pilgrimage going is neither praiſe-

able nor thankful to God nor to any Saint of God, ſince in effect all ſuch Pilgrims deſpiſe God and all his Commandments and Saints. For the Commandments of God they will neither know, nor keep, nor conform them to live vertuouſly by Example of Chriſt and of his Saints. Wherefore Sir, I have preached and taught openly, and ſo I purpoſe all my life time to do with Gods help, ſaying, Goods evil beſtowed in pilgrimage.

That ſuch fond people waſte blamefully Gods goods in their vain Pilgrimages, ſpending their goods upon vicious Hoſtelars, which are oft unclean women of their bodies; and at the leaſt, thoſe goods with the which they ſhould do works of Mercy, after Gods bidding, to poor needy men and women.

{ KING } { Hen. 4. }

Theſe poor mens goods and their livelode, theſe Runners about offer to rich Prieſts, which have mikle more livelode than they need. And thus thoſe goods they waſt wilfully, and ſpend them unjuſtly againſt Gods bidding upon ſtrangers, with which they ſhould help and relieve after Gods will their poor needy Neighbours at home: yea and over this folly, oftentimes divers men and women, of theſe Runners thus madly hither and thither into Pilgrimage, borrow hereto other mens goods, yea and ſometime they ſteal mens goods hereto, and they pay them never again. Alſo Sir, I know well that when divers men and women will go thus after their own wills, and finding out one Pilgrimage; they will ordain with them before to have with them both men and women, that can well ſing wanton Songs, and ſome other Pilgrims, will have with them Bagpipes: ſo that every Town that they come through, what with the noiſe of their ſinging, and with the ſound of their piping, and with the tangling of their Canterbury Bells, and with the barking out of Dogs after them, they make more noiſe, than if the King came there away with all his Clarions, and many other Minſtrels. And if theſe men and women be a month out in their Pilgrimage, many of them ſhall be an half year after, great Janglers, Taletellers and Lyars.

The inconvenience that cometh by pilgrimage.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Lewd Loſſel, thou ſeeſt not far enough in this matter, for thou conſidereſt not the great travel of Pilgrims, therefore thou blameſt that thing that is praiſeable. I ſay to thee, that it is right well done, that Pilgrims have with them both Singers and alſo Pipers; that when one of them that goeth barefoot ſtriketh his toe upon a ſtone, and hurteth him ſore, and maketh him to bleed, it is well done that he or his Fellow begin then a Song, or elſe take out of his boſome a Bagpipe, to drive away with ſuch mirth the hurt of his Fellow. For with ſuch ſolace the travel and wearineſs of Pilgrims is lightly and merrily born out.

Well ſpoken my Lord for Lincolnſhire bagpipes. And why then blamed Boner Philpot for ſinging in the ſtocks.

And I ſaid, Sir, Saint Paul teacheth men to weep with them that weep.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, What jangleſt thou againſt mens devotion? Whatſoever thou or ſuch other ſay, I ſay that the Pilgrimage that now is uſed, is to them that do it a praiſeable and a good mean to come the rather to Grace. But I hold thee unable to know this Grace, for thou inforceſt thee to let the devotion of the people; ſince by authority of holy Scripture, men may leſully have and uſe ſuch ſolace as thou reproveſt. For David in his laſt Pſalm teacheth men to have divers Inſtruments of Muſick to praiſe God therewith.

A new found way to grace of the Biſhops making.

And I ſaid, Sir, by the Sentence of divers Doctors expounding the Pſalms of David, that Muſick and Minſtrelſie that David and other Saints of the Old Law ſpake of, ought now neither to be taken nor uſed by the Letter, but theſe Inſtruments with their Muſick ought to interpreted ghoſtly: For all theſe Figures are called Vertues and Grace, with which Vertues men ſhould pleaſe God, and praiſe his Name. For S. Paul ſaith, All ſuch things befel to them in figure. Therefore, Sir, I underſtand that the letter of this Pſalm of David, and of ſuch other Pſalms and Sentences doth ſlay them that take them now literally: This Sentence as I underſtand Sir, Chriſt himſelf approveth, putting out the Minſtrels, that he would quicken the dead Damſel.

Inſtruments and muſick of the old Teſtament, how they are to be applied and uſed in the New Teſtament.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Lewd Loſſel, is it not leful to us to have Organs in the Church to worſhip therewithall God? And I ſaid, Yea Sir, by mans Ordinance; but by the Ordinance of God, a good Sermon, to the peoples underſtanding, were mikle more pleaſant to God.

Organs in the Church. A fit comparison my Lord, and like your ſelf.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, That Organs and good delectable Songs quickned and ſharpned more mens wits, than ſhould any Sermon.

But I ſaid, Sir, luſtly men and worldly lovers delight and covet, and travel to have all their wits quickned and ſharpned with divers ſenſible ſolace: But all the faithful Lovers and Followers of Chriſt, have all their delight to hear Gods Word, and to underſtand it truly, and and to work thereafter faithfully and continually. For no doubt, to dread to offend God, and to love to please him in all things quickneth and sharpneth all the wits of Christs chosen people; and ableth them so to Grace, that they joy greatly to withdraw their ears and all their wits and members from all worldly delight, and from all fleshly solace. For S. Hierome (as I think) saith, No body may joy with this world, and Reign with Christ.

The saying of Hierome.

And the Archbishop (as if he had been displeased with my Answer) said to his Clerks, What ghess ye that this Idiot will speak there, where he hath no dread; since he speaketh thus now here in my presence? Well, well, by God thou shalt be ordained for. And then he spake to me all angerly.

You Sweet my Lord.

The fourth Article concerning Priests tythes.

WHat sayst thou to this fourth Point, that is certified against thee, preaching openly and boldly in Shrewsbury, that Priests have no title to Tythes?
